

BlogBooker

Low resolution pictures

From Blog to Book.

obamabarack.blogspot.com

Contents

1	2007	63
1.1	January	63
	Welcome to the Obama Blog (2007-01-24 09:03)	63
	Obama rolls online (2007-01-24 11:20)	63
	Fundraising campaign gears up (2007-01-25 10:01)	64
	Intriguing past continues to make headlines (2007-01-28 10:33)	64
	Obama's support among youth, polls (2007-01-29 09:36)	64
	Obama's books fuel campaign (2007-01-30 12:51)	65
	Obama introduces Iraq War De-escalation Act of 2007 (2007-01-30 18:04)	66
	Obama rebuffs Biden comment, selects site for announcement (2007-01-31 19:57)	67
1.2	February	68
	Iraq plan attracts party left, (2007-02-01 15:05)	68
	'O'bama' energizes crowd at GMU (2007-02-02 17:24)	68
	Smoke signals (2007-02-03 10:55)	69
	Obama's secret weapon (2007-02-04 10:38)	69
	Obama to run unconventional campaign (2007-02-05 15:40)	70
	Obama's colorful upbringing (2007-02-06 22:33)	70
	Obama foregoes public funding (2007-02-07 15:14)	71
	Excitement building for Saturday event (2007-02-08 18:46)	72
	Obama announces website upgrade is coming (2007-02-09 15:20)	73
	The experience factor (2007-02-09 18:40)	74
	New website launched (2007-02-10 09:00)	75
	Great speech (2007-02-10 09:42)	75
	Obama announcement speech (2007-02-10 11:43)	75
	Watch Senator Obama on 60 Minutes (2007-02-10 16:29)	79
	Gallery of photos from today's events (2007-02-10 18:53)	79
	New endorsements pour in (2007-02-11 11:01)	81

Netroots and Grassroots Campaigning (2007-02-11 17:12)	81
Anti-war activists prominent at Chicago rally (2007-02-12 10:25)	82
Pics from the weekend events and 60 Minutes clip (2007-02-12 16:47)	82
Give green to Obama (2007-02-12 23:06)	89
Obama continues to draw huge crowds (2007-02-13 09:50)	89
Howard Dean comparison (2007-02-13 21:36)	90
Should Obama target the South? (2007-02-14 10:07)	91
Obama lands key endorsement (2007-02-14 18:35)	92
Barack visits New Hampshire (2007-02-15 08:28)	92
"It started in Springfield..." (2007-02-15 12:47)	98
Barack's "Youthroots" (2007-02-15 18:57)	98
Obama and Seniors (2007-02-16 08:19)	98
Word on the Street (2007-02-16 15:46)	99
Nevada, Nevada (2007-02-17 10:35)	100
Barack Obama against the war in 2002 (2007-02-18 09:31)	101
Obama gets former SC Democratic chief's endorsement (2007-02-19 11:48)	102
Opponents eating Obama's MySpace dust (2007-02-19 20:13)	103
Obama team fires back at LA Times article (2007-02-20 08:43)	104
Barack wows crowd in San Francisco (2007-02-20 09:00)	107
Virginia Gov. Tim Kaine gives Barack Obama first endorsement (2007-02-20 14:53)	111
Is Barack Black, White, Christian, Muslim, Progressive, Conservative, Messiah/Superhero, Human, All-American, Feriegner, Osama, Obama? (2007-02-21 10:07)	111
Support the Iraq War De-Escalation Act (2007-02-21 15:33)	112
Daschle endorses Obama (2007-02-21 17:51)	112
Obama Honeymoon? (2007-02-22 11:13)	112
People still surging toward Barack Obama (2007-02-23 07:42)	113
Sacramento for Obama Group Meeting Video (2007-02-23 17:48)	113
Oscars Night (2007-02-25 08:41)	114
Barack's Favorable Unfavorable Ratings (2007-02-26 19:34)	114
Obama looks for funds as reporting deadline nears (2007-02-26 19:47)	115
Buying name recognition (2007-02-27 12:53)	116
"The Audacity of Hope" continues to roll (2007-02-27 19:35)	116
Barack Obama interview on NPR (2007-02-28 10:45)	116
1.3 March	117
More early support for Obama (2007-03-01 10:30)	117
Polls suggest Obama best poised to beat Republicans (2007-03-01 10:47)	117

Wexler endorses Obama (2007-03-01 16:44)	118
Barack to appear on network morning shows Mar. 2 (2007-03-01 16:46)	118
Team Obama holds conference call with colleges (2007-03-02 09:13)	119
Squaring off in Selma (2007-03-04 08:52)	119
Obama thrills Selma crowds (2007-03-04 13:16)	120
Selma Speech (2007-03-04 16:45)	120
Obama visits Boston (2007-03-06 07:29)	121
Donor matching campaign on barackobama.com (2007-03-06 14:17)	121
Momentum continues to build for Obama campaign (2007-03-07 17:17)	122
Support for Obama from both sides of the river (2007-03-09 12:37)	123
Barack comes to Oakland (2007-03-09 21:06)	124
Northern California unites for Barack Obama (video) (2007-03-11 07:31)	125
Barack makes big splash in NYC (2007-03-12 08:15)	125
Hope. Action. Change. (2007-03-12 10:59)	126
O'Bama linked to Ireland (2007-03-12 16:06)	126
500 Volunteers (2007-03-13 11:28)	127
Barack's Bay Area Street Team (2007-03-14 09:07)	127
Oakland rally nears (2007-03-15 14:14)	128
Oakland rally nears (2007-03-15 14:14)	129
Best hope for change (2007-03-16 10:16)	130
Oakland loves Obama (2007-03-18 09:32)	131
Obama as "Neo" or "Magic Negro?" (2007-03-19 09:35)	132
From 1984 to the Iraq War Timeline (2007-03-20 10:12)	132
(2007-03-21 09:00)	133
Video-maker unveiled (2007-03-21 20:55)	133
SFO's rapid rise (2007-03-22 10:27)	134
Obamas send message to Edwards family (2007-03-22 13:04)	135
Quarterly fundraising deadline approaches, Obama pastor rips NY Times (2007-03-23 07:58)	135
Barack wins DFA Poll, handicappers picking Obama and Giuliani (2007-03-23 11:01)	137
More into Obama's youth (2007-03-24 08:44)	139
Hillary targets MySpace (2007-03-24 19:55)	139
Grassroots support vs. Machine money (2007-03-25 08:49)	140
Fund not sun for Obama in South Florida (2007-03-25 16:57)	140
Big online support, but how effective? (2007-03-26 08:10)	141
Vers de Barack (2007-03-26 10:42)	142

Barack rumbles toward big community kickoff (2007-03-27 08:45)	143
BET co-founder endorses Obama (2007-03-27 16:15)	144
MoveOn.org may endorse presidential candidate (2007-03-28 08:57)	145
Hawaii for Obama launches site (2007-03-28 16:23)	145
(2007-03-29 07:34)	146
Spanish version of "The Audacity of Hope" in works (2007-03-29 15:22)	148
Jesse Jackson endorses Barack Obama (2007-03-29 17:19)	149
Putting a dollar amount behind a face (2007-03-30 08:40)	150
Campaigns release lists of black bundlers (2007-03-30 11:26)	151
Barack meets Iowa townspeople (2007-03-31 19:04)	151
1.4 April	152
The importance of the African American vote (2007-04-01 10:21)	152
Analyzing the Community Kickoff (2007-04-01 14:10)	152
Why some perceive Obama as "winner" in fundraising race (2007-04-02 08:47)	153
Obama denies softening stance on Iraq (2007-04-02 15:43)	153
How independent expenditures effect the race (2007-04-03 09:08)	154
MyPolicy (2007-04-03 15:07)	155
Live feeds show Obama's community organizing skills (2007-04-04 07:34)	155
Obama camp raises $25 million (2007-04-04 08:38)	156
Breaking down the numbers (2007-04-04 11:00)	157
Can a Obama win in Iowa and New Hampshire? (2007-04-05 08:24)	158
Clinton and McCain "burning" up cash (2007-04-06 08:29)	158
Obama reveals plan to help homeless veterans (2007-04-06 15:42)	159
Barack's sustainability or Clinton's overrated database? (2007-04-06 19:14)	159
Barack on Healthcare (2007-04-08 07:19)	160
RNC worried about Obama (2007-04-09 08:52)	161
Barack to skip Fox debate (2007-04-09 16:47)	161
Barack not in it for second (2007-04-10 07:43)	162
Barack Obama surges to first in South Carolina (2007-04-10 17:10)	162
MoveOn.org surveys members on candidates (2007-04-10 22:20)	162
Harvard professors endorse Barack Obama (2007-04-11 08:00)	163
Bloomberg/LA Times Poll shows Obama does best against Reps (2007-04-11 16:47)	164
Barack Obama wins MoveOn survey (2007-04-12 09:18)	165
barackobama.com launches Answer Center (2007-04-13 12:40)	165
20,000 at Atlanta rally for Barack Obama (2007-04-14 10:18)	166

Barack still drawing waves of people (2007-04-15 11:08)	166
Obama campaign files quarterly report (2007-04-15 19:59)	167
Campaign launches Women for Obama (2007-04-16 11:14)	168
Barack speaks out on violence (2007-04-16 21:43)	168
Barack leads among young people, Harvard poll finds (2007-04-17 09:36)	168
Campaign unleashes 'secret weapon' (2007-04-17 21:37)	169
Obama for America to open Nevada HQ (2007-04-18 17:41)	170
Obama rises in polls (2007-04-19 09:13)	170
Barack Obama reveals climate change initiative (2007-04-20 14:56)	171
Barack addresses Sharpton's group (2007-04-21 19:35)	171
12,000 attend Obama Earth Day rally (2007-04-23 09:16)	172
Obama spells out foreign policy (2007-04-23 15:48)	172
New groups flourish on barackobama.com (2007-04-24 07:33)	173
Barack pulls in more big money backers (2007-04-24 13:26)	174
Obama says Giuliani using 'politics of fear' (2007-04-25 09:14)	174
Online fund drive heats up again (2007-04-25 12:12)	175
BarackObama.com floats over competition (2007-04-25 17:00)	175
Barack spars for debate (2007-04-26 13:54)	176
Analyzing the debate (2007-04-26 21:43)	180
Poll supports Barack performance in debate (2007-04-27 05:36)	181
Obama urges pressure on Bush to sign budget (2007-04-27 15:58)	182
(2007-04-28 08:52)	183
Barack to 'turn the page on Iraqi disaster' (2007-04-28 18:50)	184
Barack's CA speech video (2007-04-29 10:21)	184
Obama cruising to fundraising heaven (2007-04-30 10:36)	185
Barack issues new appeal for funds (2007-04-30 15:56)	186
Camp Obama and "Obama Imagines" (2007-04-30 21:19)	189
1.5 May	190
Obama, The Conciliator (2007-05-01 07:21)	190
Bush vetoes Iraq bill, Obama answers (2007-05-01 15:48)	192
Bringing up race again...and again (2007-05-02 07:34)	193
MySpace Hoopla (2007-05-02 14:58)	194
More MySpace news (2007-05-02 20:55)	195
Obama gains ground in Hillary country (2007-05-03 08:38)	198
More details on Camp Obama (2007-05-03 09:28)	199

More info arises on Obama Secret Service detail (2007-05-04 08:51)	200
Barack at Baton Rouge (2007-05-05 20:29)	201
Netroots continue to favor Obama (2007-05-06 08:36)	208
Bush's low ratings could bode well for Obama (2007-05-06 18:29)	211
Barack calls for greater fuel efficiency (2007-05-07 08:16)	211
Taking it to the Streets (2007-05-07 16:09)	211
Obama and Miracles (2007-05-08 07:53)	213
Barack speaks about Kansas disaster (2007-05-08 21:16)	215
Conservatives focusing their sights on Obama (2007-05-09 08:23)	216
Barack Obama moves against climate change (2007-05-09 08:40)	216
Obama on Stephanopoulos (2007-05-09 19:25)	217
Ten Weirdest Obama-theses (2007-05-10 08:21)	218
Michelle sends out first fundraising letter (2007-05-10 18:56)	220
Barack defends calls on Grassley to override veto (2007-05-11 06:47)	220
Obama on fuel and medicine (2007-05-11 14:29)	221
Religious leaders, Newark mayor endorse Barack (2007-05-11 18:37)	221
Barack a hit in KC, sister launches official Hawai'i campaign (2007-05-13 07:43)	222
Barack's sister fondly recalls him (2007-05-13 08:54)	222
Senator Obama sends Mother's Day on official blog (2007-05-13 14:44)	223
The executive experience question and Barack Obama (2007-05-14 07:46)	224
Obama names New Hampshire co-chairs (2007-05-14 21:52)	226
Barack will announce new student loan proposal (2007-05-15 08:47)	226
16 votes to end the war (2007-05-15 09:52)	227
Barack Obama will cut Iraq War funding (2007-05-15 15:43)	228
Barack leads call for veto override (2007-05-16 09:17)	228
baracktivator (2007-05-16 18:19)	229
(2007-05-17 07:49)	229
Memories and Quote of the Day (2007-05-17 14:33)	230
Barack Obama leads in staff diversity (2007-05-18 07:20)	230
(2007-05-18 12:53)	231
Barack supporters prepare to pound the pavement (2007-05-18 13:33)	231
Sacramento Walks for Change (2007-05-18 21:52)	232
Volunteers knock on doors for Barack in New Hampshire (2007-05-19 11:31)	232
Barack wins Howard County straw poll (2007-05-20 09:37)	233
Barack is not a corporate (2007-05-20 16:34)	233

Michelle Obama praises husband on Good Morning America (2007-05-20 16:57)	233
Will Barack win? (2007-05-21 06:25)	234
(2007-05-21 06:25)	234
Barack on bundling (2007-05-21 08:02)	235
Same old Barack (2007-05-21 18:06)	236
Former gov. and ambassador Mabus endorses Obama (2007-05-22 11:22)	236
Michelle Obama on GMA (2007-05-22 17:06)	237
Barack Obama bags two successful fundraisers (2007-05-23 07:44)	237
Barack Obama will announce health care plan in Iowa City (2007-05-23 12:13)	237
Ted Sorensen on his support for Barack Obama (2007-05-23 21:11)	238
The Gore Factor (2007-05-24 06:59)	238
Barack votes "no" on Iraq War bill (2007-05-25 08:21)	239
Barack Obama hits back, Michelle on GMA pt. II (2007-05-25 15:52)	240
Obama calls for military mental health screenings (2007-05-27 07:03)	240
Training the Troops (2007-05-27 10:45)	241
Training the Troops (2007-05-27 10:45)	242
Standing-room crowd for Barack and Michelle in NH (2007-05-27 18:49)	242
Kezang Dema inspired to run in Bhutan by Barack Obama (2007-05-28 11:02)	242
Barack Obama unveils sweeping health care plan (2007-05-29 08:46)	243
"Today on the Trail" with Barack Obama (2007-05-29 16:45)	243
Barack's Health Care Plan (2007-05-29 19:54)	244
Obama campaign prepares Walk for Change (2007-05-30 14:00)	244
Barack's interview on WQAD, Iowa City (2007-05-30 16:22)	245
(2007-05-30 16:22)	246
(2007-05-31 09:06)	246
Obama confident about Nevada (2007-05-31 17:32)	248
1.6 June	248
Obama and Coal (2007-06-01 08:27)	248
Obama wows Seattle, visits California for funds (2007-06-02 12:52)	249
Seattle Excitement (2007-06-02 21:00)	249
Polls favor Barack, Pundits favor Clinton after debate (2007-06-04 07:48)	250
Campaign prepares training video for walkers (2007-06-04 17:23)	250
Juneteenth "Spiritual Unity" rally for Obama in Hawai'i (2007-06-05 07:13)	251
'Quiet Riot' simmers, Amigos organize for Obama (2007-06-05 12:47)	251
(2007-06-06 06:30)	253

Obamacare (2007-06-06 08:07)	253
Dinner for Five with Barack Obama (2007-06-06 14:17)	254
Obama walking boxes shipped, fundraising (2007-06-07 07:39)	255
Dinner with Barack gets huge response (2007-06-08 08:25)	255
Making Contact (2007-06-10 17:47)	256
Barack hits the streets (2007-06-11 08:09)	256
Barack hits the streets (2007-06-11 08:09)	257
Most voters like Barack (2007-06-11 16:11)	257
Barack in California, Michelle goes to Vegas (2007-06-12 07:57)	257
Michelle launches New Hampshire Women for Obama (2007-06-12 23:06)	258
The Chicago Black Political Machine and Barack Obama (2007-06-13 08:09)	258
Barack Obama hedges position on "green" coal (2007-06-13 13:18)	259
(2007-06-13 15:01)	259
YouTube features Barack Obama (2007-06-14 07:42)	260
On Obama the movement builder (2007-06-14 14:51)	261
Obama staff blast on Hillary's India linkages (2007-06-15 07:39)	261
Obama says Dems should not "take the South off the table" (2007-06-15 19:24)	264
Obama campaign responds to Indian concerns over memo (2007-06-16 07:30)	265
Obama campaign responds to Indian concerns over memo (2007-06-16 07:30)	266
Barack on Fatherhood and the Family (2007-06-16 16:16)	267
Barack Obama leads in South Carolina poll (2007-06-17 08:47)	268
(2007-06-17 09:03)	269
Barack Obama seen as most intelligent candidate (2007-06-18 07:51)	269
Barack still rules the Internet (2007-06-18 14:20)	269
Maintaining discipline in the Obama camp (2007-06-19 08:01)	270
Barack Obama rocks AFSCME forum (2007-06-19 12:56)	270
Obama comments on Culinary Workers Union settlement (2007-06-20 08:21)	271
Obama wins straw poll (2007-06-20 13:54)	272
Four picked for "Dinner with Barack" (2007-06-21 08:14)	272
(2007-06-21 08:14)	273
Obama link with scattering students (2007-06-22 00:18)	274
Barack Obama as 'hope-monger' (2007-06-22 07:13)	275
Obama reveals sweeping ethics reform plan (2007-06-22 09:31)	275
Vote Hope PAC to positively support Obama (2007-06-22 22:21)	276
Barack Obama and a "Better Way" (2007-06-24 13:18)	277

Barack of Ages (2007-06-24 19:53)	278
Obama campaign to launch Iowa TV ads (2007-06-25 09:23)	279
2Q fundraising enters home stretch (2007-06-25 15:41)	279
Inspired by Barack Obama (2007-06-25 22:42)	281
Obama comments on Middle East summit (2007-06-26 10:22)	282
How much money does Obama need? (2007-06-26 13:36)	282
Be Inspired, Be Counted (2007-06-26 17:14)	283
Michelle Obama: 'I'm married to the The Answer' (2007-06-27 14:27)	283
Barack Obama seeks record donors in 2Q (2007-06-28 07:11)	284
Watch Barack at PBS debate tonight (2007-06-28 12:11)	286
Will Barack Obama raise $50+ million? (2007-06-28 15:48)	287
Debate buzz (2007-06-29 11:25)	288
Cornel West supporting Barack Obama? (2007-06-29 17:43)	290
3,000 attend Barack Obama's Minnesota kickoff fundraiser (2007-06-30 21:13)	291
1.7 July	292
Barack Obama quietly smashes record (2007-07-02 05:59)	292
Barack comments on Libby, 2Q success (2007-07-02 16:28)	293
Hill calls Bill over Barack bucks (2007-07-03 07:59)	294
The inevitable Dean comparisons (2007-07-03 11:12)	295
Obama's 'non-fizzle' causes ripples (2007-07-04 11:28)	296
Obama too likable? (2007-07-05 09:33)	296
Live Earth Concerts (2007-07-05 13:23)	297
From Doubt to Hope (2007-07-06 07:57)	297
Barack Obama is Earth-friendly (2007-07-06 20:19)	298
Barack Obama: Credibility vs. "Substance" (2007-07-07 09:16)	300
Barack Obama off to Alabama for kickoff (2007-07-07 17:28)	301
Obama shines in Newsweek article (2007-07-08 08:34)	302
Barack knows money's not everything (2007-07-08 18:28)	302
Barack Obama, Yogurt and Transcendental Meditation (2007-07-09 12:24)	303
Michelle Obama speaks on the "Empathy Deficit" (2007-07-09 22:59)	304
Barack returns to Iowa with more cash (2007-07-10 11:41)	304
Barack Obama to appear at La Raza conference (2007-07-10 21:19)	305
Barack Obama dominates Nielsen/NetRatings (2007-07-11 11:16)	305
"Widebody" Charles Barkley endorses Barack Obama (2007-07-11 17:51)	307
Barack Obama Resume (2007-07-12 07:12)	307

Barack Obama: "Rock Star" of NAACP Forum (2007-07-12 11:13)	309
Barack calls for letters on Iraq (2007-07-12 19:07)	309
Barack goes hybrid, collects more cash (2007-07-13 09:34)	310
Barack meets Vegas supporters, Iowa veterans on tour (2007-07-13 20:16)	310
Barack Obama names high profile Nevada team (2007-07-14 08:03)	311
Obama: Iraq War not helping with al-Qaeda (2007-07-14 13:27)	311
Barack Obama: The more, the merrier (2007-07-15 08:02)	312
MoveOn.org showing bias for Edwards over Obama (2007-07-15 11:45)	313
Barack Obama leading in cash for primary (2007-07-16 09:09)	313
Obama walks with striking Chicago workers (2007-07-16 14:53)	314
Heckroth, Fenty endorse Obama (2007-07-16 17:05)	314
Obama staff harassing Cookie Mom? (2007-07-17 08:51)	315
Oprah to throw Obama bash (2007-07-17 09:32)	316
Hollywood contributions in 2Q (2007-07-17 13:50)	317
Obama opens California office, collects funds (2007-07-17 17:50)	318
Obama's office/staff spending reveals focus (2007-07-18 09:00)	319
Barack details plan to tackle urban poverty (2007-07-18 12:18)	320
Another side of Barack (2007-07-18 18:45)	325
Critics roil at Obama's broad appeal (2007-07-18 20:41)	326
Barack Obama started out helping the poor (2007-07-19 09:35)	326
Barack's cash from early states, online ads (2007-07-20 08:42)	326
New Obama offices in Charleston, Chicago (2007-07-20 16:26)	327
Barack Obama: Pressure NH senators on Iraq (2007-07-21 14:34)	328
Obama says he'll walk picket line after elected (2007-07-21 20:12)	329
Barack Obama to visit Sacramento (2007-07-22 11:54)	329
Obama campaign loses advisor to military duty (2007-07-23 10:01)	330
CNN/YouTube debate (2007-07-23 18:39)	331
Obama gets rave reviews, launches S.C. ads (2007-07-24 08:04)	331
Barack dominates debate (2007-07-24 11:14)	331
Is CNN secretly supporting Barack Obama? (2007-07-24 15:27)	333
Obama leads on diplomacy (2007-07-25 11:24)	335
Two House Reps endorse Obama (2007-07-25 16:19)	336
Obama names Hodes national co-chair (2007-07-26 07:54)	336
Dinner with Barack II (2007-07-26 13:24)	337
New Obama downloads available @ barackobama.com (2007-07-26 18:29)	339

Obama leads Iowa mock election, launches new ads (2007-07-27 09:54)	339
Barack Obama: Special interests blocking rural reform (2007-07-28 08:48)	340
(2007-07-28 15:16)	340
Obama stumps in Iowa, New Hampshire (2007-07-28 15:16)	342
A Hefty influence on young Barack (2007-07-29 10:03)	343
Obama has progressive in Illinois State Senate (2007-07-30 08:23)	344
Obama in Vibe Magazine and other news (2007-07-30 10:06)	345
Grist interviews Barack Obama (2007-07-30 21:02)	346
Oprah's fundraiser reportedly sold out (2007-07-31 08:40)	347
Obama to air new Iowa ad (2007-07-31 15:51)	348
1.8 August	349
Obama unveils plan to fight terrorism (2007-08-01 09:36)	349
Obama creates big question for anti-war supporters (2007-08-01 13:49)	357
Pakistan reacts to Obama warning (2007-08-02 07:31)	357
'To the right, to the right,' Obama ditching progressives? (2007-08-02 12:03)	358
Pakistan Foreign Minister weighs in on Obama speech (2007-08-03 10:15)	359
Bush assures Musharraf over Obama warnings (2007-08-03 21:21)	360
Bush assures Musharraf over Obama warnings (2007-08-03 21:21)	360
Chaudhuri on Obama's move to the right (2007-08-04 20:11)	361
Beating world poverty (2007-08-09 17:07)	362
Beating world poverty (2007-08-09 17:07)	362
More Pakistani reaction to Obama's American "exceptionalism" (2007-08-15 08:12)	362
"O" Factor, debates, hip-hop and Obama (2007-08-18 18:51)	363
(2007-08-18 18:51)	364
(2007-08-19 18:49)	364
Barack Obama News: Afrobella, black voters, butter statue (2007-08-20 11:19)	365
Rep. Patrick Murphy gives support to Obama (2007-08-21 19:21)	365
Obama on Daily Show (2007-08-22 15:55)	366
Obama gets support from sole Iraq combat veteran in Congress (2007-08-22 22:20)	367
Obama announces NY endorsements, launches Generation Obama (2007-08-23 18:53)	368
Obama wins two surveys (2007-08-23 22:53)	368
Obama and Indian Country, Brzezinski endorsement (2007-08-24 14:51)	369
(2007-08-24 14:51)	369
More on Obama as community organizer (2007-08-26 14:45)	370
Obama wants FEMA separate from Homeland Security (2007-08-27 18:58)	370

Obama picks up VA support, leads in mobile campaign (2007-08-28 21:29)	371
Yarmulkes for Obama, Calypso King endorses (2007-08-30 09:05)	371
Open letter to Obama; Barack leads Wikipedia race (2007-08-31 13:49)	372
Obama targets youth, faithful (2007-08-31 16:19)	372
1.9 September	373
Obama gets Iowa endorsement, Chicago money (2007-09-02 11:00)	373
Barack vs. Hillary (2007-09-02 18:49)	373
Iran next? (2007-09-03 22:17)	374
Hoping for Obama on Pakistan (2007-09-04 07:57)	374
(2007-09-04 07:57)	375
(2007-09-04 17:30)	375
Obama, Clinton back bigger Army (2007-09-05 08:24)	376
Obama and Clinton for "Change" (2007-09-05 12:18)	376
The Oprah Factor (2007-09-05 20:00)	376
Barack leads the way on the internet (2007-09-06 21:22)	377
Roland Martin on Oprah's support (2007-09-07 16:04)	377
Black scholar says Obama is the right choice (2007-09-07 20:46)	378
Oprah hosts gala fundraiser (2007-09-08 19:28)	379
Obama-Edwards ticket? (2007-09-09 22:39)	379
Barack ain't finished yet (2007-09-12 18:19)	380
Obama wins Nebraska straw poll (2007-09-14 19:13)	381
Obama does well with military, environmentalists (2007-09-16 13:23)	381
Obama does well with military, environmentalists (2007-09-16 13:23)	382
Obama names National Outreach Team (2007-09-17 21:16)	382
Obama offers $80 billion tax fairness plan (2007-09-18 17:12)	383
Barack aims for 350,000 donors (2007-09-24 09:21)	383
Barack Obama's NH debate performance (2007-09-27 08:40)	384
Barack Obama holds NYC mega-rally (2007-09-28 10:29)	384
Obama reaches fundrasing goal, leads in Iowa (2007-09-30 14:02)	385
1.10 October	386
Clinton buries Obama for first time in 3Q (2007-10-02 08:14)	386
Rep. Schakowsky endorses Obama (2007-10-02 18:22)	387
Obama focusing in on Iowa and New Hampshire (2007-10-03 19:41)	387
Obama might want to lay low (2007-10-04 09:27)	387
Barack on Federal Spending Transparency (2007-10-05 07:47)	388

New Obama ad features Air Force General (2007-10-05 18:17)	388
Barack Obama tops in Iowa staff (2007-10-06 14:22)	388
Barack Obama announces green energy plan (2007-10-08 15:12)	389
Obama supports Peru FTA (2007-10-09 16:07)	389
Obama warns against Iran attack in op-ed (2007-10-11 09:52)	390
Durbin disagrees on Iran, but says Obama poised for Iowa win (2007-10-12 15:39)	392
Obama goes door-to-door in Iowa (2007-10-13 21:43)	392
Illinois SEIU endorses Obama, Iowa goes for Edwards (2007-10-15 11:04)	393
Campaign collects funds in London, Madison (2007-10-15 16:34)	393
Alice Walker endorses Obama (2007-10-15 20:47)	393
Barack banking on Iowa (2007-10-16 08:06)	394
Barack details rural development policy (2007-10-16 15:26)	394
Youth vote still key for Obama (2007-10-16 20:34)	395
New Obama ad targets greenhouse emissions, Detroit (2007-10-17 10:32)	395
Deval Patrick set to endorse Barack Obama (2007-10-17 15:44)	396
(2007-10-17 15:44)	396
Paul, Obama lead in military contributions (2007-10-17 19:35)	396
More SEIUs endorse Barack Obama (2007-10-18 13:32)	397
Barack leads in higher education donations (2007-10-18 15:13)	397
Obama emphasizes Iraq War stance in Reno (2007-10-19 07:35)	398
Targeted committees growing in Obama campaign (2007-10-19 10:43)	399
(2007-10-19 11:31)	400
Barack reaches out to Nevada Latinos (2007-10-19 12:40)	400
Assorted Obama News and Videos (2007-10-19 13:00)	401
Barack Obama promises immediate Iraq pullout (2007-10-19 20:45)	401
Obama campaign strategy (2007-10-20 07:51)	402
Obama and Residual Troops (2007-10-20 13:26)	405
(2007-10-20 21:41)	406
Barack Obama addresses Latino Dropout Rate in East LA (2007-10-21 07:30)	406
Obama Game Plan (2007-10-21 09:09)	407
South Carolina for Barack Obama Beauty & Barber Shop Program (2007-10-21 20:14)	408
Barack Obama launches new ad in New Hampshire (2007-10-22 09:03)	409
Deval Patrick to endorse Obama at Boston Rally (2007-10-22 12:50)	409
Obama fans (2007-10-22 17:01)	410
Obama fans (2007-10-22 17:01)	410

Campaigns pushing ground campaigns (2007-10-22 19:46)	410
Letter: John Tanner must be removed (2007-10-22 22:17)	410
Obama on the Issues (2007-10-23 07:17)	412
Funny Bush-Clinton dynasty video (2007-10-23 14:25)	418
Patrick endorses Obama before crowd of 9,500 (2007-10-23 20:49)	419
Obama gets interesting endorsements (2007-10-24 10:35)	420
Obama asks supporters to help in California (2007-10-24 15:40)	420
Barack Obama and Asian Pacific Americans (2007-10-25 07:31)	420
Obama: Role for Gore offered (2007-10-25 10:16)	421
Obama wins mock presidential election (2007-10-25 15:39)	421
Obama winning mock presidential election (2007-10-25 15:39)	422
Barack Obama gets two new endorsements (2007-10-26 16:28)	422
Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders for Obama (2007-10-27 21:45)	422
Obama news in the early states (2007-10-29 11:28)	426
Obama: Show restraint on Iran (2007-10-29 16:41)	427
A new Barack Obama in tonight's debate? (2007-10-30 11:35)	427
All Quiet on Obama Front (2007-10-30 14:56)	427
Debate reviews (2007-10-31 11:08)	428
Barack's plan to stop violence against women (2007-10-31 20:49)	431
1.11 November	433
Former SC chief justice, Durham mayor endorse Obama (2007-11-02 14:28)	433
(2007-11-03 12:29)	434
'One brick at a time' (2007-11-03 16:43)	438
NH SEIU may reendorse Obama (2007-11-04 12:24)	438
(2007-11-04 13:44)	438
Althouse: "I would say, 'Go, Obama, you're black enough for me.'" (2007-11-04 20:57)	439
Handicapping Obama (2007-11-05 08:53)	439
Scatablog: Obama: passing the torch to a new generation? (2007-11-05 18:14)	440
Manning Civil Rights Speech (2007-11-06 08:29)	441
The Case for Obama (2007-11-06 14:17)	442
Obama begins swing through Iowa (2007-11-07 14:59)	443
(2007-11-07 16:56)	444
Obama: Leadership for Rural Nevada (2007-11-08 11:51)	445
(2007-11-08 15:37)	446
New Hampshire Presidential Watch: Patrick To Campaign for Obama (2007-11-08 15:48)	447

Obama speaks to retirees left "High and Dry" in Iowa (2007-11-09 23:09)	447
Obama's Strengths (2007-11-10 10:20)	447
Obama supporters fired up for Jefferson-Jackson Dinner (2007-11-10 11:10)	448
Video footage from JJ Dinner rallies (2007-11-10 18:53)	449
Rave reviews for Obama at JJ Dinner (2007-11-11 11:50)	449
Barack Obama gobbles mouse (2007-11-12 15:55)	450
Obama campaign in Nevada and New Hampshire (2007-11-12 16:02)	451
'Mother of all fundraising challenges' (2007-11-12 22:19)	452
74 days left in South Carolina (2007-11-13 17:11)	452
Barack Obama on high tech and innovation (2007-11-14 12:53)	452
Tech proponent Lessig endorses Obama (2007-11-14 21:21)	453
Nevada supporters prepare for tonight's debate (2007-11-15 08:31)	454
UAW regional group endorses Obama, includes Iowa (2007-11-15 17:24)	454
Obama wins CNN poll in racous debate (2007-11-16 09:31)	454
Gov. Kaine to campaign for Obama in Iowa (2007-11-16 17:29)	455
Dirty campaigning ahead? (2007-11-18 19:25)	456
Rumors fly over Obama JJ turnout (2007-11-18 19:48)	457
Barack outlines Veterans Homelessness Prevention Act (2007-11-19 12:56)	457
Obama reveals new $18 billion education plan (2007-11-20 09:20)	458
Events in the Early States (2007-11-20 13:37)	458
Rep. Quirk endorses Obama (2007-11-20 18:00)	460
Tino Villareal on Obama (2007-11-21 10:55)	460
Reasons to vote for Barack Obama (2007-11-21 11:23)	462
Time Portraits of Barack Obama (2007-11-23 10:51)	462
NH primary (2007-11-23 15:47)	463
"Why I'm supporting Barack Obama" (2007-11-24 15:58)	463
Obama touts health care plan in Council Bluffs (2007-11-24 20:28)	464
Things looking up for Obama in Iowa (2007-11-25 11:42)	465
(2007-11-25 23:27)	465
Oprah joins Obama on bus tour (2007-11-26 10:28)	466
Historians for Obama (2007-11-26 16:52)	466
Obama Foreign Policy Forum in New Hampshire (2007-11-26 19:55)	468
Barack discusses foreign policy with expert panel (2007-11-27 09:47)	470
(2007-11-27 09:47)	471
(2007-11-27 17:18)	471

ObamaGirl: Why Obama? (2007-11-27 17:31)	471
Michelle Obama in Iowa (2007-11-27 23:04)	471
Obama aiming for Feb. 5? (2007-11-28 11:51)	472
Campaign opens Utah office (2007-11-28 17:22)	472
PunditMom: Oprah and Obama (2007-11-28 23:50)	473
CA Assembly leader Karen Bass touts Obama (2007-11-29 11:25)	473
More on Obama's "Grassroots Tuesday" (2007-11-29 13:10)	475
Obama at the Apollo (2007-11-29 19:48)	475
Barack Obama Biography (2007-11-30 09:20)	476
Barack Obama Quotes (2007-11-30 10:37)	483
1.12 December	487
Is Obama Tough Enough? (2007-12-01 10:30)	487
Time Magazine features Obama (2007-12-01 16:15)	490
Change Rocks Concert/Rally (2007-12-02 10:01)	491
Barack Obama Speech List (2007-12-02 15:29)	491
Des Moines Mayor Endorses Obama (2007-12-02 15:39)	502
Obama Rapid Response Website (2007-12-03 09:07)	502
Obama News on Monday (2007-12-03 13:33)	503
Barack O'Bollywood (2007-12-03 18:53)	505
Obama News on Tuesday (2007-12-04 12:53)	505
130 South Carolina Ministers endorse Barack Obama (2007-12-04 13:04)	505
Barack Obama Video List (2007-12-04 16:00)	506
First Iowa Daily endorses Barack Obama (2007-12-05 11:57)	507
Obama News on Wednesday (2007-12-05 12:00)	508
Oprah-Obama event moved to Williams-Brice Stadium (2007-12-05 15:59)	509
New Obama videos (2007-12-06 12:28)	510
?????? Service (2007-12-06 15:04)	511
Obama News for Thursday (2007-12-06 16:08)	511
Obama News on Friday (2007-12-07 11:53)	511
Barack Obama first on TV in Nevada (2007-12-07 16:33)	513
Barack Obama 2008 (2007-12-08 11:05)	513
18,500 Iowans battle cold to see Oprah-Obama (2007-12-08 16:04)	514
(2007-12-09 08:51)	514
Live video feed from South Carolina Oprah-Obama (2007-12-09 08:54)	514
Barack and Oprah rock SC, off to New Hampshire (2007-12-09 15:52)	515

Barbara Lee endorses Barack Obama (2007-12-10 11:33)	516
Carol Shea-Porter endorses Obama in New Hampshire (2007-12-10 15:02)	516
Carol Shea-Porter endorses Obama in New Hampshire (2007-12-10 15:02)	517
The endorsements keep pouring in (2007-12-10 18:30)	517
Nevada TV campaign launched (2007-12-11 18:24)	517
Letters for Iowa (2007-12-11 22:36)	518
(2007-12-12 09:42)	519
Barack's plan for Americans with disabilities (2007-12-12 15:03)	520
What's going on in the early states (2007-12-12 18:33)	521
Obama News on Thursday (2007-12-13 08:46)	521
Black Enterprise: 'Why Barack Obama Should Be President' (2007-12-13 12:08)	522
Barack strong in last Iowa debate (2007-12-13 16:45)	524
Obama a step forward on Education (2007-12-13 17:59)	524
Africa and Darfur Forum in Las Vegas with Samantha Power (2007-12-14 10:25)	525
(2007-12-14 12:33)	525
(2007-12-14 12:39)	526
Zogby: The Obama Phenomenon (2007-12-14 14:46)	527
Obama's New Plan for the Arts (2007-12-14 17:39)	527
Iowa Obama Videos (2007-12-14 19:37)	528
Barack Obama: Dahil Sa Iyo (2007-12-15 08:59)	528
Boston Globe endorses Barack Obama (2007-12-15 22:11)	528
Boston Globe endorsement (full text) (2007-12-16 10:13)	528
Barack Obama on Health Care (2007-12-16 10:43)	530
Truth Be Told : A Time for Change (2007-12-16 19:01)	533
(2007-12-17 09:19)	533
Barack Obama Muslim? (2007-12-18 09:44)	534
Michelle Obama Biography (2007-12-18 10:53)	534
Barack Obama on Iraq War (2007-12-18 11:45)	535
'It's beginning to look a lot like...' (2007-12-18 15:55)	537
Obama News in the Early States (2007-12-18 19:13)	537
Obama Holiday Greetings and News (2007-12-19 09:45)	539
Europeans favor Barack Obama among candidates (2007-12-19 13:33)	541
'I support Barack Obama' (2007-12-19 15:29)	541
'I support Barack Obama' (2007-12-19 15:29)	544
Iowa Caucus: Step-by-Step (2007-12-19 19:15)	546

More Obama endorsements roll in (2007-12-20 08:14)	546
More Obama endorsements roll in (2007-12-20 08:14)	549
Hillary preparing Barack attack websites? (2007-12-20 10:44)	550
Some grassroots Obama videos on YouTube (2007-12-20 13:44)	550
Obama News for Friday (2007-12-21 10:08)	551
Wonderful World for the Holidays (2007-12-21 12:13)	551
Grand Opening of Sacramento Obama Field Office (2007-12-21 19:02)	552
Obama News in Iowa and South Carolina (2007-12-21 19:15)	552
Iowa's El Latino newspaper endorses Barack Obama (2007-12-21 21:52)	553
Targeting swing voters (2007-12-22 09:22)	553
Sioux City Journal endorses Barack Obama (2007-12-22 13:59)	554
More Obama endorsements (2007-12-23 08:58)	554
Wayne Ford endorsement gives Obama Iowa Lead (2007-12-23 09:32)	556
Barack in Iowa (2007-12-23 15:35)	556
Video: Rep. Jesse Jackson Jr and Gov. Tim Kaine (2007-12-23 18:55)	557
Obama Christmas Videos (2007-12-24 12:50)	557
Fired Up? (2007-12-26 11:24)	558
Gov. Deval Patrick to visit early states for Obama (2007-12-26 12:06)	558
More bloggers endorse Obama (2007-12-26 13:54)	558
Ottumwa Courier endorses Obama (2007-12-26 21:27)	559
Will Benazir Bhutto assassination impact U.S. elections? (2007-12-27 09:17)	560
Rep. William Delahunt endorses Barack Obama (2007-12-27 09:39)	561
Asian American org denounces Obama, calls for defeat (2007-12-27 10:12)	561
Assemb. Linda Greenstein supports Barack (2007-12-27 12:11)	564
More on 80-20 anti-Obama campaign (2007-12-27 16:51)	564
Stand for Change Tour on Fri. & Sat. (2007-12-27 20:45)	566
Marshalltown UAW endorses Barack Obama (2007-12-28 09:29)	571
Obama: Real Leadership for Seniors (2007-12-28 10:06)	571
Getting People to Caucus (2007-12-28 10:35)	572
New TV ads (2007-12-28 16:10)	572
North Dakota Sen. Kent Conrad backs Obama (2007-12-29 09:41)	572
barackobama.com has new look (2007-12-29 09:45)	573
Nathan Gonzalez: 'Why I'm supporting Barack Obama' (2007-12-29 12:52)	573
Obama Events in Iowa on Sun. & Mon. (2007-12-29 19:58)	574
Rep. Danny Davis: Why I'm Supporting Barack Obama (2007-12-30 08:31)	579

Times-Republican: Obama brings message of hope, change (2007-12-30 11:32)	580
'You've Got the Power' (2007-12-30 14:36)	581
Game Time (2007-12-31 08:14)	581
Crowd size vs. Special Interest cash (2007-12-31 10:15)	582
Barack on Ending the War in Iraq (2007-12-31 11:25)	583
Michelle Obama: 'Let's do this Right' (2007-12-31 16:32)	584
Barack tops last Des Moines Register poll (2007-12-31 20:09)	586
Barack tops last Des Moines Register poll (2007-12-31 20:09)	587

2 2008 589

2.1 January	589
A New Year and a day closer (2008-01-01 09:34)	589
Dennis Kucinich: Pick Obama as second choice (2008-01-01 14:25)	589
Dennis Kucinich: Pick Obama as second choice (2008-01-01 14:25)	590
Two online polls (2008-01-01 20:48)	590
Barack's email today (2008-01-02 09:53)	593
"Major" South Carolina announcement expected soon (2008-01-02 10:18)	594
Iowa Caucus Step by Step (2008-01-02 11:02)	594
Obama wins Coffee Bean Caucus in Iowa City (2008-01-02 14:45)	595
Final Iowa Ad: Leader (2008-01-02 17:18)	595
The Time is Now (2008-01-03 09:13)	595
Request from Michelle (2008-01-03 09:40)	596
Documentary: Hope for Change (2008-01-03 10:46)	597
Richardson endorsing Obama? (2008-01-03 12:36)	597
It's about time... (2008-01-03 15:28)	598
The Impact of Iowa (2008-01-03 22:05)	598
Barack Obama's Acceptance Speech (2008-01-04 01:02)	599
Mayor and Former Gov. Wilder endorses Obama (2008-01-04 16:41)	599
Independence (2008-01-04 18:56)	599
Iowa Caucus Party @ Sacramento Obama Headquarters (2008-01-04 19:56)	600
Major Wisconsin endorsement expected (2008-01-05 09:07)	600
2,500 rally at Nashua, New Hampshire (2008-01-05 11:20)	600
Obama News on Sunday (2008-01-06 10:10)	602
Big crowd again in Manchester (2008-01-06 10:34)	603
Lines, rallies, 100 Club Speech, Hawaiian music (2008-01-06 22:52)	608
Obama gets more endorsements (2008-01-07 07:48)	608

MSNBC's Brian Williams interviews Barack Obama (2008-01-07 18:26)	609
Culinary Workers Union to endorse Obama? (2008-01-08 08:14)	609
Obama Update (2008-01-08 14:36)	610
Barack Obama finishes strong second in New Hampshire (2008-01-08 21:18)	610
What may have happened in New Hampshire (2008-01-08 21:43)	610
Despite setback, many endorsements expected today (2008-01-09 08:01)	611
Many endorsements expected today for Obama (2008-01-09 08:07)	611
Obama camp to regroup (2008-01-09 08:23)	611
More endorsement news (2008-01-09 09:37)	611
Culinary Workers Union endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-09 09:46)	612
More on Culinary Workers endorsement (2008-01-09 10:14)	613
Obama Events in Nevada and South Carolina (2008-01-09 13:37)	614
Obama News on Wednesday (2008-01-09 14:51)	614
Gov. Bill Richardson pulls out, impact on Obama campaign (2008-01-09 19:19)	615
Town Hall Meeting with Barack Obama in Las Vegas (2008-01-09 20:17)	615
John Kerry to endorse Barack Obama in South Carolina (2008-01-10 08:27)	616
New Nevada TV ad (2008-01-10 13:31)	617
Video: John Kerry Endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-10 13:40)	617
Video: John Kerry Endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-10 13:40)	617
Ned Lamont supports Barack Obama (2008-01-10 18:34)	617
Buzz: Arizona Gov. Janet Napolitano to endorse Obama? (2008-01-10 23:57)	618
Gov. Napolitano to endorse Obama in Las Vegas (2008-01-11 09:08)	619
Barack Obama on Immigration (2008-01-11 10:29)	619
Barack Obama on Civil Rights (2008-01-11 10:39)	622
Gary Hart endorses Obama (2008-01-11 12:24)	623
Barack Obama on Jobs and the Economy (2008-01-11 17:33)	624
Obama ads to air in Arizona and California (2008-01-12 10:06)	624
Stand for Change Tour in Nevada (2008-01-12 10:52)	625
Obama News on Sunday (2008-01-12 11:03)	625
Video: Culinary Workers Union Rally with Barack (2008-01-12 14:16)	626
Barack Obama on Education (2008-01-12 15:34)	626
Obama News on Sunday (2008-01-13 09:30)	628
Obama California opens four new offices (2008-01-13 12:15)	629
State Sen. Gil Cedillo to endorse Barack Obama (2008-01-13 16:01)	629
Michelle Obama returns to stump in South Carolina (2008-01-13 18:17)	630

Nevada Ground Campaign (2008-01-14 09:27)	631
Where Obama Stands: On Iraq (2008-01-14 13:59)	632
Rep. Zoe Lofgren endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-14 14:09)	634
2,500 greet Barack Obama in Reno (2008-01-14 18:45)	635
Obama on the Environment (2008-01-15 09:46)	635
Obama News on Tuesday (2008-01-15 10:05)	638
Video: Latino legislators endorse Obama in Los Angeles (2008-01-15 12:13)	638
Obama in Nevada (2008-01-15 17:30)	639
(2008-01-15 17:30)	639
Barack picks up more key support (2008-01-15 18:06)	639
Las Vegas Review-Journal and other endorsements (2008-01-16 00:24)	640
Maria Elena Durazo on Barack Obama (2008-01-16 07:41)	641
New Nevada ads (2008-01-16 14:39)	641
Mobilizing Voters (2008-01-16 15:13)	641
Barack stumps through Nevada (2008-01-16 18:02)	642
Barack Obama on Poverty (2008-01-16 22:32)	643
Obama Events in South Carolina today (2008-01-17 06:59)	645
Santa Barbara Independent endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-17 08:55)	646
Nevada SEIU airs TV ad (2008-01-17 09:05)	648
Sen. Patrick Leahy endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-17 09:16)	648
Gov. Kathleen Sebelius to endorse Obama? (2008-01-17 10:13)	648
Video: Barack Obama on Seniors (2008-01-17 14:06)	648
Kansas Dems endorse Barack Obama (2008-01-17 17:20)	650
Reno Gazette-Journal chooses Obama (2008-01-17 19:05)	651
California Rep. Linda Sanchez endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-18 08:45)	653
Videos: Campaigning in Nevada (2008-01-18 09:25)	654
Michelle Obama: Who's out there (2008-01-18 10:58)	655
Michelle Obama delights in starring role (2008-01-18 12:15)	657
Fairy tale? (2008-01-18 12:59)	659
Barack Obama on Veterans (2008-01-18 14:03)	660
Harvard Crimson picks Barack Obama (2008-01-18 14:44)	662
Roland Martin: Voters win as caucus challenge knocked down (2008-01-18 15:21)	665
Barack Obama tackles housing crisis in Las Vegas (2008-01-18 16:39)	667
Barack Obama tackles housing crisis in Las Vegas (2008-01-18 16:39)	668
Barack wins first-ever Nickelodeon Kids' Primary (2008-01-18 17:08)	668

Rep. George Miller: Why I support Senator Obama (2008-01-18 18:04)	669
Barack Obama on the Family (2008-01-18 20:24)	672
Atlanta Journal-Constitution endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-18 21:32)	673
Nevadans: Find Your Caucus Location (2008-01-19 00:41)	676
Varied endorsements for Barack Obama (2008-01-19 08:47)	678
Sacramento Bee endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-19 09:26)	678
(2008-01-19 09:51)	680
Nevada Caucus Today (2008-01-19 10:20)	680
Obama finishes strong second in Nevada (2008-01-19 14:40)	680
Upcoming Obama Events in South Carolina (2008-01-19 16:19)	681
Hold the presses: Obama wins delegate vote in Nevada (2008-01-19 18:21)	681
St. Petersburg Times endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-20 10:21)	682
Get Out The Vote drive fires up in South Carolina (2008-01-20 12:24)	684
Tuscaloosa News picks Barack Obama (2008-01-20 14:27)	685
Video: Obama in Atlanta and South Carolina (2008-01-21 08:49)	687
Baltimore Mayor Sheila Dixon endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-21 10:37)	687
(2008-01-21 11:05)	688
Rep. Rick Boucher endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-21 12:05)	689
Video clips from CNN debate (2008-01-21 21:49)	689
Rep. Bennie Thompson endorses Sen. Barack Obama (2008-01-22 09:32)	689
Is Hillary Clinton bugging out of South Carolina? (2008-01-22 10:27)	690
The Importance of South Carolina (2008-01-22 11:18)	690
SC: 'The State' Endorses Barack Obama for President (2008-01-22 14:14)	691
One on one: Kareem Abdul-Jabbar vs. Magic Johnson (2008-01-22 16:05)	692
Sen. John Kerry asks supporters to fight swiftboating (2008-01-22 17:37)	693
(2008-01-22 17:43)	694
New Mexico endorsement rally tomorrow (2008-01-22 20:37)	694
New York Observer to endorse Barack Obama (2008-01-22 21:17)	695
Three Ways to Get Involved (2008-01-23 08:02)	696
The Desert Sun recommends Barack Obama (2008-01-23 08:39)	698
A Vote for Obama is a Vote for Women (2008-01-23 09:11)	699
Why Lorna Brett Howard switched from Clinton to Obama (2008-01-23 14:49)	701
The Rock Hill Herald (SC) Endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-23 15:35)	702
The Greenville News Endorses Barack Obama for Democrats (2008-01-23 16:13)	703
Five Top Social Networking Tips (2008-01-23 18:15)	705

New Mexico fires up for Barack Obama (2008-01-23 20:10)	706
Cost of the Iraq War (2008-01-23 22:01)	709
Obama News on Thursday (2008-01-24 09:01)	709
WaPo: Barack's economic solution gets highest grade (2008-01-24 10:13)	709
Obama Events in South Carolina (2008-01-24 12:54)	710
Santa Cruz Sentinel backs Barack Obama (2008-01-24 15:49)	713
The Herald (SC) endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-24 16:10)	714
The Road to Change: South Carolina (2008-01-24 18:25)	715
SC Black News Endorses Barack (2008-01-24 22:50)	716
The Daily Gamecock endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-24 23:23)	718
Modesto Bee backs Barack Obama (2008-01-25 08:33)	718
Barack thanks Heidi in Beaufort (2008-01-25 11:29)	720
Barack Obama on Politics of Hope rather than Division (2008-01-25 14:03)	721
Sun-Sentinel endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-25 15:01)	722
San Jose Mercury News endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-25 16:34)	724
Video from South Carolina (2008-01-25 18:40)	725
Huge crowds gather for pre-election rallies (2008-01-25 20:58)	726
Write a letter to the editor (2008-01-25 21:10)	727
Barack Obama's Plan to tackle the Housing Crisis (2008-01-25 21:23)	729
South Carolina votes (2008-01-26 07:33)	729
Philadephia Inquirer endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-26 10:32)	729
The Bohemian (CA) recommends Barack Obama (2008-01-26 14:18)	731
The Bohemian (CA) recommends Barack Obama (2008-01-26 14:18)	732
St. Louis Post-Dispatch picks Obama (2008-01-26 15:19)	734
Chicago Tribune endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-26 15:27)	735
Obama's Sleeping Giant: Young Voters (2008-01-26 16:10)	736
Barack Obama projected winner in South Carolina (2008-01-26 17:05)	737
Caroline Kennedy: 'A President Like My Father' (2008-01-26 19:31)	737
Barack Obama's victory speech in South Carolina (2008-01-26 21:14)	739
Seattle Times endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-27 07:20)	739
Stockton Record recommends Barack Obama (2008-01-27 07:30)	742
Times of Trenton (NJ) backs Barack Obama (2008-01-27 07:43)	743
Ted Kennedy to endorse Barack Obama? (2008-01-27 08:09)	744
San Francisco Chronicle backs Barack Obama (2008-01-27 08:15)	745
Arizona Republic backs Barack Obama (2008-01-27 08:30)	746

Rep. Xavier Beccera (D - LA) endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-27 09:43)	747
Sen. Ted Kennedy to endorse Barack Obama (2008-01-27 10:39)	748
Ground forces, surrogates will play key Super Tuesday role (2008-01-27 12:21)	748
More Endorsement News (2008-01-27 14:55)	749
New Spanish Language Phone Banking Tool (2008-01-27 20:58)	749
Toni Morrison endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-28 10:11)	751
Rep. Mike Capuano endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-28 10:54)	752
Is Camelot Relevant? (2008-01-28 15:12)	752
California State Legislators Endorse Barack Obama (2008-01-28 19:35)	753
Barack Obama responds to State of the Union Address (2008-01-28 20:35)	755
Ted Kennedy: Why I'm Endorsing Barack Obama (2008-01-28 21:14)	756
Two New Ads on the Air (2008-01-28 23:40)	758
TechCrunch endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-29 07:17)	759
The Day backs Barack Obama (2008-01-29 07:37)	760
Kathleen Sebelius to Endorse Barack Obama (2008-01-29 09:37)	761
Rep. Raul Grijalva endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-29 11:24)	762
California Absentee Ballots Due Feb. 5 (2008-01-29 13:24)	762
Gov. Kathleen Sebelius Endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-29 13:29)	763
New Campaign Ads (2008-01-29 15:56)	767
Connecticut Post endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-29 19:00)	768
Pres. Jimmy Carter talks up Barack Obama (2008-01-29 22:29)	769
John Edwards to withdraw from race (2008-01-30 07:53)	769
Barack Obama Live in Denver (2008-01-30 10:59)	770
More Campaign Videos (2008-01-30 12:51)	771
Sen. Ted Kennedy: I'm Fired Up (2008-01-30 13:16)	771
Obama Endorsement News (2008-01-30 13:50)	772
Anna Eshoo (D-Palo Alto) endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-30 16:14)	775
MAPA endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-30 20:47)	775
College Newspapers Endorse Barack Obama (2008-01-31 07:04)	778
Campaign Goodies at Obama Store (2008-01-31 08:31)	779
More Obama Endorsement News (2008-01-31 09:48)	779
Obama Endorsements Still Pouring In (2008-01-31 12:27)	781
Obama Campaign Rallies (2008-01-31 15:27)	783
Edwards' Union supporters expected to back Obama (2008-01-31 17:33)	783
Barack Obama talks immigration policy during debate (2008-01-31 20:33)	783

2.2 February	783
Obama News on Friday (2008-02-01 08:32)	783
Good Judgment on Day One (2008-02-01 10:15)	784
MoveOn.org endorses Barack Obama for President (2008-02-01 10:33)	784
Dean Florez on GOTV (2008-02-01 13:11)	786
Los Angeles Times Endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-01 15:23)	786
Endorsement Wave Keeps Rolling (2008-02-01 15:53)	788
Michelle Obama, Oprah Winfrey and Caroline Kennedy Rally this Sunday in Los Angeles (2008-02-01 16:04)	788
Seattle Post-Intelligencer Endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-01 19:11)	789
MySpace-MTV "Closing Arguments" (2008-02-01 20:20)	790
Barack speaks on Education in Santa Fe (2008-02-01 21:28)	792
La Opinión endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-02 07:28)	792
Albuquerque Tribune endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-02 07:52)	794
Obama News on Saturday (2008-02-02 15:35)	795
Sacramento Rallies for Barack Obama (2008-02-03 07:52)	796
Obama Rallies on Sunday and Monday (2008-02-03 09:29)	797
The Last 72 Hours... (2008-02-03 09:35)	798
The Star Ledger (NJ) endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-03 10:55)	798
Endorse-O-Thon (2008-02-03 13:17)	799
First Lady Maria Shriver to Endorse Barack Obama (2008-02-03 16:01)	800
Video: Maria Shriver endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-03 17:15)	801
Oprah Winfrey at LA Rally (2008-02-03 20:13)	801
Super Bowl Ad (2008-02-03 20:39)	801
The Oregonian endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-03 22:23)	802
Joan Baez Endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-04 06:44)	803
Tufts Daily Endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-04 07:21)	803
LA Rally (Full video) (2008-02-04 23:12)	805
Our Moment is Now (2008-02-04 23:17)	805
Find Your Polling Place! (2008-02-05 06:24)	806
Find Your Polling Place! (2008-02-05 06:24)	807
Plouffe: Obama wins by gaining more states and more delegates (2008-02-06 07:24)	808
(2008-02-06 07:24)	809
More on upcoming contests (2008-02-06 07:32)	809
More on upcoming contests (2008-02-06 07:32)	810
(2008-02-06 08:08)	810

Washington SEIU endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-06 15:58)	811
(2008-02-06 20:50)	811
Sacramento comes through for Barack Obama (2008-02-06 21:36)	812
Washington Governor Chris Gregoire endorses Obama (2008-02-08 10:24)	812
Barack Obama sweeps Saturday contests (2008-02-10 09:23)	814
NBC projects an Obama victory in Maine (2008-02-10 17:43)	814
Feb 12: Maryland, Virginia, and D.C. Voting Info (2008-02-11 13:51)	814
San Antonio Rep. Charlie Gonzalez endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-11 16:56)	815
(2008-02-11 16:56)	817
Barack with DC voters (2008-02-12 14:19)	818
CNN: Barack Obama wins Virginia (2008-02-12 17:01)	818
Wisconsin rallies tomorrow (2008-02-14 12:47)	818
United Food and Commercial Workers endorse Barack Obama (2008-02-14 16:31)	820
Video: Barack Obama in Wisconsin (2008-02-15 18:16)	821
The Houston Chronicle endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-16 11:58)	821
The Honolulu Advertiser endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-17 09:33)	823
Michelle Obama in Newsweek (2008-02-17 20:12)	824
Michelle Obama in Newsweek (2008-02-17 20:12)	827
Barack Obama at Founder's Day Gala (2008-02-18 12:53)	830
Wisconsin & Hawai'i: Your Moment is Now (2008-02-18 18:55)	830
Video: Hawai'i and Wisconsin (2008-02-19 18:08)	831
Barack Obama wins Wisconsin (2008-02-19 19:37)	832
Obama heads to Mar. 4 with Big Mo (2008-02-20 09:49)	832
Obama Events in the Mar. 4 States (2008-02-20 16:32)	833
Obama wins Teamsters and Boilermakers' endorsements (2008-02-20 16:46)	833
Obama Wins the Democrats Abroad Primary (2008-02-21 11:19)	834
Change to Win endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-21 12:05)	835
Change to Win endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-21 12:05)	835
Change to Win endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-21 12:05)	836
Russ Feingold 'inclined' to endorse Barack Obama (2008-02-21 13:12)	836
¡Viva Obama! (2008-02-22 07:00)	837
Upcoming Obama Events (2008-02-22 20:23)	837
Obama promises close ties with India (2008-02-23 14:03)	838
Barack Obama in Austin (2008-02-23 20:54)	839
Comedian George Lopez endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-24 08:30)	839

Comedian George Lopez endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-24 08:30)	840
Barack Obama in Football Country (2008-02-24 12:46)	840
Barack in Ohio (2008-02-24 23:29)	841
Register in Vermont by Wednesday (2008-02-25 13:18)	842
Upcoming Obama Events (2008-02-25 18:56)	842
(2008-02-26 09:03)	844
Latest Obama Videos (2008-02-26 09:26)	845
Latest Obama Videos (2008-02-26 09:26)	845
Sen. Christopher Dodd endorses Sen. Barack Obama (2008-02-26 12:02)	845
Video: Debate and Dodd Endorsement (2008-02-26 21:18)	847
Former Texas Gov. Mark White endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-27 09:47)	847
Breaking: Rep. John Lewis Endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-27 15:43)	848
Obama Events for Mar. 4 (2008-02-27 19:28)	849
Toledo Blade (OH) endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-28 09:58)	850
San Marcos rally draws 12,000 Texans (2008-02-28 14:42)	852
New Obama TV Ads (2008-02-28 18:51)	852
OSU Campus Newspaper endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-29 08:14)	853
OSU Campus Newspaper endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-29 08:55)	853
A million calls by March 4th (2008-02-29 10:50)	854
Social Security Administration Union endorses Obama (2008-02-29 14:53)	854
(2008-02-29 14:53)	855
Upcoming Obama Events (2008-02-29 20:17)	856
2.3 March	857
Cincinnati Enquirer endorses Barack Obama (2008-03-01 09:02)	857
Barack Obama's Statement for Women's History Month (2008-03-01 12:06)	859
Barack Obama speaks on Education and Parenting in Beaumont, TX (2008-03-01 16:23)	859
Gov. Deval Patrick and SEIU's Andy Stern in Youngstown, Ohio (2008-03-02 08:22)	860
A Call for 1.5 Million Calls (2008-03-02 16:11)	860
Texas: Road to Change (2008-03-03 09:56)	861
Ohio: Road to Change (2008-03-03 16:19)	862
March 4th Voter Info for Ohio, Texas, Rhode Island, Vermont (2008-03-03 22:42)	863
Fwd: Texans rally for Barack Obama (2008-03-04 08:24)	865
Paul Tewes on Voting in Ohio (2008-03-04 12:45)	867
CNN projects Barack Obama winning Vermont (2008-03-04 17:03)	869
Thinking about Campaign Strategy (2008-03-05 10:24)	869

David Plouffe: Doing the Math (2008-03-05 14:30)	870
Obama Gains more Delegates in Texas (2008-03-05 22:51)	872
ConsortiumNews: Guess What? Obama Is Winning Texas (2008-03-06 08:21)	873
Obama raises $55 million in February (2008-03-06 12:54)	875
Obama raises $55 million in Feb. (2008-03-06 12:59)	876
Calls to Wyoming (2008-03-06 22:06)	877
Nevada: Road to Change (2008-03-07 11:06)	878
Wyoming Caucus Info (2008-03-07 15:22)	878
North Carolina also a big state (2008-03-08 07:57)	880
Barack Obama wins Wyoming Caucus (2008-03-08 16:53)	880
Sleeping child in Clinton ad was Obama Precinct Captain (2008-03-09 13:00)	881
Obama Events in Mississippi (2008-03-09 17:55)	881
Polling Locations for Mississippi (2008-03-09 21:17)	882
Rolling Stone covers Barack Obama (2008-03-09 21:28)	885
Getting out the vote in Mississippi (2008-03-10 15:47)	885
Mississippi: Our Moment is Now (2008-03-11 07:17)	887
Fox calls Mississippi for Obama (2008-03-11 17:12)	888
Barack Obama: Victories and Attacks (2008-03-11 19:53)	888
Hillary should concede and unite the party (2008-03-12 10:06)	889
Countering the Spin (2008-03-12 14:53)	889
President's Most Important Duty (2008-03-12 21:23)	891
Philadelphia Black Clergy endorse Barack Obama (2008-03-13 09:18)	891
Philadelphia Black Clergy endorse Barack Obama (2008-03-13 09:18)	892
NC Lt. Gov. Beverly Perdue endorses Barack Obama (2008-03-13 09:24)	893
(2008-03-13 09:24)	893
Barack Obama unveils New Housing Crisis Plan (2008-03-13 18:06)	894
Registering voters in Pennsylvania today (2008-03-14 10:59)	894
MoveOn Video Contest: Obama in 30 Seconds (2008-03-14 19:00)	895
Obama opening office in Terre Haute, Indiana (2008-03-15 07:59)	898
10 Iowa Delegates choose Barack Obama (2008-03-15 20:02)	899
Obama nets 3 more delegates in California (2008-03-15 21:22)	900
Ann Dunham Soetoro: Free-Spirited Wanderer Who Set Obama's Path (2008-03-16 14:13)	901
Barack Obama releases statement on Economy (2008-03-17 10:36)	904
Barack Obama: More Voices (2008-03-17 17:38)	905
Bill Foster supports Barack Obama (2008-03-17 20:39)	906

Barack Obama: "A More Perfect Union" (2008-03-18 06:57)	908
Video: Philadelphia Speech (2008-03-18 15:22)	914
Upcoming Barack Obama Appearances (2008-03-18 21:11)	914
Jeremiah Wright: The Unacceptability of Truth (2008-03-19 07:58)	915
(2008-03-19 07:58)	920
Obama speaks on Iraq War 5th Anniversary (2008-03-19 09:25)	921
Five Years After the Iraq War (2008-03-19 17:57)	928
Barack in North Carolina (2008-03-20 12:34)	930
Bill Richardson endorses Barack Obama (2008-03-21 06:48)	930
(2008-03-21 06:48)	932
Video: Bill Richardson's Endorsement (2008-03-21 14:24)	932
New TV ads air in Pennsylvania (2008-03-21 16:00)	933
More Voices Video (Registering Voters) (2008-03-22 09:14)	933
(2008-03-22 12:25)	935
Barack Obama in the General Electon (2008-03-23 13:34)	936
Barack Obama's letter to Ben Bernanke (2008-03-24 08:44)	937
Have Dinner with Barack (2008-03-24 18:19)	939
Calling Texas Delegates (2008-03-25 16:15)	939
List of Available Superdelegates (2008-03-26 11:53)	941
Video: Obama on McCain-omics (2008-03-26 17:18)	951
Obama Warms to Wrapping Up Contest (2008-03-26 19:34)	951
(2008-03-26 19:34)	952
Obama unveils Financial Markets Plan (2008-03-27 10:20)	953
Obama Appearances in Pennsylvania (2008-03-27 14:34)	954
Video: Obama speech at Cooper Union (2008-03-27 22:31)	955
Penn. Sen. Bob Casey endorses Barack Obama (2008-03-28 11:34)	955
Video: Sen. Casey endorsement, new TV ad (2008-03-28 17:30)	957
Family Ties: Ann Dunham (NBC News) (2008-03-29 13:54)	958
Barack Obama leads Texas County Conventions (2008-03-29 20:45)	958
Barack Obama wins Texas Conventions (2008-03-30 11:25)	959
Upcoming Obama Events (2008-03-30 19:02)	959
Make and Impact in March (2008-03-31 10:21)	961
Videos and Photos from Road to Change (PA) (2008-03-31 15:18)	962
2.4 April	962
Road to Change in Pennsylvania (2008-04-01 12:26)	962

Michelle Obama in Pittsburgh (2008-04-01 22:01)	963
Wyoming Gov. Dave Freudenthal endorses Barack Obama (2008-04-02 11:38)	964
Penn. Union endorses Barack Obama (2008-04-02 14:38)	966
Barack Obama on Hardball College Tour (2008-04-02 19:40)	966
(2008-04-02 19:40)	967
(2008-04-02 19:40)	967
More than $40 million raised in March (2008-04-03 07:57)	967
Michelle Obama in Pittsburgh (2008-04-03 11:05)	968
"For Decades": New Obama TV Ad (2008-04-03 19:58)	968
Barack's Speech on 40th Anniversary of MLK Assassination (2008-04-04 09:29)	970
Michelle Obama: Yes They Can (2008-04-05 06:57)	972
Call Indiana before Registration Deadline (2008-04-05 12:45)	973
Barack Obama on Bush Economy (2008-04-06 13:05)	974
Michelle Obama in North Carolina (2008-04-06 19:47)	980
Student Rewind: All Across the Map (2008-04-07 11:50)	982
Voter Registration gains two Penn. Counties for Dems (2008-04-07 14:42)	983
Video: Barack discusses Iraq War testimony on Today Show (2008-04-08 11:11)	984
(2008-04-08 11:11)	985
New Obama Video and TV ads (2008-04-08 16:03)	985
Obama calls for Timetable, Diplomatic Surge (2008-04-08 21:09)	986
Postal Workers, Portland Tribune endorse Barack Obama (2008-04-09 10:22)	986
Three Days to Register in North Carolina (2008-04-09 14:26)	988
New TV Ad: 'Billy' (2008-04-09 14:58)	988
More Voices (2008-04-09 21:21)	989
Barack Obama in South Bend, Indiana (2008-04-10 11:25)	990
Video from Pennsylvania, Indiana and North Carolina (2008-04-10 15:49)	991
Barack Obama in Lafayette, Indiana (2008-04-11 07:59)	991
Barack Obama: 'Pass Executive Pay Legislation' (2008-04-11 12:38)	992
Obama News Roundup (2008-04-11 19:58)	993
Obama News Roundup (2008-04-11 19:58)	994
Obama in Muncie; Colin Powell (2008-04-12 09:31)	995
(2008-04-12 14:59)	995
Getting out the Vote in Pennsylvania (2008-04-13 07:30)	998
Sen. Bob Casey talks up Obama on CNN (2008-04-13 18:47)	998
Pennsylvania and the Democratic Establishment (2008-04-14 10:00)	999

Ordinary People donating to Campaign (2008-04-14 20:36)	1000
Upcoming Obama Events in Pennsylvania and Indiana (2008-04-15 06:23)	1001
Upcoming Obama Events in Pennsylvana (2008-04-15 06:23)	1003
Barack Obama: Disappointed (2008-04-15 20:10)	1004
(2008-04-16 10:36)	1005
Videos from the Campaign Trail (2008-04-16 13:15)	1006
Turnout Effort is Key (2008-04-17 07:43)	1007
Obama Video Roundup for Thursday (2008-04-17 21:38)	1008
(2008-04-17 21:38)	1008
Barack Obama speaks about John McCain (2008-04-18 09:12)	1008
Former Clinton Labor Secretary Robert Reich Endorses Obama (2008-04-18 15:17)	1009
Sacramento for Obama Debate Watching Party (2008-04-18 16:06)	1010
(2008-04-18 16:06)	1010
(2008-04-18 16:06)	1011
(2008-04-18 16:06)	1011
(2008-04-18 16:06)	1011
(2008-04-18 16:06)	1011
35,000 in Philadelphia (2008-04-18 19:31)	1012
Michelle Obama: Reach out to Pennsylvania (2008-04-19 07:09)	1014
Young Pennsylvania Voters attracted to Obama (2008-04-20 06:59)	1015
On Track for Change in Pennsylvania (2008-04-20 08:33)	1016
'Slow Roll' Stumping (2008-04-20 10:41)	1016
(2008-04-20 10:41)	1017
(2008-04-20 10:41)	1017
Barack Obama: Plan to Strengthen the Economy (2008-04-20 17:27)	1017
Michael Moore endorses Barack Obama (2008-04-21 07:41)	1023
Financial Times backs Barack Obama (2008-04-21 07:55)	1025
Saleem on volunteering for Barack Obama (2008-04-21 10:34)	1027
(2008-04-21 10:34)	1027
Jimmy Carter: World hearts Barack Obama (2008-04-21 13:52)	1027
Obama Response to Clinton Fear Ad (2008-04-21 15:02)	1028
Obama in 30 Seconds (2008-04-21 18:30)	1028
Barack Obama on Earth Day (2008-04-22 08:02)	1029
Al-Qaeda in the House (2008-04-22 10:44)	1029
Barack Obama in Pittsburgh last night (2008-04-22 13:42)	1031

One of the Outcomes of Tonight's Results (2008-04-22 19:44)	1033
Impact on Superdelegates (2008-04-22 20:25)	1033
Barack: What this means (2008-04-22 21:17)	1034
New Obama Endorsements (2008-04-23 06:54)	1034
Available Superdelegates (2008-04-23 07:26)	1036
50 Former Edwards Supporters endorse Barack Obama (2008-04-23 10:00)	1044
North Carolina GOP to run anti-Obama Ad (2008-04-23 11:11)	1045
Clinton's "Big State" Strategy (2008-04-23 13:40)	1046
Plouffe: The Facts (2008-04-23 18:12)	1047
(2008-04-24 07:41)	1048
Oregon Latino Coalition endorses Barack Obama (2008-04-24 07:54)	1049
Endorsements pour in for Barack Obama (2008-04-24 14:26)	1049
Video: Barack Obama on his Support for Equal Pay (2008-04-24 14:33)	1051
Winning Colorado vs. McCain (2008-04-25 09:06)	1052
Barack Obama's address to UFCW, new TV ad (2008-04-25 10:06)	1053
Indianapolis: Barack on Energy Policy (2008-04-25 10:37)	1053
Obama Campaign launches 50 state Registration Drive (2008-04-25 13:12)	1055
Former "Hillraiser" defecting to Obama Camp (2008-04-25 13:31)	1056
Upcoming Obama Appearances (2008-04-25 19:17)	1057
(2008-04-26 08:44)	1058
Obama Supporters want decisiveness (2008-04-26 13:18)	1058
Hoops in Indiana (2008-04-26 13:37)	1059
Barack's interview with the Indianapolis Star (2008-04-27 07:11)	1059
Barack Obama on Veterans benefits (2008-04-27 11:44)	1059
One-Stop Early Voting in North Carolina (2008-04-27 18:21)	1060
Gallup: Obama "cares about the needs of people like you" (2008-04-28 08:57)	1060
Register to Vote in Oregon before Apr. 29 (2008-04-28 10:48)	1061
Sen. Jeff Bingaman (D-NM) Endorses Barack Obama (2008-04-28 13:15)	1062
(2008-04-28 13:15)	1063
Barack Obama at Basketball Hall of Fame (Indiana) (2008-04-28 13:47)	1063
Barack Obama: The Battle for Oregon (2008-04-28 17:55)	1064
April Fundraising Deadline Approaches (2008-04-29 06:42)	1066
Barack Obama: 36 Hours and Counting (2008-04-29 06:49)	1067
Barack discusses positive campaign at Chapel Hill (2008-04-29 07:33)	1068
2.5 May	1068

(2008-05-01 08:11)	1068
John McCain's Farrakhan Connection (2008-05-01 10:32)	1068
Guilt by Association (2008-05-01 15:46)	1069
Clinton Superdelegate endorses Obama (2008-05-01 17:35)	1070
Star Wars: The Empire Strikes Barack (2008-05-02 08:20)	1070
Preachers and Politics (2008-05-02 11:20)	1071
Early Voting in Indiana may Favor Obama (2008-05-02 14:40)	1071
Barack Obama wins Guam (2008-05-03 17:09)	1071
Barack and Michelle visit ancestral homestead in Indiana (2008-05-03 20:02)	1072
Newspapers Endorse Barack Obama in NC, IN (2008-05-04 13:46)	1073
Tom Hanks Endorses Barack Obama on MySpace (2008-05-04 15:20)	1075
Video from Indiana (2008-05-04 20:48)	1075
Last Pitch to Indiana (2008-05-05 10:29)	1075
Obama News on Primary Eve (2008-05-05 14:53)	1076
Ride Share in North Carolina and Indiana (2008-05-05 22:12)	1076
Early indications look good (2008-05-06 08:46)	1077
Barack Obama Projected as Winner in North Carolina (2008-05-06 17:07)	1078
Barack Obama speaks in Raleigh (2008-05-06 17:53)	1078
Things looking up in Indiana! (2008-05-06 18:42)	1081
Obama nets more popular votes (2008-05-06 22:18)	1082
(2008-05-07 07:58)	1082
Obama News on Wednesday (2008-05-07 12:19)	1084
30 Superdelegates to Endorse Obama? (2008-05-07 20:59)	1085
More on McCain Preachers (2008-05-08 08:18)	1086
More on McCain Preachers (2008-05-08 08:18)	1086
Obama Moves To Unify Party Against McCain (2008-05-08 21:55)	1086
Union and Four Superdelegates Endorse Barack Obama (2008-05-09 09:54)	1088
Four more Superdelegates for Obama (2008-05-09 13:34)	1089
Get Out the Vote in West Virginia (2008-05-09 21:31)	1089
(2008-05-09 21:31)	1091
More Superdelegates for Obama: 156 to go (2008-05-10 10:08)	1092
Video: Barack Obama in Oregon (2008-05-11 10:06)	1092
CA Superdelegate Crystal Strait supports Barack Obama (2008-05-11 15:48)	1093
Vote for Change Video (2008-05-12 09:02)	1093
(2008-05-12 09:06)	1093

Superdelegates Flock to Obama (2008-05-12 11:27)	1094
Barack talks on Veterans in Charleston, West Virginia (2008-05-12 17:04)	1094
West Virginia Votes (2008-05-13 08:11)	1095
More Superdelegates Join Obama (2008-05-13 08:47)	1096
Crow Nation and Ft. Peck Tribes Endorse Barack Obama (2008-05-13 14:00)	1097
Obama News on Wednesday (2008-05-14 11:14)	1097
NARAL endorses Barack Obama (2008-05-14 13:28)	1098
John Edwards to Endorse Barack Obama (2008-05-14 14:30)	1098
Video: John Edwards Joins Barack Obama (2008-05-14 18:25)	1099
Obama News on Thursday (2008-05-15 11:46)	1100
Old College Buddies recall Obama (2008-05-15 11:51)	1101
New Superdelegate – 120.5 to go (2008-05-16 09:22)	1104
Obama slams Bush-McCain (2008-05-16 12:14)	1105
Obama slams Bush-McCain (2008-05-16 12:14)	1106
Barry O'Bomber: Among nation's 25 'fittest guys' (2008-05-16 17:20)	1106
(2008-05-16 17:20)	1106
(2008-05-16 17:20)	1107
(2008-05-16 17:20)	1107
Obama and the Swing States (2008-05-17 09:13)	1107
Barack talks health care in Roseburg, Oregon (2008-05-17 16:54)	1108
(2008-05-18 12:32)	1108
Portland: Mother of All Rallies (2008-05-18 21:01)	1109
More Portland Pics (2008-05-18 22:17)	1112
Barack Obama talks Social Security in Gresham, Oregon (2008-05-19 08:28)	1112
Barack defends Michelle on GMA (2008-05-19 09:08)	1113
Five Superdelegates Join Barack Obama (2008-05-19 17:23)	1113
Kentucky: Polls Are Open Now (2008-05-20 08:01)	1114
Obama should set the agenda (2008-05-20 08:22)	1115
Statement from Sen. Barack Obama on Sen. Ted Kennedy (2008-05-20 13:18)	1115
Barack Wins Oregon, Takes Elected Delegate Majority (2008-05-20 20:05)	1116
Obama News on Wednesday (2008-05-21 11:18)	1120
Video: Barack Obama in Florida (2008-05-22 09:31)	1121
Barack Obama picks up four superdelegates (2008-05-23 06:03)	1121
Hillary pushed as VP (2008-05-23 10:10)	1122
(2008-05-23 19:37)	1123

Barack Obama speaks to Veterans in Sunrise, Florida (2008-05-24 09:27)	1123
Video: Vote for Change Drive in NYC (2008-05-24 18:25)	1123
Barack Obama Addresses Wesleyan University Graduates (2008-05-25 17:21)	1123
Barack (2008-05-26 07:45)	1128
Barack Obama's Memorial Day Speech (2008-05-26 19:48)	1128
Obama News on Tuesday (2008-05-27 10:58)	1131
'Achieve' Airs in Montana (2008-05-27 17:23)	1131
Three More Superdelegates Join Barack Obama (2008-05-28 09:18)	1132
(2008-05-28 09:18)	1132
Battleground States (2008-05-28 10:38)	1132
Barack Obama talks Education in Thornton, Colorado (2008-05-28 15:47)	1134
RBC Meeting: How to Make a Positive Impact this Weekend (2008-05-28 18:32)	1134
Barack Obama: You vs. Bush-McCain (2008-05-29 07:16)	1136
Video: Michelle Obama visits Puerto Rico (2008-05-29 12:55)	1137
Two Texas Superdelegates Join Obama – 41 to go (2008-05-30 07:55)	1137
Video: TV Ads in Puerto Rico (2008-05-30 13:15)	1138
Video: Barack in Great Falls, Montana (2008-05-30 19:25)	1138
Republicans: "Democrats Win Landslide Victory" (2008-05-31 07:23)	1138
Last Contests Draw Near (2008-05-31 15:08)	1140
2.6 June	1141
Obama News On Sunday (2008-06-01 07:44)	1141
More Video from South Dakota (2008-06-01 13:39)	1141
Two More Superdelegates – 44 to go (2008-06-02 07:15)	1142
Get Out the Vote in South Dakota (2008-06-02 08:50)	1143
Four More Superdelegates for Barack – 41.5 to go (2008-06-02 17:01)	1145
Superdelegates lined up for Barack Obama (2008-06-03 10:01)	1145
Barack Obama to Clinch Nomination (2008-06-03 14:42)	1146
Barack Obama becomes Presumptive Nominee (2008-06-03 21:56)	1147
Distilling Demographics (2008-06-04 08:57)	1150
Video: Victory Speech in St. Paul (2008-06-04 12:09)	1151
Hillary Clinton to Endorse Barack Obama Friday (2008-06-04 16:03)	1152
Barack Obama Announces New DNC Fundraising Rules (2008-06-05 07:19)	1152
47 New Endorsements (2008-06-06 07:24)	1153
Reasons Not to Accept Public Funding (2008-06-06 12:05)	1154
Reaction to Obama Victory Abroad (2008-06-06 18:49)	1156

Hillary Clinton Pledges Support for Barack Obama (2008-06-07 10:30)	1158
Why Hillary will likely be offered VP spot (2008-06-07 12:05)	1158
Video: Barack in Chicago (2008-06-09 07:52)	1159
Barack Obama to Target GOP Strongholds (2008-06-09 18:36)	1159
Unite For Change (2008-06-10 08:30)	1160
Barack Obama on Economy in St. Louis, Missouri (2008-06-10 15:21)	1162
Contacting Voters – Lapel Pins (2008-06-11 09:51)	1162
Obama News on Wednesday (2008-06-11 20:53)	1163
Obama Fights Smears Online (2008-06-12 09:30)	1165
Obama on Issues – Ethics (2008-06-12 13:04)	1165
Targeted States: Ohio (2008-06-13 09:13)	1168
Obama News on Friday (2008-06-13 15:04)	1168
Barack Obama On Death of Tim Russert (2008-06-13 17:15)	1169
Obama News on Saturday (2008-06-14 12:54)	1169
Obama Fellows Train to Register Voters (2008-06-15 10:42)	1170
Video: Barack Obama on Father's Day (2008-06-15 20:19)	1171
Al Gore to Endorse Barack Obama (2008-06-16 12:06)	1171
Photos from Detroit (2008-06-16 19:20)	1172
Video: Al Gore Endorses Barack Obama at Joe Louis Arena (2008-06-17 07:52)	1173
Obama Issues: Energy and Environment (2008-06-17 08:35)	1174
Targeted States: Michigan (2008-06-17 16:47)	1177
Barack Obama: Senior Working Group on National Security (2008-06-18 09:43)	1178
Michelle Obama vs. Cindy McCain (2008-06-18 14:31)	1179
Barack Obama speaks before National Security Meeting (2008-06-18 18:25)	1179
Barack Obama Passes on Public Financing (2008-06-19 08:22)	1180
Declaring Independence from Broken System (2008-06-19 15:38)	1180
Barack Obama talks with Democratic Governors (LIVE) (2008-06-20 08:03)	1182
Barack Obama supports the DCCC (2008-06-20 11:09)	1182
Barack Obama on Economy (2008-06-20 12:17)	1184
Obama Money in May (2008-06-20 19:43)	1185
Targeted States: New Mexico (2008-06-21 08:11)	1186
Obama News on Saturday (2008-06-21 20:58)	1187
Barack Obama to Attack Rampant Energy Speculation (2008-06-22 10:20)	1187
Obama-Clinton? (2008-06-23 07:28)	1188
Using Caution with Polling Data (2008-06-23 13:14)	1188

Video: Barack Obama @ Working Women Discussion (2008-06-23 19:23)	1189
Hanuman Temple in India Prays for Obama Victory (2008-06-24 10:28)	1190
Live Video: Barack on Energy Solutions (Las Vegas) (2008-06-24 11:02)	1191
Barack tours Solar Energy Facility (2008-06-24 17:24)	1191
Barack Obama, Cellphones, Popcorn (2008-06-25 10:35)	1194
Expanding the Map to 50 States (2008-06-25 21:48)	1194
(2008-06-25 21:48)	1195
Live Video: Barack at Economic Competitiveness Summit (2008-06-26 07:21)	1196
AFL-CIO endorses Barack Obama (2008-06-26 13:13)	1196
Obama, Clinton in Unity (2008-06-27 08:27)	1198
Live Video: Barack and Hillary in Unity, New Hampshire (2008-06-27 10:08)	1199
Video: 50 State Strategy (2008-06-27 15:40)	1199
Barack Obama Plans Overseas Trip to Middle East and Europe (2008-06-27 20:50)	1200
Targeted States: Nevada (2008-06-28 16:43)	1201
Slideshow: Unite for Change (2008-06-29 11:28)	1202
More Unite for Change (2008-06-29 19:41)	1203
Painting for Obama in Sacramento (2008-06-29 21:39)	1203
Barack – Deadline: Midnight (2008-06-30 08:28)	1204
Obama News on Monday (2008-06-30 14:18)	1205
McCain TV ads target Energy Policy (2008-06-30 20:57)	1206
2.7 July	1207
Sen. Obama meets with Gen. Powell (2008-07-02 07:48)	1207
Voter registration at Vans Warped Tour (2008-07-02 15:29)	1207
Targeted States: Florida (2008-07-02 20:40)	1208
Targeted States: Wisconsin (2008-07-03 09:12)	1209
Obama and FISA (2008-07-03 15:48)	1209
Barack Obama reaffirms Iraq War Stance (2008-07-03 20:15)	1211
Barack Obama talks about Veterans in Fargo (2008-07-04 09:00)	1212
Targeted States: Virginia (2008-07-04 14:29)	1214
The McCain Strategy (2008-07-05 11:22)	1215
Vote for Change in Philadelphia (2008-07-06 08:51)	1217
McCain targets California? (2008-07-06 16:48)	1220
(2008-07-06 21:44)	1221
Obama opts for larger nomination venue (2008-07-07 08:10)	1222
Obama plane sidetracked, speech delivered in St. Louis (2008-07-07 14:38)	1222

Video: Barack and Michelle (2008-07-07 20:19)	1225
Shaping the Democratic Party's Platform (2008-07-08 09:23)	1226
Barack Obama addresses League of United Latin American Citizens (2008-07-08 18:43)	1227
Barack Obama addresses League Of United Latin American Citizens (2008-07-08 19:11)	1227
Video: Obama Family Interview (2008-07-08 19:54)	1228
Video: Obama on Economy (2008-07-09 08:18)	1228
Barack, Hillary and Caroline Kennedy Live from NY (2008-07-09 17:57)	1229
Is Barack Obama 'talking down' to folk (2008-07-10 10:13)	1229
LIVE: Barack in Fairfax, Virginia (2008-07-10 10:50)	1229
Targeted States: Missouri (2008-07-10 15:03)	1230
Live Chat on Obama's Economic Plan for Women (2008-07-11 11:14)	1231
Why negative attacks against Obama are risky (2008-07-12 13:58)	1232
Barack Obama to speak at National Council of La Raza (2008-07-13 09:21)	1233
Video: Barack Obama at La Raza Conference (2008-07-13 15:57)	1233
American Federation of Teachers endorses Barack Obama (2008-07-14 07:40)	1233
(2008-07-14 19:22)	1236
Obama Addresses National Security Issues in DC (2008-07-15 10:21)	1239
Obama Videos: NAACP and Security Address (2008-07-15 17:31)	1239
Backstage with Barack (2008-07-16 07:16)	1240
LIVE: Barack talks security in West Lafayette (2008-07-16 08:48)	1241
Video: Organizing Fellows (2008-07-16 19:17)	1241
Obama doubles McCain fundraising in June (2008-07-17 07:02)	1242
Barack endorses Al Gore's Plan (2008-07-17 14:32)	1243
Video: Voices from Fairfax, Virginia (2008-07-18 09:21)	1244
New Campaign Office Opens in Denver (2008-07-18 15:08)	1244
Barack Obama tours Afghanistan war zone (2008-07-19 09:35)	1245
Susan Rice on Iraqi PM Maliki's Support for Obama Plan (2008-07-19 13:37)	1245
20 field offices open in Virginia (2008-07-20 10:11)	1246
Barack Obama meets with Afghan President Karzai (2008-07-20 16:09)	1247
League of Conservation Voters to back Barack Obama (2008-07-21 08:19)	1247
Iraqi Leaders back Obama Plan w/o timetables (2008-07-21 14:38)	1248
Clearly, Barack Obama Is a Muslim (2008-07-21 21:21)	1249
Wheels down in Amman, Jordan (Obama Road Blog) (2008-07-22 09:05)	1249
Why the Math favors Obama (2008-07-22 13:48)	1250
Video: Supporting Barack (2008-07-22 19:46)	1251

Europeans fired up and ready for Obama (2008-07-23 06:49)	1251
Obama Road Trip: Scenes from the Middle East (2008-07-23 10:46)	1252
Obama Forces Flip-Flops to Paralyze McCain (2008-07-23 16:11)	1252
LIVE: Barack Obama speaking in Berlin (2008-07-24 10:34)	1253
(2008-07-24 10:43)	1253
200,000 view Obama Speech in Berlin (2008-07-24 12:18)	1254
Obama Bounce? (2008-07-25 07:44)	1259
(2008-07-25 09:16)	1259
More on McCain Strategy by David Plouffe (2008-07-25 16:18)	1259
German Moments: Obama and McCain (2008-07-25 20:24)	1260
Barack Obama in London (2008-07-26 09:48)	1261
Barack Obama sends letter to the Dalai Lama (2008-07-26 13:15)	1261
Video: Barack Obama @ 10 Downing Street (2008-07-26 18:24)	1263
100 Days to go (2008-07-27 11:32)	1263
Video: Barack at Unity 08 Convention (2008-07-27 18:27)	1264
Obama and McCain Split on Affirmative Action (2008-07-28 07:26)	1264
Barack Obama's Plan for Working Women and Families (2008-07-28 13:00)	1264
Barack meets with Top Economic Advisers in DC (2008-07-29 07:25)	1265
Michelle Obama Backstage with Barack (2008-07-29 12:49)	1266
Obama News on Tuesday (2008-07-29 18:00)	1267
Barack Obama holds Town Hall in Springfield, Missouri (2008-07-30 08:48)	1268
(2008-07-30 13:03)	1268
Fundraising Deadline is Tomorrow (2008-07-30 15:59)	1268
Video: "Low Road" (2008-07-30 21:14)	1269
Obama's New Energy Initiative (2008-07-31 08:46)	1269
'Paris Hilton Tax Break' (2008-07-31 14:38)	1270
2.8 August	1270
Obama announces Emergency Economic Plan (2008-08-01 07:34)	1270
Video: Obama on the Road (2008-08-01 18:26)	1271
Barack Speaks at 'Space City, USA' (2008-08-02 08:56)	1272
The Power of the Network (2008-08-03 07:30)	1275
Obama urges full voting rights for Michigan and Florida Delegates (2008-08-03 18:50)	1275
Obama Camp releases New Energy for America Ad (2008-08-04 08:11)	1276
How Bad is the Economy? (2008-08-04 09:29)	1277
Video and iPaper: New Energy for America Plan (2008-08-04 19:03)	1279

Barack Obama raises $5 million on Bday (2008-08-05 08:59)	1280
Video: Offices open in Colorado (2008-08-05 13:42)	1280
The Molten Core of Barack: Why Obama Can't Win (2008-08-05 16:47)	1281
More Obama News from Monday (2008-08-05 20:28)	1281
LIVE: Barack Obama at Town Hall in Elkhart, Indiana (2008-08-06 08:02)	1282
Barack and Family heading for 'Da Kine' Vacation (2008-08-06 14:44)	1282
Baracking down the Issues (2008-08-07 09:04)	1283
Barack Obama to appear at Keehi Lagoon Beach Park (2008-08-07 21:59)	1283
"Hands" to get the job done (2008-08-08 11:18)	1284
Vacations are Good (2008-08-09 08:29)	1285
TV Ad: Celebrity and Bear Hugs (2008-08-11 07:56)	1285
Gov. Mark Warner to deliver Convention Keynote Address (2008-08-13 10:04)	1285
Obama responds to Inflation News (2008-08-14 09:35)	1286
Video: Baracky II (2008-08-14 16:13)	1287
Surf's Up (2008-08-15 17:37)	1287
What Polls don't show (2008-08-16 07:28)	1287
Obama raises $51 million (2008-08-16 10:15)	1288
Donors vs. Dollars (2008-08-17 08:49)	1289
Barack visits Reno (2008-08-17 17:28)	1289
Avoiding the "Toughness" Lure (2008-08-18 12:13)	1290
Barack on Working Women in Albuquerque (2008-08-18 17:19)	1291
VP choice expected this week (2008-08-19 11:54)	1291
Veepstakes: What Happened To Sebelius? (2008-08-19 15:23)	1292
Caroline Kennedy for VP? (2008-08-20 11:12)	1292
Three Times: Barack's Tax Cuts for the Middle Class (2008-08-20 15:29)	1292
Barack with Mark Warner in Virginia (2008-08-20 22:48)	1293
McCain's Housing Crisis: Losing Track of Dream Homes (2008-08-21 12:37)	1293
Video Roundup on Thursday (2008-08-21 18:29)	1294
(2008-08-21 18:29)	1295
Houses (2008-08-22 11:27)	1295
Scoping Ohio (and Indiana) (2008-08-22 13:21)	1295
NBC: Bayh, Kaine not chosen for VP (2008-08-22 17:36)	1296
Press confirms Joe Biden as VP Pick (2008-08-22 21:58)	1299
2.9 November	1307
Barack Obama elected 44th President of United States (2008-11-04 21:44)	1307

Stock market reaction to Obama election (2008-11-05 15:02)	1310
Possibilites for a progressive and green transition (2008-11-06 07:56)	1311
More on transition (2008-11-06 10:29)	1312
More on Transition (3) (2008-11-07 10:44)	1313
Obama conferring with world leaders (2008-11-09 09:50)	1314
More on Transition (4) (2008-11-10 19:48)	1315
Comment: Obama must act with all 'deliberate haste' (2008-11-11 11:19)	1316
More on Transition (5) (2008-11-12 08:40)	1317
How did Obama do it? (2008-11-13 09:21)	1317
Peru offers hairless dog for Obamas (2008-11-13 18:29)	1319
Hillary Clinton for Secretary of State? (2008-11-14 10:35)	1320
Obama urges fast response on economy (2008-11-15 10:10)	1320
Barack Obama resigns senate seat, appoints more staff (2008-11-16 10:17)	1321
Obama, free trade and outsourcing (2008-11-16 16:00)	1322
Obama pledges support for flailing auto industry (2008-11-17 15:09)	1323
Conservatives: How Obama won (2008-11-18 09:24)	1324
Schwarzenegger opens climate change conf. with Obama (2008-11-18 15:00)	1325
Eric Holder set for Attorney General post (2008-11-18 20:44)	1326
Al-Qaeda tape lambasts Obama (2008-11-19 10:19)	1326
Tom Daschle to serve as Secretary of Health and Human Services (2008-11-19 14:09)	1327
Napolitano, Pritzker vetted for cabinet positions (2008-11-20 09:14)	1327
Clinton to be named Secretary of State after Thanksgiving (2008-11-21 11:16)	1328
Anti-war groups fear Obama cabinet of "hawks" (2008-11-21 14:55)	1329
Barack Obama announces job creation plan (2008-11-22 09:14)	1329
Barack Obama: Superhero (2008-11-22 18:52)	1330
Barack Obama: Superhero (2008-11-22 19:10)	1331
Obama to nominate Geithner on Monday (2008-11-23 08:15)	1331
Karzai, Obama discuss Afghanistan security (2008-11-23 18:52)	1333
Barack Obama readies $500 billion rescue plan (2008-11-24 09:27)	1333
Barack Obama unveils economic team (2008-11-24 17:45)	1334
Obama picks OMB Director (2008-11-25 14:05)	1336
Obama's economic strategy (2008-11-26 08:42)	1336
Condoleezza Rice briefs Barack Obama on Mumbai attacks (2008-11-28 15:15)	1337
Obama gives hope at Poznan climate change conference (2008-11-29 16:29)	1338
Barack Obama to nominate Hillary Clinton on Monday (2008-11-30 08:39)	1340

Mumbai attacks: Preemptive strike against Obama? (2008-11-30 19:34)	1341
2.10 December	1342
Barack Obama introduces security team (2008-12-01 09:03)	1342
Obama picks Cabinet at record speed (2008-12-02 09:38)	1342
Obama to nominate Richardson for Commerce (2008-12-03 07:53)	1343
Comment: Obama's first setback? (2008-12-03 10:17)	1344
Oprah show in DC during inauguration (2008-12-04 13:03)	1344
Should Obama take the lead? (2008-12-05 08:02)	1345
Barack Obama pledges massive infrastructure works (2008-12-06 14:34)	1346
Barack Obama to nominate Eric Shinseki for Veterans Affairs (2008-12-06 18:18)	1347
Video: Obama to announce Shinseki nomination in Chicago (2008-12-07 07:41)	1348
Supreme Court dismisses Obama eligibility appeal (2008-12-08 09:34)	1348
Obama's Job Plan (2008-12-08 12:56)	1349
Rod Blagojevich arrested for trying to sell Obama senate seat (2008-12-09 08:40)	1351
Obama distances himself from Blagojevich scandal (2008-12-09 20:52)	1352
Obama foes jump on new Chicago scandal (2008-12-10 09:18)	1353
Barack Obama calls on gov. to resign, nominates Daschle (2008-12-11 09:49)	1353
Obama moves to dispell senate seat doubts (2008-12-12 09:11)	1354
(2008-12-12 21:47)	1355
H.O.P.E Inaugural Youth Ball (2008-12-12 23:31)	1355
Democrats Go Down on the Auto Bailout (2008-12-13 09:15)	1356
World hopes Obama brings change on climate change (2008-12-14 08:22)	1356
Bad times leave Obama unscathed (2008-12-14 19:29)	1358
(2008-12-15 09:32)	1358
Electors officially elect Barack Obama (2008-12-15 15:36)	1359
Internal review clears Obama in Blagojevich case (2008-12-15 15:44)	1360
Obama picks conservationist Salazar as Interior secretary (2008-12-16 09:21)	1360
Arne Duncan picked as education secretary (2008-12-16 09:34)	1361
Chicago sleaze doesn't stick to Obama (2008-12-16 13:18)	1361
Time names Barack Obama "Person of the Year" (2008-12-17 09:13)	1362
Obama to name Cabinet members, take vacation (2008-12-19 08:11)	1362
Obama praises auto bailout plan (2008-12-19 20:13)	1363
Slave's daughter who voted for Obama dies at 110 (2008-12-20 09:05)	1363
Obama ups job creation to 3 million after more bad news (2008-12-20 21:34)	1364
Rihanna scheduled for Obama inauguration benefit (2008-12-21 09:45)	1364

Obama arrives in Hawai'i for holidays (2008-12-21 19:51)	1365
Debate over Obama stimulus plan (2008-12-22 10:11)	1366
Obama's 'green dream team' (2008-12-22 15:21)	1366
(2008-12-22 20:28)	1367
Obama in top shape, photos reveal (2008-12-23 14:16)	1367
Obama Holiday Messages (2008-12-25 11:47)	1368
Obama family enjoys warm Hawaiian Christmas (2008-12-26 08:20)	1369
Hollywood and Silicon Valley help fund inauguration (2008-12-26 19:58)	1369
Obama workout, power outage (2008-12-27 17:32)	1370
Republican candidate release racist song (2008-12-28 18:02)	1371
Obama treads lightly on Gaza fighting (2008-12-29 11:11)	1371
Should Obama be thinking about world problems on his vacation? (2008-12-30 06:34)	1372
Gov. Blagojevich names Burris for Obama seat (2008-12-30 13:19)	1372
Obama seeks public guidance on health care (2008-12-31 08:16)	1373
3 2009	1375
3.1 January	1375
Obama's set to leave Hawai'i for Capital hotel suite (2009-01-01 13:09)	1375
Obama ready for China space race (2009-01-01 19:03)	1375
Obama Inauguration may be very special (2009-01-02 18:11)	1376
Obama fired up and ready to go with diverse Cabinet (2009-01-03 08:22)	1377
Obama and timing of Gaza invasion (2009-01-04 17:10)	1378
Obama tax cut is offering to Republicans (2009-01-05 20:43)	1379
Obama Justice picks show new direction (2009-01-06 08:32)	1379
Obama Isn't the Only One Being Inaugurated on Jan. 20th (2009-01-06 08:58)	1380
Dr. Sanjay Gupta for Surgeon General (2009-01-06 13:58)	1381
Obama creates Performance Officer position (2009-01-07 09:36)	1381
Barack Obama wants new economic direction (2009-01-08 12:19)	1382
Obama names Tim Kaine as DNC chair (2009-01-08 15:32)	1383
Barack Obama to meet Mexico's Felipe Calderon (2009-01-08 21:54)	1384
Illinois House Impeaches Blagojevich (2009-01-09 12:03)	1384
State your change (2009-01-09 14:58)	1384
Inauguration will have best security ever (2009-01-09 20:51)	1385
Obama: 90 percent of stimulus jobs from private sector (2009-01-10 10:13)	1385
Obamas' dog choice imminent (2009-01-11 18:18)	1386
Obama and Dems may dust it up (2009-01-12 09:42)	1387

Bush declares emergency to help fund inauguration (2009-01-13 15:57)	1388
Coolio or Erkel? (2009-01-14 09:50)	1389
Barack Obama forced to defend Treasury pick (2009-01-14 19:04)	1390
Tim Russ as Barack Obama (2009-01-15 11:10)	1391
Friction between Obama and Democrats building (2009-01-16 10:30)	1392
(2009-01-16 15:05)	1393
Obama Express heading for DC (2009-01-17 11:55)	1393
Despite general gloom, people optimistic about Obama (2009-01-18 14:46)	1394
Barack Obama celebrates Martin Luther King Day (2009-01-19 08:54)	1395
Barack Obama calls for era of responsibility (2009-01-19 18:39)	1396
Barack Obama inaugurated 44th President of the United States (2009-01-20 12:12)	1397
Inaugural parade to start at 2:30 pm EST (2009-01-20 12:19)	1399
Video: Obamas at Neighborhood Ball (2009-01-20 20:21)	1400
Reflecting after yesterday's inauguration (2009-01-20 21:34)	1400
Obama moves on military, foreign policy (2009-01-21 15:44)	1402
At Last: Barack and Michelle at Neighborhood Ball (2009-01-21 19:41)	1402
Hillary Clinton takes reins at State Department (2009-01-22 09:39)	1402
(2009-01-22 09:39)	1403
Obama retakes oath (2009-01-22 09:51)	1403
Obama to be first president to use Blackberry, email (2009-01-22 14:35)	1404
Obama girls setting fashion trends (2009-01-23 10:28)	1404
Pakistan air strikes underscore continuation of Bush policy (2009-01-23 16:45)	1406
Obama gives more details on stimulus plan (2009-01-24 09:13)	1407
Obama acting quickly, confidently (2009-01-24 17:57)	1407
Obama and Afghanistan (2009-01-25 11:41)	1408
Will Republicans back Obama stimulus plan? (2009-01-25 17:42)	1409
Barack Obama acts on environmental policy (2009-01-26 09:36)	1410
Video: Obama on energy efficiency (2009-01-26 14:08)	1411
The Era of Not Getting It: The Marie Antoinettes of the Meltdown (2009-01-26 16:59)	1411
Barack Obama ready for Iran talks (2009-01-27 12:55)	1412
Bipartisanship difficult on economic issues (2009-01-27 18:43)	1412
Obama reaches out on Al-Arabiya TV (2009-01-27 19:49)	1413
House Republicans ask for more tax cuts (2009-01-28 10:03)	1414
Barack Obama's first bill, setback (2009-01-29 15:04)	1415
Is the First Lady pregnant? (2009-01-30 08:44)	1415

Obama hopes to sign SCHIP next week (2009-01-30 14:01)	1417
Obama promises lower mortgage costs (2009-01-31 09:26)	1418
Obama authorizes $20.3 million aid package for Gaza (2009-01-31 17:46)	1418
3.2 February	1419
Obama to host bipartisan Super Bowl party (2009-02-01 08:41)	1419
Obama to allow "torture flights?" (2009-02-02 12:04)	1420
Eric H. Holder confirmed as Attorney General (2009-02-02 21:20)	1421
Obama to hit airwaves for economic stimulus (2009-02-03 08:29)	1422
Daschle, Killefer withdraw nominations (2009-02-03 19:18)	1422
Obama caps Wall St. salaries for bailout (2009-02-04 11:07)	1423
Video: Obama caps bailout execs salaries (2009-02-04 16:19)	1424
Jobless claims rise as Senate haggles over stimulus (2009-02-05 08:56)	1425
Live Video: Obama at House Dems Retreat (2009-02-05 18:31)	1425
Obama puts pressure on for stimulus package (2009-02-06 10:00)	1426
Senate passes tentative stimulus bill (2009-02-06 19:00)	1426
Obama stimulus package back up to $820 bn (2009-02-07 09:37)	1427
Obama "Hope" poster creator arrested in Boston (2009-02-07 18:19)	1428
Obama hitting the road for stimulus bill (2009-02-09 09:20)	1431
Obama gives first prime-time press conference tonight (2009-02-09 17:23)	1431
(2009-02-09 19:45)	1432
Obama: Not a "run-of-the-mill recession" (2009-02-10 09:38)	1432
Senate approves stimulus bill (2009-02-10 15:03)	1433
Obama calls for quick action to deal with economic "perfect storm" (2009-02-11 09:18)	1434
Congress, White House agree on stimulus deal (2009-02-11 14:56)	1435
Obama celebrates Lincoln's bicentennial (2009-02-12 09:35)	1435
Obama calls housing crisis urgent (2009-02-13 10:46)	1436
Will Republicans cooperate with Barack Obama? (2009-02-13 16:57)	1436
Obama scores first victory of presidency (2009-02-14 12:46)	1437
Obama team says stimulus is bipartisan (2009-02-15 20:00)	1437
Auto task force rather than czar (2009-02-16 16:00)	1438
Obama stimulus benefits for average American (2009-02-17 08:00)	1439
Obama reveals new $75 billion mortgage plan (2009-02-18 13:21)	1440
Obama to make first foreign trip to Canada (2009-02-18 18:39)	1441
(2009-02-19 08:49)	1442
Obama raises Nafta issue in Canada (2009-02-19 16:08)	1442

Obama pledges to cut deficit in half by 2013 (2009-02-21 14:29)	1443
New focus on health care (2009-02-22 07:38)	1444
Clinton ends jaunt in China (2009-02-22 16:27)	1444
Comment: Should Obama mind the stock market (2009-02-23 14:47)	1445
Obama likely to select Gov. Locke as commerce secretary (2009-02-23 17:45)	1446
Obama set to address Congress tonight (2009-02-24 09:16)	1446
Barack Obama's first address to Congress (2009-02-24 20:42)	1447
Michelle Obama: Portuguese water dog for girls (2009-02-25 18:48)	1448
Obama unveils $3.6 trillion budget, $1.75 trillion deficit (2009-02-26 09:34)	1449
Obama sets troop withdrawal target (2009-02-27 11:11)	1450
Battle lines forming over Obama budget (2009-02-27 19:59)	1451
Comment: Going to battle (2009-02-28 09:12)	1451
Gallup: Obama approval rate is rising (2009-02-28 13:04)	1464
3.3 March	1465
Obama raises hopes for climate change agreement (2009-03-01 12:40)	1465
U.S. offers $900 million to help Gaza (2009-03-02 09:23)	1465
Obama, Biden visit DOT as 'shovels hit the ground' (2009-03-03 13:46)	1466
Obama restores process in protecting endangered species (2009-03-03 16:24)	1467
Obama approval remains high (2009-03-04 08:57)	1467
White House releases money for distressed homeowners (2009-03-04 16:30)	1468
Obama holding health care summit (2009-03-05 09:06)	1469
Houses passes mortgage relief plan (2009-03-05 17:43)	1469
Jobless rate continues climb (2009-03-06 09:28)	1470
Howard Dean considered for surgeon general (2009-03-06 20:24)	1471
Obama heading for Turkey (2009-03-07 13:04)	1472
Karzai praises Obama on engaging Taliban (2009-03-07 21:23)	1472
Obama lifting stem cell research ban (2009-03-08 20:40)	1473
Report: Obama to tap Van Jones as Green Jobs Czar (2009-03-09 14:28)	1473
Obama calls for action on education system, teachers (2009-03-10 12:10)	1474
Congress approves $410 billion spending bill (2009-03-10 17:21)	1475
Obama has goals for Group of 20 summit (2009-03-11 10:29)	1475
Michelle Obama, Hillary Clinton honor women's right advocates (2009-03-11 20:39)	1476
Obama's climate plan might face Democratic opposition (2009-03-12 09:28)	1477
Michelle Obama reaches out to military families at Ft. Bragg (2009-03-12 16:54)	1477
Obama to tackle earmarks (2009-03-13 08:04)	1478

Obama drops "enemy combatants" term (2009-03-14 08:31)	1479
Taxpayer money going toward AIG bonuses (2009-03-15 15:22)	1479
Obama reverses Bush food safety policy (2009-03-15 17:46)	1481
Obama orders Treasury to block A.I.G. bonuses (2009-03-16 09:58)	1481
Clinton warned on Pakistan aid if justice not reinstated (2009-03-16 14:22)	1482
Obama goes on offensive for budget (2009-03-16 19:02)	1483
Obama notes Irish roots (2009-03-17 12:19)	1483
Obama firing up grassroots over budget (2009-03-18 07:58)	1484
Obama's commerce pick faces hearing (2009-03-18 08:20)	1484
Obama signs UN gay rights agreement (2009-03-18 16:44)	1485
Obama: First sitting president to appear on Tonight Show (2009-03-19 09:34)	1486
Obama: First sitting president to appear on Tonight Show (2009-03-19 09:34)	1486
Obamas to plant organic White House garden (2009-03-19 16:51)	1487
Obama sends Persian New Year message (2009-03-20 14:24)	1487
First Lady breaks ground for garden with schoolchildren (2009-03-20 14:35)	1488
More on Obama and Iran (2009-03-20 15:39)	1488
Obama pitches budget during weekly address (2009-03-21 15:02)	1489
Obama stands by Geithner (2009-03-22 10:03)	1491
Obama, Geithner reveal bank rescue plan (2009-03-23 08:00)	1491
Obama gives second primetime news conference tonight 8:01 PM ET (2009-03-24 12:21)	1492
Is Obama hogging the airwaves? (2009-03-24 20:27)	1492
Obama-Sarkozy clash at G20? (2009-03-25 12:45)	1493
Live: Obama online town hall meeting (CNN) (2009-03-26 09:25)	1494
NY race is seen as Obama test (2009-03-27 12:52)	1494
Obama to unveil auto plan Monday (2009-03-29 14:46)	1494
Obama heads to G20 with challenges ahead (2009-03-30 18:13)	1495
(2009-03-31 08:00)	1496
Protests upstage G20 summit (2009-03-31 19:01)	1497
3.4 April	1497
Live: Obama meets Queen (2009-04-01 08:56)	1497
House approves $3.5 trillion budget (2009-04-02 19:03)	1497
Obama calls for world free of nukes (2009-04-03 09:50)	1498
Obama reaches out to Muslim world in Turkey (2009-04-06 19:58)	1499
Obama may compromise on carbon trading (2009-04-08 17:46)	1499
CBS/NY Times: Obama more popular than ever (2009-04-09 13:01)	1500

Obama sees "glimmers of hope" in economy (2009-04-11 12:34)	1500
Obamas find new dog for Malia and Sasha (2009-04-12 19:04)	1501
Castro praises Obama for easing restrictions (2009-04-14 17:49)	1502
Obamas release federal income tax returns (2009-04-15 15:14)	1502
Obama unveils high-speed rail plan (2009-04-16 09:08)	1503
Obama meets with Calderon in Mexico City (2009-04-16 16:34)	1504
Cuba ready to talk with Obama (2009-04-17 07:45)	1504
Anger over CIA torture memos (2009-04-17 08:09)	1505
Obama shakes hands with Hugo Chavez (2009-04-17 18:00)	1505
Obama sees positive signs from Cuba, Venezuela (2009-04-19 16:05)	1506
Obama open to torture memos problem (2009-04-21 16:34)	1506
Clinton makes surprise visit to Iraq (2009-04-25 08:13)	1507
FOX nixes Obama press conference (2009-04-27 17:55)	1508
Obama orders review of NYC overflight (2009-04-28 21:27)	1508
Michelle Obama starts day by walking Bo (2009-04-30 14:16)	1509
3.5 May	1510
Obama announces Souter retirement from Supreme Court (2009-05-01 13:32)	1510
Senators offer Obama advice on justice pick (2009-05-03 12:54)	1510
Obamas celebrate Cinco de Mayo a day early (2009-05-04 18:15)	1511
Obama releases budget plan details (2009-05-07 15:42)	1512
Obama admin projects $1.84 trillion deficit (2009-05-11 09:52)	1513
Obama meets with experts on health care (2009-05-11 19:33)	1514
Obama to reveal Supreme Court pick soon (2009-05-12 18:05)	1514
White House wants oversight of derivatives market (2009-05-13 16:22)	1515
Obama should also roll back Reagan tax cuts (2009-05-14 07:41)	1515
Human rights groups blast Obama on military trials (2009-05-15 13:40)	1517
Obama receives honorary degree ahead of Notre Dame address (2009-05-17 11:32)	1518
Obama, Netanyahu to meet in White House (2009-05-17 18:40)	1518
Obama announces fuel efficiency plan (2009-05-19 08:53)	1519
Outsourcing corporations in arms over Obama tax plan (2009-05-19 20:24)	1520
Live: Obama commencement address at Naval Academy (2009-05-22 07:31)	1520
Obama nominates first African American to head NASA (2009-05-23 18:10)	1520
Obama SC justice pick expected soon (2009-05-24 13:55)	1521
Obama nominates Sonia Sotomayor to Supreme Court (2009-05-26 17:57)	1522
Sotomayor's rise to the top (2009-05-27 13:06)	1522

	RNC objects to Obamas's NYC night-on-the-town (2009-05-28 08:56)	1523
	Republicans on warpath against Sotomayor? (2009-05-29 15:11)	1523
	(2009-05-31 15:33)	1524
3.6	June	1524
	Obama to talk on GM restructuring (2009-06-01 09:14)	1524
	Bin Laden deputy denounces Obama's Egypt visit (2009-06-02 16:20)	1525
	Michelle Obama campaigns for Judge Sotomayor (2009-06-03 16:02)	1525
	Obama discovers hieroglyphic likeness (2009-06-04 12:44)	1526
	Clinton rejects Israeli settlement expansion claims (2009-06-05 18:49)	1528
	Obama honors D-Day veterans in Normandy (2009-06-06 10:05)	1529
	Obama rolls out pay-as-you-go plan (2009-06-09 15:15)	1529
	Obama envoy says Palestinian state only viable solution (2009-06-10 18:19)	1530
	Obama to pitch health care plan to American Medical Association (2009-06-14 16:59)	1531
	Special envoy Mitchell to meet with Israeli PM (2009-06-16 19:06)	1531
	Hillary Clinton to undergo surgery on right elbow (2009-06-18 20:29)	1532
	Barack Obama's Proclamation for Father's Day (2009-06-21 13:48)	1533
	Why Obama needs to tread carefully in Iran (2009-06-22 22:30)	1534
	Obama climate change bill passes in House (2009-06-26 22:25)	1535
3.7	July	1536
	Obama praises King of Pop (2009-07-03 13:16)	1536
	Obama set for week-long foreign jaunt (2009-07-04 19:32)	1536
	Obama, Medvedev hold press conference (2009-07-06 13:40)	1537
	(2009-07-09 15:43)	1538
	Obama visits historic slave depot in Ghana (2009-07-11 21:12)	1538
	Obama's speech calls for change in Africa (2009-07-12 17:30)	1539
	Sotomayor cites "fidelity ot the law" (2009-07-13 18:24)	1540
	Howard Dean backs Obama health care plan (2009-07-20 20:19)	1540
	Obama: Healthcare plan will help small businesses (2009-07-26 18:25)	1541
	Obama opens policy meetings with China (2009-07-27 15:49)	1541
	Lots of changes floated for Obama healthcare bill (2009-07-28 22:02)	1542
	Obama awards 16 with America's highest civilian honor (2009-07-30 12:28)	1542
	"Cash for Clunkers" a surprising green success story (2009-07-31 14:22)	1544
3.8	August	1545
	Paul McCartney dedicates "Michelle" to First Lady (2009-08-02 21:30)	1545
	Obama gets "gift" on birthday (2009-08-04 12:11)	1545

Sonia Sotomayor confirmed as Supreme Court Justice (2009-08-06 20:12)	1546
Obama goes grassroots on health care reform (2009-08-10 13:39)	1546
Did Obama make a backroom deal with big pharma? (2009-08-11 17:09)	1547
Obama honors 16 with Medal of Freedom (2009-08-12 14:14)	1548
Obama talks with the "enemy" – Big Pharma (2009-08-13 18:58)	1549
Obama holds town hall meeting in Montana (2009-08-14 14:14)	1549
Obamas visit Grand Canyon (2009-08-16 20:30)	1550
Obama sets fast pace for his first year (2009-08-17 19:03)	1550
Obama to clergy: health reform is "moral obligation" (2009-08-19 21:46)	1551
Democrats splitting health care bill? (2009-08-20 17:24)	1551
Obamas head for Martha's Vineyard along northeast coast (2009-08-21 20:43)	1552
Martha's Vineyard and African Americans (2009-08-22 17:49)	1552
Obamas arrive in Mass (2009-08-23 17:48)	1553
Obama mourns Sen. Ted Kennedy (2009-08-26 16:34)	1553
Obama eulogizes Ted Kennedy (2009-08-29 18:30)	1554
Democrats invoke Kennedy in health care push (2009-08-30 12:31)	1554
Public option lives on (2009-08-31 21:46)	1555
3.9 September	1555
Obama to take greater role, address Congress (2009-09-02 20:09)	1555
Obama to appear on GMA before address (2009-09-04 21:01)	1556
Van Jones resigns (2009-09-05 20:04)	1557
Obama addresses students at start of school year (2009-09-08 12:26)	1557
Democrats rally behind Obama (2009-09-10 19:36)	1558
Obama notes rise in number of healthcare uninsured (2009-09-13 18:01)	1559
Obama explains missile defense decision (2009-09-16 19:40)	1559
Obama hits Sunday morning talk shows (2009-09-20 17:57)	1560
Barack Obama addresses UN General Assembly (2009-09-23 16:53)	1560
Tweet you senators to pass healthcare reform now! (2009-09-26 16:48)	1561
Senate bill proposes 20 percent cut in greenhouse emissions (2009-09-29 13:53)	1561
3.10 October	1562
Obama to lobby for Chicago's Olympic bid (2009-10-01 19:01)	1562
Obama celebrate 17th anniversary (2009-10-03 20:31)	1562
Obama to meet with Congress on Afghan war (2009-10-06 21:20)	1563
Obama bags Nobel Peace Prize (2009-10-09 18:43)	1564
Senate committee approves healthcare reform bill (2009-10-13 16:44)	1565

Yes, Obama has time for climate change (2009-10-16 20:00)	1565
Sen. Reid announces Senate bill including public option (2009-10-26 20:11)	1566
House unveils health reform bill (2009-10-29 21:53)	1567
3.11 November	1567
Election seen as test for Obama (2009-11-02 21:52)	1567
Were the Tuesday elections a sign of things to come? (2009-11-04 18:44)	1567
House passes health bill, on to Senate (2009-11-08 14:12)	1568
Obama honors fallen at Ft. Hood (2009-11-10 17:16)	1569
(2009-11-11 22:22)	1569
Obama to hold jobs creation summit (2009-11-12 21:51)	1569
Democrats mistaken in shunning Obama, progressive agenda (2009-11-13 17:56)	1570
Obama the first "Pacific President" (2009-11-14 19:43)	1570
Obama to announce Afghan intentions at West Point (2009-11-29 19:15)	1571
3.12 December	1572
Obama's options at Copenhagen (2009-12-08 18:41)	1572
Obama to seek free trade pact with Asia-Pacific group (2009-12-14 19:24)	1573
Dems weaken in polls as split widens (2009-12-16 22:22)	1573
Obama announces "meaningful and unprecedented" deal at Copenhagen (2009-12-18 18:56)	1573
Should Obama make hay while the Sun shines? (2009-12-21 17:59)	1574
Poll: Obama is America's most admired man (2009-12-30 18:40)	1574
4 2010	1577
4.1 January	1577
Three key Democrats drop out of 2010 race (2010-01-06 22:43)	1577
Progressives never had it so good (2010-01-12 15:52)	1577
Obama: U.S. will act quickly to help Haiti (2010-01-13 19:38)	1578
Obama reaches agreement on healthcare (2010-01-14 21:01)	1579
Obama stumps for Martha Coakley (2010-01-17 19:59)	1579
Democrats lose Senate supermajority (2010-01-19 20:40)	1579
Democrats agreeing on new healthcare strategy (2010-01-25 19:43)	1580
4.2 February	1581
Obama looks to restart healthcare in Congress (2010-02-08 18:55)	1581
Michelle Obama: Healthcare reform must pass (2010-02-09 20:14)	1582
Obama defends Recovery Act (2010-02-17 19:59)	1582
Republicans use filibuster in record numbers (2010-02-18 18:44)	1582
Obama unveils new healthcare proposal (2010-02-23 20:34)	1583

	Public healthcare summit illustrates partisan divide (2010-02-25 19:50)	1584
4.3	March	1584
	Senators vote to restore unemployment benefits (2010-03-02 21:22)	1584
	House vote looms on healthcare bill (2010-03-10 17:30)	1585
	Polls show Democrats need lots of work (2010-03-17 17:49)	1585
	Things looking good for Obama on healthcare reform (2010-03-20 16:31)	1586
	Historic healthcare reform set to become law (2010-03-21 21:20)	1587
	Obama signs historic bill into law (2010-03-23 13:42)	1588
4.4	April	1589
	Obama sets new nuke policy (2010-04-06 15:17)	1589
	Obama holds nuclear summit in DC (2010-04-13 15:42)	1589
	Obama meets to discuss Supreme Court pick (2010-04-21 15:56)	1589
	Obamas vacation in Blue Ridge Mountains, NC (2010-04-23 13:29)	1590
	Breakthrough on Wall St. reform bill (2010-04-28 20:48)	1590
4.5	May	1591
	Does Obama favor Kagan for Supreme Court? (2010-05-08 13:45)	1591
	Kagan begins confirmation process (2010-05-12 20:42)	1591
	Poll results show anti-incumbent attitude (2010-05-19 12:13)	1591
	Obama releases National Security Strategy report (2010-05-27 19:22)	1592
4.6	June	1592
	Obama postpones Indonesia, Australia trip for second time (2010-06-03 22:02)	1592
	Obama needs to do the right thing in the Gulf (2010-06-10 20:49)	1593
	Obama slams Republicans for blocking tactics (2010-06-19 19:13)	1593
	Obama calls for $90 billion bank tax (2010-06-26 19:50)	1593
4.7	July	1594
	Economy and the Elections (2010-07-13 17:19)	1594
4.8	August	1595
	Tackling the deficit (2010-08-04 16:09)	1595
	Fallacy: tax cuts increase deficit (2010-08-05 09:04)	1596
	Electing good candidates in November (2010-08-06 13:24)	1597
	Getting progressive voters to the polls (2010-08-09 13:25)	1597
	Obama still popular with liberals despite White House criticism (2010-08-10 11:39)	1598
	Democrats offer open source for developers (2010-08-11 15:23)	1598
	OFA to hold nationwide canvass (2010-08-17 19:10)	1599
	OFA's job will be more difficult in midterms (2010-08-18 21:43)	1599

Obama and Democrats heat up fundraising (2010-08-20 18:31)	1599
CQ Politics shows Democrats still leading in House race (2010-08-22 19:50)	1600
Dems debate House chances (2010-08-26 17:41)	1601
(2010-08-27 17:39)	1601
Jerry Brown hearts Obama (2010-08-28 07:11)	1601
Democrat's lack of enthusiasm or Republican feuding? (2010-08-30 17:46)	1602
Democrat activity on the web (2010-08-30 21:22)	1603
4.9 September	1604
Technology may make the difference in Nov. (2010-09-01 22:06)	1604
Obama interview in Oval Office (2010-09-02 20:51)	1604
Stimulus Package? (2010-09-04 10:44)	1604
Obama plans $100 billion R & D tax credit (2010-09-05 16:13)	1606
Obama to announce $50 billion infrastructure spending (2010-09-06 15:46)	1606
Democratic Party preparing for big vote push (2010-09-07 17:13)	1606
Michelle Obama and White House Dance Series (2010-09-08 22:01)	1607
More data on web activity (2010-09-10 15:43)	1607
Obama to hold rallies in key states (2010-09-13 13:41)	1608
Good night for Democrats (2010-09-15 08:53)	1609
A Republican victory could spell economic disaster (2010-09-16 21:20)	1609
Comedians to rally in DC (2010-09-17 17:56)	1611
(2010-09-17 21:15)	1612
How to stop corporations from hijacking democracy (2010-09-18 13:54)	1612
Who are we electing this November? (2010-09-19 18:17)	1613
Democrats leading fundraising, waiting for RNC numbers (2010-09-20 17:46)	1613
(2010-09-21 08:12)	1614
Building up a nationwide effort (2010-09-22 18:45)	1614
Democrats raising more money than Republicans (2010-09-23 12:36)	1614
Obama's health care benefits activated (2010-09-23 22:14)	1615
The Last Second Voter (2010-09-24 15:28)	1615
Support President Obama, Vote on Nov. 2! (2010-09-25 13:18)	1616
Democrats surge in newest polls (2010-09-27 13:43)	1618
Big rally tomorrow for final 5-week push (2010-09-27 20:31)	1618
Watch Barack Obama live at Madison rally (2010-09-28 15:56)	1619
The Likely Voter (2010-09-29 08:20)	1619
4.10 October	1619

Obama picks Pete Rouse for new chief of staff (2010-10-01 09:17)	1619
DCCC launches interactive map (2010-10-01 13:00)	1620
(2010-10-01 14:29)	1620
Latinos, Blacks bridging "enthusiasm gap" (2010-10-01 20:37)	1620
Latinos, Blacks bridging "enthusiasm gap" (2010-10-02 11:35)	1620
Green Choice between Democrats and Republicans (2010-10-03 21:42)	1621
Who are the Swing Voters? (2010-10-04 17:30)	1621
DNC raises record cash in Sept. (2010-10-05 08:14)	1622
On the Issues: Jobs and Economy (2010-10-07 17:33)	1622
Obama's support among Black voters still high (2010-10-08 20:52)	1623
Early voting is underway (2010-10-09 08:12)	1623
On the Issues: Unemployment Benefits (2010-10-09 14:05)	1624
On the Issues: Social Security (2010-10-10 11:55)	1625
Video: A blast from the past! (2010-10-11 14:59)	1626
The importance of minority and young vot to Democrats (2010-10-12 18:29)	1626
Women helping Democratic Senate raceswo (2010-10-13 18:04)	1627
Maddow: Anonymous corporate donors firing up as new campaign issue (2010-10-14 19:45)	1628
Yes we have no bananas! (2010-10-15 09:21)	1628
Committing to Vote (2010-10-17 15:57)	1629
Rock the Vote Videos (2010-10-18 15:33)	1630
'All hands on deck' (2010-10-19 17:06)	1631
35,000 rally behind Barack and Michelle in Ohio (2010-10-20 15:06)	1631
Early voting looking good for Democrats (2010-10-21 16:39)	1631
Get Early Voting Info from OFA (2010-10-23 14:47)	1632
Early voting campaign hits Facebook, social media (2010-10-24 14:19)	1632
Democrats save big bucks for late surge (2010-10-25 17:10)	1633
Real People vs. Corporations (2010-10-26 12:44)	1633
Sign up for GOTV in last four days! (2010-10-26 20:47)	1633
On Polls and Early Voting (2010-10-27 13:21)	1634
Kal Penn on the importance of voting (2010-10-28 16:48)	1636
Undecided voters still undecided (2010-10-28 16:58)	1636
(2010-10-28 19:05)	1637
Nationwide weather forecast for Election Day (2010-10-29 13:30)	1637
Video the Vote (2010-10-29 19:52)	1638
Nouriel Roubini sees doom if GOP takes power (2010-10-30 05:52)	1638

Vote Dem #VoteDem (2010-10-30 13:27)	1639
Working the Demographics (2010-10-31 07:31)	1640
Encouraging News from the Field and from Early Voting (2010-10-31 19:08)	1640
4.11 November	1640
Last Two Days (2010-11-01 13:07)	1640
Trending Topics and Searches on Election Day (2010-11-02 06:14)	1641
Crunch Time (2010-11-02 13:18)	1641
Lessons to learn from the Election (2010-11-03 21:54)	1642
2012 Election Strategy (2010-11-29 20:08)	1643
5 2011	1647
5.1 January	1647
Polls favoring Obama so far for 2012 (2011-01-02 16:46)	1647
5.2 March	1648
Obama continues to lead 2012 polls (2011-03-18 17:36)	1648
5.3 April	1649
Obama campaign mobilizes, GOP still gun shy (2011-04-10 19:37)	1649
Budget battle to influence 2012 polls? (2011-04-17 12:17)	1649
Jim Messina: 2012 Campaign Strategy (2011-04-25 13:51)	1650
5.4 May	1650
First GOP presidential debate tonight (2011-05-05 20:21)	1650
Obama approval rating jumps after Osama bin Laden operation (2011-05-10 19:44)	1650
Mike Huckabee: Not running for president (2011-05-14 20:22)	1651
Made in the USA (2011-05-18 19:24)	1651
(2011-05-27 19:09)	1652
Interview: Maya Soetoro-Ng in YES! magazine (2011-05-28 15:36)	1652
5.5 June	1653
(2011-06-06 16:26)	1653
Obama campaign looking to mobilize 2008 volunteers (2011-06-06 21:45)	1653
GOP primary candidates to meet in CNN debate (2011-06-13 16:03)	1654
Al Gore wants Obama to defend climate change action (2011-06-22 20:32)	1654
Obama, Palin and Bachmann in Iowa on Tuesday (2011-06-25 21:41)	1655
5.6 July	1656
Obama rope a dope? (2011-07-12 20:28)	1656
Obama addresses debt and deficit (2011-07-16 19:08)	1657
Debt deal looks unlikely (2011-07-24 17:07)	1658

5.7	August	1660
	Economy, Congress and Obama (2011-08-22 16:58)	1660
	A revealing chart (2011-08-23 21:20)	1661
5.8	October	1663
	The Herman Cain Train (2011-10-17 13:35)	1663
	The impact of Occupy Wall Street (2011-10-20 18:29)	1663
	More on Cain (2011-10-27 11:58)	1664
5.9	November	1664
	Cain feels brotherly love for Koch brothers (2011-11-04 16:23)	1664
	Obama in Hawai'i for FTA talks (2011-11-12 21:54)	1665
5.10	December	1665
	Obama Christmas Store (2011-12-04 18:54)	1665
	(2011-12-09 21:58)	1666
	Obama on 60 Minutes (2011-12-11 18:35)	1666
	"We're Here to Mark the End of This War" (2011-12-12 20:02)	1667
	Is Mitt Romney really more electable? (2011-12-18 21:46)	1667
	Obamas send Christmas card, Palin attacks (2011-12-22 08:07)	1668
	Sierra Club thanks Obama for toxic mercury standards (2011-12-22 20:50)	1668
6	2012	1671
6.1	January	1671
	(2012-01-06 18:59)	1671
	Obama touts economic growth (2012-01-08 20:34)	1682
	Romney wins New Hampshire primary (2012-01-10 19:36)	1683
	Gingrich super PAC releases anti-Romney movie (2012-01-12 19:04)	1683
	Obama 2012 Campaign Strategy (2012-01-18 17:44)	1684
	Gingrich surging as South Carolina vote looms (2012-01-20 19:51)	1685
	Gingrich retakes frontrunner status (2012-01-21 22:04)	1686
6.2	February	1686
	GOP primary in state of disarray (2012-02-09 19:04)	1686
	Behind Obama's Asia pivot (2012-02-27 20:54)	1687
6.3	March	1692
	A brokered convention for the GOP? (2012-03-10 17:24)	1692
	How Democrats stand today (2012-03-28 15:24)	1693
6.4	May	1693
	Obama vs. Romney Economics (2012-05-22 12:51)	1693

6.5	June	1694
	Obama raises more people, but loses May fundraising (2012-06-08 18:57)	1694
	Obama cares, Romney contraire (2012-06-09 09:03)	1694
	Volunteer efforts to ramp up (2012-06-09 18:29)	1695
	A good ol' 50-state strategy (2012-06-11 21:21)	1695
	Romney vs. the public sector (2012-06-12 21:32)	1696
	Helping out with the Obama campaign (2012-06-13 19:45)	1697
	Looking at the electoral maps (2012-06-15 15:18)	1697
	Obama allows 'Dreamers' to stay in country (2012-06-16 19:56)	1699
	Obamacare already helping millions (2012-06-19 16:32)	1699
	The power of word of mouth (2012-06-20 20:42)	1700
	Organizations, endorsements ramp up for Obama (2012-06-21 20:24)	1700
	First Lady Michelle Obama heads west (2012-06-23 22:12)	1701
	Campaign asks supporters how to move forward (2012-06-24 20:12)	1701
	It's the economic plan.... (2012-06-26 18:49)	1701
	Vote for Romney! (2012-06-27 15:15)	1702
	Supreme Court upholds Obamacare (2012-06-28 14:38)	1702
	Health reform benefits for the American people (2012-06-28 16:23)	1703
	Leveraging the president's momentum (2012-06-29 18:23)	1705
	(2012-06-30 18:18)	1705
6.6	July	1705
	(2012-07-06 13:07)	1705
	Keeping the right perspective on fundraising (2012-07-07 14:06)	1706
	Still waiting for Obama numbers (2012-07-07 14:32)	1706
	Jobs reports (2012-07-08 16:48)	1707
	Poll numbers (2012-07-10 15:02)	1708
	(2012-07-12 18:33)	1709
	Romney scrambling after Bain revelation (2012-07-13 17:30)	1709
	Barackobama.com needs to step up SEO (2012-07-17 19:07)	1710
	Romney to pick VP after Olympics (2012-07-19 22:05)	1711
	Why is Obama spending so much more than Romney? (2012-07-25 12:31)	1712
	100 days to go (2012-07-29 14:54)	1713
6.7	August	1714
	Romney ready to announce VP choice (2012-08-02 12:10)	1714
	How to support Barack Obama online (2012-08-02 14:15)	1714

Music Video: The Obama Smackdown (2012-08-08 16:08)	1715
Three polls suggest Obama surge (2012-08-10 15:30)	1715
Mitt Romney and Paul Ryan: Back to the Failed Top-Down Policies (2012-08-12 19:20)	1716
Mitt Romney and Paul Ryan plan to end Medicare as we know it (2012-08-15 15:10)	1716
Grassroots fundraising (2012-08-17 13:38)	1717
Weekly Address: Congress Should Back Plan to Hire Teachers (2012-08-18 13:08)	1717
Show us your papers (2012-08-18 13:59)	1718
Getting out the vote amidst voter suppression (2012-08-25 21:23)	1719
More on defeating voter suppression (2012-08-26 11:37)	1719
Mitt and Ann discuss tax returns (comedy) (2012-08-27 12:08)	1721
What to watch for at GOP Convention (2012-08-27 14:43)	1721
Mitt Romney: You Didn't Build That — You Destroyed It (2012-08-28 12:25)	1722
GOP nominates Mitt Romney (2012-08-28 18:39)	1723
Enthusiasm gap could decide election (2012-08-29 13:47)	1724
Paul Ryan goes on attack at RNC (2012-08-29 21:21)	1724
Romney likely to appeal to base tonight (2012-08-30 17:01)	1725
Live: Romney begins speech (2012-08-30 19:38)	1726
Live: Romney begins speech (2012-08-30 19:38)	1726
Romney fails to offer olive branch in speech (2012-08-31 08:34)	1727
Private sector vs. public sector? (2012-08-31 13:07)	1729
6.8 September	1730
Democrats can gain big on convention (2012-09-01 17:28)	1730
(2012-09-02 07:15)	1730
We built it! (2012-09-02 16:15)	1731
72-hour push (2012-09-04 15:20)	1731
First night about contrasts, insight into presidency (2012-09-04 21:03)	1733
How the conventions can make a difference (2012-09-05 15:12)	1734
Bill Clinton works magic as Democrats nominate Barack Obama (2012-09-06 08:34)	1735
Schedule for final day at DNC (2012-09-06 11:39)	1736
(2012-09-06 14:41)	1737
Confirmed DNC schedule for Thursday (2012-09-06 15:07)	1737
(2012-09-06 15:40)	1740
Obama speech reignites hope (2012-09-07 08:43)	1742
Is Romney on the retreat? (2012-09-08 12:09)	1743
Obama slips past Romney in August fundraising (2012-09-10 19:15)	1744

	DNC measured as website activity (2012-09-11 14:13)	1745
	The Big Mo (2012-09-13 17:58)	1746
	Why Obamacare is a losing issue for Romney (2012-09-15 13:44)	1747
	Arithmetic (2012-09-17 13:15)	1748
	Voting begins in early states (2012-09-17 20:35)	1748
	Romney and the 47% (2012-09-19 18:29)	1750
	Obama ground attack on the roll (2012-09-22 18:18)	1751
	Do it right or rewind? (2012-09-24 19:10)	1752
	Iowa Be The First to Vote for President Obama: Early Voting Starts this ... (2012-09-26 21:23)	1753
	Romney can still come back (2012-09-29 18:50)	1753
6.9	October	1754
	How Big Bird stole last night's debate (2012-10-04 11:38)	1754
	Obama attracts bigger crowds (2012-10-05 18:24)	1755
	Romney and 47% (2012-10-09 20:48)	1756
	GOP and Jobs (2012-10-14 08:33)	1757
	Obama must become stage actor in debates (2012-10-15 13:25)	1757
	Mitt Romney, Bain and China (2012-10-17 13:39)	1758
	Halloween GOTV (2012-10-21 19:31)	1760
	Pres. Obama prepares for final foreign policy debate (2012-10-22 11:35)	1760
	Motivating unlikely voters to vote (2012-10-24 18:30)	1761
	Come to Florida - OFA Florida (2012-10-25 19:39)	1763
	Colin Powell's endorsement and the reaction (2012-10-26 08:38)	1764
	Hurricane Sandy and voter turnout (2012-10-30 10:25)	1765
6.10	November	1766
	Jim Messina's State of the Race: "The president will win re-election if ... (2012-11-01 16:44)	1766
7	2013	1769
7.1	January	1769
	(2013-01-18 13:15)	1769
7.2	July	1769
	How Obama is helping medical debt (2013-07-24 14:27)	1769
7.3	September	1770
	The Obama Administration's Reforms On Educational Loans (2013-09-05 11:26)	1770
7.4	October	1771
	Online degrees (2013-10-19 08:27)	1771
	Prohibition's unintended consequences (2013-10-21 19:19)	1772

7.5	December	1773
	President Obama Unveils Government and University Partnership to Help Veterans Succeed at Higher Education (2013-12-13 18:48)	1773
	Site Review for Timothy Broas (2013-12-24 14:37)	1774
8	2014	1775
8.1	January	1775
	Ambassador Yousef al Otaiba (2014-01-24 22:26)	1775
8.2	April	1776
	CSIS Provides Practical Solutions to World Problems (2014-04-27 07:17)	1776

1. 2007

1.1 January

Welcome to the Obama Blog (2007-01-24 09:03)

I set up this blog to discuss and promote the campaign of Barack Obama for the United States presidency. Although still a longshot in the primary, Obama is the leading challenger to Hilary Clinton. His big challenge now is to catch up on fundraising. Hilary has some $14 million in the bank already. Obama would do good to concentrate on winning the first one or two primaries. Fortunately he appears to be leading in New Hampshire so far. Once he shows he can win, things will start falling his way. I chose Obama over Clinton, although either one would be great as they both represent firsts for minorities in the U.S. However, as opponent of the Iraq War, Obama's consistent opposition is more in line with my views. Also Hilary is a bit too "centrist" for me and I like Obama's emphasis on the environment. Please feel free to leave your comments and suggestions on this blog.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

alyceclover (2007-07-10 22:24:00)

Hello and thank you for choosing to support the Senator. I disagree about Hillary being as good a choice as Barack. With her she brings Bill as First Man in the White House. He not only betrayed her trust and Chelsey's but the people who elected him as well.

People talk about experience, I think maturity is a better word. Hillary lacks empathy in her support of genocide on the Iraqi people. Whereas Obama wishes to seek peaceful solutions to problems that ail us.

Obama rolls online (2007-01-24 11:20)

Research from a few sites indicate that Barack Obama is leading the pack in online popularity. Twelve percent of visitors to the Senate website click on Obama's webpage as compared to 7 percent for Clinton and 2 percent for John McCain. Obama's campaign site is ranked 86,653 according to Alexa.com, which is ahead of Clinton's at 291,730 and McCain's at 321,363. He also outrated Clinton, Edwards and McCain according to popularity in blogs judged by the amount of times his name was mentioned in blogs tracked by technorati and blogpulse. Online popularity generally translates to support among young people and techies . Howard Dean and moveon.org have used the internet to raise large sums of money. Obama can do the same. What he needs to balance this is some experienced savvy old hands who know how things work at this level.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Fundraising campaign gears up (2007-01-25 10:01)

The Obama camp says it will take at least $50 million just to have a 'seat at the table' in next year's primary. Other pundits claim $100 million is needed to be competitive.

If one has a good energized grassroots organization with volunteers willing to work the phones, walk door-to-door, hand out flyers at rallies, supermarkets, etc., stuff envelopes and the like, Obama's estimate is probably more accurate. Obama has many big names, particularly from Hollywood, that have committed to help raise money for him including George Soros, Oprah Winfrey, Warren Buffett, Steven Spielberg, Jeffrey Katzenberg, David Geffen, George Clooney and Matt Damon.

Soros can only contribute $2,100 personally and he has already done that, but his political action committee known as Hopefund can do much more. He can also raise money directly from his wealthy friends and associates.

Supporters with shallower pockets will probably contribute mainly through the Internet website, which has already established itself as the best way to make millions quickly through lots of small donations.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Intriguing past continues to make headlines (2007-01-28 10:33)

An article at The Times website examines the 'colorful' family of Obama and his diverse cultural heritage.

Raised in Hawai'i and Indonesia, Obama has Kenyan and Indonesian half-siblings. According to a U.S. News & World Report article one of his exploratory committee aides said that the candidate hopes to woo new faces into the Iowa caucus.

"The question for us will be whether we can get those people who are outside the voter file," said the aide. The Obama camp has said that attracting new voters not found in current databases into the "movement" is a key component of their campaign strategy.

X

Barack Obama as a Harvard law school student in Cambridge, Mass., Feb. 6, 1990. Obama was selected to serve on the Law Review as one of 80 'editor'-students; midway through his second year, on Feb. 5, 1990, Obama was elected president, becoming the first black president of the prestigious Harvard Law Review. AP Photo/Harvard University, Joe Wrinn via Yahoo News.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama's support among youth, polls (2007-01-29 09:36)

An opinion piece in The Daily Campus a student publication of the University of Connecticut illustrates Barack Obama's appeal among youth.

Such popularity, again, will translate into lots of energy that will need to be focused by people with experience. Without the benefit of experience, all that enthusiasm has a tendency of getting scattered and wasted.

The candidate was in the media spotlight again today when a protester interrupted hearings on the Katrina/Rita reconstruction efforts in Louisiana. Obama is among a group of senators attending that hearing. From now until the end of the primaries, each candidate will struggle to get the most advantage of free media coverage.

Polls

One shouldn't worry about current poll numbers. The people are just starting to learn about the candidates, and many of the latter are just starting to get their campaign machines and fundraising up and running.

Polls are much more important in the last few months and weeks before the primaries begin. And those first few primaries are crucial. They determine who has the momentum on their side, and momentum is key to winning elections.

X

From left to right, David Geffen, Jeffrey Katzenberg, and Steven Spielberg on New York Stock Exchange floor in a 2004 photo. Invitations went out this week to meet Sen. Barack Obama next month reportedly on Feb. 20 at the Beverly Hilton Hotel for a fund-raising reception hosted by the three. Peter Morgan/Reuters photo via Yahoo News.

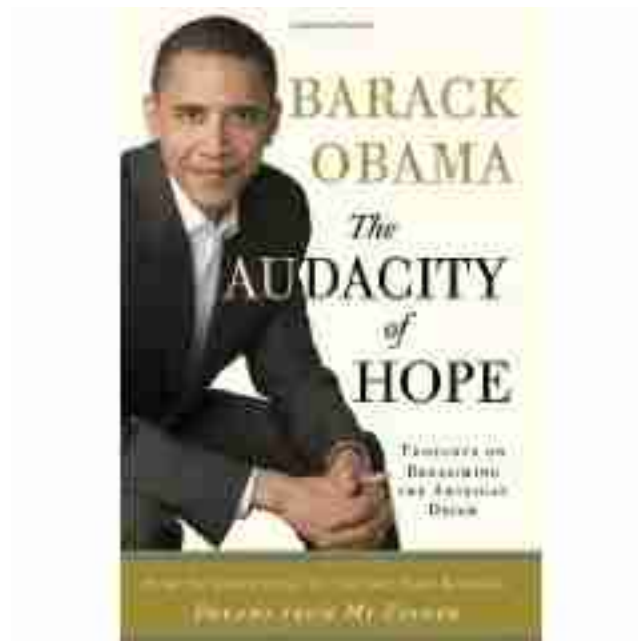

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

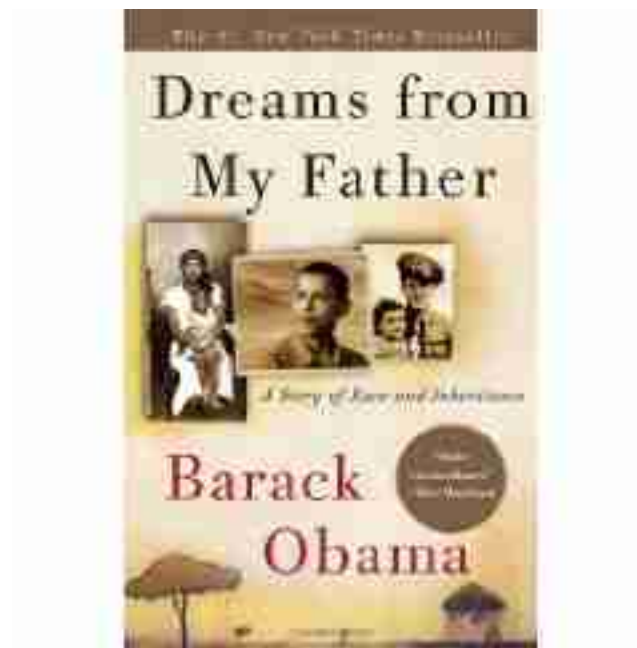

X

Obama's books fuel campaign (2007-01-30 12:51)

A USA Today article by Carol Memmot asks whether Barack Obama's hot book sales helped him in deciding to run (or at least form an exploratory committee).

Obama's second book The Audacity of Hope and his first book Dreams of my Father have not only enjoyed healthy sales but have drawn rock star-like crowds to book signings. It would come as no surprise that many of his fans took the opportunity of encouraging Obama to run during personal encounters at the signing events.

Barack Obama's books The Audacity of Hope and Dreams of my Father are ranked 7th and 32nd respectively in amazon.com sales.

On the fundraising front, according to various press reports, the Obama camp is starting to pull in lots of financial support, and experts like Jan Baran and Robert Bauer don't see the senator having any problem raising the cash needed to get his message out.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama introduces Iraq War De-escalation Act of 2007 (2007-01-30 18:04)

Appended is a copy of the most recent message from the official Barack Obama Presidential Exploratory Committee mailing list:

X

Dear Paul,

X

Today, we sadly find ourselves at the very point in Iraq I feared most when I opposed giving the President the open-ended authority to wage this war in 2002 – an occupation of undetermined length, at undetermined cost, with undetermined consequences in the midst of a country torn by civil war.

We have waited and we have been patient. We have given chance after chance for a resolution that has not come, and, more importantly, watched with horror and grief the tragic loss of thousands of brave young Americans.

The time for waiting in Iraq is over. The days of our open-ended commitment must come to a close. And the need to bring this war to an end is here.

That is why today, I'm introducing the Iraq War De-escalation Act of 2007. This plan would not only place a cap on the number of troops in Iraq and stop the escalation, it would begin a phased redeployment of U.S. forces with the goal of removing of all U.S. combat forces from Iraq by March 31st, 2008 – consistent with the recommendations of the bipartisan Iraq Study Group that the President ignored.

The redeployment of troops to the United States , Afghanistan , and elsewhere in the region would begin no later than May 1st of this year, toward the end of the timeframe I first proposed in a speech more than two months ago. In a civil war where no military solution exists, this redeployment remains our best leverage to pressure the Iraqi government to achieve the political settlement between its warring factions that can slow the bloodshed and promote stability.

The U.S. military has performed valiantly and brilliantly in Iraq . Our troops have done all we have asked them to do and more. But no amount of American soldiers can solve the political differences at the heart of somebody else's civil war, nor settle the grievances in the hearts of the combatants.

When it comes to the war in Iraq , the time for promises and assurances, for waiting and patience, is over. Too many lives have been lost and too many billions have been spent for us to trust the President on another tried and failed policy opposed by generals and experts, Democrats and Republicans, Americans and even the Iraqis themselves.

It is time to change our policy.

It is time to give Iraqis their country back.

And it is time to refocus America 's efforts on the challenges we face at home and the wider struggle against terror yet to be won.

Sincerely,

U.S. Senator Barack Obama

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama rebuffs Biden comment, selects site for announcement (2007-01-31 19:57)

The presidential hopeful today reacted to a comment by Senator Joseph Biden seeming to suggest that Barack Obama is the first "articulate" and "bright and clean" black presidential candidate. Biden made the remarks on the same day he announced he was also running for the democratic presidential nomination.

"I didn't take Sen. Biden's comments personally, but obviously they were historically inaccurate," Obama said. "African-American presidential candidates like Jesse Jackson, Shirley Chisholm, Carol Moseley Braun and Al Sharpton gave a voice to many important issues through their campaigns, and no one would call them inarticulate."

On another front, possibly in reaction to Obama's introduction of a planned phased redeployment of troops from Iraq by 2008, President Bush said that the senator still had a long way to go before reaching the White House.

Obama also announced today that he would declare his decision on whether to run or not at the Old Capitol used by Abraham Lincoln, a symbolic gesture as Lincoln like Obama was a bit of a novice when he won the presidency.

Senator Barack Obama, D-Ill., center, tastes some food from New Orleans brought to his Capitol Hill office in Washington, Wednesday, Jan. 31, 2007, by Sen. David Vitter, R-La., left, and Sen. Mary Landrieu, D-La., as a payoff for the Super Bowl bound Chicago Bears beating the New Orleans Saints in the NFC playoff game. AP Photo/Susan Walsh via Yahoo News.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

1.2 February

Iraq plan attracts party left, (2007-02-01 15:05)

The left-wing of the Democratic Party is delighted at Barack Obama 's new plan to get out of the Iraq War as opinions from publications like the Daily Kos indicate.

He clearly is positioning himself in opposition to Clinton on this issue.

Chicago billionaire Penny Pritzker will be Obama's national finance chairman according to Chicago news sources. The Pritzker clan started the Hyatt hotel chain and is one of America's wealthiest families. The first big fundraiser will be on Feb. 11 in Chicago at the Hyatt Regency Chicago.

The candidate hopeful has instituted a righteous self-imposed ban on accepting money from federal lobbyists, political action committees, registered foreign agents and youths under the age of 16.

X

Senator Barack Obama speaks before the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee for a hearing on 'Senators' Perspectives on Global Warming' on Capitol Hill in Washington January 30, 2007. REUTERS/Molly Riley photo via Yahoo News.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

'O'bama' energizes crowd at GMU (2007-02-02 17:24)

In an obvious attempt to fight for media coverage, Hillary Rodham Clinton said she will make her first campaign stop in New Hampshire on the day (Feb. 10) Barack Obama is scheduled to announce he will run for president.

Obama was at George Mason University today speaking before hundreds of fired-up students chanting "Yes, we can!"

The candidate recounted his humble past including working as a $13,000 year community organizer in Chicago.

There has been some talk as to whether a candidate from the Midwest can win the presidency. In the last presidential election, Ohio and Michigan figured as key swing states. When the Democrats swept into Congress last year, Ohio went solidly against the Republicans. It probably will be a key state in 2008. Nevada may also turn out to be a very important state to win to clinch the presidency.

Elsewhere, to counteract the wordplay of Obama-Osama used by conservatives, t-shirt makers on amazon.com have come up with a "Barack O'bama" shirt giving the candidate's name a Celtic touch.

X

Democratic presidential hopeful Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., smiles at a George Mason University rally at in Fairfax, Va., Friday, Feb. 2007. AP Photo/Susan Walsh via Yahoo News.

X

U.S. Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill, left, joins United Nations Secretary General Ban Ki-Moon, for a photo opportunity on a flight from Washington DC to New York, Friday, Feb. 2, 2007. AP Photo/United Nations, Evan Schneider via Yahoo News.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Smoke signals (2007-02-03 10:55)

An article in the Globe and Mail wonders what impact Barack Obama's smoking habit will have on his presidential hopes.

There are other prominent tobacco-smoking elected officials, like California governor Arnold Schwarzenegger who I've personally seen light up a cigar in a smoking tent he maintains outside of his official office.

However FDR was the last president known to smoke cigarettes while in office. Many presidents including Bill Clinton were known to light up cigars on occasion. Gerald Ford was a regular pipe smoker. Eisenhower and Johnson were both heavy smokers but quit before assuming office.

A sign of cultural bias perhaps is that drinking is more accepted than smoking. No one would raise an eyebrow if a president were to accept a drink at a social event, for example. It is arguable that alcohol poses a much greater risk to good decision-making than tobacco.

Obama and wife Michelle with their daughters Sasha (L) and Malia (R) in Chicago in 2004. AFP photo via Yahoo News. Many believe that Michelle will be an important factor in Obama's race.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama's secret weapon (2007-02-04 10:38)

Check out this article from the Telegraph in the United Kingdom on Michelle Obama:

Obama prepares to unveil secret weapon

<http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/main.jhtml?xml=/news/2007/02/03/wobama03.xml>

Many people know that Hillary will be counting on Bill for support, but they don't know much about Obama's wife Michelle, who happens to pull in a substantially larger salary than the senator himself.

A graduate of Princeton and Harvard Law School and a corporate vice president, she is probably the candidate hopeful's best bet in securing support from the African American community.

As she will be one of the most accomplished first ladies in history if her husband is elected, she might also cut through some of Hillary Clinton's command of the women's vote. During her career she has served as a former associate dean at the University of Chicago, and is currently a vice president at the University of Chicago Hospitals.

Michelle Obama sits on six boards, including the prestigious Chicago Council on Global Affairs, the University of Chicago Laboratory Schools and Tree House Foods.

A devoted mother of two daughters, Michelle stands 5-foot-11 and has star appeal all on her own.

Senator Barack Obama and his wife Michelle greet Tom Cruise and Katie Holmes at the Legends Ball, an award ceremony hosted by Oprah Winfrey honoring women in the arts, entertainment and civil rights, in Santa Barbara, Calif. on May 14, 2005. AP Photo/Michael A. Marant, File via Yahoo News.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama to run unconventional campaign (2007-02-05 15:40)

According to the Obama camp political consultants, the candidate hopeful cannot win by running an orthodox "top-down" campaign. His opponents have too much of a headstart on him for that approach.

Instead, Obama will have to utilize the movement and energy built around his rock-star appeal and go with that flow. One example of an unconventional technique is the recent web-organized rally at George Mason University organized through the Facebook site. In the end, viral messaging may end up doing more for Obama than television or campaign mailings.

However, Obama is expected to do well in fundraising despite not having the deep supporter database of some other candidates like Clinton and McCain. Clinton spokesman Howard Wolfson said that he expects Obama to raise about $25 million in the first quarter. Just today, entertainer Barbara Streisand said that the Illinois senator would be one of three candidates she is supporting and donating to, the others being Clinton and Edwards.

Here's a nice 'insider' article on Barack by Adam Hanft of the Huffington Post:

Brunch with Barack

http://www.huffingtonpost.com/adam-hanft/brunch-with-barack_b_40478.html

This combination of file photos shows from left, singer/actress Barbara Streisand, former Sen. John Edwards, Sen. Hilary Clinton, D-NY, and Sen. Barak Obama, D-Ill. Streisand, said in a statement released Monday, Feb. 5, 2007, she's giving money not only to Clinton but to Edwards of North Carolina and Obama of Illinois. AP Photo/File via Yahoo News.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama's colorful upbringing (2007-02-06 22:33)

The Associated Press released a nice article on Barack Obama's multiethnic upbringing in Honolulu.

Growing up in a melting pot and making it to the prestigious Punahou School seems to have moulded Obama into the bridge-builder that he is today.

AP

This 1976 photo provided by The Oahuan, the yearbook of Punahou School, shows Barack Obama, in front row, fourth from right, poses with his 9th grade class outside of Punahou School in Honolulu. Punahou is a prestigious private school in Honolulu, that attracts the island's wealthiest, and most accomplished students. From msnbc.com.

Obama will make stops in Iowa, Chicago and New Hampshire over the next three days before his candidacy announcement at Springfield's Old State Capitol.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama foregoes public funding (2007-02-07 15:14)

Today, an anonymous source close to the Obama camp announced that the candidate hopeful will join Hillary Clinton and John Edwards in turning down public funding for both his primary campaign, and if nominated for the general election. This appears to be a sign of confidence from the campaign's fundraising team.

In the last presidential election, both Bush and Kerry declined public funding for the primary but accepted $74.5 million each for the general election.

There are also reports that Obama will try to quit smoking before the formal announcement of his campaign urged on by his wife Michelle.

X

Senator Barack Obama (D-IL) (C) speaks at a news conference in the Capitol in Washington on a plan for U.S. troop de-escalation in Iraq February 6, 2007. Flanking Obama are Representatives Mike Thompson, (D-CA) (L) and Patrick Murphy (D-PA). REUTERS/Kevin Lamarque (UNITED STATES) via Yahoo News.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Excitement building for Saturday event (2007-02-08 18:46)

Excitement is building in Springfield, Illinois where

Saturday Senator Barack Obama will officially announce he is running president . The candidate hopeful reportedly spent last weekend courting potential investors from the high tech industry, Broadway and Wall Street in New York City. He already has

Alan Solomont, a top Democratic fundraiser from Boston area and Lou Susman of Chicago, John Kerry's former national finance director, on his team.

The Obama campaign has located its headquarters in a high-rise on North Michigan Avenue in Chicago.

They are leasing an 33,500-square-foot floor from Accenture Ltd., the big consulting company, for up to two years.

Barack's school picture from Punahou School via the Honolulu Star-Bulletin.

233 N. Michigan Ave., location of Obama campaign HQ from Crain's Chicago Business.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama announces website upgrade is coming (2007-02-09 15:20)

There's an announcement preview on the official Obama campaign site:

<http://link.brightcove.com/services/link/bcpid474543990/bclid492760671/bctid492760670>

The candidate hopeful speaks, among other things, of a transformation of his website and urges supporters to seriously use the site as a campaign tool. Given that Barack is foregoing contributions from big political action committees and lobbyists, he will need this type of grassroots support, along with the conventional street-level work, to win.

Candidates with lots of supporters that don't have much money to contribute should utilize the internet. It's a great buzz machine when used properly.

A report from beet.tv quotes Joe Trippi, the internet guide of Howard Dean's campaign, who says that Barack Obama won the first viral video contest against Sam Brownback by 450,000 to 8,000. The other candidates have not used viral videos yet that be can displayed on remote sites and email.

Production specialist Mike Manley helps set up a media platform in front of Springfield, Ill.'s Old State Capitol, Friday, Feb. 9, 2007. Abraham Lincoln delivered his famous 1858 House Divided speech inside Representatives Hall, and used the governors rooms as a headquarters during the 1860 presidential campaign. Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., will announce his campaign for the presidency at the Old State Capitol, Saturday. AP Photo/Seth Perlman via Yahoo News.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

The experience factor (2007-02-09 18:40)

There isn't really much to the questions on Barack Obama's experience. Although experience can be important, very few presidents have had actual experience in the White House where it counts most of all.

The system is set up to handle people without experience. There are permanent full-time bureaucrats for example who keep the government running between transitions. An appointed cabinet of experts in various fields consult with the president on the full portfolio of presidential concerns.

The president acts mainly as decision-maker, as the one who provides direction to the experienced people who actually run the government. People hope that the decisions and direction provided by the president follow the latter's platform offered during the election. Otherwise the president and the related political party pay at the next election.

If Obama is elected, he will have had four years of Washington experience on top of seven years in the Illinois state senate. Before that he worked as a community advocate and organizer, civil rights lawyer and law professor, and his education is impeccable.

The real issue is what decisions and policy will Obama make while in office. Can he work with others to get consensus? Does he have the mettle to deal with tough, high pressure situations. And probably most of all does he have the necessary integrity and honesty – will he do his best to do what he promises during the election in a law-abiding manner?

The wise voter will scrutinize Obama and all the other candidates on these important factors.

Supporters of U.S. Senator Barack Obama (D-IL) prepare posters at the University of Illinois Chicago, February 8, 2007. The rally will take place in the UIC Pavilion February 11 where Obama is expected to announce his intentions for a run for the presidency February 10. REUTERS/John Gress photo via Yahoo News.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

JHC (2007-02-13 20:51:00)

Great site. In case you're interested, I posted an in-depth discussion about how best to answer questions about Sen. Obama's experience at my site, Obamarama.org.

New website launched (2007-02-10 09:00)

The new Obama'08 website has been released with a lot of added features. You can click on the graphic above to visit and check out the new look.

Now users can create their own profile, find nearby supporters, organize events, network, become fundraisers and maintain their own blogs onsite.

There's a page entitled "Learn" where you can find biographical information about the candidate and his family and also pictures and past speeches.

The "Issues" page has quite a comprehensive selection of position papers.

There is also a store for t-shirts and other goodies and links to official Obama pages on Facebook, Partybuilder, YouTube and Flickr.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Great speech (2007-02-10 09:42)

A great announcement speech by Barack Obama before a motivated crowd in Springfield.

He acknowledges the tough road ahead and calls on the movement to keep moving. That's what will propel him to victory.

For the base of the Democratic Party I think it is clear who their real candidate must be, but this speech will a lot of people who didn't know the candidate realize that this is the right guy for the job.

The my.barackobama.com part of the website is moving real slow now and often failing to connect (for me at least) indicating either there's a lot of traffic or someone is hacking the site ;)

Seems likes lots of groups and blogs have already been created. I believe this will be a very important part of the campaign as mentioned already before.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama announcement speech (2007-02-10 11:43)

The link to the announcement speech is below but the website appears to be bogged down by very heavy traffic. My.barackobama.com is mostly failing to connect. The full text of the speech is also found below.

Let me begin by saying thanks to all you who've traveled, from far and wide, to brave the cold today.

We all made this journey for a reason. It's humbling, but in my heart I know you didn't come here just for me, you came here because you believe in what this country can be. In the face of war, you believe there can be peace. In the face of despair, you believe there can be hope. In the face of a politics that's shut you out, that's told you to settle, that's divided us for too long, you believe we can be one people, reaching for what's possible, building that more perfect union.

That's the journey we're on today. But let me tell you how I came to be here. As most of you know, I am not a native of this great state. I moved to Illinois over two decades ago. I was a young man then, just a year out of college; I knew no one in Chicago, was without money or family connections. But a group of churches had offered me a job as a community organizer for $13,000 a year. And I accepted the job, sight unseen, motivated then by a single, simple, powerful idea - that I might play a small part in building a better America.

My work took me to some of Chicago's poorest neighborhoods. I joined with pastors and lay-people to deal with communities that had been ravaged by plant closings. I saw that the problems people faced weren't simply local in nature - that the decision to close a steel mill was made by distant executives; that the lack of textbooks and computers in schools could be traced to the skewed priorities of politicians a thousand miles away; and that when a child turns to violence, there's a hole in his heart no government could ever fill.

It was in these neighborhoods that I received the best education I ever had, and where I learned the true meaning of my Christian faith.

After three years of this work, I went to law school, because I wanted to understand how the law should work for those in need. I became a civil rights lawyer, and taught constitutional law, and after a time, I came to understand that our cherished rights of liberty and equality depend on the active participation of an awakened electorate. It was with these ideas in mind that I arrived in this capital city as a state Senator.

It was here, in Springfield, where I saw all that is America converge - farmers and teachers, businessmen and laborers, all of them with a story to tell, all of them seeking a seat at the table, all of them clamoring to be heard. I made lasting friendships here - friends that I see in the audience today.

It was here we learned to disagree without being disagreeable - that it's possible to compromise so long as you know those principles that can never be compromised; and that so long as we're willing to listen to each other, we can assume the best in people instead of the worst.

That's why we were able to reform a death penalty system that was broken. That's why we were able to give health insurance to children in need. That's why we made the tax system more fair and just for working families, and that's why we passed ethics reforms that the cynics said could never, ever be passed.

It was here, in Springfield, where North, South, East and West come together that I was reminded of the essential decency of the American people - where I came to believe that through this decency, we can build a more hopeful America.

And that is why, in the shadow of the Old State Capitol, where Lincoln once called on a divided house to stand together, where common hopes and common dreams still, I stand before you today to announce my candidacy for President of the United States.

I recognize there is a certain presumptuousness - a certain audacity - to this announcement. I know I haven't spent a lot of time learning the ways of Washington. But I've been there long enough to know that the ways of Washington must change.

The genius of our founders is that they designed a system of government that can be changed. And we should take heart, because we've changed this country before. In the face of tyranny, a band of patriots brought an Empire to its knees. In the face of secession, we unified a nation and set the captives free. In the face of Depression, we put people back to work and lifted millions out of poverty. We welcomed immigrants to our shores, we opened railroads to the west, we landed a man on the moon, and we heard a King's call to let justice roll down like water, and righteousness like a mighty stream.

Each and every time, a new generation has risen up and done what's needed to be done. Today we are called once more - and it is time for our generation to answer that call.

For that is our unyielding faith - that in the face of impossible odds, people who love their country can change it.

That's what Abraham Lincoln understood. He had his doubts. He had his defeats. He had his setbacks. But through his will and his words, he moved a nation and helped free a people. It is because of the millions who rallied to his cause that we are no longer divided, North and South, slave and free. It is because men and women of every race, from every walk of life, continued to march for freedom long after Lincoln was laid to rest, that today we have the chance to face the challenges of this millennium together, as one people - as Americans.

All of us know what those challenges are today - a war with no end, a dependence on oil that threatens our future, schools where too many children aren't learning, and families struggling paycheck to paycheck despite working as hard as they can. We know the challenges. We've heard them. We've talked about them for years.

What's stopped us from meeting these challenges is not the absence of sound policies and sensible plans. What's stopped us is the failure of leadership, the smallness of our politics - the ease with which we're distracted by the petty and trivial, our chronic avoidance of tough decisions, our preference for scoring cheap political points instead of rolling up our sleeves and building a working consensus to tackle big problems.

For the last six years we've been told that our mounting debts don't matter, we've been told that the anxiety Americans feel about rising health care costs and stagnant wages are an illusion, we've been told that climate change is a hoax, and that tough talk and an ill-conceived war can replace diplomacy, and strategy, and foresight. And when all else fails, when Katrina happens, or the death toll in Iraq mounts, we've been told that our crises are somebody else's fault. We're distracted from our real failures, and told to blame the other party, or gay people, or immigrants.

And as people have looked away in disillusionment and frustration, we know what's filled the void. The cynics, and the lobbyists, and the special interests who've turned our government into a game only they can afford to play. They write the checks and you get stuck with the bills, they get the access while you get to write a letter, they think they own this government, but we're here today to take it back. The time for that politics is over. It's time to turn the page.

We've made some progress already. I was proud to help lead the fight in Congress that led to the most sweeping ethics reform since Watergate.

But Washington has a long way to go. And it won't be easy. That's why we'll have to set priorities. We'll have to make hard choices. And although government will play a crucial role in bringing about the changes we need, more money and programs alone will not get us where we need to go. Each of us, in our own lives, will have to accept responsibility - for instilling an ethic of achievement in our children, for adapting to a more competitive economy, for strengthening our communities, and sharing some measure of sacrifice. So let us begin. Let us begin this hard work together. Let us transform this nation.

Let us be the generation that reshapes our economy to compete in the digital age. Let's set high standards for our schools and give them the resources they need to succeed. Let's recruit a new army of teachers, and give them better pay and more support in exchange for more accountability. Let's make college more affordable, and let's invest in scientific research, and let's lay down broadband lines through the heart of inner cities and rural towns all across America.

And as our economy changes, let's be the generation that ensures our nation's workers are sharing in our prosperity. Let's protect the hard-earned benefits their companies have promised. Let's make it possible for hardworking Americans to save for retirement. And let's allow our unions and their organizers to lift up this country's middle-class again.

Let's be the generation that ends poverty in America. Every single person willing to work should be able to get job training that leads to a job, and earn a living wage that can pay the bills, and afford child care so their kids have a safe place to go when they work. Let's do this.

Let's be the generation that finally tackles our health care crisis. We can control costs by focusing on prevention, by providing better treatment to the chronically ill, and using technology to cut the bureaucracy. Let's be the generation that says right here, right now, that we will have universal health care in America by the end of the next president's first term.

Let's be the generation that finally frees America from the tyranny of oil. We can harness homegrown, alternative fuels like ethanol and spur the production of more fuel-efficient cars. We can set up a system for capping greenhouse gases. We can turn this crisis of global warming into a moment of opportunity for innovation, and job creation, and an incentive for businesses that will serve as a model for the world. Let's be the generation that makes future generations proud of what we did here.

Most of all, let's be the generation that never forgets what happened on that September day and confront the terrorists with everything we've got. Politics doesn't have to divide us on this anymore - we can work together to keep our country safe. I've worked with Republican Senator Dick Lugar to pass a law that will secure and destroy some of the world's deadliest, unguarded weapons. We can work together to track terrorists down with a stronger military, we can tighten the net around their finances, and we can improve our intelligence capabilities. But let us also understand that ultimate victory against our enemies will come only by rebuilding our alliances and exporting those ideals that bring hope and opportunity to millions around the globe.

But all of this cannot come to pass until we bring an end to this war in Iraq. Most of you know I opposed this war from the start. I thought it was a tragic mistake. Today we grieve for the families who have lost loved ones, the hearts that have been broken, and the young lives that could have been. America, it's time to start bringing our troops home. It's time to admit that no amount of American lives can resolve the political disagreement that lies at the heart of someone else's civil war. That's why I have a plan that will bring our combat troops home by March of 2008. Letting the Iraqis know that we will not be there forever is our last, best hope to pressure the Sunni and Shia to come to the table and find peace.

Finally, there is one other thing that is not too late to get right about this war - and that is the homecoming of the men and women - our veterans - who have sacrificed the most. Let us honor their valor by providing the care they need and rebuilding the military they love. Let us be the generation that begins this work.

I know there are those who don't believe we can do all these things. I understand the skepticism. After all, every four years, candidates from both parties make similar promises, and I expect this year will be no different. All of us running for president will travel around the country offering ten-point plans and making grand speeches; all of us will trumpet those qualities we believe make us uniquely qualified to lead the country. But too many times, after the election is over, and the confetti is swept away, all those promises fade from memory, and the lobbyists and the special interests move in, and people turn away, disappointed as before, left to struggle on their own.

That is why this campaign can't only be about me. It must be about us - it must be about what we can do together. This campaign must be the occasion, the vehicle, of your hopes, and your dreams. It will take your time, your energy, and your advice - to push us forward when we're doing right, and to let us know when we're not. This campaign has to be about reclaiming the meaning of citizenship, restoring our sense of common purpose, and realizing that few obstacles can withstand the power of millions of voices calling for change.

By ourselves, this change will not happen. Divided, we are bound to fail.

But the life of a tall, gangly, self-made Springfield lawyer tells us that a different future is possible.

He tells us that there is power in words.

He tells us that there is power in conviction.

That beneath all the differences of race and region, faith and station, we are one people.

He tells us that there is power in hope.

As Lincoln organized the forces arrayed against slavery, he was heard to say: "Of strange, discordant, and even hostile elements, we gathered from the four winds, and formed and fought to battle through."

That is our purpose here today.

That's why I'm in this race.

Not just to hold an office, but to gather with you to transform a nation.

I want to win that next battle - for justice and opportunity.

I want to win that next battle - for better schools, and better jobs, and health care for all.

I want us to take up the unfinished business of perfecting our union, and building a better America.

And if you will join me in this improbable quest, if you feel destiny calling, and see as I see, a future of endless possibility stretching before us; if you sense, as I sense, that the time is now to shake off our slumber, and slough off our fear, and make good on the debt we owe past and future generations, then I'm ready to take up the cause, and march with you, and work with you. Together, starting today, let us finish the work that needs to be done, and usher in a new birth of freedom on this Earth.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Watch Senator Obama on 60 Minutes (2007-02-10 16:29)

Is America ready for Obama?

http://www.cbsnews.com/sections/i_video/main500251.shtml?id=2457852n

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Gallery of photos from today's events (2007-02-10 18:53)

A gallery of some photographs from rallies held today after the official announcement.

1.  U.S. Sen. Barack Obama, talks with Simpson College student Nathan Arentsen, right, during a bus ride to an evening rally, Saturday, Feb. 10, 2007, near Waterloo, Iowa.

AP via Yahoo! News - 3 minutes ago

2.  U.S. Senator Barack Obama formally announces his campaign for President in the 2008 election during a campaign rally in Springfield, Illinois, February 10, 2007. (Jason Reed/Reuters)

Reuters via Yahoo! News - 46 minutes ago

3.  U.S. Senator Barack Obama waves in front of a U.S. flag while formally announcing his campaign for U.S. President in the 2008 election on February 10, 2007. (Jason Reed/Reuters)

Reuters via Yahoo! News - 46 minutes ago

4.  U.S. Senator Barack Obama kisses wife Michelle during a campaign rally where he announced his campaign for U.S. President in the 2008 election, in front of the Old State Capitol in Springfield, Illinois, February 10, 2007. (John Gress/Reuters)

Reuters via Yahoo! News - 46 minutes ago

5.  U.S. Senator Barack Obama (D-IL) formally announces his campaign for U.S. President in the 2008 election during a rally in front of the Old State Capitol in Springfield, Illinois, February 10, 2007. (Jason Reed/Reuters)

Reuters via Yahoo! News - 46 minutes ago

6.  Obama leaves after announcing his campaign for U.S. President in the 2008 election in front of the Old State Capitol in Springfield, Illinois, February 10, 2007. (Joshua Lott/Reuters)

Reuters via Yahoo! News - 46 minutes ago

7.  U.S. Senator Barack Obama steps off a chartered plane in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, February 10, 2007. Obama announced his campaign for U.S. President in the 2008 election in front of the Old State Capitol in Springfield, Illinois, on Saturday. (Jason Reed/Reuters)

Reuters via Yahoo! News - 46 minutes ago

8.  U.S. Senator Barack Obama speaks during a campaign rally in front of the Old State Capitol in Springfield, Illinois February 10, 2007 where he formally announced his campaign for U.S. President in the 2008 election. (Jason Reed/Reuters)

Reuters via Yahoo! News - 46 minutes ago

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

New endorsements pour in (2007-02-11 11:01)

As expected, the Republicans reacted to Senator Barack Obama's historic announcement yesterday, but the now-candidate also got an knock from across the pond in Australia. Prime Minister John Howard criticized Obama's firm and consistent stance against the Iraq War. I suspect there are many more overseas though that support the senator's views.

Here in the U.S., civil rights leader Jesse Jackson said that he would talk to all the candidates but that it's very likely he will endorse Obama. Today, the candidate also received endorsements from Iowa Attorney General Tom Miller and Iowa State Treasurer Michael Fitzgerald.

In Hollywood, David Geffen and Jeffrey Katzenberg are now reportedly endorsing Obama, while the other partner of Dreamworks SKG, Steven Spielberg is reportedly supporting both Obama and Hillary Clinton.

U.S. Senator Barack Obama speaks to high school students about education at a press conference before a rally at Iowa State University in Ames, Iowa, February 11, 2007. REUTERS/Jason Reed photo via Yahoo News.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Netroots and Grassroots Campaigning (2007-02-11 17:12)

The new my.barackobama.com is a good example of the power of "netroots" campaigning. Within 24 hours of launch, more than 1,000 different focus groups have been formed and the blogging is really taking off.

A lot of this is carry-over from sites like Facebook where the Obama group has more than 250,000 members. The next largest Facebook group has only something over 50,000 members.

Howard Dean used this type of social networking to raise a lot of money and support, which unfortunately was squandered too early in the campaign even months before the first poll. They quickly ran out of money during the actual election phase. I'm confident though that this will not happen in this case.

The key is transforming all this net activity into corresponding grassroots activity in the "real world" i.e., meetups, organizing, fundraising, precinct walking, phone banks, etc.

Dan from the barackobama.com blogs showed a chart from alexa.com that shows the big jump in traffic, reach and pageviews that has occurred since launch time. The site has really skyrocketed above the competitors in all categories. The alexa.com page is displayed below.

IFRAME: http://www.alexametrics.com/data/details/traffic_details?site0=www.barackobama.com&site1=www.hillaryclinton.com&site2=www.johnedwards.com&site3=www.kucinich.us&site4=www.joebiden.com&y=r&amp;z=3&h=300&w=500&range=7d&size=Medium&url=http://www.barackobama.com/

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anti-war activists prominent at Chicago rally (2007-02-12 10:25)

More than 7,000 people greeted Barack Obama at his final rally over the weekend before heading to Los Angeles. A group of anti-war protesters began calling for cutting Iraq War funding during the candidate's speech. Afterward, Obama, who has taken strong positions against the war over the weekend, said that he did not want to cut funding because it would endanger troops already in the region. He said the answer was to start bringing troops home in a full de-escalation rather than denying funds for war expenses.

Later in the day, Obama attended a fundraiser at the Hyatt Regency Chicago attended by 700 people where he reportedly made more than $1.5 million for his campaign.

In LA, Obama will have an event at the Rancho Cienega Sports Complex on Tuesday, Feb. 20. That evening he will also attend a big hosted by Geffen, Katzenberg and Spielberg. Reportedly there will also be a private dinner with Obama at Geffen's house for those who pledge to raise at least $46,000.

$2300-a-ticket reception at the Beverly Hilton Hotel

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Pics from the weekend events and 60 Minutes clip (2007-02-12 16:47)

To see the clip of Senator Barack and Michelle Obama's interview on 60 Minutes, click here.

Some photos from the weekend's events can be seen below. All the photos are available at Barack Obama's flickr site – <http://www.flickr.com/photos/barackobamadotcom/>.

Ames Rally at Hilton Coliseum

Ames Rally at Hilton Coliseum

X

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 11, 2007

9 comments

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 11, 2007

1 comment

Ames Rally at Hilton Coliseum

Ames Rally at Hilton Coliseum

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 11, 2007

6 comments

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 11, 2007

1 comment

Ames Rally at Hilton Coliseum

Ames Rally at Hilton Coliseum

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 11, 2007

0 comments

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 11, 2007

0 comments

Ames Rally at Hilton Coliseum

Ames Rally at Hilton Coliseum

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 11, 2007

0 comments

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 11, 2007

2 comments

Ames Rally at Hilton Coliseum

RD3P2200.JPG

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 11, 2007

0 comments

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 11, 2007

0 comments

RD3P2188.JPG

RD3P2161.JPG

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 11, 2007

0 comments

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 11, 2007

1 comment

RD3P2121.JPG

RD3P2101.JPG

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 11, 2007

0 comments

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 11, 2007

3 comments

RD3P2087.JPG

RD3P2070.JPG

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 11, 2007

0 comments

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 11, 2007

0 comments

RD3P2044.JPG

RD3P2027.JPG

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 11, 2007

0 comments

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 11, 2007

1 comment

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Give green to Obama (2007-02-12 23:06)

I've created a fundraising page over at my.barackobama.com. Show your support for green causes and Senator Barack Obama at the same time by contributing directly to his campaign effort:

Contributions from Environmental Supporters of Barack Obama

<http://my.barackobama.com/page/outreach/view/main/GW>

Show Senator Barack Obama that environment-minded people support him with words, action and by contributing directly to his campaign fund through this onsite fundraising page:

Guess you could say that it takes green (money) to help save green (earth).

This contribution on my.barackobama.com goes 100 % to the official campaign fund. The goal is to raise $1000 or more.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Paul Kekai Manansala (2007-02-12 23:13:00)

I forgot to mention that if you're not a member of my.barackobama.com you will have to register, but it's a painless process.

Obama continues to draw huge crowds (2007-02-13 09:50)

The rock star appeal of Senator Barack Obama is evident on each campaign stop as he sells out venues well in advance. If size matters in political rallies, he has it all over his opponents.

And his website is getting packed as well. Yesterday, my.barackobama.com shut down temporarily as staff scurried to add more server capacity. The site has skyrocketed above all other campaign websites since the new upgrade was launched last weekend.

And it seems that issues of race and religion continue to track the candidate. Not because Obama himself have made brought these to the fore, he seems more concentrated on his broad idea of governmental transformation. It is the media and others, not just opponents, who seem focuses on his race and religion.

Having a father and stepfather who were both non-practicing Muslims, and a mother of Christian background, puts the candidate in a peculiar position. It appears his parents were more intellectual rather than religious in orientation. But Obama is a professed and practicing Christian. Whether that should matter or not is of course a valid question, but unfortunately it is a big deal. In the same way, Mitt Romney faces scrutiny over his religion of Mormonism.

Race shouldn't matter either in this day and age, but many are supremely focused on the subject even though it seems to be far from Obama's mind. Again, the candidate seems genuinely focused on a vision of changing the country for the better. With such a mindset, he can't be bogged down by any narrow set of issues.

In the end though I think all of this attention may benefit Obama because he is not the one generating the commotion. He has handled the situation in a very "presidential" manner that should allow him to garner the publicity while defocusing the polarizing subjects of race and religion.

Ames Rally at Hilton Coliseum

From <http://www.flickr.com/photos/barackobamadotcom/387119032/>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Howard Dean comparison (2007-02-13 21:36)

Some bloggers and commentators have compared the Obama candidacy to that of Howard Dean in 2004 suggesting that the senator's campaign might face the same fate.

There are, of course, some valid comparisons. Both opposed the Iraq War, for example. Both were supported by a large number of younger and "activist" types. However, there are a number of reasons to think that things could end very differently this time:

Although Dean lost he eventually did find himself a place in the party. He became head of the DNC, the head of the Democratic Party. When he first announced he would run everyone thought he didn't have a chance, but the same people who supported him during his presidential run got him through. When Dean ran the establishment people opposed him because they thought he was too far to the left. Now Dean controls much of the establishment, although he still has significant opposition in the party apparatus. However, because of Dean's presence, things will be smoother for progressive candidates like Obama.

Obama's team has the opportunity to learn from the Dean campaign's mistakes.

Obama made national headlines during the 2004 convention. He was featured nationally for months before that time. By the time the primary rolls around he will have had more than three years of national coverage. In comparison, Dean was practically unknown nationally a year before his primary election.

There is of course no reason to think Obama will have a screaming incident like Dean. I'm sure he'll have his share of gaffes, but the Dean thing was a bit unusual even in the world of politics. Just not the right time I guess.

The opposition to the war is deeper now than during 2004. Many people think the Democratic victories in the Congressional races last time were indications of a growing desire to end the war. People are also tired of traditional politics and traditional politicians.

Howard Dean was a great speaker and had great views, but I think it is clear that Barack Obama has a rare type of charisma. He has "rock star" appeal.

There are probably some other reasons I'm not thinking of now, but I should also mention that while Dean had bloggers, Obama has both bloggers and social networkers. The latter are the people who drive websites like Facebook and MySpace.

Bloggers are sort of like media and publicity people, while social networkers are person-to-person like canvassers and phone-bankers. There are many more social networkers than bloggers so if you can utilize them properly it certainly will pay off at the ballot box.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Should Obama target the South? (2007-02-14 10:07)

An interesting article by Prof. Jacob Straus of Frostburg State University in West Virginia thinks Obama should target the South, and specifically South Carolina in the primaries. He uses as an example John F. Kennedy's decision to focus on West Virginia back in 1960.

Personally I plan on helping Obama in the important primary state of Nevada which is close to where I live in California.

The Obama website continues to cruise reaching 1,035 out of every 1 million internet users according to alexa.com. In comparison hillaryclinton.com coming in second among all candidates, Democrat and Republican, reaches only about 70 out of every million users. Some 70,000 users have registered at my.barackobama.com since it launched last week.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama lands key endorsement (2007-02-14 18:35)

BarackObama.com took a Valentine's Day hit today as did other presidential sites. No news on how the potential first couple dubbed as Barchelle (Barack + Michelle) by one author, celebrated the holiday.

They had reason to be happy though as copies of Ebony magazine featuring the couple on the cover are selling out at bookstores. Also, Virginia Governor Timothy M. Kaine is expected to endorse Obama it was reported today.

Obama's name recognition is growing rapidly as his campaign team seeks to spread the word.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Paul (2007-02-14 22:52:00)

"BarChelle Will Rule ! ; Looks as though BarChelle.com is reserved and Good Times Are Here Again.

Just goes to prove that, "History does have a Consciousness" ;

Barack visits New Hampshire (2007-02-15 08:28)

A story and some photos from Barack Obama's visits to New Hampshire, one of four important primary states the others being Iowa, South Carolina and Nevada.

X

<http://www.flickr.com/photos/barackobamadotcom/>

University of New Hampshire

University of New Hampshire

University of New Hampshire

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 14, 2007

1 comment

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 14, 2007

0 comments

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 14, 2007

0 comments

NH 6

NH 5

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 14, 2007

0 comments

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 14, 2007

0 comments

NH 5

NH 4

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 14, 2007

0 comments

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 14, 2007

0 comments

NH 4

NH 4

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 14, 2007

0 comments

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 14, 2007

0 comments

NH 3

NH 3

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 14, 2007

0 comments

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 14, 2007

2 comments

NH 3

NH 2

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 14, 2007

0 comments

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 14, 2007

0 comments

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

"It started in Springfield..." (2007-02-15 12:47)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack's "Youthroots" (2007-02-15 18:57)

Sam Graham-Felsen writes about Barack Obama's "youthroots" – his unprecedented support among young people – who are usually thought of as apathetic towards politics.

" 'He has unimaginable appeal to my generation,' says Brian Klaas of Carleton College, editor of the Carleton Progressive. For many 18- to 26-year-olds—who are among the most diverse and, according to numerous polls, most tolerant American generation in history—Obama's multiracial background embodies the personal and political identity of the Generation Y cohort known as "Millennials."

" In a Chicago Reader interview from 1995, Barack Obama wondered, "What if a politician were to see his job as that of an organizer?" If Obama can show his young followers that he's still that grassroots organizer—a rock star perhaps, but one who listens to, trusts and empowers his base to come on stage and rock with him—it's going to be one hell of a show."

Mo Money

The Obama camp bagged another top fundraiser, again in Hillary Clinton country, when Steven Gluckstern, an investment banker and former owner of the New York Islanders committed to the campaign. A Newsweek article discusses the deep pockets in both parties, of which, Obama has some of the deepest including Peter Bittenwieser, George Soros and Alan Solomont. It is highly likely though that small internet contributions will drive the campaign much the same way that they fueled Dean's 2004 effort.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama and Seniors (2007-02-16 08:19)

While the Obama campaign has been mostly viewed as a movement generated by young people, the candidate's concern and appeal to seniors cannot be overlooked.

"Barack Obama will be the Democratic candidate in 2008. He provides a phenomenal vision for seniors, first-time voters. He is the one who can carry our ideals to the forefront," said former Illinois State Senator Larry Walsh in an interview with nwi.com.

Obama's support for improved, affordable and universal healthcare will appeal to the powerful senior voting bloc, traditionally one of the most influential in electoral politics.

"Every senior citizen deserves to retire with dignity and respect," Obama told young Facebook supporters at a George Mason University rally.

As a member of the Illinois state senate, Obama sponsored the Health Care Justice Act, to research roads toward statewide universal healthcare and co-sponsored a prescription drug discount buying club for seniors and the disabled. In both cases, his legislation passed.

On Social Security, he opposes privatization and believes the system can be fixed with less drastic measures.

"The crisis in Social Security, I believe, is overstated in the sense that, if we make some adjustments to the system, as we did in 1983, we can assure the solvency of the system.

"Medicaid and Medicare are genuinely in crisis because health care inflation is so outstripping the expansion of the economy that it is gobbling up more and more taxpayer dollars, and it's going to get worse because of demographics," he said. "Folks get older, and they require more medical care."

Book still high on charts

In his quest for name recognition, the senator must be happy that his book The Audacity of Hope is listed at no. 2 on the Wall Street Journal list of best-sellers in the non-fiction category.

An alexa.com candidate tracking page shows that not only is barackobama.com at the top spot among candidate websites, but that Obama's Wikipedia entry is in the third slot just behind hillaryclinton.com.

Also in the area of name recognition, endorsements like that of blogger Arianna Huffington, mistress of The Huffington Post, can be very helpful.

However, the internet is limited in reaching out to certain groups, including seniors who often are not online. The campaign must find other ways of getting their message across to these voters.

Some rights reserved.

<http://www.flickr.com/photos/barackobamadotcom/>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Word on the Street (2007-02-16 15:46)

Expect lots of campaign stops in New Hampshire, Nevada, Iowa and South Carolina as these states determine who has the momentum for the rest of the election. There will be in order the caucuses in Iowa and New Hampshire and the primaries in Iowa and South Carolina before all other states.

It used to be that a candidate had to win New Hampshire in order to win the primary and election, but the last two presidents – Bill Clinton and George W. Bush – actually lost that state on their first runs.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Nevada, Nevada (2007-02-17 10:35)

The state of Nevada will hold its Democratic caucus between the Iowa caucus, the first in the nation, and the New Hampshire primary.

Nevada may for the first time play a decisive role in who wins the nomination. It is probably the most progressive state among those holding early contests, and it has good minority and labor union representation. Las Vegas, one of the nation's booming cities, has one of the best cross-sections of people from around the country that you will find anywhere.

Basically, Nevada can be seen as a better thermometer of what the nation thinks as a whole. It also is the only Western representative among the early states.

Sen. Barack Obama is headed for Las Vegas on Feb. 18 where he will hold a rally at the Clark County Government Center.

Nevada is a great state for grassroots campaigning as many of the residents are newcomers who have not registered to vote locally.

One thing candidates must learn is how to correctly pronounce the name of the state, something of which residents expect of their candidates.

Barack Obama's appearance in Columbia. To view the videos you will need Windows Media Player.

- Obama's introduction (5 minutes)
- Thoughts on education (1.5 minutes)
- Thoughts on healthcare (2.5 minutes)
- A plan for Iraq (2.5 minutes)
- Final thoughts (4 minutes)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama against the war in 2002 (2007-02-18 09:31)

26 October 2002 speech in Chicago at Federal Plaza:

"I stand before you as someone who is not opposed to war in all circumstances. The Civil War was one of the bloodiest in history, and yet it was only through the crucible of the sword, the sacrifice of multitudes, that we could begin to perfect this union and drive the scourge of slavery from our soil.

I Don't Oppose All Wars

I don't oppose all wars. My grandfather signed up for a war the day after Pearl Harbor was bombed, fought in Patton's army. He fought in the name of a larger freedom, part of that arsenal of democracy that triumphed over evil.

I don't oppose all wars. After September 11, after witnessing the carnage and destruction, the dust and the tears, I supported this administration's pledge to hunt down and root out those who would slaughter innocents in the name of intolerance, and I would willingly take up arms myself to prevent such tragedy from happening again.

Opposed to Dumb, Rash Wars

I don't oppose all wars. What I am opposed to is a dumb war. What I am opposed to is a rash war. What I am opposed to is the cynical attempt by Richard Perle and Paul Wolfowitz and other armchair, weekend warriors in this administration to shove their own ideological agendas down our throats, irrespective of the costs in lives lost and in hardships borne.

What I am opposed to is the attempt by political hacks like Karl Rove to distract us from a rise in the uninsured, a rise in the poverty rate, a drop in the median income, to distract us from corporate scandals and a stock market that has just gone through the worst month since the Great Depression.

That's what I'm opposed to. A dumb war. A rash war. A war based not on reason but on passion, not on principle but on politics.

On Saddam Hussein

Now let me be clear: I suffer no illusions about Saddam Hussein. He is a brutal man. A ruthless man. A man who butchers his own people to secure his own power.... The world, and the Iraqi people, would be better off without him.

But I also know that Saddam poses no imminent and direct threat to the United States, or to his neighbors...and that in concert with the international community he can be contained until, in the way of all petty dictators, he falls away into the dustbin of history.

I know that even a successful war against Iraq will require a U.S. occupation of undetermined length, at undetermined cost, with undetermined consequences.

I know that an invasion of Iraq without a clear rationale and without strong international support will only fan the flames of the Middle East, and encourage the worst, rather than best, impulses of the Arab world, and strengthen the recruitment arm of al-Qaeda.

I am not opposed to all wars. I'm opposed to dumb wars. So for those of us who seek a more just and secure world for our children, let us send a clear message to the president.

You Want a Fight, President Bush?

You want a fight, President Bush? Let's finish the fight with Bin Laden and al-Qaeda, through effective, coordinated intelligence, and a shutting down of the financial networks that support terrorism, and a homeland security program that involves more than color-coded warnings.

You want a fight, President Bush? Let's fight to make sure that...we vigorously enforce a nonproliferation treaty, and that former enemies and current allies like Russia safeguard and ultimately eliminate their stores of nuclear material, and that nations like Pakistan and India never use the terrible weapons already in their possession, and that the arms merchants in our own country stop feeding the countless wars that rage across the globe.

You want a fight, President Bush? Let's fight to make sure our so-called allies in the Middle East, the Saudis and the Egyptians, stop oppressing their own people, and suppressing dissent, and tolerating corruption and inequality, and mismanaging their economies so that their youth grow up without education, without prospects, without hope, the ready recruits of terrorist cells.

You want a fight, President Bush? Let's fight to wean ourselves off Middle East oil through an energy policy that doesn't simply serve the interests of Exxon and Mobil.

Those are the battles that we need to fight. Those are the battles that we willingly join. The battles against ignorance and intolerance. Corruption and greed. Poverty and despair." —

Below is a YouTube video of a 2002 interview of Barack Obama in which he declares he would have voted against the Iraq War.

X

X

2002 Barack Obama Interview: Against Iraq

02:47

From: jakeb1125

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama gets former SC Democratic chief's endorsement (2007-02-19 11:48)

Presidential candidate Barack Obama picked up a welcome endorsement Monday from Dick Harpootlian, the former haed of the South Carolina Democratic Party.

"I see in Barack Obama ... the same magnetism I saw in Bill Clinton," said Harpootlian on Friday, who also said he would immediately begin fundraising for the senator. "I think it will be easy to raise money for him."

On Tuesday, Obama will attend a star-studded Hollywood fundraiser, the biggest celebrity bash so far this campaign, hosted by the moguls of DreamWorks SKG. On the same day he will attend an afternoon rally at Ranch Cienega Sports Complex where he is expected to discuss bring all combat troops home from Iraq by March 2008, and on the need for energy independence.

Barack Obama in South Carolina - 2/16/07

Photo By Jack Jenkins

<http://www.flickr.com/photos/barackobamadotcom/395469232/>

.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Opponents eating Obama's MySpace dust (2007-02-19 20:13)

Many people have heard of Obama's unparalleled popularity on Facebook.com, but what about MySpace, the net's largest social network?

The techPresident site has figures showing that Obama has nearly twice as many friends as second-place Clinton, although the latter has been climbing in friends recently. Some techie observers note that Hillary's sudden jump is mostly due to the page having been down for a bit.

MySpace friends

Democrats # of friends

Obama 11.8 % 43003

Clinton 92.7 % 23428

Edwards 4.0 % 11593

Vilsack 4.1 % 1347

Kucinich 13.6 % 1078

Richardson 18.6 % 661
Biden 15.4 % 510
Dodd 17.9 % 172
% change in last week
Republicans

Paul 529.8 % 2501
Romney 5.4 % 1373
McCain 3.3 % 1051
Tancredo 18.2 % 637
Giuliani 14.9 % 385
Huckabee 0.6 % 166
% change in last week

Updated Feb 18, 2007

See full graph

The Republicans are far behind in MySpace popularity which is not surprising as over the years the Web has become the progressive counter to the conservative's talk radio.

Whether social network and blog popularity will convert to votes is of course an important question.

There are those who believe that the Democratic wave that occurred in the 2006 election was assisted by the Web's increasingly progressive outlook.

The range of people who use the internet has broadened considerably, and a very significant percentage of people now depend on the internet for most of their news, including political news.

As to whether Obama's internet popularity can compete with Clinton's money, this question takes for granted that Obama will not be highly competitive with Hillary in raising money. The internet is a proven source of nearly unlimited funds, although in Barack's case we are still waiting for reports that his support is indeed translating into dollars.

18

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

18

Obama team fires back at LA Times article (2007-02-20 08:43)

The Obama team reacted quickly today to an LA Times article suggesting that Barack Obama overplayed his role in the Atlgeld Gardens absestos case in his books "Dreams of My Father."

Here is the response to the LA Times:

Today, the Los Angeles Times published an article entitled “Fellow Activists Say Obama’s Memoir Has Too Many I’s” which implies that Obama partially fictionalized events in Altgeld Gardens in the 1980s in order to enhance the role he played in the community there.

The implication is false, and the article is misleading. At no point in the work does Obama take “singular” credit for initiating and leading efforts on the Altgeld asbestos problem. In fact, those who worked with him confirm that he preferred a background role in the matter, refusing to claim credit or even be in pictures taken of the community group. However, despite the fact that he shunned a public role, Obama’s work is clearly remembered by Altgeld residents, other organizers, and the reporter that the LA Times and others credit with bringing the problem of asbestos in Chicago’s public housing to light.

LA TIMES: Obama Says He Initiated and Led Efforts That Thrust Altgeld’s Asbestos Problem Into the Headlines

FACT: Obama Helped Residents In Altgeld Organize, But Stayed in Background

Yvonne Lloyd Worked With Obama In Altgeld Gardens: “He Always Stayed in the Background...Behind the Scenes.” Yvonne Lloyd, a mother of 11 who was the basis for the character “Shirley” in Dreams of My Father, worked with Obama during the effort to remove asbestos from the Altgeld Garden apartments. She remembers that Obama “trained us to be leaders...I would come to him with an issue and he would help us figure it out [but] he always stayed in the background. And we used to say to him, ‘Barack, come on and do this,’ and he would say no. Even when we took pictures, he always stayed behind the scenes, because it was our community.” Lloyd attended the meetings with the Chicago Housing Authority described in Dreams of My Father and remembers working with Obama on the issue, saying that he “helped us make presentations, but he never scripted us. Because that’s [scripting] not telling the truth. And if I’m telling the truth, I can tell it anywhere.” [Conversation with Yvonne Lloyd, 2/9/07]

Linda Randle, A Community Organizer In The Ida B. Wells Project, Worked With Obama: “He Didn’t Take Credit for Anything.” Linda Randle worked in the Ida B. Wells housing project, which also had problems with asbestos, as a community organizer. She filed a complaint with the EPA and worked with Martha Allen, a reporter for the Chicago Reporter, to bring the public’s attention to the issue. Randle, who knew Obama through his work in Altgeld, said “Barack and I would get together and we would talk... When he was having problems [with the work], we would talk about it – he would ask, ‘What do I need to do to open up my head to hear what they’re saying to me?’...But he didn’t take credit for anything.” [Chicago Reporter, June 1986; Conversation with Linda Randle, 2/16/07]

LA TIMES: Others Say...That Credit for Pushing Officials To Deal With Asbestos Goes to A Pre-Existing Group and A Local Newspaper Called the Chicago Reporter

FACT: Reporter That Broke the Asbestos Story For the Chicago Reporter Gives Obama, Others Credit for The Action Taken By the Housing Authority

Martha Allen, Reporter With the Chicago Reporter: Proud of The Work She Did on Asbestos, But Community Organizers including Barack Obama Were Working On The Issue “Long Before” She Raised It. Martha Allen, who did the original reporting on the issue of asbestos in Chicago’s public housing projects in 1986, said that although she’s proud of the reporting she did for the Chicago Reporter, she can’t take credit for the action that was eventually taken by the Chicago Housing Authority. “That [taking credit] implies that I opened the eyes of folks in Altgeld [on this issue] and that’s not true. Obama [and others like Linda Randle] were working on this long before I got there.” [Conversation with Martha Allen, 2/16/07]

Chicago Reporter Articles Credited With Raising Issue Do Not Mention Hazel Johnson or Her Group, People for Community Recovery. Martha Allen’s reports on the asbestos issue in 1986, which Rep. Bobby Rush credits with raising the profile of the asbestos problem in Altgeld Gardens and Ida B. Wells, do not mention Hazel Johnson or People for Community Recovery, Johnson’s group. Linda Randle, who filed the initial complaint with the EPA, is mentioned in the story Allen published in June. [The Chicago Reporter, June 1986 and July, 1986]

Linda Randle Remembers Working Closely With Obama on the Asbestos Issue. Randle, who knew Obama through his work in Altgeld, said “Barack was working with the women in Altgeld [on asbestos] and he brought some of them to talk to me, and then we put together a meeting for me to go talk to them in Altgeld.” Although the residents of Ida B. Wells and Altgeld Gardens failed to join forces on the issue, Randle and Obama continued to work together. [Conversation with Linda Randle, 2/16/07]

Chicago Reporter Article Credit Protests in Altgeld Gardens With Helping Raise Public Awareness of the Asbestos Problem in Public Housing. In addition, Allen writes in the July edition of the Chicago Reporter that the Chicago Housing Authority’s decision to remove asbestos from the Ida B. Wells Extension Homes was triggered by her story in June and “by the protests of residents at another South Side housing development, Altgeld Gardens [at] 130th Street and Langley Avenue.” [The Chicago Reporter, July 1986]

LA TIMES: Hazel Johnson’s Role Was So Prominent That It Was “Offensive” To Tell the Story of Altgeld Gardens Without Including Her

FACT: Johnson Was An Activist, Not An Organizer; CHA Action Came After Obama, Randle, and Others Organized Residents Around the Issue

Johnson Raised the Issue With Public Health Experts in “Early 1980s”; No Action Was Taken Until 1986. Johnson raised the asbestos issue with Regnal Jones, a “scientist that [she was trying to get] to study possible links between the ailments that residents reported to her and [asbestos]...Jones visited Johnson in the early 1980s recalls sitting in her kitchen as she laid out hundreds of index cards listing the illnesses throughout Altgeld.” However, no action was taken to address the asbestos in Ida B. Wells or Altgeld Gardens until 1986. [Los Angeles Times, 2/19/07; Chicago Reporter, July 1986]

Jerry Kellman: Obama Pulled Together A Variety of People That Others Could Not. Jerry Kellman, who was the basis for the character “Marty” in Dreams of my Father, was Obama’s supervisor at the Developing Communities Project. When asked about the role that Johnson played in the asbestos work at Altgeld, Kellman said, “Barack pulled together a variety of people that someone like Hazel would not have been able to do at that point. Barack’s book is very accurate.” [Conversation with Jerry Kellman, 2/7/07]

Loretta Augustine-Herron: Hazel Johnson Was An Activist, Not An Organizer. Loretta Augustine-Herron, who was the basis for the character “Angela” in Dreams of My Father, was present at the initial meeting with the Chicago Housing Authority to discuss the issue of asbestos in the Altgeld Garden apartments. When asked about the role that Johnson played in the asbestos work at Altgeld, Augustine-Herron said, “Hazel was there [for the asbestos work]...[she] might have been an activist. But she was not an organizer.” [Conversations with Loretta Augustine-Herron, 2/9/07, 2/14/07]

Augustine-Herron: Before Obama, “There Really Wasn’t Anything Happening.” Augustine-Herron said that “There was work [on the asbestos issue in Altgeld] going on before Barack got there, but before him, there wasn’t really anything happening. He really came in and started building a base and empowering people [Conversation With Loretta Augustine-Herron, 2/14/07]

Johnson And Obama Worked Together On Asbestos. “Altgeld Gardens resident Hazel Johnson, 69, worked with Obama in the Developing Communities Project on pushing the Chicago Housing Authority to remove asbestos from public housing and other issues. She remembers Obama renting a bus to take a group of residents downtown to protest at CHA headquarters. ‘He even got us coffee and doughnuts,’ she said. “And he didn’t have to do that.” [Chicago Sun Times, 10/3/04]

LA TIMES: Obama Painted Altgeld Gardens Residents As “Pathetic,” “Meek,” And “Confused”

FACT: Obama Wrote of Residents With Respect; Saw Parallels Between His Personal Story and Theirs

Obama Wrote Admiringly of Women He Worked With in Altgeld, Respected the Challenges They Faced. In Dreams of My Father, Obama wrote, “They were spirited, good-humored women [the women he worked with at Developing Communities], those three, women who—without husbands to help—somehow managed to raise sons and daughters, juggle an assortment of part-time jobs and small business schemes, and organize Girl Scout troops, fashion shows, and summer camps for the parade of children that wandered through the church every day.” [Dreams of My Father, p.167]

Obama Saw Parallels Between His Personal Story and Altgeld Resident. “Sometimes I would stop by Mary’s house just to say hello, drawn perhaps by the loneliness I sensed there, and the easy parallels between my own mother and Mary; and between myself and Mary’s daughters, such sweet and pretty girls whose lives were so much more difficult than mine had ever been, with grandparents who shunned them, black classmates who teased them, all the poison in the air.” [Dreams of My Father, p.176]

LA TIMES: Obama Exaggerated His Own Achievements, Wrote that His Group Was Called “Obama’s Army” By Resident
FACT: “Obama’s Army” Was Sarcastic Reference To Small Turnout For An Event

Obama’s Army Sarcastic Reference To Small Turnout For First Visit to Housing Authority. Despite days of organizing, the turnout for his visit to the Chicago Housing Authority was smaller than Obama expected. He wrote, “...I counted only eight heads in the yellow bus parked in front of the school. Bernadette and I stood in the parking lot trying to recruit other parents as they came to pick up their children...When Angela, Mona, and Shirley arrived to see how things were shaping up, I insisted they ride with us to lend moral support. Everyone looked depressed, everyone except Tyrone and Jewel, who were busy making faces at Mr. Lucas, the only father in the group. Dr. Collier came up beside me. ‘I guess this is it,’ I said. ‘Better than I expected...Obama’s Army,’ she said. [Dreams of My Father, p. 238]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack wows crowd in San Francisco (2007-02-20 09:00)

Check out Barack Obama’s videotaped speech at a Barbara Boxer event in San Francisco:
<http://cbs5.com/video/?id=20933@kpix.dayport.com>

Barack in Las Vegas

Las Vegas 2/18/07

Las Vegas 2/18/07

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 19, 2007

4 comments

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 19, 2007

0 comments

Las Vegas 2/18/07

Las Vegas 2/18/07

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 19, 2007

7 comments

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 19, 2007

1 comment

Las Vegas 2/18/07

Las Vegas 2/18/07

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 19, 2007

0 comments

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 19, 2007

0 comments

Las Vegas 2/18/07

Las Vegas 2/18/07

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 19, 2007

1 comment

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 19, 2007

1 comment

Las Vegas 2/18/07

Las Vegas 2/18/07

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 19, 2007

0 comments

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Feb 19, 2007

1 comment

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Virginia Gov. Tim Kaine gives Barack Obama first endorsement (2007-02-20 14:53)

Virginia Governor Tim Kaine came out early to give Senator Barack Obama the nation's first gubernatorial endorsement.

The endorsement was announced before a crowd of 3,500 people at the annual Jefferson-Jackson dinner in Richmond, a record for the city. Obama addressed the crowd and spoke to the press.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Is Barack Black, White, Christian, Muslim, Progressive, Conservative, Messiah/Superhero, Human, All-American, Feriegner, Osama, Obama? (2007-02-21 10:07)

According to host Jeffrey Katzenberg, Barack Obama garnered $1.3 million in checks at last night's Hollywood fundraiser bash.

Another bit of good news for the campaign is the endorsement of Minnesota U.S. Rep. Keith Ellison, the first Muslim member of the U.S. Congress and the first black representative from Minnesota. Ellison said he's not supporting Obama because he is black as that would be what he called "identity politics" but because Obama was a unifying agent.

Speaking of identity politics, Obama's nebulous identity may be part of his attraction. To some he is black, according to his own self-definition, but to others he is sufficiently white because of his mother's heritage. His grandparents from Kansas seemed to have imparted enough all-American charm to allow him to attract small-town America, yet his African father and the years spent in Indonesia as a youth is also attractive to immigrants and their children.

His willingness to cast himself as an "agent of change" will appeal to the messianic crowd looking for a 'new age' and superheroes. Whether he will be able to deliver the promised change is a matter of faith, but as Obama says himself he can't do it alone.

Biracial and multiracial people certainly must find Obama compelling and there are lots of them in America these days. Many multi-generational Americans were raised at least partly overseas as military dependents or because their parents worked for multinational corporations or for some other reason. Their numbers may even exceed those raised their whole lives in some small town in middle America, as some of their parents may have been.

Obama's amorphous identity makes it easy for a lot of people to find commonality with him, or at least to find something attractive about him. Like the islands of Hawai'i where he was raised he has a broad appeal to all kinds of people.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Support the Iraq War De-Escalation Act (2007-02-21 15:33)

Sign the petition to stop the Iraq War.

X

-

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Daschle endorses Obama (2007-02-21 17:51)

Barack Obama is on a roll today picking up another key endorsement when former Senate leader Tom Daschle announced his support of the candidate.

There was a flareup today between the Clinton and Obama camps over statements made by Hollywood producer David Geffen. Although Obama has pledged not to get negative it will be a challenge to avoid getting into a word war with the Clinton spin-masters. Note that Geffen is a supporter but not a member of Obama's campaign staff.

Click on the photo below for pics of the huge Los Angeles rally yesterday:

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama Honeymoon? (2007-02-22 11:13)

Funny how the media continues to talk about a Barack Obama "honeymoon" as if the press were treating the candidate with kid-gloves.

Yet, what other candidate has been taking more media heat than Obama? He has been falsely accused of attending a madrassa in Indonesia, there are continuing press reports about his smoking habit, and there are constant questions about his identity.

Obama is under some of the most intense scrutiny any candidate might face this early in the race. Which of the other candidates is attracting so many questions as to their viability for the presidency?

Maybe it's not that bad a thing though has it can help boost the candidate's name recognition and get people to find out more about the real Barack Obama. The real danger to the other candidates is that the people will actually see and hear this guy in action.

Democratic presidential hopeful U.S. Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., speaks during a town hall meeting, Wednesday, Feb. 21, 2007, in Des Moines, Iowa. AP Photo/Charlie Neibergall via Yahoo News.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

People still surging toward Barack Obama (2007-02-23 07:42)

The Illinois senator still clearly leads other candidates in two areas: the huge crowds that attend his rallies and massive internet interest and support.

Today, an estimated 16,000 people will cheer for Obama as he lands in Austin, Texas, an obviously important state for any future nominee.

The candidate will be in Cleveland, Ohio on Feb. 26 and at the AFSCME Council in Chicago on Mar. 3.

Read this article on the great enthusiasm on the ground for Obama in the important state of Iowa.

Oprah reiterates support for Obama

Megastar Oprah Winfrey said publicly she will back Barack Obama on the Ellen Degeneres' chat show on Thursday. The endorsement might help the senator cut through some of Clinton's support among women among whom Oprah is highly popular. "I'm feeling Barack," said Winfrey.

Democratic presidential hopeful U.S. Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., speaks during a town hall meeting, Wednesday, Feb. 21, 2007, in Des Moines, Iowa. AP Photo/Charlie Neibergall via Yahoo News.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Sacramento for Obama Group Meeting Video (2007-02-23 17:48)

Still need more practice on videotaping. I think the lighting was too low.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Oscars Night (2007-02-25 08:41)

Judging from a report from a pre-Oscar night Black Enterprise celebrity party, Barack Obama is doing quite favorably among black Hollywood stars and moguls, as compared maybe to his support among black politicians. Magic Johnson, though, is one powerful LA personality that appears strongly behind Hillary Clinton.

There's some people who think that Al Gore still may decide to run and that he might announce tonight some time around the Oscars ceremony.

Most insiders though doubt that Gore will run. He hasn't done the things a prudent guy like Gore would have done for a presidential campaign. His campaign accounts and infrastructure are all closed down. Many of his supporters were from the old Clinton network and the bulk are probably now solidly committed. He'll be close to two months behind the other candidates if he decides to announce now. Given his time out of the political circuit would one think he would have started earlier rather than later.

Quite a lot of early endorsements are already locked in and campaign professionals are being hired by one camp or another.

Many pollsters still drop Gore if he doesn't announce tonight. There will be a scramble for the draft Gore supporters, just as there is now for Tom Vilsack's backers. Personally I think most of the folks from both camps will head either toward Obama or Edwards.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack's Favorable Unfavorable Ratings (2007-02-26 19:34)

Although it's still way too early to figure out who's going to win the primaries using polls, there is one very good thing that Obama supporters can glean from the information they provide.

Most polls show that Barack Obama has the lowest unfavorable ratings among the major candidates. This is probably the best indication that his race will not play that big of a factor. The logic is that most people who would not vote for a person who is black would have an unfavorable attitude toward Obama in a presidential poll.

A weaker point in polls is found in that Obama's supporters still include lots of weak to moderate supporters. However, these polls almost always survey highly-likely voters. One thing that can be seen quite clearly is that the Barack Obama campaign is attracting many people who would not qualify as highly-likely voters.

If these people turn out on election day, then the polls probably won't give an accurate count.

X

- X

Announcement

Watch Senator Obama make his presidential announcement to 15,000+ people in Springfield, IL.

- X

Concord, NH

Get the word on the street from New Hampshire natives about Barack Obama.

• X

Obama in Ames, Iowa

See footage from Ames on Senator Obama's first swing through Iowa.

X

X X X X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama looks for funds as reporting deadline nears (2007-02-26 19:47)

The Obama campaign had a good fundraising day in Ohio raking in possibly as much as $500,000 in Cincinnati and more than $100,000 in Columbus. A smaller amount was raised at a downtown Cleveland event and at least $75,000 in Kentucky. The candidate will try to make as much money as possible before the end of March to show that he is not lightweight in the fundraising department.

One could say that he should have at least $10 million to look viable although others will insist he needs at least $20 million or even $40 million. One doesn't know where these higher figures come from as Howard Dean had raised only about $25 million by the end of September in the last Democratic primary.

Steve Westly the ex-Ebay founder and former state controller is arranging a big $1,000 a plate San Francisco Bay Area dinner for Obama in March. There are similar big events scheduled in New York and elsewhere.

The big factor though in Obama's campaign that doesn't show up in campaign financial reports is his huge fan base that no other candidate comes close to approaching. If these supporters volunteer work hours that's as good as money as long as the energy is focused on winning over other supporters.

X

Democratic presidential contender Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., speaks at a rally Monday, Feb. 26, 2007, at Cuyahoga Community College, in Highland Hills, Ohio. AP Photo/Tony Dejak via Yahoo News.

X X X X X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Buying name recognition (2007-02-27 12:53)

Republican presidential candidate Mitt Romney started buying tv ads last week some 11 months before the primary election begins.

He's trying to buy name recognition to boost his ratings in the polls and make him look more viable as a candidate. Romney is well-funded. He made $6.5 million in one night in January. However, the most recent Zogby poll didn't indicate much movement in Romney's popularity. He still ranks far behind Giuliani and McCain.

Some experts think it will take between $10 to $20 million to get Romney on a level field with the leaders but how long will it last?

Even with very good funding, it's probably better to rely on free media coverage this early in the race.

You could think of the campaign at this stage as similar to training and preseason games in professional sports. The regular season would begin about two months before the election. The playoffs about two weeks before the elections, and the league championships a week prior.

Game time comes those last three or four days including election day.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

"The Audacity of Hope" continues to roll (2007-02-27 19:35)

The Audacity of Hope is number one for non-fiction on the New York Times best-seller list.

That's a lot of "earned media" for the candidate. Earned media is the insider way of referring to free media coverage, although it usually means news coverage.

On the campaign trail, Obama has had to deal with some nasty weather but his message seems to be hitting home, especially his opposition to the Iraq War.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama interview on NPR (2007-02-28 10:45)

Listen to Barack Obama's interview on National Public Radio:

Obama to Attend Selma March Anniversary

 by Steve Inskeep

The transcript can be found here:

<http://www.npr.org/templates/story/story.php?storyId=7630250>

Hear Obama on Campaign Fundraising Efforts

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

1.3 March

More early support for Obama (2007-03-01 10:30)

Rep. Adam Smith became the first representative from Washington state to endorse Sen. Barack Obama during a congressional breakfast held by 14 House members Wednesday.

The senator announced an idea to change the funding scheme for homeland security. The new plan would "ensure the funding is allocated based on the threats states face, not politics."

Candy and note cards sit on a staffers desk in the Obama for President headquarters, Friday, Feb. 16, 2007, in Des Moines, Iowa. AP Photo/Charlie Neibergall via Yahoo News.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Polls suggest Obama best poised to beat Republicans (2007-03-01 10:47)

Two new polls indicate Barack Obama is the best Democrat to challenge the Republican hopefuls.

The latest Zogby poll showed that while Clinton fell behind both Giuliani and McCain in a head-to-head match, Obama beat both Republican bets.

Giuliani 47 %, Clinton 40 %

Giuliani 40 %, Obama 46 %

Giuliani 46 %, Edwards 40 %

McCain 47 %, Clinton 39 %

McCain 40 %, Obama 44 %

McCain 47 %, Edwards 38 %

Romney 35 %, Clinton 45 %

Romney 29 %, Obama 51 %

Romney 32 %, Edwards 47 %

Today a Times poll showed Hillary beaten by both Giuliani and McCain. Obama also trails Giuliani but beats McCain.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Wexler endorses Obama (2007-03-01 16:44)

Sen. Barack Obama snagged another important endorsement today as Robert Wexler became the first member of the Florida Democratic congressional delegation to endorse Obama.

Wexler also agreed to become Obama's Florida state co-chair.

"I have never been as excited about a candidate for president as I am about Barack Obama," said a statement released by Wexler's office.

"I am inspired by his message of authenticity, integrity and bringing Americans together. Barack had the foresight to oppose the Iraq War from the beginning, and as president he will bring our troops home. I have spoken with Barack to discuss the dangers facing our ally Israel, and I am convinced there will be no stronger supporter of Israel than President Obama." Wexler is Jewish and a strong Israel supporter and his endorsement can help with the Jewish vote and associated big-money fundraisers (bundlers).

"Billary" raises a million a week

In response to Barack Obama's big Hollywood fundraiser, Bill Clinton sent a mass email calling on his wife's supporters to raise a million in one week on the Clinton website. A big fundraising "thermometer" was placed on the frontpage and Billary (Bill + Hillary) apparently accomplished their goal.

John Edwards is also using the same technique on his site. The Obama campaign may want to keep their online fundraising progress secret until the April 15 disclosure deadline has they don't allow complete tracking of online donations.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack to appear on network morning shows Mar. 2 (2007-03-01 16:46)

Senator Obama will appear on the three network morning shows tomorrow, possibly to discuss his new plan on homeland security as well as the campaign.

- Mar. 2 | Barack on The Today Show NBC
- Mar. 2 | Barack on Good Morning America ABC

- Mar. 2 | Barack on the Early Show CBS

Democratic Presidential hopeful Sen. Barack Obama gestures during a news conference on Capitol Hill in Washington, Thursday, March 1, 2007 to discuss a bill to protect injured soldiers returning from war. AP Photo/Susan Walsh via Yahoo News.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Team Obama holds conference call with colleges (2007-03-02 09:13)

Obama campaign representative Bill Burton held a 15 minute conference call with 25 college newspapers telling them that the universities would play an important role in the Obama campaign.

"If you look at his schedule, he's spent a lot of time on college campuses," Burton said during the call. "This is a different kind of election."

The candidate's massive support among young voters has given him stronger online support than even Howard Dean enjoyed. Dean was able to raise lots of money online where the average donation over the primary was about $80.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Squaring off in Selma (2007-03-04 08:52)

Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama will fight for the black vote and for free media coverage during the jubilee commemoration of the voting rights march on Selma.

Some polls are showing that Obama now leads Clinton among African American voters, one of the strongest blocs in any Democratic presidential primary particularly because of their strength in southern States.

This will be the first time the two candidates have met on the campaign trail.

[Image from USDOJ]

Civil rights marchers cross the Alabama river on the Edmund Pettus Bridge at Selma March 21, 1965, with Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. at the lead at the start of a five day, 50-mile march to the State Capitol of Montgomery for voter registration rights for blacks. AP Photo/File via Yahoo News.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama thrills Selma crowds (2007-03-04 13:16)

Calling on what he calls the "Joshua Generation" to "finish the journey," Senator Barack Obama spoke to a massive crowd at Selma's Brown Chapel AME Church.

Obama compared the Selma march to Moses' journey through the desert only to be told he could not enter the "Promised Land." Describing the younger generation as the "Joshua Generation," he asked them to put on the struggle of the older civil rights fighters.

X

Democratic presidential candidate Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., speaks at the Martin and Coretta King Beloved Community Unity Breakfast, Sunday March 4, 2007 in Selma, Ala. (AP Photo/Rob Carr)

If you like voting in online polls visit the following link:

<http://abcnews.go.com/>

Find under "Be Seen, Be Heard," the first selection to vote for president if the election were held today (second column below the fold).

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Selma Speech (2007-03-04 16:45)

Read the full transcript of Barack Obama's speech in Selma, Alabama.

"Keep in your heart the prayer of that journey, the prayer that God gave to Joshua. Be strong and have courage in the face of injustice. Be strong and have courage in the face of prejudice and hatred, in the face of joblessness and helplessness and hopelessness. Be strong and have courage, brothers and sisters, those who are gathered here today, in the face of our doubts and fears, in the face of skepticism, in the face of cynicism, in the face of a mighty river. Be strong and have courage and let us cross over that Promised Land together."

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-03-10 06:36:00)

In his speech in Selma, Obama said that he was a product of the march in Selma that his parents were involved in. Doesn't he know that his birthday is 5 years prior to that march in Selma. WOW!? Maybe someone should bring that to his attention.

Obama visits Boston (2007-03-06 07:29)

Senator Barack Obama visited fundraisers in Boston as his campaign appears to be gaining momentum.

Boston bundlers have already raised at least $500,00 for the campaign and they are planning a big event next month at Boston University's Agganis Arena.

Even this fundraiser will recognize the importance though of small donors to the Obama campaign which is propelled by broad grassroots support.

Students will be asked to contribute $23, young professionals $230, and major donors $2,300, the maximum.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Boston (2007-03-27 07:11:00)

For tickets to the April 20th event in Boston for Barack Obama click the link below.

<https://donate.barackobama.com/page/contribute/northeast420>

Hope to see you there!

Donor matching campaign on barackobama.com (2007-03-06 14:17)

The new fundraising campaign on barackobama.com is shown below.

The idea is for supporters to match another potential donor's donation.

The campaign is obviously a push to get more funds so they look good when campaign financing reports are publicly released in mid-April covering contributions up to the end of March.

Recognizing that many younger supporters may not have credit cards, the campaign has a mailing address for check contributions as long as you're at least 16 years old and not a political action committee or lobbyist.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Momentum continues to build for Obama campaign (2007-03-07 17:17)

Barack Obama bounced back to a statistical tie with Hillary Clinton in a New Hampshire poll. Overall, the senator has been surging in polls although again it's a bit early. There could be wild swings that occur between now and election time.

However, Obama really swung the African American vote around by more than 50 percentage points.

Edwards site has temporary surge

Probably, due to the Ann Coulter remarks, former Senator John Edwards' website temporarily shot up past Obama's this week. However, today barackobama.com seems to have regained the top position that it has held since launching the social networking features.

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Support for Obama from both sides of the river (2007-03-09 12:37)

On the one hand, Senator Barack Obama was endorsed by Philip W. Johnston, the Massachusetts Democratic Party chairman who served in the Clinton administration and called Obama "the future of the party."

On the other, Louis Farrakhan, long-time head of the Nation of Islam (NOI), voiced his admiration of the candidate. Farrakhan's support won't likely help with mainstream voters, but obviously it could influence millions of members of the Nation of Islam. It might also have an impact on mainstream black voters. The NOI has had success in reaching out to the black mainstream as shown by the success of the "Million Man March."

"I like him very much. I like him, he has a fresh approach," Farrakhan said. "And I'm fearful, because there's a structure in our government that no matter who sits in the seat of power, there are forces that one has to contend with if one is able to attract the masses of their votes. Barack Obama is doing quite well."

"If avoiding me would help him to become president, I'd be glad to stay in the background, because of the taint that's on the minister," he said.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack comes to Oakland (2007-03-09 21:06)

Barack Obama will visit Oakland on Mar. 17 to rally support for a California victory. With the primary moved forward to early February next year the state will play a major role in choosing the eventual nominee.

Northern California organizers hope to show that they do things big here also and will aim at the 20,000 mark set by the Austin rally.

When: Saturday March 17 – Gates open at 3:00 PM

Where: Oakland City Hall Plaza, One Frank Ogawa Plaza, Oakland, California

How: The event is free and open to the public. Please RSVP below to obtain your ticket.

<http://my.barackobama.com/page/s/oakland0317>

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Northern California unites for Barack Obama (video) (2007-03-11 07:31)

Northern California Unites Video

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=4sOvYAfKUxg>

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack makes big splash in NYC (2007-03-12 08:15)

Presidential candidate Barack Obama landed in Hillary Clinton country and hit the jackpot in New York City, his new El Dorado, where stars, students and other Obama fans opened up their pocketbooks.

Many donors for sure are playing it safe and supporting both hometown girl Hillary and Obama at the same time. But the Illinois senator was still able to leave the city with an estimated cool million in cash.

And interesting comment from conservative publisher Joe McQuaid of the influential Union Leader in New Hampshire about who's leading among Democrats in that state:

”

Q: Who's leading the Democrats right now in the polls in New Hampshire?

A: I don't keep track of polls. I think it's a crock. My editors and some of the reporters love them and keep putting them in the paper. I keep telling them, "Don't play 'em up because right now it's still a name-recognition thing." If I had to guess who's leading in the New Hampshire polls among the Democrats, I would guess Barack Obama would be on top.”

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Hope. Action. Change. (2007-03-12 10:59)

The Obama team is launching its first major community organizing campaign:

X

The effort is well-supported with faq and a full-packet of supporting materials. The event will include a live streaming video of the senator visiting a house party in Iowa, a conference call and a free campaign DVD mailed to each house party across the nation.

Oakland event revving up

To sign up for Barack's visit to Oakland this Saturday, go to:

<http://my.barackobama.com/page/s/oakland0317>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

O'Bama linked to Ireland (2007-03-12 16:06)

Ancestry.com on Obama's Irish ancestry: http://www.nypress.com/blogx/display_blog.cfm?bid=5549169

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

500 Volunteers (2007-03-13 11:28)

When a call was given to help organize the Barack Obama visit to Oakland on Mar. 17 with two days notice, some 500 people showed up on a Sunday to volunteer. A powerful testimony to the candidate's drawing power.

Volunteers meet in the Bay Area to help with the Oakland rally for Barack Obama on Mar. 17 at the city hall.

RSVP to attend the Oakland rally at:

<http://my.barackobama.com/page/s/oakland0317>

When: Saturday March 17 – Gates open at 3:00 PM

Where: Oakland City Hall Plaza, One Frank Ogawa Plaza, Oakland, California

How: The event is free and open to the public

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack's Bay Area Street Team (2007-03-14 09:07)

Barack's Bay Area Street Team

(Organizing)

We need to let the people of San Francisco and the Bay Area know about Saturday's big event in downtown Oakland—and you are the key.

On the Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday before the event we will be handing out flyers and putting up posters throughout the Bay Area.

Can you help for a couple of hours?

We will give you a route, and hand out supplies from our downtown Oakland HQ. We are staging at 10 am, 1 pm, and 530 pm—please RSVP and let us know when you'll be by!

We use the buddy system—bring a friend, or we can introduce you to one. There will be granola bars, water and good times! Hope to see you there.

Questions? Call Geoffrey at the Obama hotline! 510-444-4710, ext 306.

Time: Wednesday, March 14 at 10:00 AM

Duration:

Host: Geoffrey Borshof

Contact Phone: 510-444-4710

Location:

1904 Franklin Street, Floor 6 (Oakland, CA) 1904 Franklin Street, Floor 6
Oakland, CA 94612

View Map:

- Google Maps
- MapQuest
- Yahoo! Maps

Directions: We are on the corner of 19th and Franklin Street, only one block away from the 19th Street Oakland BART Station.

RSVP at: <http://my.barackobama.com/page/event/detail/4jr5l>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Oakland rally nears (2007-03-15 14:14)

Some encouraging new polls show that Barack Obama continues to surge forward sharply cutting the "lead" of Hillary Clinton in both the Time and Harris polls. The CNN poll, on the other hand, showed no significant change. Again, these polls are rather useless in showing who will win the primary but are more an indicator of the mood now when people are not very focused on the election.

The Time poll also showed Barack leading Giuliani while the latter edges Clinton. However statistically, both matches up were virtual ties, for example, Obama lead Giuliani by only one point.

Help with signs for Oakland rally

If you can help out this evening (Thursday) with rally signs for Barack's Oakland visit on Saturday, sign up at:
<http://my.barackobama.com/page/event/detail/4jv44>

OFFICIAL OBAMA RALLY SIGN-MAKING PARTY

(Organizing)

Join Bay Area supporters on Thursday afternoon in downtown San Francisco to make signs for the upcoming rally. Smile for the TV cameras and help spread the word!!

Please, come as close to 4:30 as possible, but you are MORE than welcome to join us anytime until 8:00 PM.

Time: Thursday, March 15 at 4:30 PM

Duration: 1 hour

Host: Michael Moffo

Location:

The Hive Ad Agency (San Francisco, CA) 639 Front Street, 1st Floor
San Francisco, CA 94111

View Map:

- Google Maps
- MapQuest
- Yahoo! Maps

Directions: Closest Intersection: Front Street and Pacific Avenue Closest BART Station: The Embarcadero Station

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Oakland rally nears (2007-03-15 14:14)

Some encouraging new polls show that Barack Obama continues to surge forward sharply cutting the "lead" of Hillary Clinton in both the Time and Harris polls. The CNN poll, on the other hand, showed no significant change. Again, these polls are rather useless in showing who will win the primary but are more an indicator of the mood now when people are not very focused on the election.

The Time poll also showed Barack leading Giuliani while the latter edges Clinton. However statistically, both matches up were virtual ties, for example, Obama lead Giuliani by only one point.

Help with signs for Oakland rally

If you can help out this evening (Thursday) with rally signs for Barack's Oakland visit on Saturday, sign up at:
<http://my.barackobama.com/page/event/detail/4jv44>

OFFICIAL OBAMA RALLY SIGN-MAKING PARTY

(Organizing)

Join Bay Area supporters on Thursday afternoon in downtown San Francisco to make signs for the upcoming rally. Smile for the TV cameras and help spread the word!!

Please, come as close to 4:30 as possible, but you are MORE than welcome to join us anytime until 8:00 PM.

Time: Thursday, March 15 at 4:30 PM

Duration: 1 hour

Host: Michael Moffo

Location:

The Hive Ad Agency (San Francisco, CA) 639 Front Street, 1st Floor
San Francisco, CA 94111

View Map:

- Google Maps
- MapQuest
- Yahoo! Maps

Directions: Closest Intersection: Front Street and Pacific Avenue Closest BART Station: The Embarcadero Station

Best hope for change (2007-03-16 10:16)

Barack Obama's rally is a day away and there is a nice article "All Eyes are on Obama in Oakland's melting pot" at the Inside the Bay Area website.

There's also an interesting article in the San Jose Mercury News on how Barack Obama is defying "racial expectations." An example of how Obama is defying such expectations might be found in this opinion piece from thenorthwest-ern.com based on Oshkosh, Wisconsin: Obama offers best hope for change.

From barackobama.com:

Barack's Bay Area Street Team (Organizing)

We need to let the people of San Francisco and the Bay Area know about Saturday's big event in downtown Oakland—and you are the key.

On the Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday before the event we will be handing out flyers and putting up posters throughout the Bay Area.

Can you help for a couple of hours?

We will give you a route, and hand out supplies from our downtown Oakland HQ. We are staging at 8:30 (Rush Hour) 10 am, 1 pm, and 5:30 pm—please RSVP and let us know when you'll be by!

We use the buddy system—bring a friend, or we can introduce you to one. There will be granola bars, water and good times! Hope to see you there.

Questions? Call Geoffrey at the Obama hotline! 510-444-4710, ext 306.

Time: Friday, March 16 at 10:00 AM

Duration: 1 hour

Host: Geoffrey Borshof

Location:

1904 Franklin Street, Floor 6 (Oakland, CA) 1904 Franklin Street, Floor 6
Oakland, CA 94612

View Map:

- Google Maps
- MapQuest
- Yahoo! Maps

Directions: We are on the corner of 19th and Franklin Street, only one block away from the 19th Street Oakland BART Station.

RSVP at: <http://my.barackobama.com/page/event/detail/4jr5z>

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Oakland loves Obama (2007-03-18 09:32)

A crowd estimated at 12,000 by campaign staff crowded into the Oakland city hall plaza to hear a rousing speech by Barack Obama on Saturday.

It was a rousing testament to his drawing power to see mostly everyday people coming in the thousands this early before the election. Most political rallies are populated by political aides, hacks, workers, etc. on the "advice" of their boss or by party diehards. This was the real deal.

Slide show and audio

<http://www.mercurynewsphoto.com/2007/03/18/obama-rally/>

X

sfgate.com photo

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama as "Neo" or "Magic Negro?" (2007-03-19 09:35)

A fascinating article appeared in the New York Times exploring Barack Obama's growing up in Hawai'i and his angst over being the only black student at the prestigious Punahou School.

Tonight, Larry King, who just recovered from surgery, will interview Obama on CNN. I hope he digs more into the candidate's background and youth.

An off-the-mark piece in the Los Angeles Times asks whether Barack is the sociological "Magic Negro" a proposed archetype of non-threatening, non-"Mandingo" African who helps absolve the progressive white person's guilt feelings over slavery and segregation.

While I can't deny that some of this may be going on, I think rather that many see Obama as representing America's future. A real future where interracial "miscegenation" and multi-culturalism will be more prevalent than they are even today.

Such a clashing and blending of cultures has already existed in places like Hawai'i where Obama grew up. He has inherited a unique ability as a negotiator between races, cultures, ideologies, etc. that is readily apparent in his every action.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

prem (2007-03-19 19:26:00)

Here's why Obama would make a great President. .. check out this debate over Obama.. I am all for him.. lets support him

From 1984 to the Iraq War Timeline (2007-03-20 10:12)

Barack Obama did a fine job on Larry King last night. As Hillary Clinton and John McCain declined to show up, Barack was the star of the show.

One thing Larry brought up is the remake of a "1986" Apple ad recast as a pro-Obama video. This video is getting lots of playtime over at YouTube.com.

Click here for 1984 video.

Obama said his campaign did not know who created the video. The type of overlays require sophisticated equipment that personal computers and even most movie software does not have.

barackobama.com has new Iraq War timeline

The Obama campaign site now has a new timeline showing Barack's opposition to the war since 2002. The campaign is also asking for video, letters to the editor, and other support for the senator's de-escalation plan.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2009-12-13 13:09:33)
yoo.. informative

(2007-03-21 09:00)

Democracy for America (DFA) is having a straw poll that they will use to select their endorsement for next year's Democratic primary.

DFA is run by the old Deaniac group and has cells throughout the nation. The endorsement would likely muster significant support for a candidate. All Barack supporters should head on down to the DFA site and vote for Obama.

Campaigns clash over Barack's anti-war stance

Consultants from the Hillary and Barack campaigns collided on tv over Barack Obama's consistent position against the Iraq War. The Clinton camp used some quotes in which Obama admitted he did not have all the information available to congressional legislators in 2002. However, that apparently is a non-issue. No one is suggesting that the legislators were privy to any substantive information different than that presented to the public as the case for going to war.

Indeed, John Edwards, John Kerry and others have admitted that they were wrong in approving the war based on the evidence they had at the time.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Video-maker unveiled (2007-03-21 20:55)

Arianna Huffington has managed to smoke out the maker of the "1984" anti-Hillary video.

Phillip de Vellis, an employee of Blue State Digital, admitted to creating the popular YouTube.com spoof.

Blue State Digital handles the techical side of Obama's website and one of the founders of the company is on leave while managing the new media division of the Obama campaign. However, de Vellis, who resigned from his job, stated that he made the video on his own and that neither his company or the Obama campaign knew anything about it.

An official Obama response also denied any knowledge of the making of the video. And the head of Blue State Digital released the following statement:

Our Statement On The 1984 Video

Statement from Thomas Gensemer, Managing Director, Blue State Digital

This afternoon, an employee at our firm, Phillip de Vellis, received a call from Arianna Huffington of "The Huffington Post" regarding the "1984" video currently circulating online. Initially, de Vellis refused to respond to her requests. He has since acknowledged to Blue State Digital that he was the creator of the video.

Pursuant to company policy regarding outside political work or commentary on behalf of our clients or otherwise, Mr. de Vellis has been terminated from Blue State Digital effective immediately.

Blue State Digital is under contract with the Obama Campaign for technology pursuits including software development and hosting. Additionally, one of our founding partners is on leave from the company to work directly for the campaign at headquarters.

However, Blue State Digital is not currently engaged in any relationship with the Obama Campaign for creative or non-technical services.

Mr. de Vellis created this video on his own time. It was done without the knowledge of management, and was in no way tied to his work at the firm or our formal engagement [on technology pursuits] with the Obama campaign.

I have spoken with David Plouffe, Sen. Obama's campaign manager, to inform him of this action and am appreciative of his understanding and ongoing support of our work.

We wish Mr. de Vellis well in his future endeavors.

http://www.bluestatedigital.com/2007/03/on_the_1984_video.html

X
X
X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

SFO's rapid rise (2007-03-22 10:27)

I've prepared some documentation on the rapid organizing success of Sacramento for Obama (SFO), which has been able to produce its own website, t-shirts, media coverage, newsletter, etc. in only a few weeks. The file is in pdf format:

Documentation of Sacramento for Obama

Some observations on the success of SFO:

Enthusiasm breeds enthusiasm. Get motivated and others will share your motivation and then the sparks fly.

People like to come to fun campaign events. There will be a time for grueling-type campaigning particularly in the last couple of weeks before voting starts in your area, but for now all campaigning should be fun while still being productive.

The media is interested in Barack Obama, so make every effort to contact them and cultivate relationships with them. Broadcast your group and events widely. Use local media, bulletin boards, craigslist, forums, meetings, calendars of events, etc. to publicize your stuff. Hold your meetings in public places rather than private homes. Wear your Obama t-shirts and campaign gear at these public meetings and events.

Constantly engage and update your group, and stay active. Staying active, keeps people engaged and hones your performance.

Yahoo Answers

Barack Obama has posted a question on Yahoo! Answers:

"How Can We Engage More People In the Democratic Process?".
Click here to answer.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obamas send message to Edwards family (2007-03-22 13:04)

John and Elizabeth Edwards today announced that Elizabeth was still positive for cancer although a slow-growing type without symptoms.

Barack and Michelle Obama sent a message in response to the news which can be found by clicking the image link below:

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Quarterly fundraising deadline approaches, Obama pastor rips NY Times (2007-03-23 07:58)

Barack Obama is rallying in Las Vegas today and will attend a forum on healthcare with other candidates in that city on Saturday.

On Sunday, the candidate will attend fundraisers in West Palm Beach as all candidates rush to fill their coffers before the March 31 fundraising deadline. Obama wants to show a sizeable war-chest, when campaign finance reports are made public in April.

Obama will at the Atlanta Hyatt on Monday where "several thousand" people are expected to dish out $500 to $2,300 a plate for the candidate. He will return to Atlanta at a later date for a free public rally.

Obama's Pastor fires back at NY Times

Here's the letter from Reverend Jeremiah A. Wright, Jr. to Jodi Kantor of The New York Times:

March 11, 2007
Jodi Kantor

The New York Times
9 West 43rd Street
New York,
New York 10036-3959

Dear Jodi:

Thank you for engaging in one of the biggest misrepresentations of the truth I have ever seen in sixty-five years. You sat and shared with me for two hours. You told me you were doing a "Spiritual Biography" of Senator Barack Obama. For two hours, I shared with you how I thought he was the most principled individual in public service that I have ever met.

For two hours, I talked with you about how idealistic he was. For two hours I shared with you what a genuine human being he was. I told you how incredible he was as a man who was an African American in public service, and as a man who refused to announce his candidacy for President until Carol Moseley Braun indicated one way or the other whether or not she was going to run. I told you what a dreamer he was. I told you how idealistic he was. We talked about how refreshing it would be for someone who knew about Islam to be in the Oval Office. Your own question to me was, Didn't I think it would be incredible to have somebody in the Oval Office who not only knew about Muslims, but had living and breathing Muslims in his own family?

I told you how important it would be to have a man who not only knew the difference between Shiites and Sunnis prior to 9/11/01 in the Oval Office, but also how important it would be to have a man who knew what Sufism was; a man who understood that there were different branches of Judaism; a man who knew the difference between Hasidic Jews, Orthodox Jews, Conservative Jews and Reformed Jews; and a man who was a devout Christian, but who did not prejudice others because they believed something other than what he believed.

I talked about how rare it was to meet a man whose Christianity was not just "in word only."

I talked about Barack being a person who lived his faith and did not argue his faith. I talked about Barack as a person who did not draw doctrinal lines in the sand nor consign other people to hell if they did not believe what he believed.

Out of a two-hour conversation with you about Barack's spiritual journey and my protesting to you that I had not shaped him nor formed him, that I had not mentored him or made him the man he was, even though I would love to take that credit, you did not print any of that. When I told you, using one of your own Jewish stories from the Hebrew Bible as to how God asked Moses, "What is that in your hand?," that Barack was like that when I met him. Barack had it "in his hand." Barack had in his grasp a uniqueness in terms of his spiritual development that one is hard put to find in the 21st century, and you did not print that.

As I was just starting to say a moment ago, Jodi, out of two hours of conversation I spent approximately five to seven minutes on...

... Barack's taking advice from one of his trusted campaign people and deeming it unwise to make me the media spotlight on the day of his announcing his candidacy for the Presidency and what do you print?

You and your editor proceeded to present to the general public a snippet, a printed "sound byte" and a titillating and tantalizing article about his disinviting me to the Invocation on the day of his announcing his candidacy.

I have never been exposed to that kind of duplicitous behavior before, and I want to write you publicly to let you know that I do not approve of it and will not be party to any further smearing of the name, the reputation, the integrity or the character of perhaps this nation's first (and maybe even only) honest candidate offering himself for public service as the person to occupy the Oval Office.

Your editor is a sensationalist. For you to even mention that makes me doubt your credibility, and I am looking forward to see how you are going to butcher what else I had to say concerning Senator Obama's "Spiritual Biography."

Our Conference Minister, the Reverend Jane Fisler Hoffman, a white woman who belongs to a Black church that Hannity of "Hannity and Colmes" is trying to trash, set the record straight for you in terms of who I am and in terms of who we are as the church to which Barack has belonged for over twenty years.

The president of our denomination, the Reverend John Thomas, has offered to try to help you clarify in your confused head what Trinity Church is even though you spent the entire weekend with us setting me up to interview me for what turned out to be a smear of the Senator; and yet The New York Times continues to roll on making the truth what it wants to be the truth.

I do not remember reading in your article that Barack had apologized for listening to that bad information and bad advice. Did I miss it? Or did your editor cut it out? Either way, you do not have to worry about hearing anything else from me for you to edit or "spin" because you are more interested in journalism than in truth.

Forgive me for having a momentary lapse. I forgot that The New York Times was leading the bandwagon in trumpeting why it is we should have gone into an illegal war. The New York Times became George Bush and the Republican Party's national "blog." The New York Times played a role in the outing of Valerie Plame. I do not know why I thought The New York Times had actually repented and was going to exhibit a different kind of behavior. Maybe it was my faith in the Jewish Holy Day of Roshashana. Maybe it was my being caught up in the euphoria of the Season of Lent; but whatever it is or was, I was sadly mistaken. There is no repentance on the part of The New York Times. There is no integrity when it comes to The Times. You should do well with that paper, Jodi. You looked me straight in my face and told me a lie!

Sincerely and respectfully yours,
Reverend Jeremiah A. Wright, Jr. ,
Senior Pastor
Trinity United Church of Christ

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Barack wins DFA Poll, handicappers picking Obama and Giuliani (2007-03-23 11:01)

Candidate Barack Obama won the Dean-inspired Democracy for America poll with 28 percent of the vote compared to John Edwards 25 percent.

Barack Obama 28.1 %

John Edwards 24.6 %

Other 12.4 %

Dennis Kucinich 10.3 %

Hillary Clinton 8.7 %

Bill Richardson 7.6 %
Undecided 4.9 %
Joseph Biden 1.9 %
Christopher Dodd 0.5 %
Mike Gravel 0.3 %

Handicappers pick Obama and Giuliani

The Iowa Electronic Markets is a highly successful system that allows people to buy contracts on candidates or political parties as one would on a financial market, or as one would place bets on a sporting event.

The difference between this and a poll, is while the latter is basically a snapshot of the voting public's mood at a specific time, the electronic markets is based on speculations by "investors" on the eventual outcome.

The investors can be experts or anybody else interested in the race.

Here are the results at the time this blog was posted:

http://iemweb.biz.uiowa.edu/quotes/Nomination08_quotes.html

CLIN_NOM = Clinton Nomination, and so on.

Market Quotes: DConv08_VS
2008 Democratic Convention Market.

Quotes current as of 13:00:04 CST, Friday, March 23, 2007.

Symbol Bid Ask Last Low High Average

CLIN_NOM 0.395 0.417 0.395 0.395 0.400 0.398
EDWA_NOM 0.054 0.079 0.055 0.055 0.055 0.055
OBAM_NOM 0.378 0.425 0.410 0.410 0.411 0.410
DROF_NOM 0.137 0.145 0.140 0.136 0.140 0.137
| Prospectus | Price History | Graph |

Market Quotes: RConv08_WTA
2008 Republican Convention Market.

Quotes current as of 13:00:04 CST, Friday, March 23, 2007. Symbol Bid Ask Last Low High Average

GIUL_NOM 0.317 0.340 0.319 0.318 0.346 0.321
MCCA_NOM 0.181 0.199 0.180 0.180 0.180 0.180
ROMN_NOM 0.206 0.211 0.206 0.206 0.208 0.206
RROF_NOM 0.270 0.395 0.340 0.295 0.340 0.319
| Prospectus | Price History | Graph |

To find information on the accuracy of the Iowa Electronic Markets in past elections, read the pdf file below:

http://www.biz.uiowa.edu/iem/archive/BFNR_2000.pdf

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More into Obama's youth (2007-03-24 08:44)

Barack Obama's childhood and teenage years continues to fascinate people, and is the subject of intense research by journalists, friends and foes.

The latest exploration of this subject: The not-so-simple story of Barack Obama's youth in the Chicago Tribune, delves into Obama's possible fuzzy memories of the past and has many new pictures in the accompanying slide show.

Photos from the Chicago Tribune

X

Obama with mother Ann and grandfather Stanley. His half-sister Maya can be seen between Obama and his grandfather.

X

Obama's half-sister Maya Soetoro-Ng teaching class at the Univ. of Hawai'i.

X

Obama is hugged by his grandmother Madelyn during high school graduation ceremonies. His grandfather is at right.

X

Ann Dunham with her second husband, Lolo Soetoro, Maya and Barack.

X

Barack Obama Sr. during his only visit to his son while growing up in Hawai'i.

X

Barack with sister Maya during high school graduation.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Hillary targets MySpace (2007-03-24 19:55)

From the looks of her website, Hillary Clinton might be focusing on the slightly older MySpace crowd while conceding the younger Facebook and YouTube sites to Barack Obama.

The voting profile of MySpace users probably looks better and she's not so far behind on that site although Barack's MySpace page still leads her in friends by more than 10 to 1.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

PJ COBLE (2008-01-29 16:13:00)

OBAMA IS A BEAUTIFUL MAN WITH A BEAUTIFUL HERITAGE. HE IS INTELLIGENT, POLITICALLY SAVY, STRONG IN CHARACTER, AND MORALS, DECENT AND A VERY CAPABLE LEADER. IT IS JUST ASHAME THAT HIS MOTHER IS NOT ALIVE TO SEE THE WONDERFUL LEGACY THAT SHE LEFT. BARRAK OBAMA FOR PRESIDENT !!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

Grassroots support vs. Machine money (2007-03-25 08:49)

Barack Obama refuses to accept funds from lobbyists and political action committees – two traditionally strong political contributors. The decision was part of Obama's campaign to bring a new politic to Washington.

Instead, Obama depends on grassroots action – volunteer time and work – to offset the loss in hard cash. To be sure, Barack has his share of wealthy donors, but these are mostly considered "outsiders." More likely most of Obama's funds will consist of a large number of relatively small donations similar to the pattern seen in the Howard Dean campaign.

For the Obama campaign, one of the big challenges will be to leverage the huge popular support of their candidate in ways other than simple cash donations. Many of the senator's supporters are too young to offer much monetary help, but they can work if provided enough bottled water.

Organizing the throngs of Obamaites is now mostly a do-it-yourself thing and will remain so until later in the campaign when the voters are thinking about their choices.

X at official barackobama.com website

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Fund not sun for Obama in South Florida (2007-03-25 16:57)

Candidate Barack Obama lamented his staff's refusal to allow him a round of golf or some beach time in South Florida during his fundraising visit there Sunday.

"Every time I come to Florida, I meet wonderful people and have a wonderful time, and it's always too short," he said. "I keep on thinking that I should be able to bring my golf clubs down and my swimming trunks and somehow my staff doesn't let me do that."

Obama is expected to attend a series of fundraising events in South Florida including some in swank private homes.

Barack leads Thompson who leads Hillary

A Rasmussen Reports telephone survey shows that potential Republican candidate Fred Thompson slightly ahead of Hillary Clinton by 44 to 43 percent (statistical tie).

However, Barack Obama clearly leads Thompson by 49 to 37 percent.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Big online support, but how effective? (2007-03-26 08:10)

Skeptics of Barack Obama's online popularity ask repeatedly whether the phenomenon will translate into real world votes.

It's one thing, they say, to get people to add the senator as a friend on MySpace and another to generate votes for a candidate.

To Barack's credit, not only can he draw the crowds online but he gets them to show up at his live events. Any politically-savvy person will tell you that's no small thing. Many rallies, even for high-profile offices like this, are packed with inside people – political aides, lobbyists, etc.

However, it's not difficult to see how a smaller group of experienced political backers can outwork a much larger mass of supporters consisting largely of people who've never been involved in politics before.

In a self-organizing scenario, you will have many disparate local groups of people spending time and energy reinventing the wheel just to get up and running.

Without a lot of self-starters and direction from the center they may be minimally engaged and active early on, while the "pros" are already doing focused work identifying supporters, persuading swing voters, setting up get-out-the-vote, etc.

When the novices do activate, the approach may be unfocused most of the time, and they may not hit many of the voters they should be targeting. It's like scoring only one of 10 jump shots, while your opponent may be sinking 50 percent.

However, at the same time one can't discount the euphoria of stardom. We've seen many times how a first-time candidate Hollywood celebrity can enter the political world and wipe out established campaign machines.

Old-fashioned canvassing and even paid tv campaigns are no match for the viral qualities of true stardom.

While no one doubts Obama's star qualities, there are still many people who don't know him. His supporter's challenge is presenting their candidate to these people.

One good thing about a mass of grassroots support is you can activate it many times, while you can generally spend any quantity of money only once. Obama supporters need to reactivate themselves repeatedly over the whole primary season.

They need to master the art of publicity – the conduit of their candidate's star appeal – but at the same time they must learn how to identify and focus on targeted voters particularly those who are undecided going into the latter weeks before election day.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Vers de Barack (2007-03-26 10:42)

The first poem written below comes from Obama's high school in Hawai'i. The other two are from the Occidental Weekly, a publication of Occidental College in Los Angeles

OLD MAN I saw an old forgotten man
On an old, forgotten road staggering and numb
pulls out forgotten dignity from under his flaking coat,
And walks a straight line along the crooked world.
POP

Sitting in his seat, a seat broad and broken
In, sprinkled with ashes,
Pop switches channels, takes another
Shot of Seagrams, neat, and asks
What to do with me, a green young man
Who fails to consider the Flim and flam of the world, since
Things have been easy for me;
I stare hard at his face, a stare
That deflects off his brow;
I'm sure he's unaware of his Dark, watery eyes, that
Glance in different directions,
And his slow, unwelcome twitches,
Fail to pass.
I listen, nod,
Listen, open, till I cling to his pale,
Beige T-shirt, yelling,
Yelling in his ears, that hang
With heavy lobes, but he's still telling
His joke, so I ask why
He's so unhappy, to which he replies...
But I don't care anymore, cause
He took too damn long, and from Under my seat, I pull out the Mirror I've been saving; I'm laughing,
Laughing loud, the blood rushing from his face

To mine, as he grows small,
A spot in my brain, something
That may be squeezed out, like a Watermelon seed between
Two fingers.
Pop takes another shot, neat,
Points out the same amber
Stain on his shorts that I've got on mine, and Makes me smell his smell, coming
From me; he switches channels, recites an old poem
He wrote before his mother died,
Stands, shouts, and asks
For a hug, as I shrink, my Arms barely reaching around
His thick, oily neck, and his broad back; 'cause
I see my face, framed within
Pop's black-framed glasses
And know he's laughing too.

UNDERGROUND

Under water grottos, caverns
Filled with apes
That eat figs.
Stepping on the figs
That the apes
Eat, they crunch.
The apes howl, bare
Their fangs, dance,
Tumble in the Rushing water,
Musty, wet pelts
Glistening in the blue.

✕

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Barack rumbles toward big community kickoff (2007-03-27 08:45)

Barack Obama rebounded a bit on the Iowa Electronic Markets leading Hillary by a slim two-point margin.

Market Quotes: DConv08
2008 Democratic Convention Market.

Quotes current as of 10:15:04 CST, Tuesday, March 27, 2007. Symbol Bid Ask Last Low High Average

CLIN_NOM 0.425 0.432 0.425 0.425 0.425 0.425

EDWA_NOM 0.060 0.068 0.060 0.060 0.060 0.060

OBAM_NOM 0.384 0.413 0.428 0.427 0.428 0.427

DROF_NOM 0.121 0.125 0.121 0.121 0.121 0.121

In Atlanta, organizers said they broke a fundraising record of $500,000 set by John Kerry when 600 supporters showed up for Barack at a downtown hotel.

Expectations for Obama's war-chest will be less than that of candidates like Hillary Clinton and John McCain as Barack's operation was still in the building stages for most of this quarter. It however appears to be going full swing now and the next reporting at the end of June will be a better measure of his fundraising prowess.

The big community kickoff will launch this Saturday and we may see the fruits of these efforts in polls released that cover voter opinions over this week.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

BET co-founder endorses Obama (2007-03-27 16:15)

Black Entertainment Television (BET) co-founder Sheila C. Johnson, one of America's black billionaires, endorsed Senator Barack Obama today and promised to host a fundraiser for the candidate in April.

Robert Johnson, her ex-husband and the other co-founder of BET, supports Hillary Clinton.

Obama says Bush using "social darwinism"

At a Communications Workers of America conference in Washington, Obama said that the Bush administration was practicing "social darwinism" preventing the prosperity of all Americans.

"It's a strategy that we've seen this administration pursue over the last six years, that basically says government has no role to play in making sure that America is prosperous for all people and not just some," he said.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

MoveOn.org may endorse presidential candidate (2007-03-28 08:57)

Barack Obama will attend a candidate's forum held today in Washington by the Building And Construction Trades department of the AFL-CIO.

Elsewhere, MoveOn.org announced may be endorsing a presidential candidate again this time around. Their last pick was Howard Dean, and the tea leaves would indicate that Barack Obama and John Edwards would be the favorites this time.

Given the importance of the Iraq War to MoveOn.org, one would think that Obama would be the frontrunner, however the group's leadership has said it will not endorse a single candidate if there is no strong consensus among its members.

The organization will conduct an online town meeting on April 10, after which it will survey its members and release the results on April 12.

Becoming a member is easy and free at their website (click here).

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Hawaii for Obama launches site (2007-03-28 16:23)

Hawai'i for Obama launched its official website at hawaiiforobama.org.

The site lists events for the big March 31 community kickoff of the Obama campaign.

(AP / CBS)

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2007-03-29 07:34)

Below is a copy of Barack Obama's letter to supporters asking for campaign donations.

The senator stresses that his campaign is more about people than dollars and therefore the fundraising goals are set in terms of numbers of contributors and the number of donations rather than in dollar amount in millions.

—

Dear Friend,

Here's how it usually works. As we approach March 31st, when campaigns have to file their quarterly fundraising reports, the press and pundits start to obsess over the chase for money.

They value dollars more than people, and bottom lines more than ideas.

Now, don't get me wrong. Like every campaign, this one needs the resources to compete.

But while others may set goals based on raising tens of millions of dollars, we're going to reveal two numbers that say more about what kind of campaign we're running:

* the number of people donating to the cause the number of donations we've received from them

And we're not going to talk about the dollars raised until the reporting period is over.

It's simple: get more people involved, more deeply than ever before. Those are our goals for the end of the quarter, and for the rest of this campaign. Whether you've given before or this will be your first time, you can make a statement that people count.

I'm asking you to stand up and be counted – will you make a donation now?

<https://donate.barackobama.com/page/contribute/20070328?>

So why these two figures?

The number of people giving shows the wide breadth of support for a campaign that seeks a new kind of politics.

The number of donations reveals the depth of people's commitment, because so many people give small amounts again and again.

If we really hope to meet the challenges of our time, we have to change what our politics is about, and that means changing what campaigns are about – not just dollar amounts and million-dollar goals, but millions of people working for a cause bigger than themselves.

That's why we're not accepting contributions from Washington lobbyists or political action committees.

So who are our donors? See for yourself. Election law requires that we ask every donor to the campaign for their occupation and their employer. That information will be made public in the quarterly report filed on March 31st.

Just this week we've gotten donations from the following people:

- * a salesperson in Alabama
- a nurse in North Carolina
- a truck driver in Minnesota
- a firefighter/paramedic in Texas
- a homeless shelter director in Virginia
- a special education teacher in Florida
- a bartender in Colorado
- a minister in New York

The two most common occupations of our donors this week? "Student" and "Retired" – and we've got thousands in between.

Will you be the next person to be counted?

<https://donate.barackobama.com/page/contribute/20070328?>

There's serious work ahead for our next president, and the process of choosing him or her should not descend into an insider game of who can better manipulate the "conventional wisdom" in Washington.

We have an opportunity to use this fundraising deadline to turn the story of money and politics on its head.

You can show the pundits covering this presidential race that a grassroots movement for change can trump all the money and influence in Washington.

Give them something to talk about – be counted now:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/page/contribute/20070328?>

For six years we've had a president out of touch, on the wrong track, and increasingly unwilling to even pretend to care about the concerns of ordinary Americans.

The process of choosing our next one should focus on mobilizing and energizing the people.

As we approach this fundraising deadline on March 31st, you have an opportunity to send a message by participating in a different kind of fundraising drive:

In a democracy, it's the people that count.

Thank you,

Barack Obama

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Spanish version of "The Audacity of Hope" in works (2007-03-29 15:22)

Barack Obama's campaign decision to highlight the depth of his support rather than the dollar figure was a smart one.

It's likely to appeal to his specific base of supporters and to attract many of the netroots crowd and progressives in general who are still undecided. And its not a move that his opponents are likely to imitate for two good reasons:

1. Barack's major opponents are mainly getting support from traditional sources including lobbyists and political action committees. Thus, they're not likely to match Obama's wide donor support.
2. It's difficult to "crunch" these numbers without getting caught because of campaign finance reporting.

The Audacity of Hope coming out in Spanish

Senator Obama's best-selling book The Audacity of Hope is scheduled to be released in a Spanish language version this June. "La Audacia de la Esperanza" will be released by Vintage Espanol, an arm of Random Books, with an initial printing of 50,000 copies.

X

Vintage Espanol

X
X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Jesse Jackson endorses Barack Obama (2007-03-29 17:19)

Jesse Jackson gave the Obama campaign a big boost in its efforts to woo African American voters when he endorsed the senator in a telephone interview with the Associated Press on Thursday.

The media has frequently asked whether Barack Obama is "black enough" and whether he has any major support among African Americans, a very important voting segment in Democratic primary elections.

Jackson himself won South Carolina when he ran for the Democratic nomination in 1988 and won a total of 16 primaries in his two presidential bids.

In response to Jackson's endorsement Obama said: "This campaign has been about giving hope since Day One and I am proud to have the support of my friend Jesse Jackson. It is because people like Jesse ran that I have this opportunity to run for president today."

X
X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Putting a dollar amount behind a face (2007-03-30 08:40)

The National Journal blog has some predictions on how much money each of the major candidates will raise this quarter:

Sen. Hillary Clinton will raise between $23M and $30M.

Sen. John McCain will raise between $18M and $22M.

Sen. Barack Obama will raise between $18M and $24M.

Ex-MA Gov. Mitt Romney will raise between $19M and $21M.  Romney is not raising general election money yet.

Ex-Sen. John Edwards will raise between $13M and $17M.

Ex-NYC Mayor Rudy Giuliani will raise between $12M and $15M.

—

These estimates include transfers from other accounts, which would mean if correct that Obama would have outraised Clinton this quarter despite being in full swing only since Feb. 10.

This is because Hillary will have transferred about $11 million from her senatorial account to her presidential campaign. In contrast, Obama had only about a half million left in his old senatorial account.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Campaigns release lists of black bundlers (2007-03-30 11:26)

Both the Obama and Clinton teams released a list of New York City African American fundraisers (bundlers) supporting their campaigns.

An interesting difference in each list is that Clinton's contains many older celebrity names like Robert Johnson (BET Entertainment), Quincy Jones (Quincy Jones/David Salzman Entertainment) and Berry Gordy Jr. (founder of Motown Records), while Obama's has younger stars like record executives L.A. Reid (Hitco Music Publishing) and Andre Harrell (Uptown Records, Motown Records, movie producer).

Obama's partial list of NYC African American bundlers: Brian Mathis (Provident Group), Jeh Johnson, L.A. Reid, Frank Cooper, Andre Harrell, Derek Johnson, Ray McGuire, Tracy Maitland, Judy Byrd Blaylock, Ron Blaylock, Earl Graves (publisher of Black Enterprise Magazine), Ann Fudge, Robert Smith, Vivienne LaBorde, Vaughn Willaims, Gayle Atkins, Charles Atkins, Gordon Davis, John Rhea, Wendy Credle, Alexis McGill, Rhonda Medina, Maxim Thorne, Jason Wright, Marc Mitchell.

Clinton's list: Clarence and Jackie Avant, Dana Wade Smith, Shahara Ahmad-Llewellyn, Binta Niambi Brown, Pamela Hayes, Tyson Pratcher, Carl McCall, Bob Johnson, Quincy Jones, Berry Gordy Jr. and Pam Pickens.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack meets Iowa townspeople (2007-03-31 19:04)

Click the link below to watch an extraordinary video of Barack Obama meeting with townspeople in a public library in Iowa.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

1.4 April

The importance of the African American vote (2007-04-01 10:21)

African American votes are important in any Democratic presidential primary but one could say they are especially important for Barack Obama as he is probably expected to do well among these voters.

I happen to be one of those that believe African American voters allowed Bill Clinton to win the 1992 primary despite coming in near the bottom in Iowa and losing, despite placing a close second, in New Hampshire.

The African American vote gave Clinton the edge in many states particularly in the South.

Jesse Jackson won 11 primaries in his second bid including South Carolina despite the fact that he was never competitive money-wise and was never taken seriously by the majority of white voters. His success was largely due to the power of African American voters in many key Democratic states where they effectively form a swing vote.

While it is important to do well in early states like Iowa, Nevada, New Hampshire and South Carolina, Obama must campaign hard also in the African American community. In one of the early states, South Carolina, black votes are often key to winning for Democrats.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Daniel (2007-04-03 01:32:00)

People will vote their respect person to be chairman. People play an important role in that time. My old friend asked me about how to vote on EbonyFriends.com

Analyzing the Community Kickoff (2007-04-01 14:10)

More than 83,000 people donated to the Barack Obama campaign and the community kickoff event helped raise many of these donations.

However, behind the event there was also another plan – to begin organizing Obama's many online supporters into a powerful offline vote-winning force.

Trying to avoid the mistakes of the Howard Dean and Ned Lamont campaigns, the Obama team arranged the nation-wide house parties with the idea of introducing local online supporters to each other face-to-face, out of the "Matrix" if you will.

Supporters were urged by the campaign to begin planning activities designed to reach offline voters.

House party organizers were given a package of materials with information of winning supporters, do's and don't's of fundraising and other important organizing information.

An organized ground force will be important in the primary election but of even greater necessity should Obama win the nomination and face the task of winning independent voters.

One hurdle the campaign faces is keeping enthusiasm high over so many months before the first polls in January of next year.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Why some perceive Obama as "winner" in fundraising race (2007-04-02 08:47)

Hillary breaks fundraising records, the headlines read. However, if you scan the political blogs, you'll find many who believe that Barack really came out on top in this "invisible primary."

The main reason for this is that most of the big donors tend to reach maximum contribution levels in the first quarter. Basically they cannot legally give any more money to their respective campaigns.

Therefore, from now on, it's mostly the small donors on "installment" plans that will continue infusing campaigns with cash. And the Obama campaign has shown that it easily has the greatest number of these small donors, and also a unique ability to attract previously unengaged people who've never donated before.

Another big factor is that Hillary has been collecting funds both for the primary, and in case she wins, the general election. Obama, however, only started collecting for the general election lately after receiving a Federal Elections Committee special ruling that will allow him to still qualify for public funding.

Thus, Obama's war-chest has much less of this general election money, and more money that can be spent on the primary.

Although the Obama campaign hasn't released an official statement yet, reliable sources close to the campaign say that at least $20 million was raised.

What isn't known is how much each campaign has spent already, and how much they have left over to spend near election time when television ad campaigns start up and it's time to expand the number of paid staff workers.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama denies softening stance on Iraq (2007-04-02 15:43)

Senator Barack Obama denied claims that he has wavered in his position on Iraq as claimed by his presidential opponents and on various political blogs.

Obama said neither he nor the majority of Congress were interested in cutting funds for troops in the field but that they would "keep on ratcheting up the pressure to try to make the President see we're on the wrong course and have him respond to Congress and the American people."

The senator's redeployment calls for pulling out all combat troops by March of next year.

Fundraising totals to be announced Wednesday

According to news reports, the Obama campaign will unveil information on its first quarter fundraising this Wednesday.

The delay may have been caused by the large number of donations received during the community kickoff event that occurred on the last day of fundraising. Many youthful and other Obama supporters, lacking credit cards, may have contributed by check further delaying the tally.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Daniel (2007-04-03 01:45:00)

People will vote their respect person to be chairman. So people play an important role in that time. I met a friend who is a profession told me how to vote in United States on EbonyFriends.com

How independent expenditures effect the race (2007-04-03 09:08)

Independent expenditures are ads or other "communications" asking people to vote or not to vote for a specific candidate or party.

These expenditures can include everything from flyers to television ads but they differ from campaign contributions in that they are made without authorization or coordination of any official campaign.

So if a person independently decides to print window signs urging people to vote for Barack Obama without authorization from the campaign, it counts as an independent expenditure.

If a person makes $250 or more in independent expenditures a year, they must file a statement with the Federal Elections Commission (FEC). Any group that raises or spends more than $1,000 in a calendar year must register as an independent committee and file financial statements with the FEC.

Soft money

Big money donors get around campaign contribution limits by either spending their own money independently or by contributing to independent committees.

There is a limit to the amount they can contribute to committees, but not to how much they can spend on their own. All they have to do is place a disclaimer on the communication or ad stating that it was not authorized by the official candidate's campaign and listing some contact information (street address, telephone number or website URL).

Of course, grassroots supporters and organizations can also make independent expenditures if they have reached their donation limits. Even if they haven't reached their limits but are unable to make monetary donations to the campaign, they can independently use their own printers, paper and other materials to print flyers, signs, buttons, etc.

Independent committees like the well-known "Swift Boat" committee that targeted John Kerry's campaign can often have a significant impact on the election outcome.

MoveOn.org and Democracy for America are examples of more progressive independent multi-candidate committees.

Smaller grassroots organizations can also tap into this money by soliticing local donors who have reached their limits with the official campaign but are still looking to do more.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

MyPolicy (2007-04-03 15:07)

BarackObama.com has released a brilliant new feature known as MyPolicy that allows members to register their views on Obama policy by text, voice message or video.

After submitting ideas, members will debate and collaborate to outline a new direction.

The best ideas from the process will be incorporated by Obama in his overall campaign policy.

Speculation runs wild over Obama silence

Observers are speculating that the Obama campaign is keeping silent about its fundraising totals to draw extra attention to the candidate.

Estimates from $20 million to $40 million are circulating through the media.

✕

Across our country, everyday people like you have experiences and ideas that haven't previously been heard. This is your chance to speak your mind and help set the policies that will guide this campaign and change the country.

(☐) Submit your idea

(☐) Tell your story

(☐) Upload your video

(☐) Record a message

On:

[Healthcare.....]

Go

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Live feeds show Obama's community organizing skills (2007-04-04 07:34)

I'm really enjoying these live feeds of Barack Obama meeting with small groups of people to discuss issues and policy. You can really see his years of community organizing experience in these live, unedited broadcasts.

✕

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Anonymous (2009-12-12 17:14:15)
now I stay in touch!

Obama camp raises $25 million (2007-04-04 08:38)

Barack Obama announced that his campaign had raised $25 million in the first quarter with more than $23 million available for the primary.

The money came from more than 100,000 donations.

This is very good news indeed, but as Obama states in his note below, votes will still come only one person at a time. —forwarded—

Dear Friend,

Ten weeks ago, on an icy day in Springfield, we launched an audacious campaign to change our politics and lift our country.

Today, I have some exciting news to share about the phenomenal progress we've made. And I wanted you to hear it first.

I'm proud to tell you that, after the first quarter of the campaign, we've exceeded all of our hopes and expectations. In less than three months, a staggering 100,000 Americans have contributed to our cause – tens of thousands more than the number reported by any other campaign. That's on top of the hundreds of thousands who have attended rallies, started groups and shared their ideas and energy.

It's been a truly historic response – a measure of just how hungry people are to turn the page on this era of small and destructive politics and repair our American community.

And because of that extraordinary base of support, we were able to raise an astonishing $25 million – $23.5 million of which can be used to help us in the upcoming primary contests.

What makes this achievement even more noteworthy is that we did it without taking any money from PACs or federal lobbyists. Instead, we're counting on you; on folks across America who want to take their country back and steer us to a better course.

You've sent an unmistakable message to the political establishment in Washington about the power and seriousness of our challenge.

But for all the impressive numbers by which pundits will judge this campaign, we know that every step of our progress happens one person at a time.

One person sharing their story of why they decided to get involved in the political process, one volunteer deciding to have a conversation about the campaign with their neighbor, one donor owning a piece of this campaign for as little as $5.

I've been struck by how personal this campaign experience has been for so many of you.

You heard last week from Rashed, a veteran and father who made his first-ever donation to a political campaign because of his hopes for his daughter. This campaign is the story of hundreds of thousands of people like him – people participating because they believe that politics can mean something again.

We've put together a small presentation about all we've accomplished together so far, and links to a few of the personal stories from people who donated to the campaign or hosted a community get-together this past weekend.

You can see it here:

my.barackobama.com/wherewestand

I want to thank you for all that you have done so far. This milestone for our campaign proves something I learned as a community organizer long ago: that together a whole lot of ordinary people can achieve something extraordinary.

And we're only just getting started.

Thank you,

Barack Obama

—

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Breaking down the numbers (2007-04-04 11:00)

With Barack

Obama's numbers in, we can analyze the data and see who appears in better shape money-wise.

Here are some of the more important numbers released by the Obama campaign today:

<http://my.barackobama.com/page/content/eqwrap/>

Over 100,000 Donors

Over $25,000,000 Raised

Over $23,500,000 for the Primary

Over $50,000 Online Donors

Over $6,900,000 Raised Online

Over 4,000 My.BarackObama.com Groups

Over 9,000 My.BarackObama.com Blogs

Over 50,000 My.BarackObama.com Members

The first thing we notice is that Obama has about twice as many donors as Clinton. Again, this is a positive thing as it likely indicates that Obama has a much larger base of small donors. Probably also having twice as many online donors indicates the same thing.

Obama averaged about $250 per donor, and $138 per online donor. Clinton averaged $520 and $160 respectively.

Many small donors will likely contribute again before the primary dates as they will did not max out this time around.

There is even a recurring donations feature at barackobama.com that allows one to make automatic monthly donations at a set amount from one's credit card.

Lower the expected overall numbers

Another thing we notice about this quarter's fundraising reports, is that they came in lower than expert expectations. According to the forecasts, the Democratic frontrunners would have raised between $40 and $50 million by this time, but they are at about half that amount.

This might be interpreted as meaning that there is limited interest in the presidential race, but polls show exactly the opposite.

Generally the predictions for first quarter earnings are based on known databases of regular donors. Is it possible that many of these regular donors are still sitting on the sidelines unsure of who to support?

If we look at this from the angle of endorsements, it does seem that many elected officials are still pondering over which side to take in this race.

Will Barack Obama's very good numbers help some break toward his campaign? Or will some who donated only to Hillary this time, now donate to Obama to cover their backsides since Hillary is no longer heir-apparent.

It may be that the second quarter reports will be even more important since it may reveal where all those missing donors have gone.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Can a Obama win in Iowa and New Hampshire? (2007-04-05 08:24)

Iowa and New Hampshire can be daunting states for a progressive candidate, although lately New Hampshire has become a more progressive-friendly state.

Barack Obama, rightly or wrongly, may be considered the most progressive of the front-running Democrats. And if you haven't noticed he's also black. Iowa and New Hampshire are overwhelmingly white.

Black and other minority candidates tend to do better with white voters in regions that have larger minority and immigrant populations, that are well-integrated and with large numbers of urban and progressive voters.

Iowa and New Hampshire don't fit well into any of those categories, although again New Hampshire has become increasingly more progressive.

You might hear some minorities comment that they would feel more comfortable campaigning in southern states than in Iowa and New Hampshire. Because there at least there is familiarity. Yes, there are rednecks who would never consider a non-white candidate, but there also those who have no problem with blacks. Poor whites in the South have often lived side-by-side or at least in adjoining neighborhoods with blacks.

One of the reasons Bill Clinton was so popular with blacks is his empathy with the community as he was raised in Arkansas.

In Iowa and New Hampshire, a minority candidate might feel like they were on the Moon.

Part of Obama's challenge is familiarizing himself with the local voters and taking away some of the strangeness that his skin color presents.

He's doing that now by practically living in Iowa. By January of next year, Obama will want to be as familiar as the guy next door to most Iowans.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Clinton and McCain "burning" up cash (2007-04-06 08:29)

The Wall Street Journal's Washington Wire reports both Hillary Clinton and John McCain are spending heavily with the first polls still more than nine months away.

Clinton is hiring political consultants left and right, according to the report, in an attempt to deny them to other candidates.

Yesterday, the New York Times reported that their sources confirm that Clinton has less money in her campaign available for the primary than her opponent Barack Obama.

Obama popular with Muslim voters

Despite criticism over supposedly cuddling up with the Israel lobby, Barack Obama is the most popular candidate according to an ongoing poll by the Muslim Observer.

The Muslims for Barack Obama website states: "He's not just a change from George W. Bush, he's a change from the emerging crop of Democratic presidential nominees, all of whom are still equivocating on the war in Iraq. Obama is the only candidate who was on the correct side from the beginning, and unlike most politicians, understands our concerns because of his unique background. Through this group, we hope to work Muslim Democrats to ensure Obama gets the party nomination, and then work hard to get out the vote in key districts throughout America."

X

X

-
Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama reveals plan to help homeless veterans (2007-04-06 15:42)

Senator Barack Obama unveiled a plan to keep veterans from having to live on the streets after returning to civilian life.

"Veterans are far more likely to be homeless than non-veterans and part of it is because we're not providing services to them as they transition out of the service," Obama said before a campaign rally. "Part of it is because there is just not enough affordable housing."

Obama's plan would establish grants and vouchers for those who build affordable housing for veterans.

The Veteran's Administration estimates there may be 200,000 homeless veterans with twice that number being homeless throughout the course of the year.

Money talks

Proof that money talks might be found in Mitt Romney leapfrogging to a tie for first place in New Hampshire with John McCain.

In the Obama campaign, nearly $500,000 was raised online the day after announcing the impressive $25 million haul for the first quarter. Money attracts money.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack's sustainability or Clinton's overrated database? (2007-04-06 19:14)

The Clinton campaign responded to reports of outstanding fundraising efforts by the Obama camp stating that the latter would not be able to sustain its efforts throughout the campaign.

No detailed reasoning was given for this opinion. My own impression given Obama's larger army of donors is that he has more reasons to be optimistic about future fundraising.

A lot of hoopla was made over Hillary's database of some 250,000 "supporters."

However, one has to wonder how many of these people in the database are actually supporting Hillary. Past contributions especially in general elections certainly is not a guarantee of support for the upcoming primary season.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack on Healthcare (2007-04-08 07:19)

Although Barack Obama is still hammering out the specifics of his universal health plan through dialogue with the people, there are still some things that can be gleaned from his public meetings and speeches.

Barack believes in a single payer system but practically is hesitant to support one.

A single payer system may have been easier to implement back when only one in 10 people were insured rather than the six in seven covered today. The health insurance industry is huge, owns hundreds of billions in assets and employs many people.

Dismantling in one stroke could cause major upheaval.

However, Obama doesn't seem to support the current employer-based system as it stands now either. He appears to favor, based on some of his speeches and comments, something similar to Ron Wyden's healthcare plan but with less out-of-pocket expenses.

Wyden's Healthy Americans Act would establish state-based Health Help Agencies allowing the individual rather than the employer to choose private health plans. Here is some info from Wyden's official site:

"Under The Healthy Americans Act individuals will choose from a variety of plans offered in their state providing coverage similar to what is currently available to Members of Congress. State-based Health Help Agencies (HHAs) will guide individuals through the enrollment process. HHAs will provide unbiased information about the state's competing private health plans that will in turn empower individuals—rather than their employers—to choose the best private plans for them and their families. HHAs also will connect individuals and families with sliding scale premium reduction to ensure everyone can afford care. Most individuals and families will qualify for health care tax deductions.

"Also under the Healthy Americans Act, subscribers will not be charged co-pays for preventive services or chronic disease management. Insurers will be able to offer discounts and other incentives based on participation in wellness programs such as nutrition counseling, tobacco cessation and exercise. Primary care physicians will be reimbursed for investing time in chronic disease management and prevention. And with Health Help Agencies publishing consumer-oriented information on every plan's success in prevention and disease management, insurance companies will ultimately be competing to keep Americans healthy."

According to Wyden, his plan would be fully-paid by restructuring the $2.2 trillion currently spent on healthcare.

Obama has also mentioned that bringing the medical transaction system online could save up to $600 million a year, money which could be used to help cover those who cannot afford to pay for their coverage. He has said that money can also be saved by emphasizing prevention more and this includes preventive care for the people now uninsured who often make expensive emergency care visits.

Refreshingly, he has not ruled out new taxes to fund his universal healthcare plan. After all, you have to pay for the thing somehow. Republicans somehow think its better to spend using interest-bearing loans rather than upfront money (taxes). Guess who eventually pays for these loans and interest?

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2009-05-06 16:18:00)

Obama you have turned this Country into a pile of crap. It is not my job to pay health care for all the illegals in this Country. You may have in your mind you are doing good but you are not at all. GM is going to layoff 21,000 people because you. They need to restructure and down size. What ever, Follow the news Obama you wont be there in 4 years and then somebody will have to clean up all this crap you think is just. You are wrong. Michael Savage says it best. Look him up, He speaks for America

RNC worried about Obama (2007-04-09 08:52)

In a powerful testament to the fear Barack Obama is generating in Republican circles, the Republican National Committee will release today a list of "Obama's Top Ten Fabrications."

The list of so-called "fabrications" is just a re-hashing of old press reports which only prove the silliness of any Obama "honeymoon" with the media.

Tonight, Barack will appear as a guest along with Halle Berry on the David Letterman show.

MoveOn.org Townhall Meeting

MoveOn.org will hold its virtual townhall meeting focused on the Iraq War on Tuesday (tomorrow).

This meeting will probably be the most important in helping MoveOn.org in deciding on a presidential endorsement given the organization's focus on ending the Iraq War.

MoveOn.org will survey members after the meeting and the results of the survey will be used in making endorsement decisions. To sign up, visit their website:

<http://moveon.org/>

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Barack to skip Fox debate (2007-04-09 16:47)

Senator Barack Obama will skip the Fox News Channel and Congressional Black Caucus (CBC) presidential debate in Detroit it was announced today.

Instead Obama will attend the debate sponsored by the CBC and CNN in January.

”

CNN seemed like a more appropriate host,” Obama spokesman Bill Burton said.

✕

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Barack not in it for second (2007-04-10 07:43)

Barack Obama told David Letterman "No, you don't run for second," when asked if he would like to be Hillary Clinton's vice-president. The candidate did seem to acknowledge that an Obama-Clinton ticket though would be "powerful." He also said that his family was handling the demands of the campaign well but joked that:

"I'm not getting back to Chicago very often. ... My wife is starting to refer to me as her first husband. It's a little disturbing."

In addition to appearing on the Letterman show, Obama continued his fundraising exploits in New York City attending three big money events.

Tonight, Barack, Hillary Clinton and John Edwards will attend a virtual townhall meeting conducted by MoveOn.org and focused on the Iraq War.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama surges to first in South Carolina (2007-04-10 17:10)

Senator Barack Obama rocketed into first place according to an Insider Advantage poll with 34 percent of those polled favoring him. Hillary Clinton was second with 20 percent and John Edwards, a South Carolina native, was at 17 percent. The telephone poll surveyed 500 registered Democratic voters from April 6-8.

South Carolina is one of four early primary states, the others being Iowa, Nevada and New Hampshire.

However in a few weeks, Louisiana may have the earliest test of all if it conducts a "beauty contest" during its Nov. 14 poll this year.

The non-binding poll may be approved during a legislative session this month. In theory, if approved the delegates could decide to follow these results rather than those of the official primary in February 2008. The Louisiana test results could effect what happens in the other four early primary states.

X

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

MoveOn.org surveys members on candidates (2007-04-10 22:20)

The MoveOn.org town hall meeting is completed and you can vote for the best candidate to lead the country out of the Iraq War at the following URL:

<http://pol.moveon.org/townhall/iraq/emailme.html>

You can find videos and transcripts of all the candidates (that participated) on the MoveOn.org website.

Sen. Barack Obama

Full Segment | Opening Statement | Question 1 | Question 2 | Closing Statement | Transcript

MoveOn Member Question:

The Bush administration's obstinate refusal to diplomatically engage parties such as Syria and Iran has clearly done nothing but harm the United States' interests in the Middle East. How would you include these countries in the effort toward establishing a stable, responsible, and non-hostile government in Iraq?

—Alex Landry, Reference Librarian, Alexandria, VA

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Harvard professors endorse Barack Obama (2007-04-11 08:00)

Three prominent Harvard professors endorsed Barack Obama's candidacy at a Kennedy School of Government event last night.

"Barack Obama is the only candidate who can give us 21st-century solutions to 21st-century threats," Samantha Power, Lindh professor of practice of global leadership and public policy said.

U.S. Senator Barack Obama may be the youngest major contender vying for the Democratic presidential nomination, but three prominent Harvard faculty members said yesterday that the 45-year old's life experiences, particularly his time overseas, give him an edge over his older competitors.

"Barack Obama is the only candidate who can give us 21st-century solutions to 21st-century threats," foreign policy scholar Samantha Power said at an event last night for Obama. "One cannot overstate how important it is to have someone in office who has lived abroad and can see the United States from the inside out and from the outside in." Power took a leave of absence from KSG last year to advise the Obama campaign on foreign policy.

"The thing that struck you about Barack back then was that he seemed very different," Professor of Law Kenneth W. Mack said. "He seemed like he was a little bit older, a littler bit wiser, and a little bit better read in the ways of the world."

Kennedy School Lecturer in Public Policy Marshall L. Ganz said "Obama's life experience in particular equips him to understand the kinds of ways in which we need to bring a very diverse set of people and interests together around a fundamental group of values—compassion, generosity and tolerance."

Obama rakes in $700,000 to $1 million in NYC

Barack raised an estimated $700,000 to $1 million in Hillary Clinton's home turf according to NYC bundlers yesterday. One source said that future NYC fundraisers are already in the works and that a Washington event has tripled its attendance after Obama announced his fundraising success.

It does seem that many people who were on the sidelines before are contributing to the campaign now. Also, many supporters of other candidates may be hedging their bets by throwing some money in Obama's direction.

X

X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Bloomberg/LA Times Poll shows Obama does best against Reps (2007-04-11 16:47)

A new Bloomberg/Los Angeles Times poll conducted April 5-9 shows Barack Obama leading the pack in head-to-head matches.

"In head-to-head match-ups, the Democratic candidates generally do better, except against Giuliani, whose lead over Clinton and Edwards is within the poll's margin of error.

"Clinton is 6 points behind Giuliani, and Obama narrowly leads Giuliani by 4 points. Obama is also ahead of McCain by 8 points and Romney by 19 points, compared with Clinton's 3-point lead over McCain and 7-point advantage over Romney."

Obama says its time to pressure Bush

A new Associated Press-Ipsos poll indicates that a majority of Americans believed going to war in Iraq was a mistake.

In an interview with David Gregory on MSNBC's Hardball, Obama said it was "ratchet up the pressure" on the Bush administration to set a timetable for Iraq troop withdrawal.

X

Barack Obama wins MoveOn survey (2007-04-12 09:18)

Barack Obama won the MoveOn poll with results quite similar to those of the Democracy for American straw poll:

Obama - 27.9 percent

Edwards 24.7 percent

Kucinich - 17.2 percent

Richardson - 12.3 percent

Clinton - 10.7 percent

Biden - 6.2 percent

Dodd - 1.1 percent

MoveOn members tend to be a bit "left" of the ordinary Democrat, and remember this poll only surveys people online. It could be important in the future, if MoveOn decides to endorse one or more of the candidates.

Sister launches Hawaiian support

Barack's sister Maya Soetoro-Ng sent an email to 800 potential supporters in Hawai'i last night extolling her brother's virtues.

The email said that Obama was "sharp, loving, and makes a mean chili."

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

barackobama.com launches Answer Center (2007-04-13 12:40)

The barackobama.com website unleashed a new Answer Center with the apparent aim of allowing supporters to familiarize themselves with their candidate's positions and the inner workings of the campaign.

The new page can be found at:

http://answercenter.barackobama.com/cgi-bin/barackobama.cfg/php/enduser/std_alp.php

There is also a blog to help members with using the Answer Center.

The ability of supporters to handle questions fielded to them about their candidate is an important part of the campaign's efforts to persuade voters.

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

20,000 at Atlanta rally for Barack Obama (2007-04-14 10:18)

Another huge crowd, estimated at 20,000, has turned out for Barack Obama at his rally in Atlanta, Georgia today. The South may turn out as important for Obama as it was for Clinton in his first presidential primary. Before coming to Georgia, Barack made campaign stops in South Carolina and North Carolina.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack still drawing waves of people (2007-04-15 11:08)

Despite questions over his sustainability and the substance of his policy, Barack still holds a remarkable spell over the people.

He drew about 20,000 people to his Atlanta rally despite that fact that a major storm system was headed that way.

Obviously many, many people are still convinced Obama is the real thing – the right person for our times.

He has been scrutinized for elements of his name, "Hussein" and "Obama" which they note sounds like Osama (and also "Yo Mama"). The press has explored his cigarette smoking habit, his blackness or lack thereof, and the church he attends.

I know practically nothing about the youth of the other candidates, but I feel now as I have detailed knowledge of Obama's growing up in Hawai'i after reading so many news reports. Every detail of his youth that he mentions in his book "Dreams of My Father" appear to have been checked or are being checked by meticulous reporters for consistency.

All the fine-toothed combing of Obama's life and words though seems not to have dented his mass grassroots appeal. Turning that appeal into votes will require focused work by his supporters.

Handing out Obama leaflets in front of stores where 80 percent of the customers are Republicans won't help because Republicans can't vote in a Democrat primary. Polls tell us that Obama appeals to young people, African Americans, Iraq War opponents, etc. Those are the people supporters should target in progressive-leaning neighborhoods or homes.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama campaign files quarterly report (2007-04-15 19:59)

The official campaign finance reports are in and as expected Barack Obama outraised his opponents in primary money.

Obama raised $24.8 million to Hillary Clinton's $19 million in the first three months of 2007. However, Hillary also transferred $10 million from her senate account to her presidential campaign.

The Obama campaign had expenditures and debts of $6.79 million while Hillary expended $6.6 million. Overall, Hillary had $24 million cash on hand left in her treasury for the primary election compared to Obama's 19 million.

John Edwards raised $13 million for the primary and reporting $9.8 million in the bank at the end of the quarter.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Don Stewart (2007-08-17 13:12:00)

I believe Senator Obama isn't making enough of a distinction between himself and Hillary on subjects that really matter.

For instance, I believe that Hillary has made a very bad decision to support the continuation of lobbyist's gifts to congress. Her argument is that these gifts haven't in the past and won't in the future influence her positions on issues. What Obama's campaign should point out is the irrelevance of this argument. It's not the influence on HER votes that we citizens are worried about but the influence on the hundreds of present and future Congressmen's votes that are the primary concern. Her position represents a continuation of the past errors (corruption) of our government rather than the NEW DIRECTION that Obama represents.

Campaign launches Women for Obama (2007-04-16 11:14)

BarackObama.com had a full-page message for the victims of sad events at Virginia Tech today on the homepage:

"Our thoughts and prayers are with the families of those affected by tragedy in Virginia today." Women for Obama
The website also announced a new group "Women for Obama" whose mission is to "forcefully and enthusiastically engage women, enlist women and empower women to recognize the difference our candidate can make in the '08 race and the world – and the difference we as women can make for our futures."
The web features for the group include talking points on Barack Obama's policies that are important to women, and reasons why they should support the candidate.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack speaks out on violence (2007-04-16 21:43)

Barack Obama released a personal statement at his website on the Virginia Tech tragedy:

X

Speaking in Milwaukee, Obama said citizens needed to act to stop violence. "We continue to be degraded by murders, crime and all manner of abuse perpetrated on our children, and Bobby Kennedy's right _ we tolerate it," Obama said. "Things haven't changed as much as they should have in the past 40 years, " referring to a speech by Kennedy after the assassination of Martin Luther King Jr.

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack leads among young people, Harvard poll finds (2007-04-17 09:36)

A new Harvard poll suggests that Barack Obama is the most popular Democrat among young people between 18 and 24 years old.

Obama, Giuliani Lead Pack in Race for President Among 18-24 Year-Olds, Harvard Poll Finds

About 42 percent of young people prefer Obama compared to 24 percent for Hillary Clinton and 17 percent for John

Edwards. The Obama campaign faces a daunting task in registering, organizing and turning out these young voters, but it's certain that they cannot ignore the strong advantage they have among this group.

Also, a Strategic Vision poll shows that John Edwards still leads in Iowa with 27 percent, followed by Illinois senator Barack Obama with 20 percent, and New York senator Hillary Rodham Clinton with 19 percent.

✕

✕

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Campaign unleashes 'secret weapon' (2007-04-17 21:37)

The Obama campaign appears ready to unleash their 'secret weapon,' the candidate's spouse Michelle Obama as part of their effort to attract women voters.

Michelle's speech at the opening of the "Women for Obama" group gives us reason to believe she will be a formidable force in this race:

http://link.brightcove.com/services/link/bcpid416308493/bclid416343960/bctid_769427935

Resources Center at barackobama.com

BarackObama.com now has a Resources Center to help supporters organize locally in their community or online.

Resources offered are guides for organizing, printable flyers and videos to share or to create one's own DVDs:

✕ ✕ ✕ The guides section offers online viewable or pdf downloadable files that help supporters in getting started, holding their first meeting, holding orientation for new members and handling financial matters related to fundraising and costs.

✕ ✕ ✕ ✕

Only one flyer is offered currently – on healthcare – but more are promised for the future:

✕

[PDF]

The campaign offers so far two videos for download:

✕

Meet Barack Video

Length: 5:45 ✕

Springfield Announcement

Length: 22:03

These videos can be burned on to DVD or converted for use with home theater DVD systems using DVDFlick or iDVD.

✕

✕

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama for America to open Nevada HQ (2007-04-18 17:41)

The Barack Obama for America campaign will open its Nevada headquarters in Las Vegas on April 19. Campaign director David Plouffe will be at the public event to greet Obama supporters. You can sign up for the event at the barackobama.com site:

<http://my.barackobama.com/page/event/detail/meeting/4vx72>

The Nevada caucus comes between the Iowa caucus and the New Hampshire primary.

On April 22, Barack Obama will hold an Earth Day rally in Iowa City.

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama rises in polls (2007-04-19 09:13)

Barack Obama did well in most polls closing the gap with Hillary Clinton especially in the Harris and Rasmussen surveys. However, even more important than the barometers of who people favor at the moment, are the indications of who people disfavor or would not consider voting for.

Tracking studies have shown that voters who strongly dislike candidates rarely get converted later on down the line when it's time to vote.

In this category, the latest polls show Obama is very well-positioned.

Opponents of Barack, and not necessarily the other candidates, may try to counter his high favorability ratings with negative attacks. This could be more intense closer to election day when independent committees may launch attack ads on television.

To counter these attacks, the campaign and supporters will use rapid response counterattacks. The response was be quick and sufficient but not prolonged. Otherwise one ends up allowing the opponents to frame the issues of the campaign focusing on some perceived negative attributes of the candidate.

After responding to attacks, the best thing is to go on the offensive with substantive issues of comparison between the candidates, especially since Obama has promised not to mudsling himself.

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama reveals climate change initiative (2007-04-20 14:56)

Barack Obama today unveiled an initiative to combat global warming through greater use of biofuels. The text below from the official website outlines his plan for a National Low Carbon Fuel Standard (NLCFS):

Barack Obama believes that the United States needs to take significant steps to use oil more efficiently in order to deal with the challenge of climate change and to lessen our dependence on foreign oil. One important way to use oil more efficiently is for the nation to transition towards fuels that emit less carbon dioxide.

“It will take a grassroots effort to make America greener and end the tyranny of oil. This Earth Day should mark the beginning of a nationwide effort to harness our technology, our ingenuity and our will to achieve energy independence in our time” continued Obama.

Obama’s proposal would require that all transportation fuels sold in the U.S. contain 5 percent less carbon by 2015 and 10 percent less carbon by 2020. By requiring less carbon intensive fuels, this national standard has the following benefits:

1. The market, rather than the government would determine which fuels are used by fuel distributors and blenders to meet the NLCFS. Because biofuels are less carbon-intensive than gasoline, the NCLFS would spur greater production of renewable fuels.
2. The NCLFS would also create an incentive for the production of more flexible-fuel vehicles that can run on ethanol and more plug-in hybrid vehicles that run on electricity.

The Obama proposal includes a banking and credit trading mechanism to allow providers of cleaner burning fuel to trade allowances to other producers or bank allowances against future carbon reductions.

The estimated impact of the Obama proposal would be dramatic, both in terms of reducing greenhouse gas emissions and reducing dependence on foreign oil. According to one estimate, the NCLCFS would reduce annual greenhouse gas emissions by about 180 million metric tons in 2020, the equivalent of taking about 32 million cars off the road and it would also reduce the annual consumption of gasoline derived from foreign oil imports by about 30 billion gallons in 2020.

Click here for the Carbon Fuel Fact Sheet.

X

X

X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack addresses Sharpton’s group (2007-04-21 19:35)

Senator Barack Obama wooed black voters and Al Sharpton’s endorsement at the ninth convention of Sharpton’s National Action Network in Manhattan.

Obama told the audience that blacks had to bear some blame for making the same type of insulting comments used by fired shock radio host Don Imus. "All of us have been complicit in diminishing ourselves, and engaging in the kind of self hatred that keeps our young men and young women down. That's something we have to talk about in this election."

Sharpton is expected to make his endorsement in a few weeks.

On the other side of the city in Brooklyn, lawmakers Hakeem Jeffries and Karim Camara from the Assembly, and State Senator Eric Adams formed a coalition that is expected to back Obama's candidacy.

X

X

X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

12,000 attend Obama Earth Day rally (2007-04-23 09:16)

Barack Obama attracted his largest crowd to date in Iowa, estimated at 12,000, for Earth Day celebrations where he called on citizens to make the environment a top issue.

Obama mentioned his own initiative to combat global warming, modeled on that of California Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger, that would reduce emissions equivalent of taking 32 million cars off the road.

On Friday, Barack kicked off his New England campaign with an event at Boston University. The focus on university rallies is part of an overall strategy to recognize and utilize Barack's impressive appeal to young people.

A new subsection on the new site students.barackobama.com has been released for this purpose.

Getting students and other young people out to vote can be a problem.

For example, many students change residence during different parts of the year. For this reason, its important to get cellphone rather than land-line numbers, as well as email addresses to remind young supporters to vote. This will be especially important for newly-registered voters.

Technologies like text messaging and rallies and parties for early voting or on election day can also be used to mobilize young voters.

X

X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama spells out foreign policy (2007-04-23 15:48)

Today, Barack Obama released details on his foreign policy plans for his administration:

- Bring a responsible end to this war in Iraq and refocus on the critical challenges in the broader region
- Modernize our overstretched armed forces, building the first truly 21st century military and show wisdom in how we deploy it
- Marshal a global effort to secure, destroy, and stop the spread of weapons of mass destruction
- Rebuild and construct the alliances and partnerships necessary to meet common challenges and confront common threats
- Invest in our common humanity to ensure that those who live in fear and want today can live with dignity and opportunity tomorrow

On the question of foreign aid to developing countries, Barack told the Chicago Council on Global Affairs:

"I know that many Americans are skeptical about the value of foreign aid today. But as the U.S. military made clear in Camp Lemonier, a relatively small investment in these fragile states up front can be one of the most effective ways to prevent the terror and strife that is far more costly – both in lives and treasure – down the road. In this way, $50 billion a year in foreign aid – which is less than one-half of one percent of our GDP – doesn't sound as costly when you consider that last year, the Pentagon spent nearly double that amount in Iraq alone."

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

New groups flourish on barackobama.com (2007-04-24 07:33)

BarackObama.com has launched a number of new groups specific sections on the website including Women for Obama, Students for Obama and New Hampshire for Obama.

There are also new additions to the MyPolicy feature on the site focused on Barack's recent outline of his foreign policy direction. You can submit stories on your own experiences with the declining image and perception of America abroad at:

<http://my.barackobama.com/stories> Suggestions on foreign policy can be submitted to:

<http://my.barackobama.com/ideas> A number of groups have come up with innovative ways to support Barack. One group focuses on donating copies of Barack's two books to public libraries. Many people have commented on how reading the senator's books helped them decide on supporting him as a candidate.

<http://my.barackobama.com/page/group/AudacityofHopeBookDonationsforObama>

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Barack pulls in more big money backers (2007-04-24 13:26)

While Barack Obama's decision to run was fueled mostly by grassroots supporters including students, his broad support has encouraged many deep pockets to rally behind him.

Today news came of four more high-powered entrepreneurs that will raise funds for Obama for America.

Commodity trading billionaire Paul Tudor Jones II and former NY Knick Allan Houston will host fundraisers for Obama in Greenwich. Jones apparently was influenced by George Soros another hedge fund tycoon. Interestingly Jones has also helped Rudy Giuliani this election cycle.

Netroots to witness first online presidential debate

Yahoo, Slate and HuffingtonPost.com will host the first host the first digital debate in the fall to be mediated by Charlie Rose of PBS.

"With presidential candidates (making announcements) online and with campaign ads and fund-raising increasingly online, presidential campaigns are moving to the Internet at breakneck speed," Arianna Huffington, co-founder of The Huffington Post, said in a statement.

The debates are scheduled to be held after Labor Day, on Yahoo Elections, The Huffington Post and Slate. On January 1 and 2, MySpace will hold a mock election of candidates who maintain MySpace profiles.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama says Giuliani using 'politics of fear' (2007-04-25 09:14)

Barack Obama rebuffed comments by Republican candidate Rudy Giuliani suggesting the risk of another terrorist attack if Democrats are elected into office.

"Rudy Giuliani today has taken the politics of fear to a new low and I believe Americans are ready to reject those kind of politics," Obama said in a statement. "America's mayor should know that when it comes to 9-11 and fighting terrorists, America is united. We know we can win this war based on shared purpose, not the same divisive politics that question your patriotism if you dare to question failed policies that have made us less secure," Obama said.

Obama campaign hires big media agencies

The Obama team has enlisted the services of Omnicom Group's GMMB and independent SS &K to help with media strategy and buying.

SS &K will also help "on non-traditional media and outreach and mobilization of young voters," campaign spokesperson Bill Burton said.

GMMB is one of the largest media-buying agencies for the Democratic Party. SS &K handles commercial clients that include Anheuser-Busch and Citibank.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Online fund drive heats up again (2007-04-25 12:12)

The campaign is launching another online fundraising drive on the website:

If this rate of donation stays relatively constant there will be about 135,000 donors by the end of the second quarter compared to 104,000 in the first quarter.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

BarackObama.com floats over competition (2007-04-25 17:00)

According to alexa.com, the barackobama.com site continues to lead other candidate sites in reach, traffic and page views.

The Barack Obama entry in Wikipedia has fallen in the ranking of candidate sites from a high of third to seventh place possibly due to the fact that Obama's name recognition has risen according to poll results. As more people find out about Obama, they don't need to consult web sources anymore.

Obama's MySpace page, however, has continued its steady progress upward as is now rated as the 17th most popular candidate site according to alexa.com.

New contributors

According to a campaign email sent out today, about 90 percent of the contributors to Barack Obama this quarter are new contributors. That's good news especially if the older contributors who have not maxed out give again this time around.

X
X
X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack spars for debate (2007-04-26 13:54)

Barack Obama practiced for tonight's debate at the Washington office of campaign lawyer Bob Bauer, and at least one other session according to Lynn Sweet.

Democratic consultant Anita Dunn and Cook County Board member Forrest Claypool have been helping the senator prepare for the first head-to-head encounter of the primary election televised nationwide (on MSNBC).

Barack at University of New Hampshire Biodiesel Facility

Photos from <http://www.flickr.com/photos/barackobamadotcom>

UNH Biodiesel Facility

UNH Biodiesel Facility

X X X X

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Apr 25, 2007

1 comment

X X X X

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Apr 25, 2007

0 comments

UNH Biodiesel Facility

UNH Biodiesel Facility

X X X X

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Apr 25, 2007

0 comments

X X X X

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Apr 25, 2007

0 comments

UNH Biodiesel Facility

UNH Biodiesel Facility

X X X X

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Apr 25, 2007

0 comments

✕ ✕ ✕ ✕

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Apr 25, 2007

0 comments

UNH Biodiesel Facility

UNH Biodiesel Facility

✕ ✕ ✕ ✕

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Apr 25, 2007

0 comments

✕ ✕ ✕ ✕

Some rights reserved.

Uploaded on Apr 25, 2007

0 comments

X
X
X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Analyzing the debate (2007-04-26 21:43)

Now that the first nationally-televised debate is over, Barack is leading by a wide margin in the MSNBC polls.

These polls differ from the pre-debate favorability survey in that John Edwards does better in the latter than Hillary Clinton. This leads me to believe that there are a good number of undecided people taking these polls and not just netroots activists.

Of course, these aren't scientific polls. They might give a good impression of what people who watched the debate and have internet access think. But cheating is possible.

Personally I think Barack Obama did the best among the front-runners because he stayed on message.

This wasn't a good forum for anyone to stand out. They didn't have enough time to expound on their views. Barack especially likes to answer with examples and stories. I think only Bill Richardson went over the time limit more than Barack.

So nobody scored a knockout punch, but nobody fell apart either. Some of the second-tier candidates got a chance to shine a bit after being denied the spotlight by the front-runners.

Barack though came through as the true 'bring the troops' home candidate among the front-runners. Hillary sounded more like she was running for the Republican nomination.

Edwards had a hard time appearing as the populist candidate. He did a fair job of fielding the question about his expensive haircuts payed for with campaign funds, but was unclear on his position regarding hedge funds.

Obama managed to stay true to his campaign message that many of us have heard many times now. He was criticized about that very fact by some pundits, but it simply reinforces the perception that he is consistent. As for the idea that he didn't add enough substance to his answers that is just ludicrous. He didn't have the time to give much more than a general idea of his positions.

We can expect some of the major polling companies to release post-debate surveys soon and it will be interesting to see if they agree with the current MSNBC polls.

X
X
X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2009-12-12 10:06:20)
hm. thank you for this

Poll supports Barack performance in debate (2007-04-27 05:36)

The first scientific poll after last night's debate confirms the MSNBC survey of more than 100,000 respondents in declaring Barack Obama as looking the best of all the candidates.

A SurveyUSA poll of South Carolina voters found that 31 percent of participants thought Obama won the debate compared to 24 percent for Clinton and 14 percent Edwards.

Obama, I think, scored points with the party's base as was convincing as a leader truly interested in peace and with intelligent ideas on maintaining national security. He again emerged as the practical choice for those opposed to the war.

It was interesting that many political commentators characterized as "centrist" a debate in which all the participants at least appeared as against the war, supported universal healthcare and with most open to new taxes.

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama urges pressure on Bush to sign budget (2007-04-27 15:58)

Barack Obama is urging supporters through his website to pressure George W. Bush into signing the current bill approved by the House and Senate:

"The House and Senate united and passed a bill that would provide for our troops now and begin a redeployment from Iraq to bring them home.

"We're one signature away – just one signature from President George W. Bush would end the tragic mistake that has cut short thousands of American lives, cost tens of billions of dollars, and destroyed America's global moral leadership. But only if the president signs the bill."

X

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2010-08-22 00:33:19)
nice stuff here, very very nice

"AMERICA IS ONE SIGNATURE AWAY FROM ENDING THE IRAQ WAR."

~ Senator Barack Obama
April 25, 2007

A piece of paper will soon be placed on George Bush's desk in the Oval Office for him to sign. By picking up a pen and signing his name to it, he could end the war in Iraq.

The House and Senate passed a bill that would provide for our troops in harm's way and require the start of a redeployment to bring them home.

We're one signature away – just one signature away from ending the tragic mistake that has cut short thousands of American lives, cost tens of billions of dollars, and destroyed America's global moral leadership. But only if the president signs the bill.

This is how simple it would be...
Here's my signature:

X _____

Tell everyone you know how simple it would be for George Bush to respect the overwhelming majority of Americans and use his signature to end the Iraq War now.

If you see this posted somewhere, take a photo and email it to photos@barackobama.com. If you want to download your own go to www.barackobama.com/one

Paid for by Obama for America

This is the flyer being distributed at barackobama.com pushing the president to sign the current bill passed by the House and Senate.

The American voting public clearly sent a signal in the last election that it wanted to bring back the troops from Iraq.

Polls have shown that most Americans are against the war, started on false premises, and want a redeployment to begin. George W. Bush as a representative of the people is required to listen to the voice of the majority.

X

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack to 'turn the page on Iraqi disaster' (2007-04-28 18:50)

Speaking before the annual convention of state Democrats in California, Barack Obama said he would "turn the page" on the Iraq War.

News reports indicate Barack received a much more enthusiastic response than Hillary Clinton, who was however also greeted warmly. Four years ago, Howard Dean was wildly received by California's left-leaning activists at the convention, while John Kerry was jeered while defending his vote for the Iraq War. However, Kerry went on to win the nomination.

Things are a bit different now though. There is nary a Democrat supporting the war these days. Howard Dean is the leader of national Democratic party. Obama can certainly use the California enthusiasm in raising funds for the early states and for Super(duper) Tuesday. Obama will be holding fundraisers while in the state.

X

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

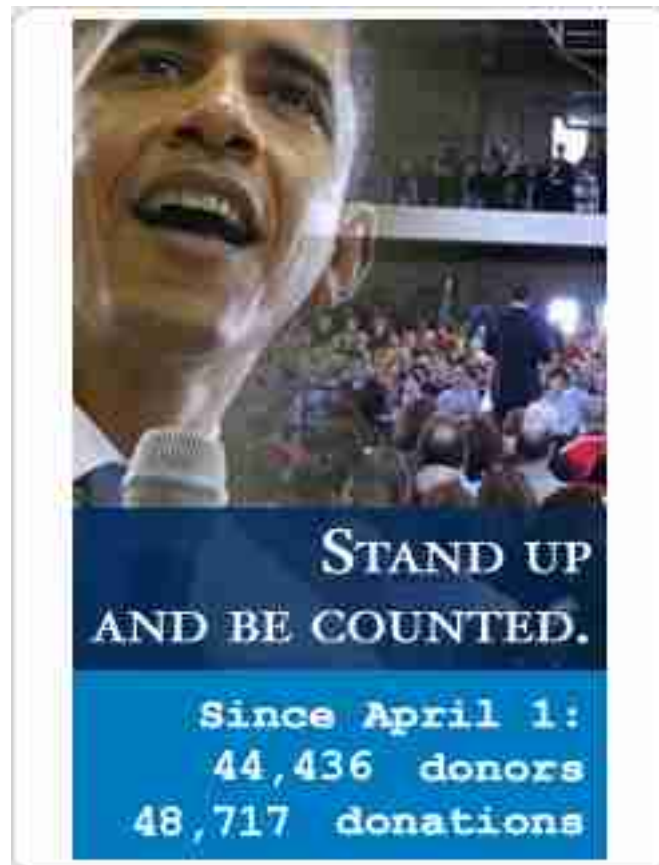

Barack's CA speech video (2007-04-29 10:21)

View Barack's energized speech at the California State Democratic Convention on Saturday in the YouTube video below.

At the event, it was reported that State Senate Majority Leader Gloria Romero and State Assembly Majority Leader Karen Bass will announce they are endorsing Obama. Romero joined former State Controller Steve Westly and San Francisco District Attorney Kamala Harris, both of whom have previously endorsed the senator, onstage during Obama's speech.

[EMBED]

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Biby Cletus (2007-04-29 10:34:00)

Nice post, its a really cool blog that you have here, keep up the good work, will be back.

Warm Regards

Biby Cletus - Blog

Obama cruising to fundraising heaven (2007-04-30 10:36)

With close to 47,000 donations online today, the Obama campaign is well on its way to topping the total 108,000 donations garnered in the first quarter of the year.

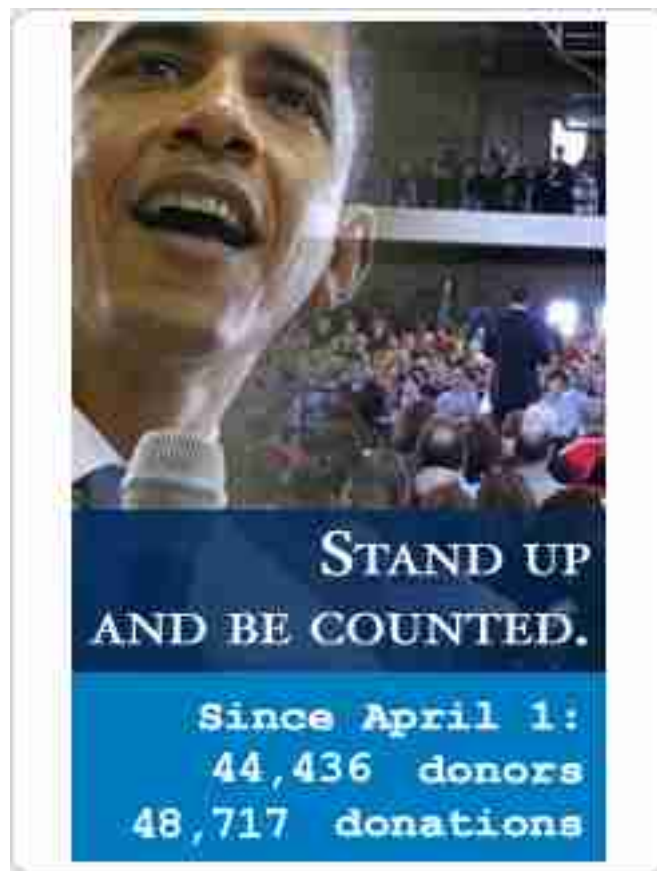

Black professionals are investing in Obama in a manner never seen before. When Jesse Jackson ran for president, there were fewer blacks in the professions and many did not see Jackson as a viable candidate.

BET.com users give Obama edge in debate

BET or Black Entertainment Television is the only nationwide African American television service. An online poll by BET.com found that most users thought Obama won the first presidential debate in South Carolina:

" In a BET.com users' poll, about 66 percent of you picked the Illinois Democrat as your favorite. U.S. Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton (D-N.Y.), the only female candidate, finished in second place with 28 percent of the vote. Sen. John Edwards (D-N.C.), came in third with 2 percent of the vote."

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack issues new appeal for funds (2007-04-30 15:56)

Barack Obama sent out a fundraising letter today. Actually two different letters of appeal. I post both below.

For good reason, many of us have become cynical about what politics can achieve in this country.

And as many Americans have turned away from Washington , we know all too well what's filled the void.

It's the lobbyists and influence-peddlers with the cash and the connections – the ones who've turned government into a game only they can afford to play.

They write the checks and we all get stuck with the bills.

They think they own this government.

But today, we're here to tell them it's not for sale.

Thank you for being one of the 40,000 people who helped us to continue our historic movement by making a contribution in the last thirty days. You understand that change happens not from the top down but from the bottom up. You understand that in order to make this movement sustainable, we must continue to grow.

We must show the keepers of the Washington status quo that the American people who are demanding a new kind of politics are not going anywhere.

Will you help us show them by spreading the word about our campaign to someone new?

<http://my.barackobama.com/makeitcount>

It's not going to be easy changing our politics.

We're divided into red states and blue states, and told to always point the finger at somebody else – the other party, or gay people, or immigrants.

People tell me I haven't spent a lot of time learning the ways of Washington . But I promise you this – I've been there long enough to know that the ways of Washington must change.

I'm running for President because the time for the can't-do, won't- do, won't-even-try style of politics is over. It's time to turn the page.

The people can count in politics once again. It's up to you to make it happen – can you spread the word about our campaign to someone new?

<http://my.barackobama.com/makeitcount>

There is an awakening taking place in America today. We are seeing crowds we've never seen before; we're seeing people showing up to the very first political event of their lives.

They're coming because they know we are at a crossroads right now. Because we are facing a set of challenges we haven't seen in a generation – and if we don't meet those challenges, we could end up leaving our children a world that's a little poorer and a little meaner than we found it.

The American people are hungry for a different kind of politics – the kind of politics based on the idea that we are all connected as one people, that we all have a stake in one another.

I learned years ago as a community organizer in Chicago that in the face of impossible odds, people who love their country can change it.

You and I, right now, can make that happen.

Thank you.

Barack Obama

—

For good reason, many of us have become cynical about what politics can achieve in this country.

And as many Americans have turned away from Washington, we know all too well what's filled the void.

It's the lobbyists and influence-peddlers with the cash and the connections – the ones who've turned government into a game only they can afford to play.

They write the checks and we all get stuck with the bills.

They think they own this government.

But today, we're here to tell them it's not for sale.

So far, just this month, over 40,000 people have stepped up to own a piece of this campaign and prove them wrong.

But the special interests and Washington insiders believe that they can still use their power and influence to control politics. They do not understand the power of the American people's will to change. They do not understand that when ordinary people come together, they can do extraordinary things.

They believe that hope is a fleeting feeling, and that people like you are a temporary bump in the long road of government of, by and for the privileged few. They are literally banking on it. Will you join us before midnight tonight and show that we are a movement serious about change? You can make your donation here:

Link

It's not going to be easy changing our politics.

We're divided into red states and blue states, and told to always point the finger at somebody else – the other party, or gay people, or immigrants.

People tell me I haven't spent a lot of time learning the ways of Washington. But I promise you this – I've been there long enough to know that the ways of Washington must change.

I'm running for President because the time for the can't-do, won't-do, won't-even-try style of politics is over. It's time to turn the page.

The people can count in politics once again. Now's the time for you to make it happen – be counted and make your donation:

Link

There is an awakening taking place in America today. We are seeing crowds we've never seen before; we're seeing people showing up to the very first political event of their lives.

They're coming because they know we are at a crossroads right now. Because we are facing a set of challenges we haven't seen in a generation – and if we don't meet those challenges, we could end up leaving our children a world that's a little poorer and a little meaner than we found it.

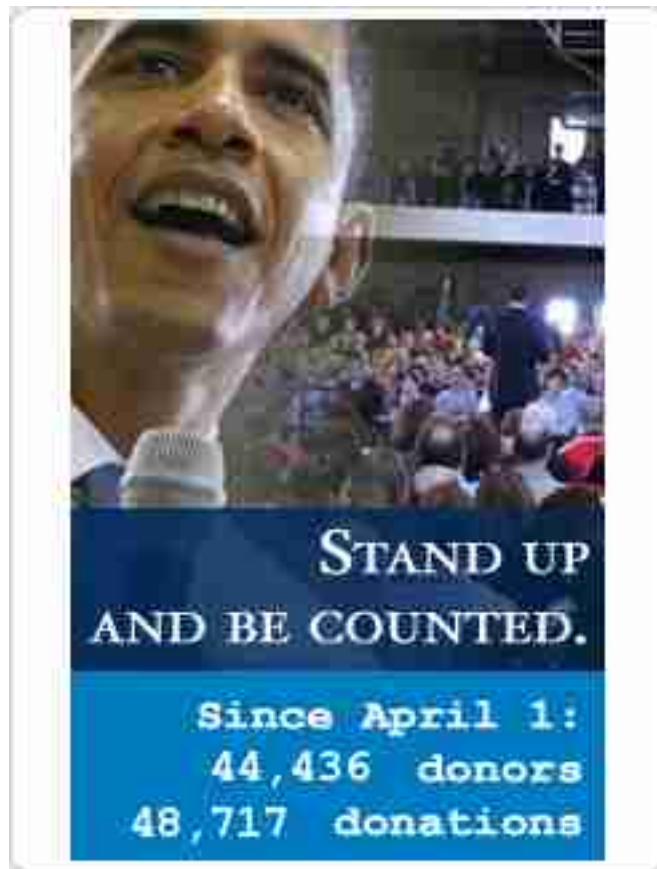

The American people are hungry for a different kind of politics – the kind of politics based on the idea that we are all connected as one people, that we all have a stake in one another.

I learned years ago as a community organizer in Chicago that in the face of impossible odds, people who love their country can change it.

You and I, right now, can make that happen.

Thank you.

Barack Obama

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Camp Obama and "Obama Imagines" (2007-04-30 21:19)

This summer the Obama campaign will hold internship camps to train volunteers and potentially paid staff for the ground campaign needed to win elections.

Here is an excerpt from the "Camp Obama" page:

X

Are you ready to take your commitment to Barack Obama's campaign to the next level? Would you like to intern this summer or fall for the Obama Campaign in Chicago or one of the early primary and caucus states? Join Camp Obama!

Supporters from around the country will join the campaign for a 4-day training, campaign activities, and learning about Barack Obama and his vision for America. Half of each day will be spent in trainings and the other half in campaign activities such as canvassing, phone banks, and recruiting volunteers. After the training participants will be evaluated and offered an interview for internships, entry level campaign positions, or simply a greater volunteer role. Shorter weekend trainings will also be organized for those with less time available to participate.

Please fill out this form and the campaign staff will be in touch with you shortly.

Approximately 50 applicants will be accepted for each 4-day training so sign up today!

Now if you're ready for some inspiration , watch this great video "Obama Imagines" from ShawnaV, a my.barackobama.com member. [EMBED]

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

1.5 May

Obama, The Conciliator (2007-05-01 07:21)

Shawna V, the creator of the "Obama Imagines" video wondered what she could do to help Barack in his race:

"I sometimes wonder how I can really get involved in this campaign and make a difference. I'm not a wealthy person that can tap the ladies at the country club for their donations. And I'm no longer a student in college with hours on end to volunteer and a seemingly impenetrable shield of optimism. I work full-time and I'm a full-time mom. I was literally nursing my toddler's flu symptoms while trying to catch snippets of the debate. I missed Obama coming to Tampa because I had to work. How in the world can I help get this man elected in what I feel is one of the most critical elections of my lifetime?"

Well, it didn't take her long to come up with a gem:

[EMBED]

Obama, The Conciliator

The New Yorker has an excellent in-depth article on Obama that breaks down how this man ticks. A must-read for Barackists and the curious alike:

"There are three things that Democratic political candidates tend to do when talking with constituents: they display an impressive grasp of the minutiae of their constituents' problems, particularly money problems; they rouse indignation by explaining how those problems are caused by powerful groups getting rich on the backs of ordinary people; and they present well-worked-out policy proposals that, if passed, would solve the problems and put the powerful groups in their place. Obama seldom does any of these things. He tends to underplay his knowledge, acting less informed than he is. He rarely accuses, preferring to talk about problems in the passive voice, as things that are amiss with us rather than as wrongs that have been perpetrated by them."

http://www.newyorker.com/reporting/2007/05/07/070507fa_fact_macfarquhar

Results of the Halle Berry primary

Endorsements flow in South Carolina Education Superintendent Inez Tenenbaum and more than a dozen other S.C. Democrats endorsed Barack Obama on Monday.

Joining Tenenbaum are:

Rep. Bakari Sellers of Bamberg; Rep. Todd Rutherford of Columbia; Columbia City Council members E.W. Cromartie and Tameika Isaac-Devine; Emile DeFelice, the party's 2006 candidate for state agricultural commissioner; former state party chairman Dick Harpootlian; Columbia activist and former state representative I.S. Leevy Johnson; Rep. Joe Jefferson of Berkeley County; Phil Noble of Charleston, president of the S.C. Democratic Leadership Council; Irmo Town Councilman Barry Walker; and Columbia activist Bud Ferillo.

X
X
X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Bush vetoes Iraq bill, Obama answers (2007-05-01 15:48)

President George W. Bush vetoed the Iraq withdrawal bill today prompting this response from Senator Barack Obama:

With one stroke of his pen, President Bush has stubbornly ignored the will of the American people, the majority of Congress and, most disturbingly, the realities on the ground in Iraq. Now we call upon our Republican colleagues in Congress to help override this veto and acknowledge what the President will not – that there is no military solution to a political conflict that lies at the heart of this civil war. Only the Iraqi leadership can make peace, and the best way to pressure them to do so is still a phased withdrawal of American forces with the goal of removing all combat troops from Iraq by March 30th, 2008. It is time to end this war so we can bring our troops home and redeploy our forces to help fight the broader struggle against terrorism and other threats of this new century.

X

X
X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Bringing up race again...and again (2007-05-02 07:34)

Recently, the "white guilt" and "Magic Negro" theories on Barack Obama's campaign have resurfaced in print and blog media.

Unfortunately, it's still difficult for some people to understand how a person, particularly a white person, could support a black person for president.

The simple history of the movement to draft Obama puts to rest these concocted theories rather quickly. Barack has a natural appeal to young people who played a very key role in his decision to run. He's young himself, idealistic in many ways and reminds many people of all ages of John F. Kennedy. He has very similar charismatic appeal.

Another important segment that drove the draft Obama movement were the opponents of the Iraq War. To a great extent this group overlapped with Barack's young supporters, many of whom have friends or family in Iraq.

Barack has anti-war creds going back to 2002.

The whole idea that Barack's support despite his supposed lack of experience backs up the "white guilt" theory goes against historical analysis.

The last two presidents were elected without any Washington experience at all.

George W. Bush served only one term as governor of Texas before his election as president. In comparison, Barack will have had 12 years in high elective office, two terms in the Illinois State Senate and one in the U.S. Senate, if elected.

Barack is a superb writer and speaker and this no doubt has drawn many into his circle. He has natural appeal to people of all races.

This appeal has been demonstrated recently by his growing support among African Americans, who certainly don't suffer from white guilt. Some polls show him leading Hillary Clinton among this population group drastically reversing Clinton's previous "slam-dunk" backing among blacks.

Many commentators have noted that Barack has a particularly set of skills and experience that are particularly relevant to our time. His international background, multi-cultural upbringing in Hawai'i, and his intimate understanding of Muslim culture are among the unique qualities he brings to the table.

His appeal to progressives is also natural given his background as a street-level community organizer.

We live in a polarized world where the old clash between Muslim and Christian has been revived. Barack effectively straddles those two conflicting worlds. We live in a country that is increasingly biracial or in some cases as in Hawai'i, multiracial. And the environment is becoming more multicultural all the time.

Who can deny Barack's multicultural appeal?

There is something compelling about Obama's life-story. It's not Horatio Alger. He did not grow up dirt poor or pull himself up out of the gutter.

But his youth straddled the globe. He dealt with questions at a young age that are highly relevant to the situation America finds itself in today. He was raised by parents of both Muslim and Christian background, though non-religious. His search for identity that led him from the beaches of Hawai'i to the streets of Chicago is fascinating and attracts people toward him.

Now we should note that there is also this confusion about Barack as a "Safe Negro."

Of course, no one votes for anybody just because they are "safe" so we have to see this aspect in conjunction with the ideas of "white guilt" and the "Magic Negro."

Barack is not the confrontational, fiery black reverend type made familiar by Jesse Jackson and Al Sharpton. However, that's the only way we can really consider him "safe."

Opposed to this view is the picture of Barack Hussein Obama (rhymes with Osama), the supposed "hidden Muslim" ready to turn America into a Taliban state upon taking office. Or the Barack Obama who attends an "Afrocentric" church. The Barack Obama who joined anti-war protests went it was not a popular thing for Democrats to do.

However, all the efforts to paint Obama as an "unsafe" candidate have had little effect on his ratings. Some thought when the senator stood up in the Imus controversy it would hurt his support because he was stirring up the racial pot. But they were wrong. There is little evidence to support the suggestion that Barack cannot talk about race, or overtly oppose racism.

Barack does not have a confrontational style, indeed his style is considered unusual for Democrats in general. But again, his unique approach of looking at the problem from all angles is something that separates Barack from the pack.

When we take off the race-tinted glasses, we find that there are many, many reasons to support Barack Obama as a person as a candidate regardless of race.

I think the real question that is perplexing the "Old Guard" is why even with these qualities are people supporting him in spite of his race. In the old way of thinking, race should be the primary, overriding factor, and old-way thinkers can't quite figure out what's going on.

X

X

X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

MySpace Hoopla (2007-05-02 14:58)

Media reports are buzzing over the Obama camp takeover of the Barack

Obama page on MySpace .com.

The action has caused what I would say is some of the first truly internal, rather than mischievous-related, rumblings among the Obama netroots crowd. Not surprising perhaps given the scale of his support. Here is a part of what I wrote about the incident on the official public blog:

This whole episode brought to my mind the concept of "esprit de corps."

Under one definition this term refers to those who have sort of a sense of belonging to a group, organization, movement, etc.

Another definition involves a belief in which the well-being of the whole is taken as more important than that of any of its members.

Some people see Anthony as selfish and greedy. After all he was volunteering his time just like the rest of us. Why should he expect to get paid any more than any of us? Why could he not see the wisdom of ceding to the official campaign for the sake of the overall effort?

Others see Anthony as someone who was wronged. Who had his creation forcibly taken from him, although apparently he was offered some compensation.

The rights of the individual come into play in this type of thinking. A dislike of top-down hierarchy.

Are there two different bodies here - one of the movement, and another of the centralized official campaign?

Or is there a head (official campaign) connected to a body (movement, grassroots support)?

Of course, I referring to the more committed Obama supporters and realize that a lot of people on this site are just checking things out.

On another front, Oprah endorsed Barack again this time on the Larry King Show. A Mother Jones article comments: " If Obama uses Oprah to chip away at Clinton's base amongst women, it's over. Obama should just start campaign for re-election ."

X

X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

More MySpace news (2007-05-02 20:55)

There are two important MySpace developments to report.
First is a statement from Joe Rospars posted on the official blog:

There have been a lot of questions and comments in this community related to our MySpace profile, and so I wanted to come by and clarify how we got here and answer questions.

Our campaign started quickly. People around here say that this has been like building an airplane in mid-air, having already taken off. This is especially true of the New Media operation. While the campaign in general is going from zero to sixty, our team is at the same time charged with exploring the new ways we can build relationships between Barack and his supporters, and foster relationships among supporters themselves.

When it came to MySpace, we decided to take a leap. We decided to make the attempt to combine the organic support and community-building of a grassroots effort with the official campaign outreach efforts.

In many ways this mirrors what has happened on the campaign's own web site. On February 10th, the day Barack announced his candidacy in Springfield, we launched My.BarackObama.com has an unprecedented public utility for supporters.

Even on the campaign's own web site, the organizing efforts and community-building by the grassroots has outpaced the growth of the traditional campaign infrastructure. On the site, over 11,500 people have created their own blogs about everything from their issue priorities to their personal experience campaigning locally. Thousands of events have been planned using the events tool (social events, planning meetings, small fundraisers), and tens of thousands of people have RSVPed to these grassroots-driven gatherings.

And over 5,000 grassroots volunteer groups have been founded – in many states, these groups will be the only organizational presence the campaign has. Even in the early states, staff organizers are hitting ground in places where volunteer groups have already been meeting and organizing. One of the first orders of business for new staff on the ground is getting to know the grassroots who have already started building the movement.

When it comes to MySpace, I'm not sure if a campaign of this size has ever teamed-up with a grassroots volunteer on this scale, but we wanted to give it a try.

Joe Anthony's great work was building community at the www.myspace.com/barackobama address, and so we contacted him.

At that point, the profile had about 40,000 friends, and to our delight, Joe agreed to work with us. Indeed, he seemed relieved to have some help – he gave us the password, and we began to exchange content, work together, and continue growing this community from the ground-up. We created images that he (and others online) could post, and began going through the process of preparing the profile to be "official" by combing through the content and establishing a plan to ensure that everyone who tried to contact the campaign through the profile received an answer. (People wrote messages and comments in huge numbers, virtually all addressed to Barack or the campaign – "Will you come speak at my graduation?", "Where do you stand on issue X?", "How can I help locally?", etc.)

We started talking to Joe about formalizing the arrangement, preserving his work building the community, and talking through how to preserve his involvement in the direction and development of the profile.

For a time, both the campaign and Joe had mutual access. Soon after, MySpace launched a promotional campaign to direct traffic to the official candidate pages. The campaign allowed MySpace to promote this unofficial profile because, strictly speaking, there was no official presence. And so MySpace began featuring the profile in candidate promotions – and the friends and workload grew.

We knew Joe had a full-time job already, and, early on, we floated the idea of moving to Chicago to work for us full-time (potential staffers were moving to Chicago and join the team at that time, and there were openings). I totally agree when Chris Bowers says that the New Media/online outreach efforts of campaigns should be a priority – and we have built an operation here in Chicago and in the early states that reflects that posture.

But Joe seemed to prefer to volunteer part-time from the outside with the campaign to continue building the community. He said he was honored to help out, and we were honored to work with him. We worked through the complications that arose: letting Joe know that he shouldn't work on the site from work, educated him about the rules governing campaign promotion of official Senate material, etc. Joe was right with us, and things continued down the path towards making this unofficial community into an official space run with help from volunteers.

As we progressed, we began to work-up paperwork that would codify this arrangement – ensuring that the campaign would have full access (what if someone put up an obscene comment during the day while Joe was at work?), and assuming the liability burden (legally, ethically, and politically) for what happened on the site.

At the same time, though, the community had skyrocketed. Nobody expected the grassroots to respond this campaign in such large numbers the way they have, and the rapid growth of the MySpace profile once the MySpace Impact Channel began promoting the various candidates is yet another example of the appeal of Barack. We were well over 100,000 friends, and the burden of administering such a profile became immense.

Unfortunately, at that point, Joe changed the password on the profile, and didn't give us the new one, like he had done in the past. This changed the previous dynamic, and we could no longer access the profile at a moment's notice if need be. We asked Joe what was needed to restore access, and subsequently we received the list of itemized financial requests that have been discussed elsewhere.

This made us uncomfortable. Every day, MySpace was driving tens of thousands of people to the page on the premise that this was more or less our "official" presence – yet we had no access to the content on the page, and no ability to be responsive to the thousands of messages coming in from supporters seeking information or action from the campaign.

We talked to Joe and made clear that we truly wanted to incorporate the community into the campaign's official presence, but that if these financial demands were a precursor to the campaign having access at all, that we would need to start with an official profile separately and have MySpace promote that instead.

And so it became clear that we needed to have MySpace point people at something we had at least basic access to – immediately. In MySpace, politicians, musicians, and other public figures have the right to their own name (www.myspace.com/barackobama, www.myspace.com/hillaryclinton, etc.), and so we asked MySpace for use of that URL and to ensure that any promotion of "official" profiles for candidates be directed to the new profile our team created.

The community of the 160,000 still exists, and we've made sure that MySpace will let Joe have access to the community he helped build. And we hope we can continue to work with him to make that as effective as it can be.

At the end of the day, this is all new for everyone – this Joe, that Joe, and everyone participating or commenting on it. We're flying by the seat of our pants, and establishing new ways of doing things every day. We're going to try new things, and sometimes it's going to work, and sometimes it's not going to work. That's the cost and that's the risk of experimenting. Joe launched this profile for all the right reasons, and for a while grew it with us.

But the ultimate purpose is building a community around the idea that ordinary people can come together and affect change in this country. Barack Obama is the candidate I believe can transform the process and make that change happen.

And, to the extent that more and more people every day come to that same conclusion, my bet is that both profiles will continue to grow.

The other development was a call from Barack Obama to Joe Anthony, the owner of the original MySpace page for Obama, as reported in the latter's MySpace blog:

Dated Today May 2, 2007

TC from Barack Obama (!!!)

I just received a phone call from Barack Obama himself.

He expressed his appreciation and we agreed that there is something to be learned by everyone involved at this point. (Frankly, I was a little surprised by the call, and was too nervous to remember any exact quotes)

I assured him that this is just a horrible thing that happened and obviously he wasn't responsible and shouldn't be held responsible. It's his campaign that perhaps mismanaged this whole thing. He of course stands by his campaign, but again. . . much to be learned by all.

I'm sure he has mixed feelings in speaking with me about this, but it was nice of him to call, and quite an honor to finally speak to him!

I guess I have mixed feelings as well, but it was still a great honor.

I urge you all to consider this situation carefully. It'll take time for me to work this out and decide if I will personally continue to support Obama, regardless of how I feel about his campaign's handling of this situation.

It's not right what they did to me and this profile, but it's also wrong to let this change your views of Barack Obama as a candidate.

After all it was Obama that inspired me to do all this.

What a day. I'll keep you posted. . . .

X
X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama gains ground in Hillary country (2007-05-03 08:38)

Harlem State Senator Bill Perkins became the first major elected Clinton supporter in New York to break ranks and endorse Senator Barack Obama.

"I think that his message of hope and opportunity is the right message. ... There's no question that folks in New York - and throughout the country - are looking for a change from the way things are being done," said Perkins.

Other NY elected officials have banded together to explore the possibility of endorsing Obama.

Barack makes Time's most influential

Obama was selected as one of Time Magazine's 100 most influential people. Hillary Clinton also made the list, but Barack got better coverage on the magazine cover:

X

X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

More details on Camp Obama (2007-05-03 09:28)

Camp Obama is training a number of Illinois elected officials with name recognition in neighboring Iowa to campaign for the senator there.

X X X

X

Illinois officials who will campaign for Barack Obama in Iowa. From left to right, top to bottom,
Lt. Gov. Pat Quinn;

Secretary of State Jesse White, who is also on the board;

Attorney General Lisa Madigan;

Comptroller Dan Hynes; and

Sen. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.) According to Lynn Sweet's blog, Camp Obama will focus on the following:

- Organizing sister city programs. One getting off the ground is between Illinois communities and Iowa. For example, Obama backers who live in Evanston or the Lake View neighborhood on the North Side would be assigned precincts to get to know in Cedar Rapids.

- Training volunteers to canvass voters – which means shoe-leather door knocking to find out whom a registered voter supports, leans toward, or wants to know more about.

Obama canvassers will be fanning out across the country. The idea is not to have strangers making calls and house visits but to use all the social networking tools available to make real people-to-people sustained connections.

- Building networks for low-dollar fund-raising.
- Opening an office in the Loop where volunteers can come, work and just hang out.
- Creating Camp Obama. No, there's not going to be cabins with bunks. But it will be in Chicago. Camp Obama is a training program – run by campaign professionals – being launched by the campaign. People who do well in the four-day training will be put in the pipeline for internships and paid jobs. Training topics will include canvassing, phone banking and recruiting volunteers. Camp Obama applications can be found at www.barackobama.com.

X
X
X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

More info arises on Obama Secret Service detail (2007-05-04 08:51)

New reports indicate that Barack Obama initially resisted advice from friends, including Sen. Dick Durbin, to ask for Secret Service protection, but eventually gave in:

"Although Sen. Barack Obama has been drawing enormous crowds and intense attention during his presidential campaign, friends say he has resisted the idea of a U.S. Secret Service detail for fear it would limit what has been a great part of his appeal, namely his ability to make a close connection with voters. But those reservations gave way to security concerns on Thursday, when the Secret Service assigned a team to the Illinois Democrat."

It appears that some race-based chatter on white supremacist websites also played into the final decision to request security. However, no specific threats against Obama have been reported.

Barack and Stevie Wonder at the First African Methodist Episcopal Church in South Central Los Angeles last Sunday.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack at Baton Rouge (2007-05-05 20:29)

Barack Obama spoke today at the National Conference of Black Mayors in Baton Rouge, Louisiana. The event had to be moved to the arena because of the large crowd and Barack received several standing ovations. A video of the speech is presented below along with the entire official transcript.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

X

Remarks of Senator Barack Obama to the National Conference of Black Mayors

EMBARGOED for Delivery

Baton Rouge

, LA-

Senator Barack Obama is scheduled to deliver the following remarks to the National Conference of Black Mayors.

As Prepared for Delivery:

It is an honor to be here at Southern University. It is a privilege to stand with so many of our leading mayors from across this country. Whether it's a small town or a big city, the government that's closest to the people is the one the people count on the most.

Our mayors are on the frontlines when it comes to housing, education, job creation, and finding new ways to strengthen our families and communities. They are some of the hardest working people in America and when a disaster strikes: a Katrina, a shooting, or a six alarm blaze—it's city hall we lean on. It's city hall we call first. And it's city hall we depend on to get us through the tough times.

Last weekend, I attended a service to commemorate the 15th anniversary of the LA Riots. After a jury acquitted 4 police officers of beating Rodney King—a beating that was filmed and flashed around the world—Los Angeles erupted. I remember the sense of despair and powerlessness in watching one of America's greatest cities engulfed in flames.

But I want to start today with an inspiring story from that tragic event—a story about a baby who was born into this world with a bullet in its arm.

We learned about this child from a doctor named Andy Moosa. He was working the afternoon shift on April 30 at St. Francis Medical Center in Lynwood as the second day of violence was exploding in the streets.

He told us about a pregnant woman who had been wearing a white dress. She was in Compton and on her way to the supermarket. Where the bullet came from nobody knew. Her sister-in-law noticed a red spot in the middle of her white dress and said that I think you've been shot. The bullet had gone in, but it had not exited. The doctor described the ultrasound and how he realized that the bullet was in the baby. The doctor said, "We could tell it was lodged in one of the upper limbs. We needed to get this baby out so we were in the delivery room."

And here's the thing: the baby looked great. Except for the swelling in the right elbow in the fleshy part, it hadn't even fractured a bone. The bullet had lodged in the soft tissue in the muscle. The baby was fine. It was breathing and crying and kicking. They removed the bullet, stitched up the baby's arm, and everything was fine. The doctor went on to say that there's always going to be a scar to remind that child how quickly she came into the world in very unusual circumstances.

Let's think about that story. There's always going to be a scar there, that doesn't go away. You take the bullet out. You stitch up the wound and 15 years later, there's still going to be a scar.

Many of the students in this room were just learning to read and write when the riot started and tragedy struck the corner of Florence and Normandy. Most of the mayors here know that those riots didn't erupt over night; there had been a "quiet riot" building up in Los Angeles and across this country for years.

If you had gone to any street corner in Chicago or Baton Rouge or Selma or Trenton or Arcola, Mississippi—you would have found the same young men and women without hope, without prospects, and without a sense of destiny other than life on the edge—the edge of the law, the edge of the economy, the edge of family structures and communities.

Those "quiet riots" that take place every day are born from the same place as the fires and the destruction and the police decked out in riot gear and the deaths. They happen when a sense of disconnect settles in and hope dissipates. Despair takes hold and young people all across this country look at the way the world is and believe that things are never going to get any better. You tell yourself, my school will always crumble. There will never be a good job waiting for me to excel at. There will never be a place that I can be proud of and I can afford to call my home. That despair quietly simmers and makes it impossible to build strong communities and neighborhoods. And then one afternoon a jury says, "Not guilty"—or a hurricane hits—and that despair is revealed for the world to see.

Much of what we saw on our television screens 15 years ago was Los Angeles expressing a lingering, ongoing, pervasive legacy—a tragic legacy out of the tragic history this country has never fully come to terms with. This is not to excuse the violence of bashing in a man's head or destroying someone's store and their life's work. That kind of violence is inexcusable and self-defeating. It does, however, describe the reality of many communities around this country.

And it made me think about our cities and communities all around this country, how not only do we still have scars from that riot and the “quiet riots” that happen every day—but how in too many places we haven't even taken the bullet out.

Look at what happened in New Orleans and along the Gulf Coast when Katrina hit. People ask me whether I thought race was the reason the response was so slow. I said, “No. This Administration was colorblind in its incompetence.” But everyone here knows the disaster and the poverty happened long before that hurricane hit. All the hurricane did was make bare what we ignore each and every day which is that there are whole sets of communities that are impoverished, that don't have meaningful opportunity, that don't have hope and they are forgotten. This disaster was a powerful metaphor for what's gone on for generations.

In New Orleans, the murder rate was one of the highest in the country—ten times the national average—well before the hurricane hit. Young men died far more frequently from gunshot wounds than they did from anything else. The schools were failing long before the levees broke. The city's poverty rate was twice the national average. There was a reason why the evacuation failed and so many people were stranded on their roof tops. The folks who were making the plans assumed that people had cars that they could fill up with gas, put some Perrier in the back, drive to a hotel, and check in with a credit card for a week.

Of course, the federal response after Katrina was similar to the response after the riots in Los Angeles. People in Washington wake up and are surprised that there's poverty in our midst, and that others were frustrated and angry. Then there are panels and there are hearings. There are commissions. There are reports. Aid dollars are approved but they can't seem to get to the people. And then nothing really changes except the news coverage quiets down.

This isn't to diminish the extraordinary generosity of the American people at the time. I want to thank the faculty and students here at Southern University for turning your field house and dorms into shelters for so many in the aftermath of Katrina. That act of kindness—the light in that storm—will never be forgotten. I want to thank the National Conference of Black Mayors for their efforts: securing more $125 million in New Market Tax credits to assist with redevelopment, and creating your own disaster relief fund that helped 5,000 families in 54 Gulf Coast communities.

But despite this extraordinary generosity, here we are 19 months later—or 15 years later in the case of LA—and the homes haven't been built, the businesses haven't returned, and those same communities are still drowning and smoldering under the same hopelessness as before the tragedy hit.

It is time for us to come together and take the bullet out.

If we have more black men in prison than are in our colleges and universities, then it's time to take the bullet out. If we have almost 2 million people going to the emergency room for treatable illnesses like asthma that costs us half a billion dollars; it's time to take the bullet out. If one out of every nine kids doesn't have health insurance; it's time to take the bullet out. If we keep sending our kids to dilapidated school buildings, if we keep fighting this war in Iraq, a war that never should have been authorized and waged, a war that's costing us $275 million dollars a day and the sacrifice of so many innocent lives—if we have all these challenges and nothing's changing, then every mayor in America needs to come together—form our own surgery teams—and take the bullets out.

Let's start with education.

We know what works. We know that if we put a dollar into early childhood education that we get seven dollars back in reduced drop out rates, reduced delinquency, reduced prison rates, more young people can go to college and get good jobs.

We know they work. An important study about an old program called Abecedarian, in which children from low-income families, almost all of them black, received full-time educational child care from infancy through age 5, said kids were three times more likely to go to college. They were half as likely to become a teen parent and smoke marijuana. In another study about another effective program at the Perry Preschool, which served low-income black children in Michigan, kids needed special education less often, and they were three times as likely to own their own home and half as likely to go on welfare. That early childhood program even helped the next generation.

So we know what it takes to improve our schools. We know that if children are learning in dilapidated buildings with teachers that are underpaid and textbooks that are 20 years old, they will not learn.

To change this, we need to fundamentally reform No Child Left Behind. The slogan is right, but how the law has been implemented is wrong. The slogan is good, but how they left the money behind is wrong. Let's get serious.

Let's finally make a quality education accessible to every American child so that every student can graduate from high school ready for college and work in a knowledge-based economy.

To begin the great transformation in our schools, we need to invest in the most important part of a child's education: the man or woman standing at the head of the classroom. As President, I will recruit hundreds of thousands of new teachers and principals. For what it costs us to fund the Iraq war for 30 days, we can recruit a new army of teachers and principals.

As President, I will recruit a new generation of science and technology leaders to teach our children the skills they will need to be competitive. We need to expand summer learning opportunities for our children emphasizing math and science. And students, who live in poverty, suffer from a learning disability or who don't speak English at home, should get the extra help they need and their schools need the resources to help their students reach their full potential.

I want to support teachers at all stages of their careers by increasing salaries across the board, improving incentives to get the best teachers to work in our rural areas and our most challenging cities, providing more resources so that teachers have more security and control over their classrooms, and by providing more opportunities for professional development.

There are models of excellence in many communities that show when you put a great teacher in a classroom, students can learn. There's Murphy High School in Mobile Alabama and Rufus King in Milwaukee Wisconsin. There's no shortage of great ideas; we just need to scale them up. We need to get past the old style of politics that only talks about education and start actually educating our kids for the 21st century.

And while we're at it, let's do something for the young people ready for college. Here at Southern University in Baton Rouge, I'm sure that this won't come as a surprise when I say that college tuition rates are rising almost 10 percent a year. Those increases have priced out more than 200,000 students in 2004. And for what it costs to fund the Iraq War for three weeks, we could provide each student with four years at a public college or university.

We all know how important education is. It's a passport to a better life. But millions of children are not given an equal chance to realize their own potential. And for too long, our kids—not "those kids," but our kids—have been asked to settle for mediocrity simply because of their zip code, the color of their skin, and how much their parents earn.

This is wrong. We must change. We must take this bullet out if America is to remain the leading force for good and creativity and innovation in this world.

But we can't stop at education if we want stronger communities. We need to provide economic opportunity in every corner of our country if we want to take the bullet out.

We know what it takes to develop our communities economically. Right now, the Iraq War is set to cost us $2 trillion dollars—that's more than enough to lay broadband lines from "Columbia South Carolina to Portland Oregon." What good is the Information Super Highway when too many towns and cities are still riding around in dial-up. We must connect the disconnected so economic opportunity is there for everyone—not just everyone who can afford it. It might not stop certain jobs from being outsourced to India, but this national effort would create jobs over 60,000 jobs a year over the next two decades and improve our country's competitiveness.

We know that we have to invest in transitional jobs too. When there are people who are homeless, veterans struggling with post-traumatic stress disorder from this war in Iraq, and thousands of children aging out of foster care, we can't expect them to have all the skills they need for work. They may need help with basic skills—how to show up to work on time, wear the right clothes, and act appropriately in an office. We have to help them get there.

That's why I have called for $50 million to begin innovative new job training and workforce development programs. This plan will also provide mentoring opportunities and let case workers help men and women make difficult transitions. It will coordinate with local employers, community colleges, and community organizations so that job training programs are actually connected to good paying jobs with the opportunity for career growth. This would help lift more people out of poverty and into the middle class.

There are models all across this country for how for how we can rebuild our cities and communities. There's a new idea coming for the Gulf Coast and the New Orleans area. Congressman Bennie Thompson of Mississippi, Emanuel Cleaver, the former mayor of Kansas City and head of the National Conference of Black Mayors, and other members of the Congressional Black Caucus will soon introduce legislation that creates a Gulf Coast recovery and empowerment initiative. It will employ people who fled the region to rebuild the region: the houses, the businesses, roads and bridges. It will give people an incentive to move back home and put them back to work. That's the kind of leadership we need to take the bullet out.

If we want to create more jobs in our communities, let's stop sending $800 million a day to some of the most hostile nations on the planet and end our dependence on foreign oil. We don't have an energy policy right now. That's why we're funding both sides of the war on terror, melting the polar ice caps, and letting the old style of politics make sure that Detroit doesn't produce more fuel efficient cars. And if we don't do something soon, more Katrina's are going to happen and we know which communities will bear the brunt of those storms.

When it comes to global climate change and developing the fuels for the 21st century, America must lead. I want our farmers to grow the renewable fuels and produce biofuels. I want us to lead the way on low carbon fuels. I want our young people to imagine and build the next great inventions. If we finally have a president who deals with this challenge, we could not only make our country safer, we could save the planet and create jobs throughout all our communities. We must meet this challenge. We must take the bullet out that's stopped our progress for all these years and bring more economic opportunities to every community. We can do this.

But while we're at it, what good is an education and a job, if there are only million dollar mansions and quarter million dollar condos and you can't afford a place to live? When our children are being priced out of the neighborhoods and towns they grew up in and when families cannot find safe places to live near their job, that's a bullet that's got to come out too.

We have to invest in housing again. In too many communities low-income families are priced out of the housing market. In fact, there is not a single metropolitan area in the country where a family earning minimum wage can afford decent housing.

We need to create an Affordable Housing Trust Fund that would create as much as 112,000 new affordable units in mixed income neighborhoods. We need to fully fund the Community Development Block Grant initiative. As a former community organizer on the south side of Chicago, I know how critical those grants are and we have to do more to strengthen the partnership between the federal and local governments when it relates to housing programs like Section 202 for all those seniors who lost their apartments when the hurricane hit. We can do this.

We must also do more to protect homeowners in this country. A recent report found that the housing market experienced its worst sales-month in 18 years and foreclosures are up 47 % compared to last year. Right now, too many people are caught in a nightmare caused by mortgage fraud and predatory lending.

That is why my "Stop Fraud" proposals require mortgage professionals to report suspected fraudulent activity and support state and local law enforcement in their efforts to fight fraud. It addresses abuses in the subprime loan market where 2 million homeowners may be at risk of foreclosure. And it provides $25 million for housing counseling to tenants, homeowners, and other consumers so they get the advice and guidance they need before buying a house and support if they get in to trouble down the road.

Even if we succeed in making housing and homeownership affordable for all, if we don't help strengthen the families that live inside those homes, then those bullets will make the American house crumble from the inside out. We have to do more to help families balance work and take care of one another. Let's help 17 million children by extending the child tax credit to low-income workers. Let's stop spending $275 million a day in Iraq and pass some tax cuts that people actually need.

If we want stronger families in America, then we have to confront the tough issues. When too many fathers think that responsibility ends at conception – when they have not yet realized that what makes you a man is not the ability to have a child but the courage to raise one, we know that our families are in crisis. That's a self-inflicted wound we all have to help heal.

Now there are ways that the government can help. That's why I introduced the Responsible Fatherhood and Healthy Families Act. It provides fathers with innovative job training services and increases access to the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC). It calls for an increase in child support enforcement by almost $5 billion over 10 years, resulting in nearly $20 billion in collection. That money will go directly to children and their mothers. But let's be honest, government alone can't solve the breakdown of our families. This is something we have to look to ourselves so that fathers become parents too.

We know what the challenges are in small towns and big cities across this country. We know what those bullets are. We've talked about them for years. What's stopped us from meeting these challenges and taking these bullets out is not the absence of sound policies and sensible plans. What's stopped us is the failure of leadership and absence of urgency and a belief that if we ignore our problems like discrimination and poverty that they will somehow go away.

For the last six years we've been told that our mounting debts don't matter, we've been told that the anxiety Americans feel about rising health care costs and stagnant wages are an illusion, we've been told that climate change is a hoax, and that tough talk and an ill-conceived war can replace diplomacy, and strategy, and foresight. And when all else fails, when Katrina happens, or the death toll in Iraq mounts, we've been told that our crises are somebody else's fault. We're distracted from our real failures, and told to blame the other party, or gay people, or immigrants.

That kind of politics has to stop. That kind of quackery has to stop. We don't need anymore faith healers and snake oil salesmen. We need some doctors to take the bullets out.

B

Before we can start that work, we need to end this war in Iraq, which has cost our country and our people so much. I opposed it from the very start, back in 2002 when it wasn't popular to be against this war. I opposed it because I believed strongly that it could lead to the disaster we find ourselves in today, with our brave young service men and women mired in the middle of a civil war.

This war never should have been authorized by Congress and it never should have been waged. And it's time, once and for all, to bring our troops home. It's time to recognize that American soldiers can't solve Iraq's political differences or ethnic rivalries.

That's why I introduced a plan in January that would have begun withdrawing our combat forces on May 1st-five days ago-and would have brought them home by March 31st, while forcing the Iraqi government to meet its obligations.

And this is basically the plan the President vetoed this week, defying not just a majority of Congress but the will of the American people. But rest assured, his veto was not the last word. If the President continues to stubbornly ignore the realities of Iraq, we intend to force our colleagues in the Senate and House to take vote after vote until we overcome his veto or he finally understands that we have to change course.

We need 16 Republican votes in the Senate to override a veto. There's a Republican right here in Louisiana who needs to vote to end the war. Tomorrow I'll be in Iowa and there's a senator there whose vote we need. I need the mayors and the students here to call their senators and congressman too. This is the only chance we have to truly end the war. It's not symbolic; this is real. Sixteen votes and we can turn the page on this war. Sixteen votes and we can start bringing our men and women home.

Let me just close by saying this. We can only meet these challenges together. We can only take these bullets out together. We can only strengthen our cities and towns and in turn transform our nation, together.

We know how the doctors do it. We watch some of these TV shows like ER and Gray's Anatomy. The doctors are in the operating room. One's got the scalpel, but others are watching the monitors and administering the IV. The nurses are on the job. The orderlies are on the job. There was a team that got the bullet out of that baby girl 15 years ago. She's got a scar on her arm, always will, but she survived.

America

is going to survive. We won't forget where we came from. We won't forget what happened 19 months ago, 15 years ago, 200 years ago. We're going to pull out bullet after bullet. We're going to stitch up arm after arm. We're going to wear those scars for justice. We're going to usher in a new America the way that newborn child was ushered in.

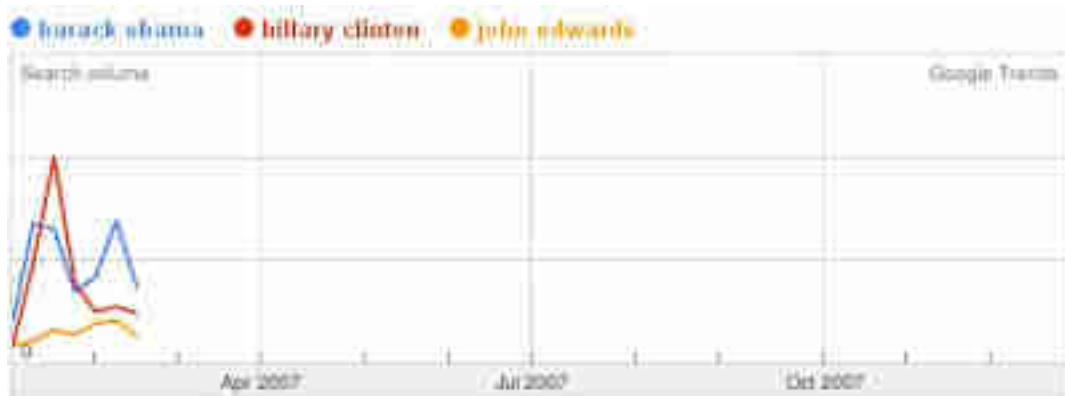

We're never going to forget there is always hope—there is always light in the midst of desperate days—that a baby can be born even with a bullet in her arm. And we can come together as one people and transform this nation.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Netroots continue to favor Obama (2007-05-06 08:36)

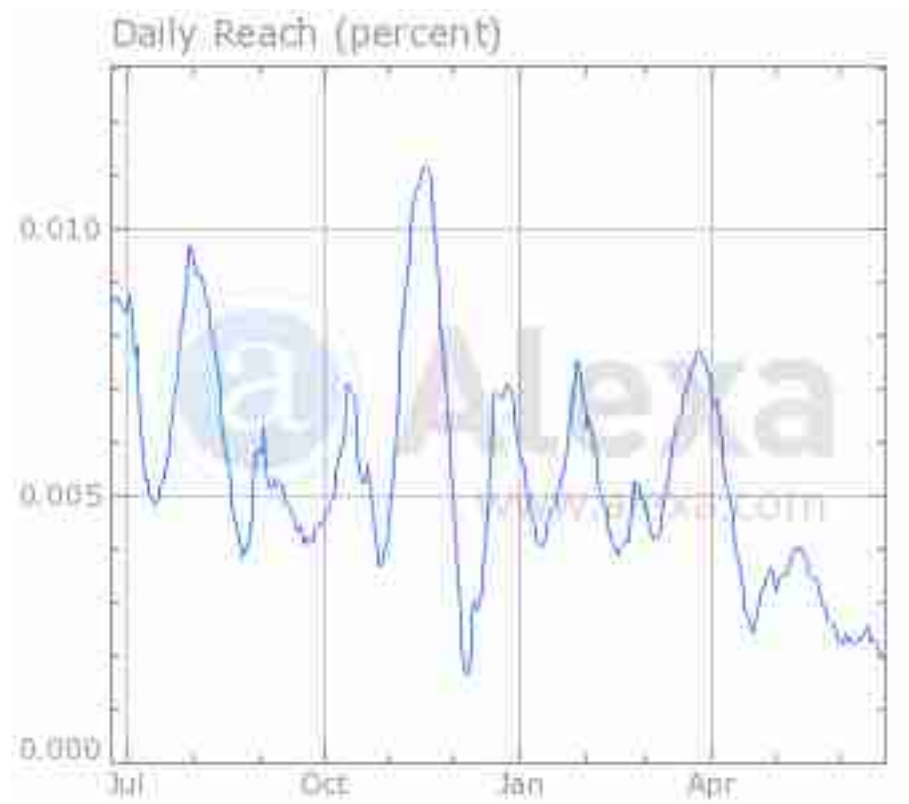

Google Trends tracks searches on the popular Google search engine.

In a head-to-head match with Hillary Clinton and John Edwards, Obama has generally been out ahead during this year up to the latest data in about March.

Alexa.com also continues to show that Barack Obama's official website continues to hover above those of the other top contenders:

Traffic Details for:

- www.barackobama.com
- www.hillaryclinton.com
- www.johndwards.com
- www.kucinich.us
- www.joebiden.com

Despite the controversy on MySpace, Barack's page has rocketed to ninth place as the most popular candidate site according to alexa.com:

Most Popular In Candidates

The most visited sites in all 'Candidates' categories. 1. Obama '08 www.barackobama.com

- Site info

2. HillaryClinton.com www.hillaryclinton.com

- Site info

3. John Edwards for President 2008 www.johnedwards.com

- Site info

4. Dennis Kucinich for President 2008 www.kucinich.us

- Site info

5. JoinRudy2008 The Exploratory Committee www.joinrudy2008.com

- Site info

6. Mitt Romney www.mittromney.com

- Site info

7. Mike Gravel for President 2008 www.gravel2008.us

- Site info

8. Wikipedia - Barack Obama en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Barack_Obama

- Site info

9. MySpace - Barack Obama www.myspace.com/barackobama

- Site info

10. Ron Paul 2008 www.ronpaul2008.com

- Site info

Notice that Barack has three sites in the top ten, and is the only candidate with more than one site in this listing.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Bush's low ratings could bode well for Obama (2007-05-06 18:29)

The recent Newsweek pool has George W. Bush's favorable ratings down to 28 percent the lowest ever since the days of Jimmy Carter.

This may be yet another indication of the unpopularity of the Iraq War as the poll was conducted on Mar. 2 and 3 after Bush vetoed the Iraq War bill on Mar. 1.

Most analysts appear to concede that the war will be the main issue of the election, and Barack is well-positioned as the favorite of the anti-war crowd.

Another good bit of news about that poll is that Barack was rated as the most optimistic of all the candidates, a position usually held by Republicans.

Obama is New York this weekend to attend four events including a fundraising dinner in Scarsdale.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack calls for greater fuel efficiency (2007-05-07 08:16)

In the text of his speech to political and business leaders in Detroit, Barack Obama called on American automakers to make more fuel-efficient vehicles.

"For years, while foreign competitors were investing in more fuel-efficient technology for their vehicles, American automakers were spending their time investing in bigger, faster cars," he said.

"The need to drastically change our energy policy is no longer a debatable proposition. It is not a question of whether, but how; not a question of if, but when. For the sake of our security, our economy, our jobs and our planet, the age of oil must end in our time."

X

Democratic presidential hopeful U.S. Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., speaks to local Democrats, Sunday, May 6, 2007, at the Walter Cunningham Center for Excellence in Waterloo, Iowa. (AP Photo/Charlie Neibergall via Yahoo News.)

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Taking it to the Streets (2007-05-07 16:09)

Barack Obama sent a letter today to supporters asking them to participate in a national canvassing day "Taking it to the Streets" on June 9.

The letter is below and at the end two interesting videos showing the southpaw Obama during his basketball glory days as 'Barry O'Bomber.'

✖ For too many people, politics is a bad word. It's not surprising since for many people "politics" means talking heads screaming at each other on TV, or special interests stacking the deck in Washington .

We have an opportunity to change that. When politics gets local, when the person talking is your neighbor standing on your front porch, things change.

On June 9th, hundreds of thousands of people will have that experience as we take our campaign to the streets in all 50 states for a nationwide neighborhood walk.

We're calling it Walk for Change, and its success depends on you. I'm asking you for something extraordinary. I'm asking you to lead a group of supporters in your community in a neighborhood walk to let people know about our campaign.

If you agree to organize a walk, we'll mail you the materials you need to start a conversation with your neighbors about being part of this movement for change. But it can only happen if you're willing to take the leap and put together a June 9th Walk for Change event where you live:

<http://my.barackobama.com/createwalk>

It's not common these days to reach out to a neighbor.

We're more likely to nod quickly and smile when unloading the groceries or walking the dog than we are to stop and talk about the things that shape our common destiny.

But the great issues of our day shouldn't just be topics to fill time between commercials on cable news. These challenges – ending the war in Iraq, solving the health care crisis, tackling climate change – affect each one of us personally.

And the solutions to each one will require personal investment from all of us.

That's why it's so important to create this dialogue in your community – to have a serious conversation about what matters most to your neighbors, and to share with them why this movement for change is personal for you.

<http://my.barackobama.com/createwalk>

We shouldn't be afraid. Americans everywhere are hungry for change, and waiting for someone to show them where change will come from.

On June 9th, if you organize a Walk for Change event, that change will come from your community, and the person showing the way will be you.

Thank you.

✖

Barack Obama

P.S. – As you read this, people across the country are planning their events using the My.BarackObama.com tools. If you're not ready to host your own walk, there may already be one in your community that you can join. Use our interactive map to search for one near you:

<http://my.barackobama.com/walkforchange>

✖

When Barack was Barry Obama ABC News via Yahoo! News - Apr 27 4:33 PM

Before He Was Barack ABC News via Yahoo! News - Apr 26 2:04 PM

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama and Miracles (2007-05-08 07:53)

Here's a great blog from Stacy Parker Aab of the Huffington Post:

Sen. Obama Spoke of Miracles, and I Hope Detroit Listened

Today, Sen. Barack Obama addressed Detroit business leaders – and anyone else who could snag a ticket to the Detroit Economic Club's sold-out luncheon. I was the guest of my friend Rick. Thank goodness, because I don't usually have the bank (or well, the desire) to roll with this kind of crowd!

I went in with reduced expectations. While deathly serious, I feared that a speech tailored to the auto industry might be deathly boring. Also, I know that the Senator is pacing himself; we wouldn't see the Glorious Obama of the convention. I didn't want to be one of those disappointed people I've read about, folks who attend small town-halls in Iowa and expect to be blown away, and instead get a man whose perfectly attuned for the occasion: serious, present, wonky, but not slam-dunking shots when bank shots will do.

Let me say this another way: anyone who expects Sen. Obama to give "I Have a Dream" speeches every-day needs to rethink their expectations.

If you read coverage of the speech, you'll read about his call to increase fuel efficiency, and more importantly, his call to radically diminish our dependency on fossil fuels. These words on paper might have seemed very mild, but in a room full of Detroit business and union leaders, they came off as strong, sober, and instructional.

I listened to his policy prescriptions. I will leave it to others better studied to debate their individual merits. I just know that I found myself not just moved, but electrified, when he spoke of the big picture; that we as Americans need to be pushed towards a higher calling, and now is the time. The message he had for us was this: it's time not just for another Detroit miracle, but for an American miracle.

He took us back to WWII. He spoke of Franklin D. Roosevelt, and how he dared to attempt to do something that even his closest advisers warned might be impossible: retool American factories to create the great war machine. He spoke of how Detroit was central to this American Miracle. And now, if we're going to "end the tyranny of oil" in our lifetime, Detroit must be a miraculous city once more.

And as the Senator later added: "expensive to do is not an excuse not to do."

Later, he spoke of President Bush, and how after 9-11, Americans ached to be called to sacrifice, to be moved to work together towards a common goal (beyond shopping and stockpiling duct tape).

I can already feel some of you thinking, well, what's so special about this rhetoric. Well, nothing. The magic wasn't in the speech. The magic was in the man making the speech. Any politician can say these things. Many of them try to move us. Many of them fail. Sen. Obama succeeded because of something that doesn't show up in a speech text – his formidable personal power, the sense conveyed that he believes fully what he's saying, and if elected president, he would push us to make these hard sacrifices that would lead all of us to a greater good.

I left excited. I left thinking that I finally witnessed Sen. Barack's magic in the flesh. But after further thought, I don't think it was magic at all. It was conviction. He came into that room like a man-in-charge. Not a blowhard "decider," but a man-in-charge with wisdom, who had strong ideas and ideals and the endurance to keep pushing and to enlist us, the public, as his infantry, to make these changes happen on the ground.

So yes, Sen. Obama spoke of miracles. I hope Detroit, and America, were listening.

http://www.huffingtonpost.com/stacy-parker-aab/sen-obama-spoke-of-mirac_b_47885.html

The Washington Post has a nice article on how a Barack Obama win would help bridge the racial gap. There is the now-recurring comparison to golfing legend Tiger Woods.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack speaks about Kansas disaster (2007-05-08 21:16)

Barack Obama noted that the National Guard did not have sufficient equipment to deal adequately with the tornado disaster in Kansas. Because of the ill-conceived war in Iraq, the all-volunteer Army and National Guard have been stretched thin.

In the Wichita Eagle, the senator said:

Governor Sebelius was right to question the diversion of the Guard's resources and personnel overseas. There's no question that this has undercut our emergency preparedness and our homeland security...

We cannot afford to learn a lesson about unmet needs each time a disaster strikes. The National Guard is the essential mechanism through which states prepare for and respond to emergencies. If your administration chooses to divert state resources to assist the military overseas, this gap should be filled in order to protect Americans at home."

Michelle speaks of husband's 'moral compass'

Michelle Obama drew crowds larger than some other candidates are her first solo visit to New Hampshire. There she mentioned that her husband has the type of experience that makes a difference, "'I know that experience is important but experience without the sort of moral compass is not enough."

She made specific mention of her husband's experience as a community organizer, civil rights lawyer, law professor and state lawmaker.

Unlike many other Ivy League lawyers including some running in the primary, Obama did not go to work for corporate America but chose to work as a street level organizer for meager pay.

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Conservatives focusing their sights on Obama (2007-05-09 08:23)

The conservative newsmag.com, which has previously published works attacking Bill and Hillary Clinton, will be releasing a report on Oprah Winfrey's influence on the Barack Obama race in their new print edition.

X Newsmag.com did commission a reputable polling firm, Zogby, to conduct a survey on Oprah's political influence apparently finding that the TV host has plenty of clout. She is described as the "most influential woman in America." Elsewhere, Ann Coulter said that a Newsweek poll showing Barack Obama leading all Republican candidates and by a wider margins than other Democrats as somehow aiding al-Qaeda. She did not explain her remarks. Rush Limbaugh has also launched a satire against Obama using the "Magic Negro" theme. These efforts help strengthen the view that Republicans fear Obama more than any other Democratic contender.

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama moves against climate change (2007-05-09 08:40)

Barack Obama is showing leadership on environmental and energy issues by introducing the bipartisan Fuel Economy Reform Act (S.767) today.

The bill requires automobile manufacturers to make significant annual improvements in fuel efficiency as much as 4 percent annually over an extended period.

May 8, 2007 – WASHINGTON, DC – A bill sponsored by Senator Barack Obama (D-IL) and a bipartisan group of Senators that would increase fuel economy standards provided the basis for legislation that passed the Senate Commerce Committee today. CAFE standards have not been increased for over twenty years.

“As the threat posed by climate change becomes more and more imminent, inaction is no longer an acceptable course,” said Senator Obama. “I commend Chairman Inouye and members of the Commerce Committee for breaking the logjam and moving us closer to raising fuel economy standards. We have the technology available to implement these changes today, now we just need the willpower to pass them.”

Provisions from S. 767, the bipartisan Fuel Economy Reform Act introduced by Senators Obama, Lugar, Biden, Specter, Bingaman, and Smith, were included in the bill approved by the Commerce Committee today. The legislation requires automakers to achieve significant annual improvements in fuel economy. The legislation also authorizes the National Highway Transportation Safety Administration to establish different standards for different types of cars, providing increased flexibility to automakers and leveling the playing field for the US companies that sell a broader mix of vehicles than their foreign competitors.

Senator Obama has proposed increasing fuel economy standards by 4 % annually as the long-term goal. Obama has also committed to improving the health of the domestic auto industry, by providing assistance for legacy health care costs, as it produces more efficient automobiles.

“I am committed to working with my colleagues to ensure that NHTSA discretion is carefully defined to ensure that we achieve the maximum fuel economy possible,” added Obama. “We must also address the key transition concerns of autoworkers by sustaining existing protections and establishing retooling incentives.”

Source: Senator Barack Obama

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama on Stephanopoulos (2007-05-09 19:25)

Barack Obama will be ABC's This Week with George Stephanopoulos and ABCNews.com is inviting users to submit video questions to the senator:

Welcome to the Be Seen, Be Heard Campaign 2008 Headquarters! We want you to talk to the candidates and voice your opinion.

Use your webcam, cell cam or camcorder to record your question for Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama. George Stephanopoulos may choose your question and put it to Mr. Obama in his interview. Talk back to the candidates and send your VIDEO to be part of ABC News' campaign coverage!

Upload your video below or send your cell phone video to us at seenand-heard@abcnews.go.com.

Watch this video to see how easy it is to send in your video submission Click here. If you have further questions, view the Frequently Asked Questions here.

*NOTE: Please wait until you see the confirmation page before clicking out of this window to make sure your video fully uploads. This may take several minutes. **

Michelle Obama in action

Michelle Obama, wife of Democratic presidential hopeful, U.S. Sen. Barack Obama, campaigns for her husband at a house party, Monday, May 7, 2007, in Windham, N.H. (AP Photo/Jim Cole via Yahoo News)

Michelle Obama, wife of Democratic presidential hopeful, U.S. Sen. Barack Obama, campaigns for her husband at a town-hall style meeting in Bedford, N.H., Monday, May 7, 2007. (AP Photo/Jim Cole via Yahoo News)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Ten Weirdest Obama-theses (2007-05-10 08:21)

Obama-theses are Obama hypotheses (hypotheses is the plural of hypothesis).

I've avoided the most offensive theories, so you can imagine. In no particular order of weirdness or wackiness:

Barack is a 'secret Muslim,' trained at fundamentalist madrassa schools in Indonesia who will convert America to Islam after taking office.

Related to the previous hypothesis, Barack is a "Manchurian Candidate," but replacing "Manchurian" with "Mussulman." He doesn't know that he has been programmed (brainwashed) to subconsciously activate as a Muslim upon election when he will force Britney Spears to wear the full face veil, etc. He now foolishly thinks that he is an UCC Afrocentric Christian.

Barack Obama is the Messiah. Not a messiah in an allegorical sense but the Son of Man, al-Mahdi, Neo, Second Coming kind of Messiah with capital "M."

Rather than the Messiah, Barack is the Antichrist. One website claims with reference to the name Barack Hussein Obama: "A simple [thought] play on these words will generate Barack=Iraq, Hussein=Saddam (Hussein), Obama=Osama (Bin Laden). And further: "...according to Overture.com (the parent of the Yahoo search engine) Barack Obama is the 9th most popular search incorporating the keyword "antichrist."

✕

As communist infiltrator. "The recent homage to director Pier Paolo Pasolini's body of work at the Vancouver Film Festival included the Marxist/Catholic/homosexual genius' prophecy that the ultimate leader of the Third World will be an African-American. Voila! Enter Senator Obama."

Barack as the "Magic Negro." Suddenly in 2007, white Americans must elect a half-black man to compensate for "white guilt" over slavery and decades of depriving African American thespians by acting in black-face.

Somewhat related to the previous hypothesis is the "Safe Negro" theory. In this case, Barack acts against African American interests by proving that racism doesn't exist when a black man is elected to the highest office in the land. Once elected, Obama will seek to dismantle affirmative action and deport Haitians from New York City.

Barack as black separatist. Upon election, Obama will create a government for the blacks, by the blacks, and of the blacks.

It would be surprising if I could not find at least one person who thought Obama was an extraterrestrial (notice his ears). I did find those who questioned whether Barack was a member of a secret society. That could signal a connection with the Freemasons and Annunaki, reptilian beings from Mesopotamian lore often thought to have outer space origin. Of course, membership in secret societies always opens the possibility of connection with the Illuminati and the worldwide Jewish conspiracy [gasp].

Obama is not really a black man but a white man from Scotland who through reconstructive surgery and genetic alteration appears as an African American. He thought up the ruse to help him break the ice with Michelle.

✕

✕

✕

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

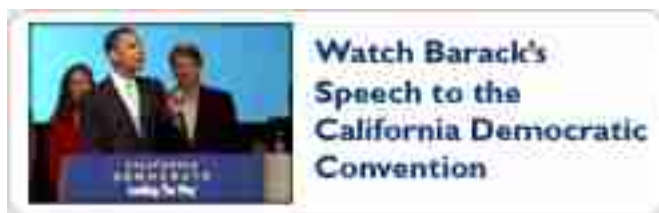

Michelle sends out first fundraising letter (2007-05-10 18:56)

Michelle Obama reportedly sent out her first fundraising letter to Women for Obama bringing up more comments about the Barack-Michelle relationship.

Michelle often states how she plays the role of 'earth-level repositioner' to Barack. These comments have led to some criticism including Maureen Dowd characterizing them as "emasculating."

How old-fashioned. The last president to have a strong wife was Bill Clinton. It was partly because of his relationship with his wife that Clinton was sometimes characterized as the first black President of the United States.

Let's hope Michelle Obama will be the first black First Lady of the United States.

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack defends calls on Grassley to override veto (2007-05-11 06:47)

Sen. Barack Obama defended his calls on Sen. Charles Grassley to override the Iraq veto after Grassley said Obama's efforts were "not Senatorial."

"This isn't about Washington etiquette, it's about bringing our troops home," said Obama. "This is how real change happens in America. This isn't symbolic, this is real."

"It's already working," said Obama, who also urged voters in Louisiana and Virginia to pressure their elected leaders. "That's why 11 Republican Congressmen went to the White House yesterday and demanded honesty and accountability from the president on Iraq."

Two Missouri Representatives to endorse Obama

Reps. William Lacy Clay and Russ Carnahan plan to announce their endorsements of Barack Obama today when the candidate comes to the city for two fundraisers.

"Barack Obama shares my values and he understands our community," Clay said. "His bold, positive ideas can have a real impact on closing disparities in health care, home ownership, academic achievement and equal opportunity."

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama on fuel and medicine (2007-05-11 14:29)

Here is the video of Barack Obama speaking before the Detroit Economic Club about energy policy, climate change and fuel efficiency. He notes particularly how Japan was building fuel economy vehicles for the future at a time when Detroit was still concentrating of big, fast gas-guzzlers.

[EMBED]

Barack spoke today at a senior citizen center in Iowa where he promised to go after subsidies for private Medicare programs. He said cuts to those subsidies could provide up to $150 billion over the next ten years to strengthen the public system and lower prescription drug prices.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Religious leaders, Newark mayor endorse Barack (2007-05-11 18:37)

Religious leaders from Chicago's South Side came together to voice support for Barack Obama. Video from the event can be seen below.

[EMBED]

Mayor Cory Booker of Newark, New Jersey endorsed Barack Friday. "I think Obama is such a strong candidate," Booker said. "He has a tremendous sort of ability. He is a very rare and unique voice."

Obama will attend three fundraisers in New Jersey including one at Princeton University, where his wife Michelle graduated.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack a hit in KC, sister launches official Hawai'i campaign (2007-05-13 07:43)

Barack Obama fired up a crowd of 3,000 supporters in Kansas City yesterday urging them to pressure at least 16 senators into overriding the Iraq War veto.

He also called on Democrats to help elect a veto-proof Congress in 2008.

Also yesterday, Illinois Representative Jesse Jackson Jr. addressed Black Democrats at the Alabama State Convention calling Obama's possible election "the most significant event in the history of the U.S." Jackson formally endorsed Obama during that speech.

Barack's sister steps up campaign efforts

Maya Soetoro-Ng, Barack Obama's sister in Hawai'i, appeared at Kawananakoa Middle School Saturday morning officially launching the independent statewide effort for the senator.

A message from Obama said that Hawai'i offered "a fabulous model for the kind of America I hope this campaign will bring about."

Barack will make a traditional visit to Hawai'i during the winter when his supporters will plan to organize a campaign rally.

X

Maya Soetoro-Ng of Honolulu, half sister of presidential candidate Barak Obama, with her husband, Konrad Ng, and their daughter Suhaila, 2, after meeting with supporters of her brother in Honolulu, Saturday, May 12, 2007. (AP Photo/Lucy Pemoni via Yahoo News)

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack's sister fondly recalls him (2007-05-13 08:54)

Here is a nice AP story from Barack's sister Maya Soetoro-Ng about growing up with her brother.

Obama's sister recalls him fondly Staff and agencies

12 May, 2007

By BRIAN CHARLTON, Associated Press Writer 2 minutes ago HONOLULU - M, ,), recalled that he could be "bossy" but was never mean to his little sister. "She embraced everybody," said Soetoro-Ng, 36. "There was so much good in her that there wasn't any room for smallness or meanness or violence." Soetoro-Ng, who was joined by her husband Konrad Ng and their 2-year-old daughter, Suhaila, said they planned to be active in the islands and would campaign on the U.S. mainland if needed in support of her brother's run for president. After Obama's mother divorced Barack Obama Sr., she married Lolo Soetoro and moved to Indonesia, where she gave birth to Maya. They later moved to Honolulu, where Obama was being looked after by his grandparents. "We both love a good story that captures the human experience in all of its complexities," said Soetoro-Ng, who now teaches history at the private LaPietra Hawaii School for Girls and teaches night classes at the University of Hawaii. Soetoro-Ng read a letter from Obama that said, "Hawaii is a fabulous model for the kind of America I hope this campaign will bring about, a place where different cultures can come together in harmony and a place that rises above the barriers that might divide us." "He's always wrestled with difficult questions," Soetoro-Ng said. "Part of his gift is he will grapple with these childhood questions until he finds answers that will work for him. It's important that he's not afraid of these more difficult questions."

✖ Maya Soetoro-Ng of Honolulu, half sister of presidential candidate Barack Obama, listens to reporters' questions after speaking to supporters of her brother at Kawanānākoa Middle School in Honolulu, Saturday, May 12, 2007. (AP Photo/Lucy Pemoni via Yahoo News.)

✖ Maya Soetoro-Ng of Honolulu, half sister of presidential candidate Barack Obama, poses with her husband, Konrad Ng, and their daughter Suhaila, 2, after meeting with supporters of her brother in Honolulu, Saturday, May 12, 2007. (AP Photo/Lucy Pemoni)

✖

✖

✖

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✖

maff (2007-05-13 19:10:00)

<http://www.thehawaiiichannel.com/politics/13310419/detail.html>

<http://forums.delphiforums.com/atheistrefuge/messages?msg=1851.6>

Senator Obama sends Mother's Day on official blog (2007-05-13 14:44)

For the first time, I think, Barack Obama himself wrote a blog entry into the official campaign blog. Here's is the Mother's Day message:

I would not be who I am without the mothers in my life.

My own mother, Ann Dunham, was the kindest, most generous spirit I have ever known, and what is best in me, I owe to her. My grandmother, Madelyn Dunham, loved my mother and me so completely that she rejected the bigotry that might have torn other families apart, embraced my parents' marriage, and helped raise me. Today, there is another mother in my life – the mother of my two lovely daughters – my wife Michelle, a woman who radiates beauty, strength, and integrity, and continues to make me a better person.

But our mothers deserve more than just a holiday. So on this Mother's Day, let's rededicate ourselves to lifting those burdens that make the difficult job of raising children that much harder. Let's care for them when they get sick. Let's make sure they're getting treated fairly at work. And when their working days are over, let's make sure they can retire with dignity and financial security. And let's also remember those mothers who can't be with their families today because either they or their loved ones are serving our country.

In the end, this campaign is all about doing what my mother taught me to do when I was growing up – to keep working until the world as it is and the world as it should be are one and the same.

Happy Mother's Day.

Barack

Democratic presidential candidate Senator Barack Obama (D-IL) kisses his wife Michelle after the South Carolina Democratic party's presidential candidates debate at South Carolina State University in Orangeburg, South Carolina, April 26, 2007. (Jim Young/Reuters via Yahoo News)

Barack's mother had a huge impact

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

The executive experience question and Barack Obama (2007-05-14 07:46)

Play

On the Trail with Barack Obama

ABC News via Yahoo! News - May 13 1:38 PM

Watch the video above of George Stephanopoulos's interview with Barack Obama. Stephanopoulos asks Obama about the question of executive experience.

The executive experience is a bit different from that of experience in general. It is based mainly on historical precedent. Nearly all previous presidents have had either some experience in the executive branch or some experience in the military.

In substance, the amount of experience either in the executive or military might be very limited though. For example, Abraham Lincoln, the president that Barack likes to compare himself with the most, had no executive experience.

Lincoln's political career closely matched that of Obama's. Lincoln did have limited military experience serving as a captain with the militia during the Blackhawk War, although not on the battlefield. He went on to lead the country during the bloodiest war in its history, and what may be one of its most decisive moments.

Another president often compared to Obama, John F. Kennedy, also lacked experience in executive government. He did serve for a little over three years in the Navy as a patrol boat commander during World War II, but only after his father used his influence to get him accepted. Kennedy had been rejected by the U.S. Army when he tried to enlist because of a bad back.

Certainly, one could question whether the previous experience of these leaders prepared them for the highest executive office in the United States.

Lincoln, who was known as the "Honest Abe" and the "Rail-Splitter" defeated former New York governor and U.S. Secretary of State William Henry Seward, Sr. and former Ohio governor Salmon Portland Chase in the Republican primary. He became the first Republican president by defeating among others, Southern Democrat John Cabell Breckinridge, a former U.S. Vice President, Confederate general and Confederate Secretary of War.

In the current election, none of the Democratic front-runners has executive or military experience. Bill Richardson serves as Governor of New Mexico and Dennis Kucinich is a former mayor.

Of the Republican front-runners, Rudy Giuliani is a former mayor while John McCain has command military experience and Mitt Romney is a former governor.

However, former mayors without other more significant military or executive experience don't really have historical precedent behind them either.

About the closest thing to executive experience for Barack Obama is his work as a community organizer.

It's a new thing for sure, but Barack will be a first in many ways. His community organizing background is what makes him attractive to many people.

But can Barack be decisive?

We should remember that although most presidents had some type of military or elected/appointed executive experience it most often was not of the type that prepares one to become President of the United States.

When then-Senator John F. Kennedy defeated then-Vice President Richard Nixon, we have to say that executive experience wasn't the deciding factor. Voters can decide on decision-making capabilities using factors other than past experience.

Leadership often involves charisma. The greatest leaders in history were reputed for their charisma. Obama has charisma.

Decisiveness can be seen in the manner in which a candidate behaves in head-to-head debates, on tough issues and during the grueling portions of the campaign.

Much has been made of Obama's answer to the question on a terrorist attack during the South Carolina debate, but in fact his reply was the most cool-headed and methodical of them all.

Rather than responding with the expected emotional reaction, Obama said first he would respond to the victims of the attack, the people who are already in need. Then, he would seek to secure the nation against any possible further attack. After that, he would first seek to identify and target those who carried out the attack, not simply bomb the capitals of Iran, Syria or Libya for the sake of getting your licks in.

The idea is to stop the terrorists and not pile skulls to the sky thinking this will deter further attacks. The terrorists know that unfocused retaliation against super-generalized "enemies" only helps their cause. Look at what happened in Iraq.

✕

✕

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama names New Hampshire co-chairs (2007-05-14 21:52)

Lobbyist Jim Demers, State Senator Martha Fuller Clark, activist Mary Rauh, and adviser to governors Ned Helms were all named as New Hampshire co-chairs for Obama on Monday in the state hosting the nation's first primary.

The announcement comes ahead of a statewide canvassing effort in New Hampshire. Obama also received today the endorsement of Jersey City Mayor Jerrimiah Healy to go along with his previous endorsement by Newark Mayor Cory Booker.

According to reports, Obama gave an impressive speech in Kansas City over the weekend.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack will announce new student loan proposal (2007-05-15 08:47)

Barack Obama will announce a new student loan plan today as part of his program to make college more affordable. Obama wants to cut federal subsidies to banks designed to ensure a profit for the private institutions and instead channel this money into more loans. Loans made from banks and those obtained directly from the Education Department charge the same interest and fees.

Obama fares well in South Carolina poll

Although one could get seasick from following polls this early, the Obama camp did receive some heartening news from South Carolina.

An InsiderAdvantage and Majority Opinion shows Senator Obama leads Democrats with 31 percent of the vote, ahead of Senator Clinton's 27 percent and former North Carolina Senator John Edwards' 16 percent. About 21 percent of voters still undecided among the Democrats in South Carolina.

Indeed, it's highly likely in all other polls that don't include an "Undecided" category, that many of the respondents will sway back and forth before election time.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

16 votes to end the war (2007-05-15 09:52)

David Plouffe, campaign manager for Obama for America, sent out an appeal today asking supporters to apply more pressure on the Senate, which needs 16 more votes to override President Bush's veto of the Iraq War bill.

Dear Paul,

 Barack has been traveling across the country asking people to speak out and let their Senators know that it's time to end the Iraq war.

One Republican colleague has already called this unsenatorial. But this isn't about Washington etiquette, it's about bringing our troops home.

This isn't a game. We need just 16 additional votes to override the president's veto and bring to a close this sad chapter in American history.

It's going to take some convincing, but Senators need to hear from people in their states that they can join us to bring a responsible end to the war.

That's where you come in. In your state, an incumbent Senator who voted against ending the war will face a re-election battle in 2008. They will have to make clear very soon whether they will continue to block efforts to bring the troops home.

Will you speak out now and add your voice to the growing public pressure to end the war?

Link

With one signature, George Bush could have ended this war. Instead, he vetoed the legislation, ignoring the reality on the ground in Iraq yet again.

But that will not be the last word if the American people have anything to say about it. In the Senate, we need just 16 additional votes to override the veto and end the Iraq war.

This isn't the time to trust the president to do the right thing. It's time to end this war, and across the country people need to speak out and let their Senators know.

No one of us can do it alone, and it's not going to happen tomorrow. But a movement to create the kind of change we need starts with you.

Thank you,
David

David Plouffe
Campaign Manager
Obama for America

The link above directs them to a form where they can send a message to one of the Republican senators.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama will cut Iraq War funding (2007-05-15 15:43)

Senator Barack Obama publicly expressed support for a cutoff of Iraq War funding if Congress does not override Bush's veto of the war bill.

Almost simultaneously, Senator Hillary Clinton also stated that she would vote for a cutoff to bring the Iraq War to a close.

These moves put tremendous pressure on Republicans to agree to a smooth redeployment of troops from Iraq.

Obama still the only to release tax records

So far, Barack Obama is the only candidate that has turned over his tax returns for public scrutiny. However, Senator Chris Dodd stated on Tuesday that he too will release his tax records.

Hillary Clinton and a number of other candidates filed extensions Tuesday asking for more time in disclosing personal finances for presidential candidates.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack leads call for veto override (2007-05-16 09:17)

Senator Barack Obama continued to rally supporters for a veto-proof majority Iraq War bill.

Lately, Obama spoke on the subject in St. Louis:

[EMBED]

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

baracktivor (2007-05-16 18:19)

I've designed a page to help Barack Obama supporters with netroots campaigning. The "beta" version can be found at:

baracktivor

In the left-hand column are two modules containing breaking news and blogs taken from Yahoo Pipes.

At the top is a Google search engine using my AdSense account, so maybe I can pay for the hosting service. To the right of the search engine is a module containing a YouTube feed of videos with the Barack Obama tag. Users can rate up good videos so they appear higher in the results page.

In the center is a viewer that can be used for various purposes. There is an email program for sending messages to major media outlets and also to elected officials.

Clicking on the button in the upper-right hand corner of each module produces either a full-browser view or goes back to the original size if in full-screen mode.

In the bottom right-hand corner of each module is a drag resize button that works ok with Internet Explorer but still has problems with Mozilla (Firefox and Netscape) browsers.

This is a work-in-progress that I hope will be useful come crunch time in helping people counter the spin and mudslinging that is sure to come.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2007-05-17 07:49)

Some blogs today have attacked candidate Barack Obama's contentions this morning on an MSNBC interview where he contrasted his views on the war with Hillary Clinton's.

The most common criticism is that Barack and Hillary have similar voting records on the Iraq War in the U.S. Senate. What makes this criticism unfair is that firstly it has been much more popular to have an anti-war stance in the last few years.

When Obama came out against the war in 2002, the Democratic leadership was nearly lockstep in favor of the war. I can remember people saying it would be political suicide except for those in the "safest" districts to voice opposition, especially those looking for higher office.

Obama though said back then that once in the fighting it would be very difficult to get out. He has always supported giving troops what they need to accomplish their job as safely as possible.

So the fact that he has voted for funding is not inconsistent with what he has been saying all along.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Memories and Quote of the Day (2007-05-17 14:33)

Replying to a question on MSNBC this morning on whether he would consider Oprah Winfrey as a running mate, Sen. Barack Obama said:

"I think Oprah is far more powerful than a vice president. I think that would be a demotion for her."

In another interesting bit of information, when asked, along with 14 other presidential candidates what item reminded him most of where he came from, Obama mentioned a photograph of Oahu in his Senate office.

The pictures shows an area on the South Shore of Oahu with waves crashing off a cliff near where the ashes of his mother were scattered.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama leads in staff diversity (2007-05-18 07:20)

Senators Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton have the most minorities and women among their campaign staff.

Obama has six minorities and six women among its top 14 top staff members. Obama's political and policy directors are black, he has a Hispanic national field director, and his finance director is a woman. One of his pollsters is black.

The senator is also known to have one of the Senate's most diverse staffs.

Barack closes in on Hillary in New Hampshire, Edwards in Iowa

The new Zogby state polls show that Barack Obama has closed to a statistical tie with Hillary Clinton in New Hampshire and John Edwards in Iowa trailing both by just three points.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2007-05-18 12:53)

Barack Obama supporters are preparing to donate some shoe-leather to the campaign when they hit the streets for the first nationwide canvassing

Barack supporters prepare to pound the pavement (2007-05-18 13:33)

Obama supporters will contribute some shoe leather on June 9 when the nationwide canvassing event takes place. As a prelude, the campaign will hold a trial run in New Hampshire over the weekend. Campaign manager David Plouffe sent out this letter to supporters urging them to organize their own walks for Obama:

✖ Real change starts when politics gets local, and in just over a week since we announced the June 9th Walk for Change, over 800 neighborhood walks have been planned in communities across the country.

Is there one near you?

We've built an interactive map of the events planned so far to help you find out:

<http://my.barackobama.com/walkforchange>

If there's no neighborhood walk near you yet, you can be the one to step up and take the lead in your community. It's not too late to plan your own Walk for Change canvass.

What does it mean to be a Walk for Change organizer?

It means you'll lead a group of supporters going door to door on Saturday, June 9th, introducing people to Barack Obama .

We'll mail you the literature to hand out and offer support as you plan your event. We've even built an online resource center to help answer your questions right away.

If you're ready to take the leap and lead your own neighborhood walk, just click here to get started:

<http://my.barackobama.com/walkforchange>

No presidential campaign has ever attempted a nationwide mobilization on this scale at this early stage.

But because of the movement that has risen up to drive this campaign, we have a unique opportunity to take our message of hope and community to hundreds of thousands of people in a single afternoon.

It's up to all of us to take responsibility for building this movement locally, and June 9th is the day you can be the face of this campaign in your community.

Thank you,

✖

David Plouffe
Campaign Manager
Obama for America

P.S. – If you can't canvass on June 9th, you can still be part of the nationwide Walk for Change. You can make certain that everyone walking that Saturday afternoon is equipped with all the supplies they need to bring Barack Obama 's message of hope face-to-face, person-to-person by making a donation now. Please donate now to help make June 9th a success:

✖

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Sacramento Walks for Change (2007-05-18 21:52)

Here's a YouTube video I prepared highlighting some of Sacramento for Obama's preparations for the Walk for Change on June 9.

There's a little slide show at the end that I used to practice for making future Obama commercials.

[EMBED]

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=eh3LoWr7IBQ>

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Volunteers knock on doors for Barack in New Hampshire (2007-05-19 11:31)

Despite the chilly and wet weather, hundreds of Barack Obama supporters engaged in an unusually early voter canvas in New Hampshire Saturday.

Some 554 supporters, a large number for this primary state, targeted six strongly Democratic neighborhoods going door to door with Obama's message.

The campaign also prepares to hold the first Camp Obama training sessions at the Chicago headquarters. The effort will introduce young volunteers to grassroots campaigning including phone banking and precinct walking.

Speaking to students at a New Hampshire high school Saturday that they needed to build character after graduting.

"There's often an assumption on days like today that growing up is purely a function of age, that becoming an adult is an inevitable progression that can be measured by a series of milestones _ college graduation or your first job or the first time you throw a party where you also serve food," Obama said.

"And yet, maturity does not come from any one occasion. It emerges as a quality of character."

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack wins Howard County straw poll (2007-05-20 09:37)

Senator Barack Obama narrowly defeated fellow Sen. Hillary Clinton in a Howard County, Maryland straw poll of active Democrats.

The poll was conducted at the annual Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner Thursday. Obama got 65 votes to Clinton's 61 and 56 for former Sen. John Edwards.

Last night, Obama attended big fundraisers by hedge fund mogul Paul Tudor Jones II and Allan Houston, the highest paid player in New York Knicks history.

The Houston dinner attracted about 150 people with tickets ranging from $1,000 to $2,300. The Jones fundraiser had 300 guests paying a minimum of $2,300.

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Barack is not a corporate (2007-05-20 16:34)

Michelle Obama praises husband on Good Morning America (2007-05-20 16:57)

In a two-part interview that begins on Tuesday, Michelle Obama talks about her husband's candidacy on "Good Morning America."

"I think that the American people ... are ready to have somebody that they can believe in and that they can connect to," Obama tells anchor Robin Roberts. "And I think that if Barack does what he's supposed to do and this campaign is ... run well, and he can be clear and articulate in his message, ... he'll be the next president of the United States and ... we will be swearing him in in '08."

"This [is a] rare opportunity where spirit, vision, hope, uniqueness, experience combine in this one individual at this point in time," she continued. "It's his time."

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Will Barack win? (2007-05-21 06:25)

A new Rasmussen poll asks who people think will win rather than the usual who they will vote for.

For the fourth time in five weeks, a national Rasmussen Reports telephone survey of Likely Democratic Primary Voters shows Senators Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama within two points of each other. This week, it's Clinton 35 % Obama 33 %. Former Senator John Edwards is in third place with 14 % support. New Mexico Governor Bill Richardson is a distant fourth at 3 %.

http://rasmussenreports.com/public_content/politics/49_say_obama_may_be_next_president

Also, the statistic I think is more important now than the head-to-head match-ups is favorable ratings:

Favorable/Unfavorable

Barack Obama 55 %/ 37 %

John Edwards 55 % / 42 %

Hillary Clinton 50 % / 49 %

Unfortunately, Rasmussen doesn't have favorable/unfavorable ratings among just Democratic voters.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2007-05-21 06:25)

A new Rasmussen poll asks who people think will win rather than the usual who they will vote for.

For the fourth time in five weeks, a national Rasmussen Reports telephone survey of Likely Democratic Primary Voters shows Senators Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama within two points of each other. This week, it's Clinton 35 % Obama 33 %. Former Senator John Edwards is in third place with 14 % support. New Mexico Governor Bill Richardson is a distant fourth at 3 %.

http://rasmussenreports.com/public_content/politics/49_say_obama_may_be_next_president

Also, the statistic I think is more important now than the head-to-head match-ups is favorable ratings:

Favorable/Unfavorable

Barack Obama 55 %/ 37 %

John Edwards 55 % / 42 %

Hillary Clinton 50 % / 49 %

Unfortunately, Rasmussen doesn't have favorable/unfavorable ratings among just Democratic voters.

Barack on bundling (2007-05-21 08:02)

Here's an excellent op-ed piece by Barack Obama on the practice of bundling.

He supports full disclosure by lobbyists who bundle, and the campaign refuses to accept money bundled by lobbyists. Obama also discloses all data on money bundled by anyone including corporate executives.

Note that not all money bundled by corporate leaders necessarily represents any particular interest or corporation. Often bundlers simply invite all of their wealthy friends to their fundraisers. Some of these friends may have conflicting interests.

Also, not every contributor from a corporation has necessarily been "bundled" by representatives of a corporation. Contributors who work for a big auto manufacturer, for example, may be workers who also belong to the union. They may have very different views on issues that a contributor from the same corporation who works as an executive.

The problem with bundling money

<http://www.chicagotribune.com/news/nationworld/chi-oped0521obamamay21,1,3286>

291.story?coll=chi-newsnationworld-hed

By Barack Obama. Sen. Barack Obama (D-Ill.) is a candidate for president of the United States

Published May 21, 2007

When it comes to reforming Washington and limiting the power of special interests, a man who died more than 60 years ago had exactly the right idea. Supreme Court Justice Louis Brandeis said, "Sunlight is said to be the best of disinfectants; electric light the most efficient policeman."

Brandeis was a progressive responding to the excesses of the Gilded Age. Nearly a century later, we find Washington in need of a lot of sunlight and disinfectant.

Today, powerful special interests run Washington. The Republican Party's infamous "K Street Project" put lobbyists at the center of policymaking and political fundraising. The drug and insurance industries alone have spent more than $1 billion on lobbying and campaign contributions in the last 10 years. And, for the most part, they have achieved the results they wanted. It's no wonder that, last November, Americans cast a strong vote for change.

In response, Democrats in the House and Senate, with significant Republican support, have adopted new restrictions on the power of lobbyists. But one significant reform remains undone: shedding sunlight on the practice of "bundling" campaign contributions.

Under current campaign-finance rules, an individual lobbyist is limited to writing a personal check for a maximum of $2,300. But that's where the bundling starts. A lobbyist can collect check after check from other individuals and deliver the entire bundle to a candidate for office. Sometimes those stacks contain $20,000, $100,000 or even $250,000. As the rules stand today, lobbyists have to only report their own contributions – not the money they've raised from others. These lobbyists are delivering millions in bundled contributions to the very politicians from whom they are seeking favorable votes or legislation. That shouldn't remain a secret. The public has a right to know.

It is no coincidence that the best bundlers are often granted the greatest access, and access is power in Washington. When the bundlers are lobbyists, we must require full disclosure because they and their clients have a financial stake in the outcome of specific legislation. That gets in the way of public officials doing the business of the people – all of the people, not just a few.

We can't stop individual lobbyists from raising money. But we certainly can make it clear to the public whom they are raising it for – and from. This will help clarify the link between campaign cash and decisions made in Washington.

The Senate passed legislation last year that would make lobbyists disclose how much they bundle and whom they bundle it from. It would require quarterly reporting of all contributions that a lobbyist collected or arranged that total more than $200 in a calendar year. This includes not only campaign contributions, but also contributions to presidential libraries, inaugural committees and lawmakers' charities. The law doesn't call for a complete halt in bundling. It just calls on lobbyists who have a stake in the outcome of legislation to disclose that information to the public.

The House is about to vote on a similar measure. Some members of Congress – some in my own party – claim that this law is too tough. They say it puts us at a fundraising disadvantage just at the moment we've regained control of the House and Senate. But we shouldn't forget how Democrats won a congressional majority – by promising sweeping ethics reform to change Washington and reduce the power of special interests. We need to deliver.

If an individual is lobbying for the big drug companies, we need to know if he or she is bundling hundreds of thousands of dollars for those committee members. If a lobbyist works for the oil industry, we need to know if he was a Bush Pioneer. And if a defense contractor is raising lots of money for Armed Services Committee members, we need to know that too.

To set an example in the 2008 presidential election, I am refusing to accept campaign contributions from registered lobbyists, political-action committees, and I won't take contributions bundled by lobbyists. I'm also reporting any contributions that are bundled – whether it's from a small-town doctor or a chief executive officer. If we can open up the system and pull aside the curtain of secrecy, then we might be able to start changing the way Washington works.

Copyright © 2007, Chicago Tribune

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Same old Barack (2007-05-21 18:06)

Here are a couple of YouTube videos worth checking out:

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Former gov. and ambassador Mabus endorses Obama (2007-05-22 11:22)

Former Mississippi Gov. Ray Mabus is not only endorsing Barack Obama, he's joining the campaign as a volunteer adviser on Middle East issues.

Mabus was U.S. ambassador to Saudi Arabia during the Clinton administration.

The former governor said his endorsing Obama was about supporting someone rather than opposing anyone when asked why he did not back Hillary Clinton.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Michelle Obama on GMA (2007-05-22 17:06)

Michelle Obama today resigned from her position as director of Treehouse Foods, a supplier of the controversial Wal-Mart company. Obama said increased demands on her time prompted her resignation.

Here is a YouTube video of Michelle's interview on Good Morning America today. The second part of the interview will air tomorrow morning.

[EMBED]

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama bags two successful fundraisers (2007-05-23 07:44)

Sen. Barack Obama's presidential campaign raised at least $750,000 in recent Greenwich fundraisers, and a Philadelphia kickoff concert attracted about 2,000 people at $50 per person ($25 for students).

Obama also had three private large donor fundraisers while in Philadelphia.

The next deadline for fundraising is at the end of June when campaigns will again prepare to file statements for contributions received during the second quarter of this year.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama will announce health care plan in Iowa City (2007-05-23 12:13)

Barack Obama announced he will unveil specifics on his health care plan in a speech on May 29 in Iowa City.

According to Obama spokesperson Karen Kornbluh the plan had three main facets: (1) a national pool for those that don't have health insurance, with subsidies going to those who can't afford the group rates; (2) better preventive care and technology to reduce paperwork and costs; and (3) catastrophic insurance to help businesses and families avoid bankruptcy and reduce premiums.

Obama will also make campaign trips to Nevada where he will attend rallies in Las Vegas and Reno at the end of May. Hillary Clinton attracted a large crowd at a rally in Reno. Nevada is one of four early voting states along with Iowa, New Hampshire and South Carolina.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Ted Sorensen on his support for Barack Obama (2007-05-23 21:11)

Barack Obama filled in staff positions for his South Carolina campaign today and also announced the addition of Iowa State Representative Elesha Gayman to his Iowa state team.

Watch the YouTube video below of John F. Kennedy speechwriter Ted Sorensen explaining why he supports Barack Obama.

[EMBED]

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

The Gore Factor (2007-05-24 06:59)

What would happen if Al Gore entered the presidential race?

Firstly, I think it would be very difficult for Gore to win. He doesn't have any left-over campaign cash or infrastructure so he would basically be starting from scratch. Well, he would at least have the Draft Gore movement to work with, but he would be way behind the other candidates.

The mechanics of this primary with "Super Duper Tuesday" make money a huge factor and we're already nearing the end of the second quarter.

Many important officials have already endorsed candidates and a lot of good staff people are working now for one campaign or another.

Also, a lot of the establishment people that Gore would ordinarily count on are Clinton backers. They supported him last time, but most are now committed to Hillary.

His involvement could cause hard feelings among old friends and that might hurt his effectiveness as a champion of environmentalism should he lose the primary or general election.

If Gore should ultimately win, he would be strongly distracted by the issue of the Iraq War, which the majority of polls show is the most pressing concern of the American public. However, Gore has said that he considers global warming as the number one threat to America and the entire world. So, it could certainly be argued that he is better served to work for his cause from where he is right now.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack votes "no" on Iraq War bill (2007-05-25 08:21)

Sen. Barack Obama might not know it, but his campaign came seriously close to a major upheaval yesterday judging from going-ons in the netroots community.

As everyone awaited the Iraq War bill vote, sites from DailyKos to the Huffington Post and Obama's own official blog were focused on how the senator would vote. The focus on Obama was much more tangible than that for Clinton highlighting the importance of this issue for Barack.

Many Obama supporters publicly declared they had jumped ship even before the bill got out of the House. They thought the senator should have come out earlier against the bill. Even supporters who had steadfastly defended Barack in hostile territory since his campaign started wavered. Some, even on his own blog, declared they would not contribute to the campaign further if Barack voted yes on the bill.

Not that Barack is a one-issue candidate. There were those also who said they would support Obama no matter how he voted on the Iraq War spending bill.

From my own observations those who publicly stood behind the senator no matter what cited his optimism, his ability as a uniter and his generally favorable, positive image both at home and abroad as reasons for their support. For die-hard anti-war folk, it was obvious that anxieties were high. Understandably it has been a long haul for those who have opposed the war from the start and many had put their hopes in Obama.

Such was the tension, that when Obama finally did cast his no vote it was something of an event among the netroots crowd.

Had Barack voted yes, his campaign would certainly have undergone a major transformation. Not that his support would have necessarily dropped. Possibly he could have picked up more "blue dog" conservative Democrats than lost "green dog" progressive Dems.

But the perception of Barack as the leader of the opposition against the Iraq War would have changed. I personally think that John Edwards would have moved into that spot had Barack voted yes.

However, as he voted no, there is a resurgent belief in Barack's anti-war cred even if a few lost faith and went elsewhere. I wouldn't be surprised if his coffers are getting a boost from his actions.

Here are the senator's comments on why he voted no on the Iraq War bill:

"This vote is a choice between validating the same failed policy in Iraq that has cost us so many lives and demanding a new one. And I am demanding a new one."

"We must fund our troops. But we owe them something more. We owe them a clear, prudent plan to relieve them of the burden of policing someone else's civil war. We need a plan to compel the Iraqi people to reach a political accommodation and to take responsibility for their own future. It's time to change course."

"I opposed this war in 2002 precisely because I feared it would lead us to the open-ended occupation in which we find ourselves today."

"This President has led us down a disastrous path and has arrogantly refused to acknowledge the grim reality of this war, which has cost us so dearly in lives and treasure."

"After he vetoed a plan that would have funded the troops and begun to bring them home, this bill represents more of his stubborn refusal to address his failed policy."

"We should not give the President a blank check to continue down this same, disastrous path."

"With my vote today, I am saying to the President that enough is enough. We must negotiate a better plan that funds our troops, signals to the Iraqis that it is time for them to act and that begins to bring our brave servicemen and women home safely and responsibly."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama hits back, Michelle on GMA pt. II (2007-05-25 15:52)

Barack Obama strikes back at John McCain and Mitt Romney after they criticize his "no" vote on the Iraq War bill in the YouTube video below. Also, part two of the Good Morning America interview with Michelle Obama.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama calls for military mental health screenings (2007-05-27 07:03)

Sen. Barack Obama Sunday called for better mental health services for veterans ahead of Memorial day commemorations.

"I believe strongly that there is a sacred trust between this country and those who serve it," Obama told The Associated Press. "That trust begins the moment a service member signs on and lasts the duration of his or her life.

"We're falling far short in addressing the mental health care needs of these heroes, and that's inexcusable." Chicago fundraiser may be largest yet

Obama is expected to have his best fundraising night to date in his hometown of Chicago on June 8.

The affair at

Park West theater will have a minimum suggested contribution of $1,000.

Nine individuals have pledged to raise at least $1,000 according to a flier for the event.

The Illinois senator has been very effective at locking up support in his home state.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Training the Troops (2007-05-27 10:45)

Analysts far and wide recognize that Hillary Clinton is pulling in more of the establishment political machines, while Barack Obama has greater grassroots support particularly among the young.

The ancient philosopher Sun Tzu wrote the treatise The Art of War and among the fundamental analysis performed before a battle, the leader or general was advised to ask themselves certain questions. Among these that are pertinent to the match-up between Hillary and Barack:

Who has the stronger force?

Who has the better-trained forces?

We might say that Barack has the stronger force in terms of raw numbers, while Hillary has the better-trained and more experienced forces in general.

Now, Barack does indeed have a core of experienced leadership behind him but also a great mass of people of have little or no political experience.

The onus on the Obama campaign is give these young people "basic training" as rapidly as possible before "game time" weeks before the election. The Camp Obama training sessions are an example of training volunteers in campaign techniques and strategy.

Even larger efforts are the nationwide events like the house parties at the end of the last quarter, and the upcoming national canvas on June 9. The campaign is also increasing the resources available at the official website that can help local groups organize effectively.

Now, for John Edwards and the second-tier candidates, the idea would be to use their relative obscurity to their advantage. Let the two front-runners preoccupy themselves with each other and forget their campaigns. This is known as the "stealth" approach. Concentrate all your resources for that clutch period just before the polls when you unleash your surprise attack. Let the big guys spend and waste their money freely early on.

In order to avoid a late surprise, the Obama campaign must have sufficient intelligence on what all serious candidates are doing. And they must avoid squandering their money too early in the campaign.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Training the Troops (2007-05-27 10:45)

Analysts far and wide recognize that Hillary Clinton is pulling in more of the establishment political machines, while Barack Obama has greater grassroots support particularly among the young.

The ancient philosopher Sun Tzu wrote the treatise The Art of War

Standing-room crowd for Barack and Michelle in NH (2007-05-27 18:49)

Barack Obama and his family continued their combination campaign/holiday trip through New Hampshire Sunday drawing a full house of 1,000 to 1,200 people in Conway.

Michelle Obama turned out to be as much a hit as her candidate husband and was asked how she would serve as first lady.

"I come to this with a lot of interesting talents, but I think it would be unfair of me to say today what I would do in a couple of years," she continued. "I need to be prepared to do what the country needs me to do at the time.

"Whether that's baking cookies or serving as a wonderful hostess, that's my job. I have to be prepared to do what's necessary. And we won't know what that's going to be until we get there. I will be staunchly invested. It is a joint project."

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Kezang Dema inspired to run in Bhutan by Barack Obama (2007-05-28 11:02)

The mountain-clad Buddhist kingdom of Bhutan will have its first parliamentary elections next year.

One of the candidates, 27-year-old Kezang Dema is the youngest and only female candidate in elections to the upper house.

Dema said her decision to run came after watching a BBC news report on U.S. presidential candidate Barack Obama.

"I saw something in his speech. I wanted to do the same for my people. Education is a priority and we need to make 100 % of our people literate."

Superdelegates

Although Sen. Barack Obama's presidential campaign is concentrated on mobilizing grassroots and netroots support he is not ignoring the important "superdelegates" that participate in the nomination process.

The superdelegates are elected officials who cast votes at the nominating Democratic Convention along with state delegates chosen in primaries and caucuses.

There are 235 Democratic House members and nonvoting representatives, 49 senators, the District of Columbia's two "shadow senators" and 28 governors, a total of 314 votes.

The nominee must gather 2,182 delegates to win the party's presidential nomination at next year's national convention in Denver. There will be a total of 4361 delegates.

Gaining endorsements early though does not guarantee a superdelegate will vote for you at the convention though.

Historically, the superdelegates often grant their votes to whoever is the obvious winner at the time.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama unveils sweeping health care plan (2007-05-29 08:46)

The Associated Press today received details of Sen. Barack Obama's new health care plan that he will announce later in the day.

The plan would provide universal health care even for those with preexisting conditions and regardless of age. The system would remain private but with government funds to cover those who cannot afford insurance using a sliding scale subsidy based on income.

A number of cost-cutting measures are included such as increasing preventive care, reducing emergency room costs associated with the uninsured, and decreasing paperwork costs with an electronic filing system.

Obama would also raise money by axing Bush's tax cuts for the wealthiest Americans and by requiring all but the smallest businesses to contribute to the system.

According to the proposal, Obama's plan would save the typical consumer about $2,500 a year in medical expenses.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

"Today on the Trail" with Barack Obama (2007-05-29 16:45)

The Today Show has a series "Today on the Trail" and today they interviewed Barack Obama. The interview is available on the YouTube video below provided by Dartmouth for Obama.

[EMBED]

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack's Health Care Plan (2007-05-29 19:54)

Barack Obama revealed details of his new health care plan at a speech today in Iowa and on his website.

We are not a country that rewards hard work and perseverance with bankruptcies and foreclosures. We are not a country that allows major challenges to go unsolved and unaddressed while our people suffer needlessly. In the richest nation on Earth, it is simply not right that the skyrocketing profits of the drug and insurance industries are paid for by the skyrocketing premiums that come from the pockets of the American people.

This is not who we are. And this is not who we have to be.

One issue that Obama avoided in his plan was the shortage of health care workers. The lack of doctors, nurses, technicians, nurse's aides and other workers has consistently been a driving force in skyrocketing medical costs. However, one of the solutions to this problem – the importation of health care workers from abroad – is a sensitive issue especially with the current immigration debate going on.

Barack's Plan for a Healthy America

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama campaign prepares Walk for Change (2007-05-30 14:00)

The Obama campaign send out a letter yesterday asking supporters to make final preparations for the big national canvas on June 9:

X Hundreds of thousands of Americans will have their first conversation about Barack Obama on June 9th, and you can make it a success.

Volunteers across all fifty states will be teaming up to tell their neighbors about our campaign for change. We know we can't just depend on traditional media to tell Barack's story, or yours. There's no one better to share those stories than you.

Talking to your neighbors can change America. Find a Walk for Change near you, or host a walk in your community:

my.barackobama.com/walkforchange

More than a thousand people have planned neighborhood walks in communities across the country, but they are relying on your commitment to make these events a success. Help them out by encouraging your friends, family, and colleagues to join.

Walks with five or more registered participants will receive a special package of materials to engage people, so your response is crucial.

RSVP by midnight on Wednesday, May 30th, to make sure the walk nearest you receives materials:

my.barackobama.com/walkforchange

Politics in America doesn't have to be a screaming match. Our campaign is proving that people everywhere who care about our country can come together with a shared stake in our common future. Reach out to your neighbors and see just how hungry Americans are for change.

The family next door is looking for leadership on the same issues we all care about – Iraq, health care, climate change, corruption in Washington. Together we're building a movement that will find common ground and advance the common good for all Americans.

Be part of the change – sign up now to host or join a Walk for Change in your neighborhood:

my.barackobama.com/walkforchange

Local change is real change, so let's go out together and connect with our neighbors.

Thanks,

David Plouffe

Campaign Manager

Obama for America

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Barack's interview on WQAD, Iowa City (2007-05-30 16:22)

Barack Obama gave a one-on-one interview with Matt Hammill of Iowa City's WQAD radio station. Here's what he had to say about his development into a presidential candidate:

I did not arrive here because I had a father or family members who are powerful politicians. I do not come from wealth- I came here because I was a community organizer working with churches, helping people who had been laid-off from work at steel plants. As a civil rights attorney, as a state legislator, people can take a look and see that I have generally risen in politics based on relationships with folks at the grassroots level, and that is the reason I am in politics. I truly believe that there is a core decency to the American people and that ordinary people, if they have a chance to get the levers of power and make government responsive, usually make pretty good decisions and the country goes in a good direction.

Read Barack's whole interview here.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2007-05-30 16:22)

I did not arrive here because I had a father or family members who are powerful politicians. I do not come from wealth- I came here because I was a community organizer working with churches, helping people who had been laid-off from work at steel plants. As a civil rights attorney, as a state legislator, people can take a look and see that I have generally risen in politics based on relationships with folks at the grassroots level, and that is the reason I am in politics. I truly believe that there is a core decency to the American people and that ordinary people, if they have a chance to get the levers of power and make government responsive, usually make pretty good decisions and the country goes in a good direction.

(2007-05-31 09:06)

Excitement is brewing in Nevada where large crowds are expected to greet Barack Obama at Reno, Las Vegas and other locations.

Things are also heating up for the big walk on June 9. Locally here in Sacramento, we've pulled together a lot of people for this event.

Today, Barack Obama sent out a letter to supporters on his health care plan dubbed Obamacare by some.

X "This is not who we are. We have done everything right. We have done everything we were supposed to do. This is not who we are."

- Amy in Iowa submitted online via My Policy

The story of Amy and Lane is the story of America's health care crisis.

Successful small business owners, Amy and Lane provide vital Internet services to their rural Iowa community. Despite their success, they are on the brink of bankruptcy, paying forty percent of their annual income in health care premiums. They've played by the rules of the American Dream, and it's left them with no savings, no retirement plan, and a growing mountain of credit card debt.

Watch a short video about Amy and Lane's story, and learn more about our health care plan:

<http://my.barackobama.com/healthcare>

Amy is right, this is not who we are. We are not a country that rewards hard work and perseverance with bankruptcies and foreclosures. We are not a country that allows major challenges to go unsolved and unaddressed while our people suffer needlessly.

Amy and Lane shared their story – their concerns, their fears, and their hope – with us via My Policy the same way you have already done. Their experiences and yours helped shape our approach to health care. Take a minute and learn more about our health care plans:

<http://my.barackobama.com/healthcare>

Today I want to share the details of our health care plan – a plan that not only guarantees coverage for every American, but also brings down the cost of health care and reduces every family's premiums by as much as $2,500.

My plan begins by covering every American. If you already have health insurance, the only thing that will change for you is that you'll spend less money on premiums. If you are one of the 45 million Americans who don't have health insurance, you will have it after this plan becomes law.

Coverage without cost containment will only shift our burdens, not relieve them, so we will take five steps to remove waste and inefficiency from the system:

1. Catastrophic cases – patients with serious illnesses account for 80 % of all health care and insurance costs, and the federal government should pick up the tab for a large portion of these cases directly.
2. Prevention – refocus our health care system on preventing costly, debilitating conditions in the first place.
3. Quality – track and report treatment outcomes and reward hospitals and providers for quality rather than quantity of service.
4. Electronic Medical Records – move to a 21st century industry based on the latest information technology.
5. Drug and Insurance Companies – break the stranglehold that a few big drug and insurance companies have on the health care market.

These steps are designed to help people like Amy and Lane create a hopeful, happy ending to their American Dream. But we'd like to hear your thoughts on how this plan will affect your family and healthcare. We all have a stake in this, and want to hear what you think:

<http://my.barackobama.com/healthcare>

We have come so far in the health care debate in America, but the real challenges still need to be met. Now is the time for a movement of Americans, working together for the common good, to deliver on the promise of affordable health care for all.

Thank you,

Barack Obama

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama confident about Nevada (2007-05-31 17:32)

Sen. Barack Obama said he could win the early state of Nevada despite Hillary Clinton's early endorsements in that state.

Obama stressed that his grassroots support could bring his campaign victory just as it did in Illinois where he was outspent 6 to 1 in the primary for the U.S. Senate.

The candidate visited Reno today attracting a crowd of about 4,000 according to one police official. Here's a YouTube video of his appearance:

[EMBED]

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

1.6 June

Obama and Coal (2007-06-01 08:27)

Some blogs have questioned Barack Obama's new bill that would support to some extent the use of liquid coal.

They say this goes against Obama's declared green credentials and his commitment to battle climate change.

Liquid coal is a cleaner alternative to diesel, still the main fuel for heavy transport in the U.S. It might also be a bit cleaner than gasoline. And the coal can be found in the United States so there is much less transportation involved in its use.

Personally, I believe that solar energy is the way to in eventually finding the right "mix" for sustainable energy production. Nearly all of our energy production currently is solar although much wrapped up with carbon through photosynthesis of plant life.

However, solar can never be the sole solution and their definitely will have to stop-gap measures on the way before solar energy obtains worldwide "grid parity," the point where it matches other sources in cost.

One big short-term solution is the use of biofuels, which Obama has routinely promoted. Biofuels are also part of the long-term solution, but only on a limited scale. Too much use of biofuels could threaten rainforests as the world population continues to grow, which would be counterproductive. However these clean fuels offer a quick way of reversing current trends.

Liquid coal can also be part of an interim mix until better technologies are poised to take over. To some extent this takeover is already starting to happen with solar energy. In many locations, solar has reached grid parity. Investment is pouring into the solar energy industry. Technologies are developed that help bring down the cost of refining silicone, the primary "ingredient" in photovoltaic cells. Silicone is the second most abundant element

Obama is a pragmatic politician rather than a purist and liquid coal in his view may represent a way, probably a temporary way, to start achieving energy independence. However, it is clear from his policy statements that it is not a main solution for he doesn't mention coal at all in most of his energy papers and speeches.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

max dugan (2008-02-20 11:04:00)

Senator Obama may have some wonderful futuristic ideas however, the rest of us live in the present.

The price of crude oil will soon be trading way over $100 per barrel and the price of gasolines will soar over the $4 per gallon level. What are we to do? Wait 5 years until the first coal oil plants come online? The inflation is eating us up alive.

I am tired of listening to empty campaign promises. If elected, what will Preident Obama do to quickly reduce manufacturing and transportation costs? What kind of fuel will we use in our automobiles and at what price?

If Senator Obama wants my vote he will have to provide straight answers.

Obama wows Seattle, visits California for funds (2007-06-02 12:52)

Sen. Barack Obama drew a crowd estimated at 3,500 in Seattle for his Washington state kickoff last night.

The big rally doubled as a grassroots fundraiser, and there were swankier affairs afterward including a $500 a person reception at the Westin Hotel, and a sponsor's reception for $2,300.

Obama visits the San Francisco Bay Area and Silicon Valley today to build up additional funds for his campaign. In addition to the big money events, there will be more accessible fundraisers including a meet-and-greet cocktail party at Plug and Play in Santa Clara.

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Seattle Excitement (2007-06-02 21:00)

Here are some YouTube videos showing the excitement generated by Barack Obama during his visit to Seattle.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

✕

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Polls favor Barack, Pundits favor Clinton after debate (2007-06-04 07:48)

As in the first presidential debate, the view polls are favoring Barack Obama, while the media pundits continue to praise Hillary Clinton, although this time around many also liked John Edwards.

An editorial in the Cornell University student newspaper gave the nod to Obama. It would be interesting to know how young people as a whole viewed the debate, as I believe they will play a very important role during this election.

Here are some polls you can participate in:

MSNBC poll

CNN poll

WMUR poll (local NH host)

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Campaign prepares training video for walkers (2007-06-04 17:23)

Trista Allen of Team Obama sent out an email today alerting volunteers about resources available for big walk on Saturday.

The package includes a training video with pointers on how to campaign door-to-door.

✕ A new chapter in American Politics begins this Saturday, when thousands of supporters like you bring our campaign to doorsteps across the country.

I'm Trista Allen, and I run the Southern Field Desk for Obama for America. We've put together a brief training video and an online resource center to help make your walk a success. Take a minute to confirm the details of your event and watch the video for some valuable pointers:

<http://my.barackobama.com/canvassvideo>

We hope you will take photos and record video of your canvass, but please be sure to follow the guidelines outlined on our submission page to ensure you respect the privacy of your neighbors and obey the law.

<http://my.barackobama.com/wfcsbmit>

Movements are created one household and one conversation at a time. This campaign is about you, and you are making this movement happen.

It's going to be huge – and this is just the beginning.

Thank you,

The Walk for Change Field Team

Trista, Buffy, Mary, Brandon, Hans, Chris, Ray, and Temo

P.S. Be sure to check out the Walk for Change store today to get merchandise for your event.

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Juneteenth "Spiritual Unity" rally for Obama in Hawai'i (2007-06-05 07:13)

Barack Obama is fortunate in that he appears to have two states that are rallying behind him. His adopted home state of Illinois, and Hawai'i, the state of his birth and most of his youth.

Although, Barack recently suffered a hit in Hawai'i when Sen. Daniel Inouye endorsed Hillary, he still appears to have a stronger influence in the state than other candidates.

One Honolulu metro supporter, Bettye Jo Harris, is arranging a "spiritual unity" rally for Obama at the Trinity Missionary Baptist Church on Hickam Air Force Base. The event on June 24 will be part of the week-long Juneteenth celebrations, the nation's oldest commemoration of the ending of slavery.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

DOC (2008-01-18 23:22:00)

Juneteenth is America's 2nd Independence Day celebration. 26 states recognize Juneteenth as a state holiday or state holiday observance, as well as the Congress of the United States.

Together we will see Juneteenth become a national holiday in Amemrica!

"DOC"

Rev. Ronald V. Myers, Sr., M.D.

Chairman

National Juneteenth Holiday Campaign

National Juneteenth Observance Foundation (NJOF)

National Juneteenth Christian Leadership Council (NJCLC)

www.Juneteenth.us

www.19thofJune.com

www.njclc.com

www.JuneteenthJazz.com

'Quiet Riot' simmers, Amigos organize for Obama (2007-06-05 12:47)

Sen. Barack Obama warned of a "quiet riot" that is taking place among African Americans displaced from New Orleans and the Gulf Coast by the Katrina some 20 months after the hurricane hit the area.

Obama, speaking in Hampton, Virginia, said that the frustration among blacks struck by Katrina threatens to erupt like the Los Angeles riots 15 years ago.

Barack courts Hispanics

After some major California Hispanic endorsements for Hillary Clinton, Obama is making moves to woo Hispanic voters to his campaign.

His initial overtures appear more geared eastward and to Hispanic speakers from the Puerto Rico, the Dominican Republic, Cuba, etc. rather than those from Mexico and Central America.

Obama is working with supporter Robert Menendez (D-N.J.) on two amendments to the immigration bill. Menendez is considered one of the brightest Hispanic stars in the country.

The new website Amigos de Obama at <http://amigosdeobama.com> also has a more Caribbean flair with the song Obama Reggaeton greeting visitors at the homepage with the following lyrics.

“Como Se Dice...Como Se llama? (OBAMA, OBAMA)”

Oye mi gente este es un hombre preperado...

La esperanza ha llegado.

Como Se Dice...Como Se llama?

OBAMA! OBAMA! (Repeat four times)

Dicen que no contamos...

Invisibles porque no votamos...

Pero aqui estamos y todo esto va cambiar...

We did the marchas y ahora vamos a votar.

Listen to me gente, es tiempo para algo diferente..

What we need is un nuevo presidente...

Como Se Dice...Como Se llama?

OBAMA! OBAMA! (Repeat two times)

Los Mexicanos como se llama?

OBAMA! OBAMA!

Puerto Riqueños, como se llama?

OBAMA! OBAMA!

Los Peruanos, como se llama?

OBAMA! OBAMA!

En esta gran nacion ya no existe una buena educacion,

Dicen todo el dinero va a la imigracion

Es facil culpar el que no vota

El gigante Latino esta que brota

Despierta!

Vamos a elegir a quien deberas entienda...

Como Se Dice...Como Se llama?

OBAMA! OBAMA! (Repeat four times)

Los Colombianos, como se llama?

OBAMA! OBAMA!

Dominicanos, como se llama?

OBAMA! OBAMA!

Los Cubanos, como se llama?

OBAMA! OBAMA!

Los Brasileños, como se llama?

OBAMA! OBAMA!

Salvadoreños, como se llama?

OBAMA! OBAMA! Latinos!!!

La esperanza ha llegado.

Como Se Dice...Como Se llama? (Repeat) X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2007-06-06 06:30)

Wireless internet services available in class. Limited lodging is available on site at the Ohrenschall Guest Center.

There are also other hotels within a few miles including:

Travel Lodge Mill Valley/Sausalito: <http://www.marincountyhotel.com/>

Best Value Inn Mill Valley: <http://millvalleylodging.com/index.html>

Holiday Inn Express Mill Valley: <http://www.millvalleyca.hiexpress.com/>

Obamacare (2007-06-06 08:07)

Here's an editorial comment by Sen. Barack Obama published in the Boston Globe explaining his health care plan.

An editorial on May 30 stated that my universal health care plan would not cover everyone. That's simply inaccurate. My plan will cover every American.

Under my plan, the uninsured can buy health care similar to what federal employees have. No one would be denied health insurance because of preexisting conditions or illnesses. If you cannot afford insurance, you'll receive a subsidy to pay for it. If you have children, they'll be covered. If you change jobs, your insurance will go with you.

Once this plan is implemented, if you're still not covered, we'll find a way to cover you. We have the resources set aside to cover everyone.

But a truly universal plan cannot stop at coverage. It must take unprecedented steps to address the skyrocketing cost of health care. And my plan will cut the cost of every family's premiums by up to $2,500.

The major reason that 45 million Americans don't have health care is not that they don't want it, it's that they can't afford it. If we require people to purchase insurance before we bring down its cost, we'll make a bad problem worse.

If we want to cover everyone, we must cut costs for everyone.

Senator Barack Obama

It seems like the important elements in Obama's plan that will determine its success if implemented will be determining what people can "afford," and how subsidies are dispersed. If people don't agree with the government on what is an affordable plan, then many may still opt not to buy health care insurance. So a good plan would probably have to err on the side of caution in determining what people will pay for health insurance.

Also, for those who can't afford insurance, will they have to wait in long "welfare" lines, or present vouchers in the way one uses food stamps? Many people won't do that unless absolutely necessary. However, if the process relatively private and simple, it likely will be successful.

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Dinner for Five with Barack Obama (2007-06-06 14:17)

Obama for America has come up with a novel way of raising more funds and changing politics as Barack has promised. "Dinner for Five with Barack" will give any contributor the chance of having a personal dinner and discuss the issues with Barack Obama, something politicians usually reserve only for the highest donors.

Here is the letter sent out by campaign manager David Plouffe announcing the opportunity:

Most political fundraisers are hosted by lobbyists and filled with representatives of special interests. But our campaign is different.

Our funding comes from a movement of Americans giving whatever they can afford, even $5, and Barack wants to sit down with supporters like you.

You were there before the beginning, and you helped spark something new in American politics. Renew your support now and you could potentially meet Barack in person.

In the next week, four donors will be selected for a new kind of fundraising dinner. If you make a donation in any amount between now and 11:59 pm EDT on Wednesday, June 13, you could join Barack and three other supporters for an intimate dinner for five.

Click here to give.

Our movement is changing the way campaigns are funded. We're not taking any contributions from Washington lobbyists or political action committees.

More than 100,000 individual donors have demonstrated that this choice is about more than an election. It's about each of us having a personal stake in the future of American politics.

The dinner for five is an opportunity for you to sit down with Barack and your fellow supporters and talk about what matters to you.

Get the kind of treatment other politicians reserve for special interests. Make a donation in the next week, and you could share your story and your ideas with Barack in person:

Click here to give. With every single donation, we're building a movement to change American politics. And this is just the beginning.

Thanks for your support,

David

David Plouffe

Campaign Manager

Obama for America

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama walking boxes shipped, fundraising (2007-06-07 07:39)

✖ The Obama campaign is mailing boxes filled with literature, stickers and other items to use in the nationwide Walk for Change on June 9.

Each organized group with at least five walkers will receive a walking package by mail.
To sign up for the walk, click here.

Obama 2nd qtr money to go sky high?

Various sources tracking fundraising for all candidates are buzzing that Barack Obama may provide yet another shock when reports are issued at the end of June.

Usually estimates are based on reports given by the event organizers themselves, or by multiplying the number of attendees by the entry fee to get a minimum estimate.

Most campaigns publish their scheduled fundraisers in press releases.

Barack, for example, has at least 23 fundraisers scheduled until June 29.

✖

✖

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✖

Dinner with Barack gets huge response (2007-06-08 08:25)

More than 8,000 donations poured in within 24 hours of launching the Dinner for Five with Barack Obama promotion.
Check out the video at this link.

Also watch the video below showing CNN's Frank Sesno discussing the changes that would occur in Washington if Barack Obama wins.

[EMBED]

✖

✖

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Making Contact (2007-06-10 17:47)

More than a thousand groups hit the streets yesterday often making contact with people who have never been involved in the electoral process.

Here in Sacramento, we registered about 160 new voters in some of the poorer neighborhoods in the area. Obama supporters went in pairs or larger groups to knock on doors with two groups working each different sides of the same street. A precinct captain handled each group of walkers.

The reception to Obama was great and many signed up for the Sacramento for Obama group.

I made a video capturing a little of what happened on this great nationwide grassroots campaigning day.

[EMBED]

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack hits the streets (2007-06-11 08:09)

Watch Barack Obama going door-to-door in this YouTube video from Dubuque, Iowa on Saturday.

[EMBED]

Colin Powell advises Obama on foreign policy

In a "Meet the Press" interview Sunday, former Secretary of State Colin Powell said that he has met twice with Barack Obama to discuss policy issues.

Powell fueled speculation when he said that he had not endorsed a candidate yet and would eventually choose whoever was best for the job.

Having Powell on a Democratic ticket would certainly be a different kind of politics since it would mean not one but two black men achieving historical firsts. Powell is also a registered Republican. Alternatively Barack could appoint Powell to his cabinet, since it's not that unusual to fill such positions with people from the opposite party.

A former general, joint chiefs chairman and secretary of state, Powell could offer the "executive" experience to counter doubts about a former community organizer as commander in chief.

From Powell's perspective, it could offer him some redemption after being fooled on Iraq WMD (although he didn't characterize it that way). War opponents might have trouble with the former general since he wasn't able to sniff out the b.s. that many other people were detected at the time. One should recognize though that he was under tremendous pressure to act as a "team player" as part of the Bush administration. And there are some of course who believe Powell knew all along that there was no Iraqi WMD and was part of a scheme to fool the American people.

A Powell endorsement would probably help Obama more in the general election than in the primary especially in attracting independent and crossover Republican votes.

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack hits the streets (2007-06-11 08:09)

Watch Barack Obama going door-to-door in this YouTube video from Dubuque, Iowa on Saturday.
[EMBED]

Most voters like Barack (2007-06-11 16:11)

A new Bloomberg/Los Angeles Times poll suggests Obama has the widest appeal of all presidential candidates. "Rudy Giuliani and Hillary Clinton continue to be the frontrunners for their parties' presidential nominations, though on the Republican side the momentum is with Fred Thompson and Democrat Barack Obama has the broadest appeal of any candidate."

Obama is the only Democrat who tops all Republicans according to the poll conducted June 7 to 10: "Obama, an Illinois senator, is clearly the strongest general-election candidate. He is the only Democrat who beats all three major Republican contenders: Giuliani, McCain and Romney. Clinton runs behind all three Republican contenders in head-to-head match-ups."

Only 3 percent of Democratic primary voters said they could not vote for Barack compared to 18 percent who said they couldn't vote for Hillary.

In contrast to a Rasmussen Reports poll which shows Edwards having the broadest appeal among Democrats, the Bloomberg/Los Angeles Times poll shows Edwards losing half his support compared to the last survey two months ago.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack in California, Michelle goes to Vegas (2007-06-12 07:57)

Barack Obama will attend a bevy of fundraisers in California both in the north and south of the state. Six in all since Tuesday.

Michelle Obama will meet supporters in Las Vegas on Wednesday at the kickoff event for "Nevada Women for Obama" at the Cambridge Recreation Center.

Across the country, Boston City Councilor Michael Flaherty announced his endorsement of Obama yesterday.

Obama had long-term White House goal

A story published yesterday in the Chicago Tribune indicates that Barack and his staff prepared a careful long-term plan for a presidential bid in 2012 or 2016 that included a possible stint as Illinois governor.

However, advisers like Sen. Dick Durbin and swelling grassroots support that he encountered while promoting his book "The Audacity of Hope" convinced him that 2008 was a golden opportunity not to be missed.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Michelle launches New Hampshire Women for Obama (2007-06-12 23:06)

Check out this video of Michelle Obama with daughters Sasha and Malia in Concord New Hampshire for the kickoff fair for NH Women for Obama.

[EMBED]

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

The Chicago Black Political Machine and Barack Obama (2007-06-13 08:09)

Barack Obama's near lock on political support in Chicago and Illinois is some of the strongest home state support I've seen for a presidential candidate.

Obama's strong base of support was initially fostered largely by his ability to gain backing in Chicago's tested black political environment.

It is not surprising that America's first truly viable black presidential candidate is based in Chicago. The city has produced the only two African Americans elected to the U.S. Senate as Democrats – Carol Moseley-Braun and Barack Obama.

There have been only three other black U.S. senators – two appointed in Mississippi and one elected in Massachusetts – all three were Republicans.

Chicago also produced America's most viable black presidential candidate until Barack - Jesse Jackson. Moseley-Braun had launched her own short presidential campaign in 2004 before bowing out early and endorsing Howard Dean instead.

Jackson, seen by many as the heir to Martin Luther King's legacy – based his Rainbow PUSH Coalition in Chicago.

One of Black America's most powerful and controversial entities, the Nation of Islam, is also centered in Chicago.

The city is home to Oprah Winfrey, considered by many as the most powerful woman and media person in America, and she has publicly endorsed Barack. Her sprawling media network consisting of the nation's top talk show, the popular O Magazine, the Oxygen Media cable tv channel, the Oprah & Friends cable radio channel and a heavily-visited website, is based in Chicago.

Harold Washington and the arrival of Barack Obama

Black political power in Chicago reached a milestone when Harold Washington was elected as the city's first African American mayor. It was at this time, that a young Barack Obama arrived on the scene as a young community organizer.

Washington developed the system and alliances that allowed other black politicians who followed to flourish in the city.

Barack wrote that he considered Chicago as "the capital of the African American community in the country." And the black community of Chicago had developed a network of black professionals and business owners who were willing and able to dole out the money needed to launch serious mainstream political candidates on the local and state levels.

With Chicago's black political machine behind him, everyone had to pay attention to Barack, and his appeal quickly spread to other communities. Unlike Washington and Jackson before him, Obama was much less polarizing and he quickly found friends even in the most unlikely of places. His history and background made it easier to bridge gaps that stymied his predecessors.

Barack's coalition was closer to the rainbow that Jackson dreamed of but was never quite able to bring together.

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Barack Obama hedges position on "green" coal (2007-06-13 13:18)

In a move bound to gladden the hearts of Sen. Barack Obama's green support, an email sent to environmental groups clarified his position on liquid coal.

The email stated that "Senator Obama will not support the development of any coal-to-liquid fuels unless they emit at least 20 % less life-cycle carbon than conventional fuels."

Obama aides said that the media had misconstrued the senator's position on liquid coal as a part of a solution toward energy independence. "Senator Obama supports research into all technologies to help solve our climate change and energy dependence problems, including shifting our energy use to renewable fuels and investing in technology that could make coal a clean-burning source of energy."

In addition, Obama supports stricter fuel efficiency standards and increased use of biofuels as part of his energy policy.

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

(2007-06-13 15:01)

Barack Obama today sent a letter to supporters outlining some of the success achieved during the Walk for Change last Saturday:

More than 1,000 events in all fifty states

More than 10,000 volunteers

More than 500,000 people introduced to our movement for change

Here's the entire letter:

Saturday's Walk for Change was a beautiful thing.

When I first started as a community organizer, I was lucky if I got five people to show up in a basement with some folding chairs.

On one day, you managed to:

- organize more than 1,000 events in all fifty states
- get more than 10,000 volunteers to go door to door in their neighborhoods; and
- introduce more than 500,000 people to our movement for change

All of these personal stories and conversations add up to more than a political campaign. Together we're building a movement to make politics mean something again and change this country.

Thank you for being a part of it.

Barack Obama

P.S. – If you participated in a Walk for Change and took photos or recorded video, or if you'd like to share your feedback, please take a few minutes to contact us: <http://my.barackobama.com/wfcupload>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-10-06 09:47:00)

Hit Palin HARD, don't let her comments and charges go unanswered or unchallenged. Since she calls herself the pitbull with lipstick hit back with all you can.

YouTube features Barack Obama (2007-06-14 07:42)

YouTube has started featuring Barack Obama starting last night and already there are more than 40,000 views of his new video at the time of this writing:

Barack asks:

Share your stories about the work you are doing . . . Maybe you are involved in an AmeriCorps program and you are helping communities rebuild down in New Orleans. Maybe you are involved as a teacher? I would love to hear the stories you are telling about the day to day struggles you have in the classroom. Maybe you're still in high school but have been working in a homeless shelter or a soup kitchen.

What ever it is that is inspiring you to get involved and make this country better, we want to hear those ideas from you.

Barack Obama

Please:

Visit Barack TV on YouTube youtube.com/barackobama and send us your video responses

* Subscribe to our Youtube channel to be posted on upcoming videos

* Share your ideas at either barackobama.com/youtube or in the comments section [EMBED]

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

On Obama the movement builder (2007-06-14 14:51)

Read this interesting article examining Barack Obama's efforts to build a movement for change at various levels:
Obama as movement builder

Rally in South Carolina

From the official blog:

It's not too late- sign up now to get free tickets to the rally with Barack in Greenville, South Carolina.

When: Friday June 15, 2007 - Doors open at 12:30 PM, Program begins at 2:00 PM

Where: McAlister Square, Main Entrance, 225 Pleasantburg Drive, Greenville, SC And make sure to check out the video from this past weekend's Walk for Change in Charleston, South Carolina to see the amazing support Barack has in the Palmetto State.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama staff blast on Hillary's India linkages (2007-06-15 07:39)

News of an "opposition paper" attributed to the Obama campaign on Hillary Clinton's ties with India came out today. An opposition paper is an anonymous document not meant for public release. The fact that the New York Sun did release the document says something about that publication's journalistic integrity, but nonetheless it's out there. And what's contained in the documents is worrisome.

Even if this were an internal memo, the wording is of an offensive nature that now has the possibility of hurting Obama's standing in the Indo-American community and among immigrant-linked communities in general.

I should point out that the paper itself cannot be linked directly with Barack Obama. It's pretty obviously not in his style of writing, nor the style of statement that those who have followed him would expect him to approve.

The whole paper is pasted below.

The tone is xenophobic and it makes India and other poor "offshore" countries appears as the "bad guys."

Obama may have to do some damage control on this one if it gets out of hand. And his staff needs to know that while on campaign they need to communicate while on duty, at all times, as he would communicate.

Opposition Paper on Hillary Clinton's ties with India

HILLARY CLINTON (D-PUNJAB)'S PERSONAL FINANCIAL AND POLITICAL TIES TO INDIA The Clintons have reaped significant financial rewards from their relationship with the Indian community, both in their personal finances and Hillary's campaign fundraising. Hillary Clinton, who is the co-chair of the Senate India Caucus, has drawn criticism from anti-offshoring groups for her vocal support of Indian business and unwillingness to protect American jobs. Bill Clinton has invested tens of thousands of dollars in an Indian bill payment company, while Hillary Clinton has taken tens of thousands from companies that outsource jobs to India. Workers who have been laid off in upstate New York might not think that her recent joke that she could be elected to the Senate seat in Punjab is that funny.

IT'S ALL ABOUT THE MONEY PERSONAL HOLDINGS 2006: Bill Clinton Invested Tens of Thousands In An Indian Bill Payment Company. According to Hillary Clinton's personal financial disclosure form, as part his ownership of WJC Investments, LP LLC, Bill Clinton held between $15,001 and $50,000 worth of stock in Easy Bill Limited, an Indian company. According to the company's website, "Functioning as a one-stop bill payment shop, Easy Bill facilitates payment of utility bills as well as recharging of pre-paid mobile connections at a place the consumer is already familiar and comfortable with the neighbourhood store." In addition to providing terminals throughout India where customers may pay their bills, the company also maintains a call center described as "a dedicated response centre for efficient customer service." [Hillary Clinton 2006 Financial Disclosure Report, <http://www.easybillindia.com/>]

2006: Bill Clinton Collected $300,000 From Cisco In 2006. Hillary's personal financial disclosure forms indicate that Bill Clinton gave two speeches to Cisco Systems, each for $150,000 on 5/18/06 and 8/17/06. [Hillary Clinton 2006 Financial Disclosure Report; 3,4]

CAMPAIGN FUNDRAISING Hillary Clinton Accepted Almost $60,000 In Contributions From Employees Of Cisco Systems, Which Laid Off American Workers to Hire Indian "Techies." Clinton's Presidential Exploratory Committee took $39,450 from Cisco employees during the first quarter of 2007. Cisco employees have also donated $18,900 to Clinton's Senate committee between 1999 and 2006. Forbes reported, in a feature called "A Tale of Two Cities" that Cisco was laying off $60,000-a-year "techies," while hiring new employees in Bangalore, India. "Cisco used only a few Infosys workers in Bangalore six years ago [in 1998]; [by 2004, it used] almost 300 contract staff, plus 550 full-fledged employees in its own Bangalore office." In 2006, Newsweek reported that "for Cisco, India is the new frontier, where it's investing $1.2 billion to build a gleaming R &D campus that will employ 3,000 people." [FEC filings; Forbes, 4/12/04; Newsweek, 3/6/06]

Clinton Donor, Sant Singh Chatwal, Cited Clinton's India Caucus Work Vowed To Raise $5 Million. In March 2007, the Economic Times wrote, "[Clinton] has roped in New York-based hotelier Sant Chatwal as co-chair of her recently formed presidential exploratory committee to run for the 2008 White House race. [...] He is also creating an organization called Indian Americans for Hillary 2008." In April 2007, Mangalorean reported that Indian Americans for Hillary 2008 (IAFH) had already raised $1 million and "aimed to raise at least five million dollars." A major fund raiser on June 24 hosted by Chatwal, the founder of IAFH; steel baron, Lakshmi Mittal, and businessman SP Hindujas, was expected to pull more than 1,000 guests. In June 2007, The New York Times reported that "two Indo-American receptions have a total of $450,000 in commitments." In the picture (right), Sen. Clinton speaks at a reception hosted to push forward the US-India nuclear deal while Sant Singh Chatwal listens carefully. [New York Times, 6/7/07; Economic Times of India, 3/18/07; mangalorean.com, 4/14/07, accessed 4/18/07; picture, Tribune India, 9/14/06]

Chatwal Owed The City Of New York More Than $2 Million In Back Taxes, Fled Prosecution For Fraud But Was Arrested During Visit to India With Bill Clinton. Sant Singh Chatwal, who raised more $200,000 for Sen. Clinton in 2000, owed New York City $2.4 million in back property taxes. In addition, during a visit to India with Bill Clinton, in May 2001, Chatwal was arrested by authorities there and charged with defrauding the New York City branch of the Bank of India out of $9 million he borrowed in 1994. He posted bail, then fled India, boarding a flight to Vienna despite an attempt by authorities to detain him. . [New York Daily News, 11/24/02; New York Daily News, 11/7/00]

FDIC Charged Chatwal With Obtaining Improper Loans. In a separate 1996 case, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. charged Chatwal with obtaining improper loans from the First New York Bank for Business, causing the bank to lose more than $25 million. Chatwal, who was a director of the bank, arranged more than $14 million in loans to himself and his businesses, often with no collateral, said the FDIC. He didn't repay the loans and the bank failed. [New York Daily News, 11/24/02; New York Daily News, 11/7/00]

CLINTON AND THE SENATE INDIA CAUCUS Clinton Co-Founded The Senate India Caucus, A Project Of The U.S. India Political Action Committee. In 2004, Clinton co-founded and became the co-chair of the Senate India Caucus which was coordinated by the U.S. India Political Action Committee (USINPAC). Roll Call reported, "The goals of the caucus, which already has 31 members, include increasing trade with India and improving security against global terrorism." Sen. Clinton said, "It is imperative that the United States do everything possible to reach out to India. This Caucus is dedicated to expanding areas of agreement with India and engaging in a candid dialogue of differences." [link to photo at USINPAC website, accessed 4/17/07; Roll Call, 4/28/04; PR Newswire, 4/29/04]

CLINTON WINS "WEASEL AWARD" FOR COMMENTS ON INDIA 2005: Anti-Offshoring Advocacy Group Gave Sen. Clinton A "Weasel Award," Citing Pro-Outsourcing Comments Clinton Made In India. The Press Trust of India wrote, "An American anti-offshoring advocacy group has awarded its first 'Weasel Award of 2005' to Democrat Senator Hillary Clinton for her recent remarks supporting outsourcing. The Delaware-based IT Professionals Association of America (ITPAA) representing over 1,200 IT professionals nationwide, said on its Web site that it presented this award to business and political leaders that it believes 'betray the trust of the American people.' Scott Kirwin, founder of the organization claimed that people were 'tired of Democrats pretending they care about the problems facing average Americans. Senator Clinton's actions prove they clearly do not.' The ITPAA based its award on press reports of Hilary Clinton supporting outsourcing and assuring political and business leaders in India that the US would not attempt to save the jobs lost. 'Outsourcing will continue. There is no way to legislate against reality. We are not in favor of putting up fences.' Hillary had said on Feb 28 in India, according to a report by the Asia Times. Kirwin also cited her position as co-chair of the 'Friends of India Caucus' in the Senate, a group of senators that supports issues important to India, including outsourcing and H-1B and L-1 visas, as another reason behind the ITPAA's decision to give the award to the prospective Democrat presidential nominee." [Press Trust Of India, 3/5/05; Link To Weasel Award]

2/05: On India Trip, Clinton Allayed India's Fears That Outsourcing Would End. The India Review wrote, "Senator Clinton allayed apprehensions in India that there would be a bar on outsourcing. 'There is no way to legislate against reality. Outsourcing will continue,' she said. [India Review, 4/05, accessed, 6/7/07]

Sen. Clinton (D-Punjab) Joked That She Was Senator From The Punjab Region In India. "At the fundraiser hosted by Dr Rajwant Singh at his Potomac, Maryland, home, and which raised nearly $50,000 for her re-election campaign, Clinton began by joking that, 'I can certainly run for the Senate seat in Punjab and win easily,' after being introduced by Singh as the Senator not only from New York but also Punjab." [India Abroad, 3/17/06]

CLINTON CLAIMS OUTSOURCING "WORKS BOTH WAYS...IT ACTUALLY BROUGHT JOBS TO BUFFALO." Clinton Says "Outsourcing Does Work Both Ways." Crain's New York Business wrote, "Mrs. Clinton may be motivated by a desire to uphold the free trade legacy of the Clinton years. [...] In an appearance on CNN's Lou Dobbs Tonight, she boasted about attracting 10 jobs to New York from India-based Tata Consulting. When Mr. Dobbs inquired if she had understood the degree to which Tata, which helps U.S. companies outsource, was stealing American jobs, Mrs. Clinton rejoined: 'They've actually brought jobs to Buffalo. Outsourcing does work both ways.'" [Crain's New York Business, 6/21/04; CNN, 3/3/04] In An Interview With Lou Dobbs, Senator Clinton Defended Her Support Of Tata Consulting, A Company That Brought Ten Jobs To Native Buffalo Residents But Destroyed Thousands Of Jobs Over The Years. Lou Dobbs asked Clinton, "Senator, a number of people pointed out to us, e-mailing us and calling us, saying, ask the senator about her helping Tata Consulting, a well-known outsourcer, open jobs - and office in Buffalo, New York. I'm asking you, did you really understand the degree to which they were involved in outsourcing jobs when you were there?" Clinton replied, "Well, of course I know that they outsource jobs, that they've actually brought jobs to Buffalo. They've created 10 jobs in Buffalo and have told me and the Buffalo community that they intend to be a source of new jobs in the area, because, you know, outsourcing does work both ways." [CNN, 3/3/04] Tata Consultancy Services (TCS) Is Famous For Pioneering The Business Practice Of Off-shoring. The San Jose Mercury News wrote, "TCS, however, will go down in the annals of offshoring as the original high-tech body shop. Starting in the early 1990s, TCS blanketed the American landscape with legions of itinerant software programmers from India. [...] Tata pioneered an industry that eventually evolved into the dynamo of offshoring, or sending work to cheap labor markets overseas. [...] Tata's methods have not been popular among U.S. technology workers, however, who complain guest workers suppress local wages and offshoring takes good jobs overseas." [San Jose Mercury News, 12/6/04] Tata's Buffalo, N.Y. Training Center Caters To The Needs Of The Company's 8,000 Employees In The United States, 80 Percent Of Whom Are Workers From India. India Abroad wrote, "At the Chrysalis Center TCS will host new employees in month-long training sessions to make them aware of the company's history and culture and to hone their core IT skills that will bridge existing knowledge with advanced skills necessary to work on innovative projects for customers." The center will also cater to the training needs of the more than 8,000 TCS employees across the US, 80 percent of whom are from India, according to Buffalo News. [India Abroad, 7/30/04; Buffalo News, 7/20/04] Gupta Said Democrats' Stand On Outsourcing Was Poll-Year Rhetoric. The Economic Times wrote, "Vinod 'Vin' Gupta [...] also believes that the Democratic Party's stand on outsourcing is more poll year rhetoric than any serious economic policy statement. 'We have to compete globally and US has to find the best product and services at the best cost. Tapping global resources will obviously make the US economy stronger,' says Gupta whose own company InfoUSA outsources both technology support and database work to vendors in India. Gupta, who has helped Hillary Clinton and Al Gore in fund-raising efforts for their campaigns, is now involved in fund raising efforts for Senator Kerry." [The Economic Times, 3/29/04]

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama says Dems should not "take the South off the table" (2007-06-15 19:24)

Sen. Barack Obama visited a soul food in Jackson, Mississippi telling patrons that Democrats should not write off the South during the general election.

"I've always felt that you win votes by showing up and people getting to know you and understanding what your values are and what you care about," Obama said. "People in Mississippi are struggling with the same things people all across the country are struggling with - the lack of health care, trying to figure out how to pay for their children's college education, how they are dealing with retirement security (and) jobs."

Obama ordered peach cobbler to go before taking off for two fundraisers in the city. About 37 percent of Mississippi's population is African American.

Jin's "Open Letter to Obama"

[EMBED]

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama campaign responds to Indian concerns over memo (2007-06-16 07:30)

Obama campaign manager David Plouffe responded to concerns by an Indian American group over the Obama memo leaked that attacked Hillary's support of outsourcing to India. The article from "The Swamp" is appended below:

U.S.-India group sends letter questioning Obama

Posted by John McCormick and Christi Parsons

Sen. Barack Obama's presidential campaign expressed regret late Friday for the "tone" used in recently disclosed campaign documents that raised questions about rival Democrat Sen. Hillary Clinton's ties to India and Indian Americans.

The statement from Obama's campaign manager came in the wake of complaints from an Indian American group, whose leader complained earlier in the day about "anti-Indian American stereotyping" in the documents.

"There cannot be a suggestion that Indian-Americans are somehow taboo," said Sanjay Puri, chairman of the 50,000-member U.S.-India Political Action Committee. "That is not the message we want any leader to be presenting."

In a letter to Obama's campaign, the group asked the Illinois Democrat to "respond directly" to the reports and to "let us know if indeed your staff is promoting these hurtful stereotypes."

At issue are documents distributed to some news organizations by Obama aides on a not-for-attribution basis that offered a harsh analysis of the Clintons. One appeared under the headline "Hillary Clinton (D-Punjab)'s personal financial and political ties to India."

A copy of the documents was obtained by Clinton's campaign, which then provided them to the Tribune and other news organizations. Obama's campaign has confirmed the authenticity of the documents.

The Obama campaign said it regrets parts of the campaign-generated papers.

"Barack Obama has been a longtime friend of the Indian-American community and our campaign is fortunate to have strong support from Indian-Americans across the country," Obama campaign manager David Plouffe said in a statement. "The intent of the document was to discuss the issue of outsourcing, but we regret the tone that parts of the document took."

The release of the opposition research by the Obama camp was prompted by the Thursday release of new personal financial documents by Clinton's campaign.

Here are the documents:

Document 1: Download file

Document 2: Download file

And here is a video with Obama's own take on opposition research.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama campaign responds to Indian concerns over memo (2007-06-16 07:30)

Obama campaign manager David Plouffe responded to concerns by an Indian American group over the Obama memo leaked that attacked Hillary's support of outsourcing to India. The article from "The Swamp" is appended below:

U.S.-India group sends letter questioning Obama

Posted by John McCormick and Christi Parsons

Sen. Barack Obama's presidential campaign expressed regret late Friday for the "tone" used in recently disclosed campaign documents that raised questions about rival Democrat Sen. Hillary Clinton's ties to India and Indian Americans.

The statement from Obama's campaign manager came in the wake of complaints from an Indian American group, whose leader complained earlier in the day about "anti-Indian American stereotyping" in the documents.

"There cannot be a suggestion that Indian-Americans are somehow taboo," said Sanjay Puri, chairman of the 50,000-member U.S.-India Political Action Committee. "That is not the message we want any leader to be presenting."

In a letter to Obama's campaign, the group asked the Illinois Democrat to "respond directly" to the reports and to "let us know if indeed your staff is promoting these hurtful stereotypes."

At issue are documents distributed to some news organizations by Obama aides on a not-for-attribution basis that offered a harsh analysis of the Clintons. One appeared under the headline "Hillary Clinton (D-Punjab)'s personal financial and political ties to India."

A copy of the documents was obtained by Clinton's campaign, which then provided them to the Tribune and other news organizations. Obama's campaign has confirmed the authenticity of the documents.

The Obama campaign said it regrets parts of the campaign-generated papers.

"Barack Obama has been a longtime friend of the Indian-American community and our campaign is fortunate to have strong support from Indian-Americans across the country," Obama campaign manager David Plouffe said in a statement. "The intent of the document was to discuss the issue of outsourcing, but we regret the tone that parts of the document took."

The release of the opposition research by the Obama camp was prompted by the Thursday release of new personal financial documents by Clinton's campaign.

Here are the documents:

Document 1: Download file

Document 2: Download file

And here is a video with Obama's own take on opposition research.

Barack on Fatherhood and the Family (2007-06-16 16:16)

The Barack Obama campaign is releasing two items on Father's Day. A speech and video from South Carolina on strengthening families:

They are also launching a new podcast service that will be available soon on iTunes:

The Official Barack Obama Podcasts

This occasional series will catch up with Barack and supporters with an intimate look at Barack and supporters from the campaign trail.

Watch Episode 1: On Fatherhood in the player to the right. Use the buttons above to subscribe to the podcasts and get future episodes automatically. If you know the Internet address of a podcast, you can subscribe to it without using the iTunes Store. Choose Advanced > "Subscribe to Podcast" and then enter the URL. You can get the url from the buttons above.

Coming soon to the iTunes Store

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

XYBORG (2007-06-17 06:03:00)

As reticent as we are given to believe white Americans remain about electing a Black man like Senator Barack Obama to be their president and as impervious to logic as their enduring prejudices are to the rest of mankind is it necessarily counter-intuitive to imagine that they would be any less reluctant to appoint two Black men to their nation's two highest offices? Would such hesitance be compounded or would it not reverse and cancel out itself? Especially if the other Black man was General Colin Powell in the role of vice president?

Does it robotically follow that an America which has yet to demonstrate a readiness to be led by a single Black man would automatically balk at the prospect of two such men in the White House? Or would so daring a display of political chutzpah not, effectively, "checkmate" those reservations and capture the imagination of Americans like nothing in the entire political history of that country?

Indeed, wouldn't the mere coupling of two individuals with such stellar credentials not only serve to allay any fears about their fitness for such high offices but would actually enhance the confidence of the American electorate in so iconic a presidential partnering? For, does the answer to the "Black President Question" not, in fact, lie in an unprecedented political double-act, a unique "double whammy", consisting of not just any random pairing but of this Black president and that Black vice president? Would an Obama/Powell ticket be deemed "too Black" for the American electoral palette? Or would the combined calibre of both men have the opposite effect of, essentially, "aggregating out" their "over-Blackness" in a manner which would negate it as an adverse consideration in the minds of voters precisely because it was so, well, omni-present?

Is Senator Obama who really has nothing to lose at this point possessed of the raw gutsiness to double his political bets and altogether pre-empt the entire question of America's willingness to accept a man like himself in the role of CEO, by tapping

General Powell as his running mate and teasing the American electorate with the eye-popping prospect of two Black rulers in the West Wing at the same time? Indeed, may the answer to that age-old conundrum not lie on the far side of so brazen a display of sheer political sass? For, what other coupling could possibly match it? What presidential tag team would even come close? The US elections would be over before they had barely begun.

Having used his recent appearance on NBC's Meet the Press to make known that not only had he provided foreign policy advice to candidate Obama but that his "eyes and ears" remained open to requests to serve his country, General Powell unintentionally dangled, for that most fleeting of moments, the tantalizing prospect of what would be the most sensational single occurrence in American political history.

Since the question of whether or not America could ever "bring herself" to elect a Black president remains unresolved and to the extent that concerns about "competence" have underpinned that reluctance Americans should take heart from the knowledge that the institutions, procedures and functions of their nation are Herculean enough to check and balance the best efforts of even the most inept, ghetto-blasting and afro-having occupant of the Oval Office. For, not only does America need to elect a Black president if for no other reason than to get it "over and done with" and thus forever erase it from her national psyche as a question but she, unique among the nations of the Earth, can both afford and withstand such a presidency.

The breathtaking possibility of two Black men each of the very highest calibre and pedigree assuming power as both president and vice president of a country still so contorted and torn by its ghastly legacy of racial bigotry would dramatize and electrify the United States of America and the world beyond her shores. It would transform the national dialogue in that country and galvanise her electorate as never before. As the quintessential Manichean obverse to Bush/Cheney, the Obama/Powell administration would revolutionise the global identity of America and infuse her with a new momentum and meaning.

A Democrat like Senator Obama and a Republican like General Powell would provide the perfect bi-partisan ideological balm that could heal a divided America and surge her toward a better tomorrow. Such an Obama-Powell Presidency would be nothing short of messianic and would renew America's purpose in our world.

This possibility cannot be allowed to be a mere "dream"; for America and the world's sake, it must become reality.

Paul Kekai Manansala (2007-06-17 07:50:00)

I think Powell could strengthen a general election ticket.

However, I doubt that he will accept the vice president position because of his wife.

She's against Powell becoming president, which of course is always a possibility for a vice. You really need a spouse's support to run for elective office.

Maybe she's changed her mind after seeing Obama campaigning for office.

Powell though said he wasn't interested in elective office, and it may be that an appointment is in the works instead with Powell endorsing Obama.

Barack Obama leads in South Carolina poll (2007-06-17 08:47)

Sen. Barack Obama leads the pack in a recent Mason-Dixon poll conducted from June 13 to 15.

"Obama led in the new poll with 34 percent of likely voters to 25 percent for Clinton. Edwards was third at 12 percent. Sen. Joe Biden was at 2 percent; so was former Vice President Al Gore, who has given no indication of running but whose name was volunteered by some voters. Twenty-four percent were undecided."

Obama has done rather well in polls taken at least partly after his nationwide canvass on June 9 and one wonders whether the outreach helped boost his numbers.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2007-06-17 09:03)

"<http://nh.barackobama.com/page/content/nhcontactoffice>

Barack Obama seen as most intelligent candidate (2007-06-18 07:51)

A Forbes '08 Tracker poll found that respondents felt Sen. Barack Obama is the most intelligent of all the political candidates with Fred Thompson coming in second.

The same poll also found as the third most "appealing" candidate behind Rudy Giuliani and Fred Thompson, and the highest rated Democrat in this category. However, Obama was rated last of all the candidates in experience.

Barack popular among Navajo

Despite their location in New Mexico and Bill Richardson's support of Native American issues, Navajo leaders are looking to invite Barack Obama to the Shiprock reservation where Obama is apparently the most popular candidate. In recent elections, Navajo voters have strongly favored Democratic candidates.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack still rules the Internet (2007-06-18 14:20)

Barack Obama regained his lead in the alexa.com ratings for traffic and reach over other Democratic candidates. Hillary Clinton had temporarily grabbed the top spot due to increased traffic arising from her YouTube campaign song contest. Ron Paul though continues to lead among all candidates after his website shot up in the rankings a little over a month ago.

Barack though continues to have the most popular candidate site in the alexa.com directory though, which takes into account both site traffic and reach over a three month period. Barack's MySpace is ranked 9th among candidate sites and his YouTube page is 13th.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Maintaining discipline in the Obama camp (2007-06-19 08:01)

I've been hearing a buzz among some Obama supporters who think the candidate should go on the offensive against Hillary Clinton. They seem to be disturbed at the constant barrage of negative media coverage and Obama's performance in some polls.

I suspect such anxieties may have driven the recent memo mishap, which some supporters were quick to defend even though it clearly went against Obama's own declared intentions of practicing a "different kind of politics."

While it may be relatively easy to get the staff in line, the task of keeping volunteers in sync with Obama's message may prove more difficult.

There really is no reason to get upset with the early polls.

In previous presidential elections, Edmund Muskie in 1972, George Wallace in 1976, Ted Kennedy in 1980, Gary Hart in 1988, Mario Cuomo in 1992 and Joe Lieberman in 2004 were early front-runners among Democrats who eventually lost.

Rudy Giuliani has been the front-runner among Republicans who generally are better at predicting eventual winners, but few Republican insiders think he will win. This is because most Republican voters right now don't realize Giuliani is pro-choice. The polls show this and they also indicate that Republicans will not elect a pro-choice nominee.

So, as the election nears and voters begin to learn more about where candidates stand on the issues, Giuliani's support will drop, or so say the pundits.

In the same sense, as the election nears Democrats will be more focused on the Iraq War and Obama is the natural choice for this issue, especially if the campaign pushes hard on this matter with their television ads and volunteer push.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama rocks AFSCME forum (2007-06-19 12:56)

Barack Obama's speech at the Take Back America Conference organized by the AFSCME labor union was reportedly stole the show and was one of his finest on record.

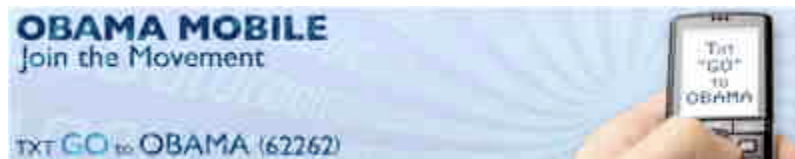

Ezra Cline wrote of the speech:

Obama gave the best speech I've seen him give – and I was at the 2004 Democratic convention. [Obama] argued that when citizens turn away and the voters accustom themselves to disappointment... a vacuum opens up. And politics, like nature, abhors vacuums. So the lobbyists and the special interests and the lawyers rush in to fill it.

Sen. Obama at Take Back America

Obama campaign releases text messaging feature

Moving forward in its efforts to connect with young people, the Obama team introduced a new texting feature at barackobama.com:

We are excited to announce that we just launched TXT to OBAMA (62262). This is a great and easy way for everyone on the go to stay connected with our movement.

Anyone can simply Text “Go” to OBAMA (62262) to sign up for text messaging.

If you text “GO” to OBAMA (62262) between now and June 30th, you will also receive a free bumper sticker.

Visit www.barackobama.com/go

There is no charge from our campaign for text messaging—participants will only have to pay their standard text messaging rates from their own providers.

More information is available at www.barackobama.com/mobile

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama coments on Culinary Workers Union settlement (2007-06-20 08:21)

Barack Obama released a statement on the Culinary Union Workers 226 settlement with Harrah's casino.

This is a positive step forward, but this is bigger than one contract or negotiation and it is time for other companies to follow suit. I pledged my support for the workers when I met with the negotiating committee two weeks ago and I'll be there with them on the picket line until every worker has a fair contract.

What we are fighting for is making real the idea that in this country, we value the labor of every American. That we're willing to respect that labor and reward it with a few basic guarantees - wages that can raise a family, health care if we get sick, a retirement that's dignified, a home you can afford. We will not achieve success for all workers until we have fair contracts that make it possible for workers to achieve the American dream.

Sen. Obama's rally speech in Greenville, South Carolina [EMBED]

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama wins straw poll (2007-06-20 13:54)

Sen. Barack Obama won a straw poll held today at the Take Back America event:

Politico and Democratic pollster Stan Greenberg conducted a straw poll among the liberal activists attending the Campaign for America's Future "Take Back America" conference. Obama came out on top with 29 % of the vote, followed by Edwards at 26 %, and Clinton at 17 %. Richardson was fourth with 9 %, and Al Gore got 8 % as a write-in candidate (his name wasn't listed on the ballot).

This may bode well for Obama's chances in obtaining endorsements of progressive unions.
Take a little photo tour of Obama's Chicago campaign headquarters.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Four picked for "Dinner with Barack" (2007-06-21 08:14)

Barack Obama's presidential campaign announced the winners of the "Dinner with Barack" contest. The dinner will take place in July at a Washington restaurant with all expenses paid for by Obama for America. No details were given on the number of participants or the amount raised by the effort. Here are the four winners:

Haile Rivera (Bronx, N.Y.): He works as a community program specialist with the Food Bank for New York City during the day which includes work with food pantries, youth programs and soup kitchens. In his spare time, he founded "Hands on New York," a non-profit organization in New York City dedicated to getting school age kids involved in civics.

Michael Griffith (Fernley, Nevada): He is a miner in western Nevada whose health care costs have tripled over recent years. This is his first time donating or participating in politics and he felt that as his family grew, so did his concern with the direction of the country.

Margaret Thomas-Jordan (Gonzales, La.): She is a working mother of two boys, age nineteen months and eleven years and she is attending school to become a nurse. Her husband was shipped to Iraq last month and he is currently serving a 15-month tour. Health care costs have grown especially difficult for her and she is struggling with access to health care because she does not qualify as a traditional student.

Jennifer Lasko (Lake Worth, Fla.): She used to be an active member of the Republican Party and was a member of the College Republicans at Cornell University. She served as an officer in the army after graduating and is now a full time firefighter and paramedic in Lake Worth. The last campaign she participated in was Reagan-Bush in 1984.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2007-06-21 08:14)

Barack Obama's presidential campaign announced the winners of the "Dinner with Barack" contest. The dinner will take place in July at a Washington restaurant with all expenses paid for by Obama for America. No details were given on the number of participants or the amount raised by the effort. Here are the four winners:

Haile Rivera (Bronx, N.Y.): He works as a community program specialist with the Food Bank for New York City during the day which includes work with food pantries, youth programs and soup kitchens. In his spare time, he founded "Hands on New York," a non-profit organization in New York City dedicated to getting school age kids involved in civics.

Michael Griffith (Fernley, Nevada): He is a miner in western Nevada whose health care costs have tripled over recent years. This is his first time donating or participating in politics and he felt that as his family grew, so did his concern with the direction of the country.

Margaret Thomas-Jordan (Gonzales, La.): She is a working mother of two boys, age nineteen months and eleven years and she is attending school to become a nurse. Her husband was shipped to Iraq last month and he is currently serving a 15-month tour. Health care costs have grown especially difficult for her and she is struggling with access to health care because she does not qualify as a traditional student.

Jennifer Lasko (Lake Worth, Fla.): She used to be an active member of the Republican Party and was a member of the College Republicans at Cornell University. She served as an officer in the army after graduating and is now a full time firefighter and paramedic in Lake Worth. The last campaign she participated in was Reagan-Bush in 1984.

Obama link with scattering students (2007-06-22 00:18)

With the summer now fully upon us, college students have scattered to the four corners. They've gone backpacking, to summer jobs or internships, back to their folk's, etc. Some have graduated and have relocated to new jobs. For a campaign so strongly driven by young people, it will be important for the Obama campaign to stay connected to their student supporters.

The Obama Mobile service offering cellphone updates, alerts, wallpaper and ringtones is part of this effort.

When school reopens in the fall, Students for Obama will be tasked with regrouping and reaching out to new and transfer students.

Obama releases info on earmarks

Barack Obama became the only presidential candidate to release information on his earmark requests today.

"On Wednesday morning Obama released a list of roughly 100 proposed earmarks that he had submitted to the Appropriations Committee this year. As would be expected, the requests are for largely benign items, ranging from funding for AIDS programs to Army Corps of Engineers projects in the Chicagoland area."

Free Mobile Wallpapers:

X

Txt "image1" to OBAMA

X

Txt "image2" to OBAMA

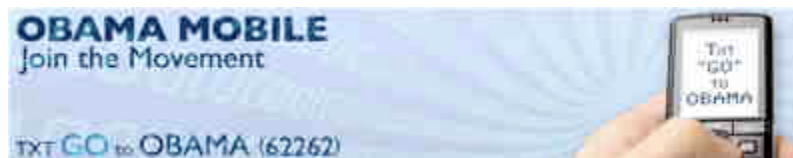

X

Txt "image3" to OBAMA

X

Txt "image4" to OBAMA

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama as 'hope-monger' (2007-06-22 07:13)

In his speech at Take Back America, Barack Obama said that he has been called a 'peddler of hope' and a 'hope-monger.'

The characteristic of hope is the element that defines Obama's efforts to create a people's movement rather than a simple campaign to get himself elected as president.

Obama's idea, clearly stated in numerous speeches and outlined in his writings, is that real change in the country is not accomplished simply by electing a leader. Citizens must get involved in the process at all levels.

Electing a president is only the beginning, only part of the process. People must make government accountable from the local level to the highest office. They must bring about change from the bottom up.

Remember that the government at all levels charges you for everything you do. They tax you for the food you eat, for the land you live on, for the gas you need to power your vehicle. They tax your parents when you are born, and your descendants when you die.

The government also regulates what you can and cannot do in almost every detail.

So you have every reason to make sure the government is run the way you desire, and by people you support.

The government is in no position to tell you to pull yourselves up by your bootstraps when misfortune strikes you or your community. You own the government. You pay the salaries of elected officials and bureaucrats. You purchase all government infrastructure.

Barack has asked his supporters of all ages to get involved in their communities and in the democratic process and not simply to vote for him as president. He's made it clear that getting his programs through will not be easy.

Getting elected to the Oval Office is just the first step.

In order to mobilize his backers, Obama must convey the message of hope. Because people must believe change is possible. Without hope people become cynical, they stop caring and stop paying attention to the government that charges them for every move they make. When people have hope, they will continue to persevere even when things look bleak because they can visualize the possibility of a different tomorrow.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama reveals sweeping ethics reform plan (2007-06-22 09:31)

Presidential candidate Barack Obama unveiled the strongest ethics reform package yet during speech today at Manchester, New Hampshire.

When I am President, I will make it absolutely clear that working in an Obama Administration is not about serving your former employer, your future employer, or your bank account – it's about serving your country, and that's what comes first. When you walk into my administration, you will not be able to work on regulations or contracts directly related to your former employer for two years. And when you leave, you will not be able to lobby the Administration throughout the remainder of my term in office.

A lot of people have told me this is pretty tough, but I refuse to accept the Washington logic that you cannot find thousands of talented, patriotic Americans willing to devote a few years to their country without the promise of a lucrative lobbying job after they're done. I know we can find them, and in my administration, we will. When there is a bill that ends up on my desk as President, you will have five days to look online and find out what's in it before I sign it. When there are meetings between lobbyists and a government agency, we won't be going to the Supreme Court to keep it secret like Dick Cheney and his energy task force, we'll be putting them up on the Internet for every American to watch. And instead of allowing lobbyists to slip big corporate tax breaks into bills during the dead of night, we will make sure every single tax break and earmark is available to every American online. This builds on the "Google for Government" law I passed in Congress, which already allows you to see every contract, every grant, every dime of federal spending online.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Vote Hope PAC to positively support Obama (2007-06-22 22:21)

One of the first independent political organizations (PAC) supporting a presidential candidate opened in California with the goal of banking 500,000 mail votes before the Iowa caucuses in January 2008.

The Vote Hope PAC and its website votehope2008.com was started by San Francisco lawyer and activist Steve Philipps, his wife Susan Sandler and other activists in the Bay Area.

The group plans to raise about $3 million for a statewide vote-by-mail effort in support of Barack Obama particularly among groups with low voting turnout like young people and minorities. The plan is not only to swing California toward Barack but to increase the state's influence in the early voting process.

California voters can register their votes for Barack at:

<http://votehope2008.com/addmyvote.php>

Group takes early hit

I was alerted by Justin Cole of Media Matters that the mud started flying toward Vote Hope ride out of the starting gates.

Amy Robach of MSNBC compared the political action committee to the "swift-boat" groups of the last presidential election, even though Vote Hope's effort is not geared toward negative campaigning. Vote Hope and Media Matters both printed articles clarifying the situation.

Obama spokesperson Bill Burton responding to the report said "it is our hope that anyone who supports Obama does so directly through the campaign and not an outside group."

However, wealthy individuals and groups that have maxed out on direct contributions to Obama for America may be looking for other independent committees like Vote Hope to support their candidate. Individuals may contribute up to $5,000 to a PAC outside of their direct contributions to the Obama campaign. Individuals may also spend their own money without limit in supporting a candidate independently. Wealthy individuals are known to have mounted expensive independent television ad campaigns in support of political candidates.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama and a "Better Way" (2007-06-24 13:18)

At a rally in the Hammerstein Ballroom in New York, Ben Harper announced that his song – "Better Way" would be used as a campaign song by the Obama campaign. Here are the lyrics for Better Way and below a video of Ben Harper performing the song.

Better Way

I'm a living sunset
Lightning in my bones
Push me to the edge
But my will is stone

'Cause I believe in a better way

Fools will be fools
And wise will be wise
But I will look this world
Straight in the eyes

I believe in a better way
I believe in a better way

What good is a man
Who won't take a stand
What good is a cynic
With no better plan

I believe in a better way
I believe in a better way

Reality is sharp
It cuts at me like a knife

Everyone I know
Is in the fight of their life

And I believe in a better way

Take your face out of your hands

And clear your eyes

You have a right to your dream

And don't be denied

I believe in a better way

I believe in a better way

I believe in a better way [EMBED]

A lower bandwidth video of Obama's speech on ethics reform is also available on YouTube:

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack of Ages (2007-06-24 19:53)

Sen. Barack Obama spoke before a crowd of about 10,000 United Church of Christ (UCC) members in "Doing the Lord's work is a thread that's run through our politics since the very beginning," Obama told church members. "And it puts the lie to the notion that the separation of church and state in America—a principle we all must uphold and that I have embraced as a constitutional lawyer and most importantly as a Christian—means faith should have no role in public life."

Barack is a member of the Trinity United Church of Christ in Chicago's South Side.

The UCC was first church to ordain an African-American, the first woman and the first openly gay pastor. It was also the first denomination to approve same-sex marriage.

FaceBook Application

There's an interesting application on Facebook at:

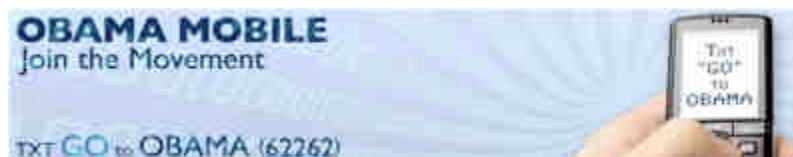

Link

It's a poll in which money is donated to candidates according to the percentage of votes they get in the poll.

I'm not entirely sure where the money comes from but I'm guessing it comes from ads generated on Facebook.

Barack Obama is clearly in the lead among Democrats. You must registered on Facebook to participate, and it costs the user nothing to raise money for the Obama campaign.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama campaign to launch Iowa TV ads (2007-06-25 09:23)

Barack Obama's presidential campaign will launch its first television ad campaign this week in Iowa in what may be an attempt to raise the candidate's name recognition.

Some polls have shown that about 25 percent of adults still are not familiar with Barack Obama. Early polling often reflects a candidate's name recognition.

Among other possibilities is that the campaign will test which messages "click" with Iowa voters.

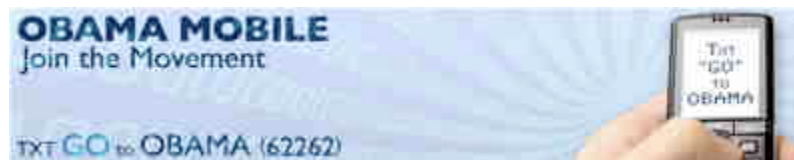

Two television ads will be used for this initial limited campaign.

A 60-second commercial, called "Choices," features Harvard Professor Laurence Tribe praising the decision Obama made after graduating from Harvard Law School to become a community organizer rather than a corporate lawyer.

The other 30-second spot, titled "Carry," has Illinois State Sen. Kirk Dillard, a Republican, speaking about Obama's work in the Illinois Legislature, where Dillard praises him for supporting ethics reform, expanding child care and health coverage and tax credits for low-income workers.

Running ads this early could be a waste of money and the move might be meant to placate supporters worried about Obama's poll numbers, which have stalled recently.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

2Q fundraising enters home stretch (2007-06-25 15:41)

Barack Obama sent a fundraising letter today in the last week of the 2nd quarter that ends in June.

Obama will try to show that he is indeed "sustainable" in terms of fundraising, a question some raised after his spectacular first quarter returns.

Here is the copy of Obama's appeal:

Dear Friend,

Make a donation and share your story of inspiration

X

BarackObama.com/inspire Candidates typically spend a week like this – right before the critical June 30th financial reporting deadline – on the phone day and night, begging Washington lobbyists and special interest PACs to write huge checks.

Not me. Our campaign has rejected the money-for-influence game and refused to accept funds from registered federal lobbyists and political action committees.

But there are serious financial consequences to that decision.

Cutting off the flow of easy Washington money means we have to work harder. Instead of relying on a handful of powerful interests, we must bring together hundreds of thousands of supporters, each owning an individual piece of our movement.

It's one thing to talk about financing campaigns differently. It's another for us to take that risk and put our trust in one another.

The June 30th deadline will prove that this era of broken politics and widespread cynicism is coming to a close. We're ready for that change, and together we can turn the page.

The rest of the country, and the world, is watching. They want to see if we can shake up the politics of the past and set the tone for this election and the future of our democracy.

You have shown your support before, and now you can share your inspiration.

Make a donation of $50 and be a part of something big:

barackobama.com/inspire

But don't stop there.

If we're going to get hundreds of thousands of people to join our movement, we need to do something different. That's why I'm turning the rest of this fundraising drive over to you.

This is the last you will hear from me until after the June 30th deadline.

From here on out, your stories and your passion will determine our success. When you make a donation, I want you to share what inspired you to join our movement. For the rest of the week, those stories – including your story – will drive the results.

Something powerful and personal inspired you to join our movement. It may be your family's rising health care costs or a relative fighting in Iraq. You might be fed up with corruption in Washington or frustrated by how petty and divisive our national politics has become.

Whatever your reasons, they will connect with someone else and they will make a difference. Make your donation now and share what inspired you to support our movement for change:

barackobama.com/inspire

Pundits and Washington insiders use these fundraising deadlines to measure the viability of campaigns. They like to judge potential in dollars, as if money alone somehow indicates widespread support.

But we measure success in people – the number of supporters giving to the campaign, and the number of donations they make to show their commitment.

We can get at least 10,000 people involved this week, but only if you take control.

Each of us must reach out to the people we know – our friends, family, colleagues, and neighbors – and inspire them to join our movement for change.

Donate now. Share your story and spread the word:

barackobama.com/inspire

Watch our website and your inbox for real stories from supporters like you.

This fundraising deadline is an important challenge for our campaign, but I know I can put my trust in you.

I have faith that we will succeed, and it won't be because of me – it will be because each of you has the power to inspire.

Thank you.

Barack Obama

P.S. – We’ve built something together that’s bigger than me or my candidacy. I just made my own donation to this movement and wrote a short note about how you’ve inspired me:

I’ve seen what can happen when people who love their country come together and decide it’s time for change. As a community organizer in the South Side of Chicago, I was part of a movement that turned around neighborhoods that others had given up on. I know what’s possible for this country. I know we can build a new kind of politics that recognizes we’re all connected as one people, that we rise or fall as one nation, and that we’re ready to turn the page and start anew.

Who can you inspire? Get started here:

barackobama.com/inspire

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Inspired by Barack Obama (2007-06-25 22:42)

Many people have responded to Team Obama’s donation drive asking supporters to tell what inspired them to support Barack Obama.

A few videos and quotes are included below:

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Amy, from Hilliard, Florida writes:

My children are my inspiration. I know that may seem common to say that, but it is true. I see in the five of them the future, and it is so important to me that I do what I can for them. I want them to have an America worth fighting for, and worthy of them. I want them to have a home, and a safe place to live and raise their own children.

...My decisions in the political arena are based them. When I support a candidate it is because I believe that person will help this country to a better place. That is why I am supporting you Senator Obama. I believe you want a better future for your own children just as I do.

Daren, from Smithfield, Utah writes: There is tremendous human suffering that exists because health care is not accessible to persons with disabilities. I believe Barack will take action to relieve this suffering and ensure that all Americans can afford to receive the services they need. I support Barack because I truly believe he will support the people of this country.

X

IFRAME: <http://barackobama.com>

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama comments on Middle East summit (2007-06-26 10:22)

Sen. Barack Obama released a statement on today's Middle East summit on the situation between Israel and Palestine:

"Today's summit in Sharm el-Sheikh is encouraging. I support the efforts of Prime Minister Olmert, President Mubarak, and King Abdullah to strengthen President Mahmoud Abbas and Prime Minister Salam Fayyad – two Palestinian leaders who have demonstrated their commitment to non-violence and achieving peace with Israel. These leaders seek peace and deserve the support of the international community."

"I applaud Prime Minister Olmert's announcements that Israel will release Palestinian prisoners as a gesture of goodwill. We hope that this goodwill, along with the unfrozen tax revenues being sent from Israel to the Palestinian Authority, will help strengthen a Palestinian partner for peace with Israel."

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

How much money does Obama need? (2007-06-26 13:36)

With the second quarter nearly at an end, how much money will Barack Obama need to fund his campaign?

Recently, Joe Trippi, the former Howard Dean guy now working for John Edwards, said that Edwards will need $40 million to pursue a four state strategy targeting Iowa, Nevada, New Hampshire and South Carolina. That would average out to about $10 million a state, although the actual share used for each state could vary widely.

Because Edwards is not able to raise the same kind of money as Obama and Clinton, the hope is that a good showing in the early states will attract new money and supporters for Super Duper Tuesday on Feb. 5, 2008.

If we use the figure of $40 million also for the Obama effort in the four early states, they will probably raise that much and more by this quarter.

That would mean that the next two quarters and the five weeks in the first quarter of next year could presumably be used to raise money for Feb. 5.

There could be 20 states including heavyweights like California and New York participating in Super Duper Tuesday also pegged as "Tsunami Tuesday" for its potential to shape the 2008 primary election.

If Obama can raise at least $20 million in each of the next two quarters and then maybe another $10 million in the first five weeks of 2008, he can have about $50 to $60 million for Tsunami Tuesday.

On the high end that would average out to about $3 million a state although certainly the campaign would look to target the states with the most potential. California alone can easily eat up $20 million in a statewide race.

However, if Obama does well in the four early states before Feb. 5, he could vastly increase his monetary, organizational and grassroots support. The momentum of the early states often acts as "king-maker."

One could say that a reasonable goal would be about $40-50 million for the four early states, and a reserve of $40-60 million for Tsunami Tuesday, not counting any money raised during or after the early state voting.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Be Inspired, Be Counted (2007-06-26 17:14)

Check out Barack Obama's new fundraising meter from the official homepage:

X

X

[EMBED]

X X X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Michelle Obama: 'I'm married to the The Answer' (2007-06-27 14:27)

Michelle Obama worked Harlem and wealthy Central Park West for her husband Barack yesterday.

"I am married to The Answer," she told a cheering Harlem community center crowd . "And I'm not just saying that because I'm his wife."

Michelle said she wasn't quite sure of what to make of a young Barack Obama when she first met him. "I'd never met a black man from Hawaii before!" she said- but grew fond of him quickly. "He was cute," said Michelle, "and that helped. But what really got me was watching him organize community members in Chicago on a grassroots level."

X

X

[EMBED]

X X X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama seeks record donors in 2Q (2007-06-28 07:11)

Obama for America easily reached a goal of 10,000 donors in the last week of the second quarter, and now it has a new target.

The campaign wants to set a records of 250,000 donors for the year at the end of the second quarter, which at the time of this writing would mean about 6000 more donors by June 30.

Considering that many of Obama's young supporters are off for the summer, the ability of the campaign to raise cash this fast is impressive. Here is the letter from campaign manager David Plouffe announcing the new goal:

Dear Friend,

Join the drive to reach 250,000 donors – a quarter of a million people – by June 30th, it will send a powerful message that our movement is both bigger and deeper than anything presidential politics has ever seen.

Be inspired and be counted:
BarackObama.com/inspire

✉

I have some extraordinary news for you.

We crunched the numbers last night, and because we hit our goal so quickly – 10,000 people have already donated to the campaign this week – things have changed.

Suddenly, we're within reach of something no presidential campaign has ever dreamed of at this stage.

With your support, we could reach 250,000 donors for the year by the June 30th filing deadline.

We have a chance to seize this moment and make history.

The media and the Washington pundits are so focused on the money chase that they have missed the bigger story. Each donation to this campaign is a declaration of commitment to the idea that we can change our politics and elect a leader who will inspire and unite this country.

If you join the drive to reach 250,000 donors – a quarter of a million people – by June 30th, it will send a powerful message that our movement is both bigger and deeper than anything presidential politics has ever seen.

The count is live on BarackObama.com , and your donation can make that number grow right now. Show your commitment and be counted before the June 30th deadline:

<http://www.barackobama.com/inspire>

This campaign has become a vehicle for hundreds of thousands of Americans who believe that the people can take control of the political process again.

Who are the nearly 250,000 people to give so far? Watch some of them in their own words:

Gregory Smith came to the U.S. from Jamaica in 1976. His family was reunited in New York City where he is living the American dream.

Lauren Dula is originally from North East Pennsylvania. Her father is a truck driver and her mother is a secretary, and she and her brother are the first generation in their family to go to college.

Barbara Rubin is a Boca Raton, Florida resident who suffers from multiple sclerosis. Three years ago, due to her condition, she was forced to retire from her job.

We are one movement owned by nearly 250,000 people like them, not Washington lobbyists or political action committees.

While the professional pundits are busy handicapping a big-money horse race, we have a more important goal: getting more people involved and owning a piece of this campaign.

We've grown by almost 140,000 new donors this quarter, and in the next three days we can set an unprecedented record – but only if you donate now.

The state of the presidential race has the potential to shift dramatically in the next 72 hours. Please make sure you are counted during this final push:

<http://www.barackobama.com/inspire>

There are some who have denied that a movement like ours is possible, but the reality is clear.

Individual people with purpose, passion and the will to make a small sacrifice can build a movement unlike anything presidential politics has ever seen. And we're only just getting started.

Let's make history together on June 30th.

Thank you,

David

David Plouffe

Campaign Manager

Obama for America

P.S. – This week we've posted thousands of personal stories from donors in text and video on our home-page. Chances are you'll find one that inspires you there:

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Watch Barack at PBS debate tonight (2007-06-28 12:11)

Tonight, Barack Obama and other presidential candidates will participate in the PBS debate moderated by Tavis Smiley at Howard University, a traditionally African American college.

It may very well be that Obama will have reached the campaign goal of 250,000 donations by the time the debate starts tonight at 9 p.m. EST. Colin Powell will be on Larry King tonight and it will be interesting to see whether he endorses Barack as some have speculated .

Obama releases statement on Supreme Court ruling

Sen. Obama challenged a Supreme Court decision on diversity today calling on Congress to combat the re-segregation of America's schools.

"Today's Supreme Court ruling has placed a serious obstacle in the way of achieving the vision of America first outlined in the landmark case of Brown v. Board of Education, where we see racially integrated education as the best way to reflect our great diversity, unite our nation, and make real our promise of equal opportunity for all.

"Though we have come a long way in those fifty years since Brown, our schools remain segregated by race, as well as resources and opportunities. Three-quarters of black and Latino school children attend predominantly minority schools and white children are even more likely to attend racially isolated schools. And yet, hundreds of school districts across the country have taken noble, yet modest, steps to address this problem, while still accommodating parental and student choice. They have done so because they too believe that our nation's prosperity depends on our children learning to understand each other better, work together, and solve problems together

"This wrong-headed ruling underscores the critical importance of a President's appointments to the Supreme Court and a Justice Department's commitment to civil rights enforcement. It is the but the latest in a string of decisions by this conservative bloc of Justices that turn back the clock on decades of advancement and progress in the struggle for equality. Chief Justice Robert's opinion reflects a disturbing view of the Constitution that equates voluntary integration with Jim Crow segregation – a view that is both legally and morally wrong. The policies that led to racially diverse schools in Seattle and Louisville are a far cry from the policies of racial subordination that led to blacks-only and whites-only schools in the pre-Brown era. To equate the two is to turn a blind eye to our nation's history.

"I filed a brief in these cases, along with several of my colleagues in the Senate, which explained to the Court that a racially diverse learning environment has a profoundly positive educational impact on all students, and I remain devoted to working toward this goal. The Congress has the constitutional power and responsibility to address the resegregation of our schools, and I am committed to using that authority. I will immediately call for hearings to determine the most effective steps that Congress can take to move forward. And as President, I will appoint Supreme Court justices who understand the constitutional importance of Brown. Those Justices will ultimately vindicate Brown's promise, as Justice Breyer and today's dissenters put it, of 'one law, one Nation, one people, not simply as a matter of legal principle but in terms of how we actually live.”

Join the drive to reach 250,000 donors – a quarter of a million people – by June 30th, it will send a powerful message that our movement is both bigger and deeper than anything presidential politics has ever seen.

Be inspired and be counted:
BarackObama.com/inspire

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Will Barack Obama raise $50+ million? (2007-06-28 15:48)

News sources reported that an Obama aide characterized estimates of $40 million for the candidate's second quarter fundraising as "hysterical." One staff member was reported to have said the campaign would be happy raising $20 million.

Most estimates I've seen recently are in the $32 to $36 million range.

However, it may be that the final figure will be more like $50 to $55 million.

I didn't consult a psychic to figure this out but simply crunched some numbers based on my observations of the campaign over the second quarter.

In the last quarter, Obama raised $25 million from 104,000 donations. He averaged about $247 per donation.

From my observations, there is no reason to believe that the average donation has fallen much. Certainly it could have, and there really is not enough information to say anything certain.

Many Obama supporters did max out in contributions during the first quarter. However, Obama's unexpectedly solid fundraising may have convinced many big rollers, who hesitated initially, that they should cover their bases with Obama.

Late in the second quarter, Barack had his biggest day yet raising more than $1.5 million in Chicago. This indicates that the bundlers still have room to move around in. Indeed, I know of some "deep pockets" here in my own area who want Obama to come to town before maxing on their donations.

The offline fundraising at least appeared to keep pace with the online efforts.

If that's true, and Obama averages about the same per donation as in the first quarter, he would raise about $56 million. That's based on the campaign goal of a year-long 350,000 contributions by the end of this quarter, or about 242,000 donations in the second quarter. So, 242,000 people x $231 equals about 55.9 million.

If we "lowball" this and presume that Obama will average only 90 percent of the average donation last quarter, he will still raise over $50 million.

Of course, the average donation could be much smaller than it was in the previous quarter. However, Barack already had the lowest average donation of the big candidates. In comparison, John Edwards raised an average $350 per donation, and Hillary had $520 per donation.

The Obama team publicly stated today that the average donation this time is "likely" to be less than in the last quarter, which suggests that it could be the same, which suggests that it's probably near that mark already.

To be "conservative" though, I'm going to predict that Obama will make at least $45 million.

We'll know for sure on Jul. 15, and probably before then when the Obama campaign publicly releases its numbers.

Be inspired and be counted:

BarackObama.com/inspire

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Debate buzz (2007-06-29 11:25)

The PBS debate last night was difficult to watch because of the pressure on candidates to rush their answers.

In the end, the attempt to cover so much ground may it difficult to remember anything the candidates said of substance.

However, we should remember that these debates tend to be about poise and beauty anyway rather than examination of issues. Most of the great turning moments in past debates centered around a candidate's un-presidential behavior or appearance rather than on anything they actually said during the event.

You can watch the taped video of the debate at the PBS website:

http://www.pbs.org/kcet/tavissmiley/special/forums/?campaign=pbshomefeatu_res_1_allamericanpresidentialforums_2007-06-29

The campaign has compiled some of the positive reviews of Barack's performance on their website:

- Politico's Roger Simon: Spoke with passion and conviction and has gotten better and more confident with each debate, which bodes well for him because we have plenty of debates to go. He had a certain kind of homefield advantage as the only African-American onstage, but he used it modestly. While others could show sympathy, he could show empathy. "We have made enormous progress," he said, "but the progress we have made is not good enough." And he did speak with refreshing candor when he talked about the high incidence of HIV/AIDS in the black community, and said: "We must overcome the stigma that still exists. We don't talk about this. We don't talk about this in our schools. We don't talk about this in our churches. It is an aspect of homophobia that we don't talk about it." Click here to read the article in Politico
- Democratic Consultant Jenny Backus: Democratic consultant Jenny Backus said Obama's effort to speak to whites and blacks resulted in his best debate yet. "Obama took his performance to a different level by showing the ability to have a conversation that was about race that wasn't just one way," Backus said. "He was talking to both whites and blacks in his answers." Click here to read the article in Forbes
- Washington Post's Chris Cillizza: Speaking of nice moments, Obama showed his ease in the debate a few minutes ago. After Sen. Joe Biden (Del.) said that both he and Obama had been tested for AIDS, Obama jumped in to note that he had been tested with his wife, Michelle – jokingly adding that he didn't want anyone to think anything "funny" was going on. The crowd laughed as PBS showed Michelle on screen. The moment showed how Obama has grown in the first three debates; he appears relaxed and comfortable tonight. Click here to read the blog post in the Washington Post
- Slate: Howard University was Barack Obama's venue. As the only African American candidate he received the loud shout-outs from the audience. Click here to read the article in Slate Magazine
- The Nation's John Nichols: Illinois Senator Barack Obama, the only black candidate on the stage, was especially eloquent in his denunciation of the current court's assault on the protections set in place by the 1954 Brown v. Board of Education ruling that barred state-sponsored school segregation. Speaking of the courageous students, parents and civil rights lawyers who fought to bring the Brown v. Board of Education case to the high court more than half a century ago, he mused, "If it were not for them, I would not be standing here." Click here to read the blog post in The Nation

Be inspired and be counted:
BarackObama.com/inspire

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Cornel West supporting Barack Obama? (2007-06-29 17:43)

Cornel West said he was a "critical supporter" of Barack Obama and that he was in "his camp" during an interview with Amy Goodman on DemocracyNow.

West also had praise for John Edwards but considered Hillary Clinton still a bit too "neo-liberal."

CORNEL WEST: I think that we're beginning to move to some of the serious subject matters, but we've still got a long way to go, though, Amy. You know and I know that the fundamental question is always, what is the quality of service to everyday people, what the depth of love and sacrifice to empowering everyday people. When you look at what, in fact, Obama, Edwards, Clinton — let's say the top three, as it were — there's no doubt that Edwards has an impressive concern about poverty and so forth. And Brother Obama — and you know I am a critical supporter of my dear Brother Obama — I think that his campaign is kicking in, but it's still got to be more intensified when it comes to focusing on issues that concern progressives. And I think Hillary Clinton has a long way to go, because she's carrying a baggage, as it were, of the kind of neoliberalist — the neoliberal project of her husband.

But I think that we're going to — beginning tonight, we're going to see a turn. We're going to see a real focus on the criminal justice system, prison-industrial complex; wealth inequality; imperial invasion, not just in Iraq, but threatening Iran, and so forth and so on. And I'm hoping, of course, that my dear Brother Obama really emerges, and I'm hoping and praying that he does. But most importantly, you and I know it's really about causes, it's really about principles, it's about ideals, and we're fighting for democracy now, as you rightly describe and name your wonderful show, my sister.

AMY GOODMAN: When you say, Professor West, a critical supporter of Obama, what do you mean? Where do you think he hasn't come out strong enough?

CORNEL WEST: Well, I'm in his camp, but I'm just — I put pressure — I think that he's got to be more bold. I think that he's got to be more courageous, in terms of highlighting issues of the poor, issues of working people, the legacies of white supremacy that are still very, very real. And I know he's got to be a politician about this, on the one hand, because he's got a larger constituency, but you know and I know we're looking for statesmen. And I think my dear Brother Obama has a potential to be a great statesman, but he's in process. And we're putting — we're pushing and hoping that he enacts this kind of statesmanship, which has to do so much with bold unflinching honesty and candor regarding the levels of injustice in our society.

AMY GOODMAN: And when you talk about Hillary Clinton, referring to her neoliberal background and agenda, what do you mean by that?

CORNEL WEST: I mean that neoliberalism is spent, you know? It was opportunistic. It looked good on the surface, but it had very little substance when it came to poor people, when it came to working people, when it came to the crime bills that have generated, escalating incarceration of so many poor people, and so forth. She's either going to have to shift in a progressive way, or the old neoliberalism, I think, is going to run out of gas.

AMY GOODMAN: Edwards?

CORNEL WEST: Edwards is — you know, he's an impressive brother. He's not getting the traction that he wants, I think, but the issues of poverty and universal healthcare, I'm impressed. I'm hoping my dear Brother Obama actually begins to out-progressivize Edwards, as it were. But I have great respect for Brother Edwards and his wife, of course, who we all want to pull for and myself, as a Christian, I pray for.

Here is a funny spoof on Cornel West by "Clifton East."
[EMBED]

Be inspired and be counted:
BarackObama.com/inspire

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Fox Chicago (2007-06-30 17:53:00)

WWW.Obamatracker.com has a variety of articles about Obama and his policies. It might be of interest to you.

3,000 attend Barack Obama's Minnesota kickoff fundraiser (2007-06-30 21:13)

A crowd of 3,000 paid between $15 and $25 to attend a grassroots fundraiser for candidate Barack Obama's Minnesota kickoff Saturday.

Obama was introduced by Rep. Keith Ellison and Minneapolis mayor R.T. Rybak, who were the first mayor and congressman to endorse Obama.

The low ticket entrance is part of an Obama campaign strategy geared at the senator's many young supporters. Obama's online fundraising efforts have easily topped the campaign goals of 250,000 donors and 350,000 donations for the year.

Barack Obama Minnesota Community Kickoff

[EMBED]

Be inspired and be counted:
BarackObama.com/inspire

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

1.7 July

Barack Obama quietly smashes record (2007-07-02 05:59)

In the weeks leading to the second quarter deadline, the press painted a bleak picture of the Obama campaign. Using poll numbers they made it seem that Hillary was an unstoppable juggernaut.

They should have known better though. Early polls, especially among Democrats and in primaries without a strong incumbent, don't mean much in predicting the final outcome. Many polls have shown that Hillary's support is soft, based probably on the fact that people recognize her name more than the other candidates.

The Obama camp made little effort to combat the media spin, instead concentrating on perfecting its grassroots organizing plan. The fundraising strategy that worked so well in the first quarter was further developed this time around with numerous low-ticket events.

When reporting time came around, the Obama camp revealed it had smashed previous records for cash raised in a single quarter. Maybe not to the extent predicted by Carville or in this blog but still quite impressively when the stats are analyzed.

Obama raised $32.5 million compared to Hillary's $27 million and $9 million for Edwards. More importantly $31 million of Barack's cash is available for the primary compared to only $21 million for Hillary.

Barack thus pulls ahead of the "front-runner" in primary election funds.

As some $6 million of Hillary's donations are restricted for a possible general election bid, it probably means that many of her donors this quarter have maxed out in primary contributions.

Barack repeated his performance last quarter in attracting record numbers of small contributors. These supporters may repeat donations in the future just as donors from last quarter gave again this time around.

A supporter who gives money makes an investment in the campaign indicating a greater depth of commitment. Many of these donors may become reliable volunteers for the ground campaign as well.

It's an extraordinary accomplishment for a campaign that just started six months ago. In comparison, Barack's top rivals have been preparing for many years.

Team Obama has every reason to be joyous and proud, but not overconfident. A lot of work still must be done to raise their candidate's name recognition. Volunteers need to prepare for field operations further down the road particularly in getting Obama supporters to the polls or to vote by mail.

✖ [EMBED]

✖

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✖

Barack comments on Libby, 2Q success (2007-07-02 16:28)

Barack Obama released a statement on the Pres. George W. Bush's commuting of the Lewis "Scooter" Libby sentence today:

This decision to commute the sentence of a man who compromised our national security cements the legacy of an Administration characterized by a politics of cynicism and division, one that has consistently placed itself and its ideology above the law. This is exactly the kind of politics we must change so we can begin restoring the American people's faith in a government that puts the country's progress ahead of the bitter partisanship of recent years.

Barack also sent out earlier today an email where he talks of the campaign's second quarter fundraising success and includes a link with a breakdown of progress made during the quarter. Online, some 100,000 people donated altogether and there are 230,000 members of barackobama.com.

Dear Friend,

✖ A lot of people are talking about money today.

It's true – together we raised a significant amount over the past few months. And your generosity is what will make it possible to mount a winning campaign. For that, I cannot thank you enough.

But the money isn't the whole story.

The most extraordinary and deeply humbling result is the people – more than 258,000 of you – who have taken ownership of this campaign.

A number that big is a thunderclap over the political process. It means our campaign has more supporters than any campaign in history at this point in an election, and it's a wake-up call to our current politics.

It means ordinary people are coming together in unprecedented numbers to take back their government.

It means you are defying the pundits and Washington insiders, rejecting their cynicism and negativity, and embracing the hope that we can change things for the better.

It means we are building a movement so big, so deep, and so personal that our collective voice is undeniable.

If you visited our website over the past week, you saw the thousands of personal stories our donors have chosen to share – stories that ring true with passion and a hunger for something new.

But even though so many of us share a common goal, our success is not inevitable.

While everyone is marveling at our numbers and patting us on the back, we need to focus on the next question, “Where do we go from here?”

The answer is as simple as it is challenging: We organize.

As a community organizer in the South Side of Chicago, I witnessed how change works from the grassroots up. I saw how people working together with a common purpose can transform their communities and give them new life. The same is true for our country.

We need to start in our own communities, by reaching out to our friends, family, colleagues, and neighbors. We need to identify our common ground and work together for the common good.

And we have one tremendous advantage that no other campaign has: the solidarity of more than 258,000 people working with us.

We’ve put together a brief overview of what we’ve accomplished over these past three months: Where We Stand.

Thank you for your generosity and support. It’s impressive and inspiring, but we have a long way to go.

We’ve demonstrated that we can defy expectations and turn the political process on its head. Now it’s time to combine our personal stories, build on our milestones of success, and take the next step.

Thank you for being part of this movement for change – this is just the beginning. ✕

Barack Obama

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Hill calls Bill over Barack bucks (2007-07-03 07:59)

Hillary Clinton is leading in most polls and is raking in big endorsements, but the recent war-chest numbers appear to have her campaign concerned.

Hillary is unleashing her not-so-secret weapon, husband Bill Clinton, who will begin appearing regularly with the candidate. Although many of her big-money donors appear to have maxed out in direct contributions to the campaign, they do have other options.

Supporters with deep pockets could opt to donate to independent committees known as 527s after the tax code that governs their existence. They can give up to $5,000 to a 527 that directly supports Hillary although none apparently exist yet.

Very wealthy persons could also choose to spend money independently in support of a candidate, and there no limit to these types of expenditures.

Bill Clinton is known for his fundraising prowess and will almost certainly be used to help boost Hillary’s coffers.

Barack Obama is not exactly wanting in deep pocket supporters even if his campaign is characterized more by the average person including many who have never donated to a political candidate before. While about 22 percent of Hillary’s 2Q contributions were targeted at the general election, indicating supporters who had maxed on primary donations, only about 4.6 percent of Obama’s cash is for the general election.

Still, wealthy Obama endorsers like George Soros and Oprah Winfrey could choose to mount independent campaigns supporting the senator in the future.

Grassroots roots volunteers can also spend limited amounts of money without having to file election reports. And its not unknown for ordinary supporters to open 527s as well.

Certainly, Obama's massive volunteer support base has already spent large amounts of money in efforts like the Walk for Change, tabling and other events that doesn't show up in the fundraising reports.

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

The inevitable Dean comparisons (2007-07-03 11:12)

Barack Obama's spectacular second quarter cash has brought out again the old expected comparisons to the Howard Dean campaign.

Like Obama, Dean raised a lot of money online but ultimately lost in the primary. The former governor did keep his movement going and eventually became head of the Democratic National Committee (DNC), a position he still holds today. Howard and his "Deaniacs" are locked in a struggle with the old establishment represented by groups like the Democratic Leadership Council (DLC) over the direction of the Democratic Party.

The Dean-Obama mantra generally has Obama facing the same problems as Dean in expanding beyond his obviously strong netroots support.

Dean's supporters did look something like a cross-section of the internet community, or even just a certain segment of that community. He had problems diversifying his base.

Anyone involved in the Obama campaign knows that this is not the case with the senator's supporters. He base is not perfect. He could do much better, for example, among Latinos and some polls suggest he needs to outreach more to lower income people. However, overall Obama's team looks very much like a cross-section of America.

Obama's success is likely due to many factors. He started off much better-known nationally than Dean. His 2004 Democratic Convention speech and successful senatorial campaign made him the rising star of the Democratic Party and he was presented as such repeatedly by the national media. Two of his books have become best-sellers and he managed to establish a John F. Kennedy-like following among young people even before he announced his candidacy. Because he is the first truly viable African American candidate for president, he naturally has attracted strong support among that important segment of the Democratic voting population. Many of Obama's supporters did not learn about him on the internet.

However one looks at it, Obama looks better positioned now than Dean ever did during his campaign in terms of the breadth of his support. He already has expanded much beyond the netroots and this will help him also with future outreach.

Obama's consulting team might not be the most experienced in terms of nationwide campaigns of this sort, but they have performed admirably up to this point. They also have the advantage of learning from mistakes of the Dean campaign. They started earlier this time around than Dean and that will help a great deal.

The Dean machine didn't really get rolling until the fall before the primary election started and they really had to rush before the distractions of the Christmas season arrived. With Obama, they will probably have raised more than $70 million by September of 2007, and they already have much of their infrastructure positioned in the early states.

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama's 'non-fizzle' causes ripples (2007-07-04 11:28)

When Barack Obama raised $25 million in the first quarter, the word was out that he could not sustain the momentum. Indeed, the press reports lately have claimed that Obama's media hype was ending and that Hillary Clinton again was the unstoppable force. With the latest fundraising news though, it appears that instead Barack Obama is the unmovable object or more correctly the forward-moving object as he topped all his previous efforts. More than $10 million was raised online, for example, in the second quarter compared to about $7 million in 1Q. And this should be a rather slow period for Barack because of the summer break. BarackObama.com has certainly slowed down in relation to the competitor sites since school began letting out at the nation's campuses. When Barack's younger supporters settle in again, we should expect an upward surge in action. Many of the other candidates saw their 2Q fundraising efforts go southward including John Edwards, John McCain and Mitt Romney. Romney lent his campaign $6 million of his own money to keep things from looking too bad. Of the front-runners, Obama, Clinton and Giuliani improved on last quarter's performance. But Obama's efforts looked the most sustainable. He is drawing from supporters who aren't reaching the legal contribution limits, and can be approached again and again.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama too likable? (2007-07-05 09:33)

A sign that Barack Obama's campaign is making headway came in recent articles and blogs questioning whether the senator was "too likable" or not. Certainly it would be favorable for Obama is that was the biggest question that could be mustered against his candidacy. I don't see need for a change in course for the Obama campaign based on poll numbers as suggested in some blogs. Joe Biden is right when he says that most Americans are not deciding on a candidate at this time. Voters in this country don't typically start thinking seriously about candidates until maybe two months before they have to vote. Many only make up their mind in the last week, or even in the voting booth itself. They behave quite differently than political junkies who often make their choice many months or even years ahead of time. In other news, an Ohio man with a large knife and without identification was arrested outside of Barack Obama's hotel in Iowa yesterday. The Secret Service does not consider the man, Davit Zakaryan, 24, as a threat to the presidential candidate.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

alyceclover (2007-07-10 22:18:00)

Was reading a USA Today story comments earlier and someone wondered why people like him. Most every comment on the article was negative. The usual "He's a Muslim" (Fox news told me so) garbage. I like him because he has the audacity to want to change things for the better. No more "this is the way it has always been done..."

Live Earth Concerts (2007-07-05 13:23)

BarackObama.com set up a page in support of the Live Earth concerts organized by Al Gore and friends. The concerts held in cities across the globe will take place on 7/7/07 with the theme of uniting to combat global warming. Here is the video released by Obama on this worldwide event:

Do you want to reduce our greenhouse gas emissions 80 percent by 2050?

The organizers of Live Earth should be proud of their achievement. 7.7.07 is likely to be one of the most significant days of action in the campaign against global climate change. It could not come at a more important time.

Our dependence on fuels such as oil and coal is jeopardizing our planet, setting off a chain of dangerous weather patterns that could condemn future generations to global catastrophe. We see the effects of global climate change in our communities and around the world in record drought, famine, and forest fires. Hurricanes and typhoons are growing in intensity, and rapidly melting ice sheets in Antarctica and Greenland could raise global sea levels high enough to swallow up large portions of every coastal city and town.

Despite the urgency, there are those who believe America cannot come together to find a solution. Politicians are afraid to ask the oil, auto, and electricity industries to do their part, and those industries hire armies of lobbyists to make sure it stays that way.

We can do better. As President, I will move to limit the causes of global warming by requiring that all transportation fuels sold in the U.S. contain 10 percent less carbon by 2020. We can decrease oil consumption by increasing fuel economy standards to save half a trillion gallons of gasoline by 2028. These are the types of changes that we'll have to make if we're serious about limiting the effects of global warming.

[EMBED]

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

From Doubt to Hope (2007-07-06 07:57)

New Hampshire for Obama is launching the "From Doubt to Hope" book tour across the state that will feature the candidate's book "Dreams of my Father."

Close supporters of Barack will visit 11 New Hampshire towns and cities during the summer tour reading excerpts from the senator's best-selling book. There is an event today at Second Run Books in Portsmouth. The idea is to inform undecided voters about Obama's early life and how it shaped his politics.

New Videos

Check out these recent videos of Barack, Michelle and supporters.

Obama's playing cards on the road in Iowa on July 4

[EMBED]

Obama on education at National Education Association

[EMBED]

Michelle Obama speech in Colorado

[EMBED]

Supporters at the Essence Music Festival in New Orleans

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama is Earth-friendly (2007-07-06 20:19)

The Live Earth concerts are underway. I saw Al Gore's opening speech in Sydney tonight. Televised action here in the U.S. starts at 4 a.m. EST on the Sundance Channel. Most of the performances at that time will be in places like London.

Barack Obama has outlined some key points of his environmental and energy policy on a special page at his website:

For all of our military might and economic dominance, America's Achilles heel is the oil we cannot live without. Oil fuels 96 percent of our transportation needs, and it is critical to the manufacture of millions of goods and products in this country. The interruption of even a small amount of oil for just a few days could cause economic panic and soaring prices. A serious embargo could cause untold disaster. Senator Obama has been a Senate leader in pushing for a comprehensive national energy policy and has introduced a number of bills to get us closer to the goal of energy independence. By putting aside partisan battles, he has found common ground on fuel economy standards, renewable fuels, and clean coal.

Reducing Greenhouse Gas Emissions From Our Fuels

The oil used in the U.S. transportation sector accounts for one-third of our nation's emissions of greenhouse gases. Barack Obama's plan will reduce carbon in our fuel supply by establishing a National Low Carbon Fuel Standard. The standard would require that all transportation fuels sold in the U.S. contain 5 percent less carbon by 2015 and 10 percent less carbon by 2020. The legislation would let market forces decide the most efficient way to reduce emissions and would spur significant investment in renewable fuels, such as corn and cellulosic ethanol, and biodiesel made from plant oils such as soybeans. According to one estimate, Obama's legislation would reduce annual greenhouse gas emissions by about 180 million metric tons in 2020. This is the equivalent of taking over 30 million cars off the road in 2020.

Breaking the Fuel Efficiency Logjam

Senator Obama led a bipartisan effort to raise CAFE fuel economy standards, which have remained frozen for 20 years because of congressional gridlock. He developed an innovative approach to gradually increase CAFE standards while protecting the financial future of American automakers. The resulting Obama-Lugar-Biden bill would establish concrete targets for annual CAFE increases while giving industry the flexibility to meet those targets. The Obama-Lugar-Biden Fuel Economy Reform Act has gained the support of Senators who had never supported CAFE increases before, and the basic concept of the legislation was endorsed by President Bush in his 2007 State of the Union address.

"There's a way Congress can get moving. Senator Barack Obama plans to reintroduce a bill that would set a 4 percent annual increase in efficiency as a target. . . . Given the long Congressional stalemate, the Obama bill could be an important first step. It commands some bipartisan support, and unlike Mr. Bush's approach, it promises real as opposed to hypothetical results."

-New York Times, Editorial, January 30, 2007

Making a Deal With Detroit: Health for Hybrids

Senator Obama introduced legislation encouraging automakers to make fuel-efficient hybrid vehicles by helping the companies shoulder the health care costs of their retirees. Domestic automakers would get health care assistance in exchange for their investing 50 percent of the savings into technology to produce more fuel-efficient vehicles.

"(Healthcare for Hybrids') stroke of genius is in connecting the dots - decreasing oil consumption is clearly a top national priority but it will not happen without a national investment."

-Walter McManus, director of the University of Michigan Transportation Research Institute's Office for the Study of Automotive Transportation

"Obama has come up with an audacious proposal that has won the backing of enviros and the United Auto Workers (UAW), and should win the support of both the cash-strapped auto industry and motorists suffering from sticker shock. . . . Obama's proposal may be characteristic of his work, finding support across class (and other) lines."

-The American Prospect, June, 2006

Expanding the Use of E85 and Other Renewable Fuels

While there are more than 180,000 gas stations all over America, there are only about 1200 that offer E85 – a blend of 85 percent clean-burning, domestically grown ethanol and 15 percent petroleum gasoline. Gas stations will now be eligible for tax credits for installing E85 ethanol refueling pumps, thanks to a law advocated by Barack Obama and Senator Jim Talent (R-MO). The tax credit covers 30 percent of the costs of switching one or more traditional petroleum pumps to E85. Obama's legislation will help create the infrastructure to support more flexible-fuel vehicles (cars that run on both E85 and regular gasoline). Senator Obama also sponsored an amendment that became law providing $40 million for commercialization of a combined flexible fuel vehicle/hybrid car within five years.

Senator Obama introduced legislation with Sen. Thad Cochran (R-MS) to require 2 billion gallons of alternative diesels, such as biodiesel, to be produced domestically by 2015. Obama also sponsored legislation requiring oil companies, that made at least $1 billion in profits in the first quarter of 2006 to invest at least 1 percent of their total reported first quarter 2006 profits into installing E85 pumps.

Senator Obama worked with Senator Richard Lugar (R-IN) to introduce the American Fuels Act that would increase the domestic production, distribution, and use of biofuels, including expanded manufacture of flexible fuel vehicles, tax credits for biofuels, and a nationwide distribution infrastructure.

Senator Obama and Sen. Charles Grassley (R-IA), launched a Government Accountability Office investigation of large oil companies to see if they are fighting the installation of alternative fuel pumps. That investigation will be completed in April 2007.

Global Climate Change

We need to take steps to stop catastrophic, manmade climate change. If we do not act, the consequences will be devastating for future generations, especially for the poorest global populations. Barack Obama believes the U.S. must act decisively and creatively to reduce the emission of greenhouse gases that contribute to climate change.

Obama is an original cosponsor of legislation to establish limits on greenhouse gas emissions. To remain below these limits, the bill encourages the market to determine how best to reduce greenhouse gases, rewarding cost-effective approaches through a system of tradeable allowances. Revenues generated from this program will be directed to helping industries and individuals most affected by the limits, and also to fund research and development of new, more efficient, energy technologies.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-06-24 19:38:00)

I would like to see Obama push for more ideas for replacing gas for cars. Corn can be used, but it is not as efficient as other plants.

Barack Obama: Credibility vs. "Substance" (2007-07-07 09:16)

Suggestions that Barack Obama is "all sizzle, no steak" continue to circulate through the media.

The idea is based mainly on the premise that Obama has not laid out highly-detailed plans on how to tackle various issues. Overlapping with this is the claim that Barack does not have adequate experience for the job of president.

Now, it's not overly difficult for someone with both a senatorial and campaign staff to whip out the most complex schemes on any issue. But will they be able to deliver on those plans?

Dennis Kucinich has what is probably the best universal healthcare plan of all the candidates. Its based on HR 676, a House bill he co-sponsored with John Conyers. It's basically a universal extension of the current Medicare system.

Kucinich's plan is a single-payer scheme, something that Obama has said that he ultimately supports himself. So why doesn't Obama have a similar plan? The problem with HR 676 is that it only has 78 supporters in Congress, far from the number needed just to get through the House.

HR 676 is one of a number of plans on Kucinich's website that can be considered more as ideological stands than promises that can be practically delivered once in office. Unless a Congress that happens to agree in majority with Kucinich on these issues is elected at the same time, the candidate's plans have to be considered no more than dreams. And the possibility of such a sea change happening is generally considered very unlikely.

So, "substance" has to be considered with reference to credibility.

A candidate is credible both in the practicality of his/her promises, as well as the credibility of the candidate on a specific issue based on previous history.

Many people believe Kucinich is sincere about his promises but simply not practical. There is another type of credibility gap based on the candidate that is not so sincere about their promises.

We all know about this type of candidate. One who makes promises on the campaign trail, but does little to deliver on the promises while in office. Often these candidates will change course in midstream during a campaign based on changes in poll numbers or other indications of what issues are popular among voters.

One of the best ways to judge the latter type of credibility is to look at the candidate track record and previous positions. Have the candidates held consistent views during their political career?

Barack Obama is credible in the first instance because he offers plans that are workable in the present environment. He also makes it clear that he will need the support of the people throughout the entire course to be successful. His credibility on the issues also comes from his past history in the political arena. For example, take his stand against the Iraq War.

Don't just consider his stance during his campaign for U.S. Senate in 2004, when the Democratic presidential candidates thought it "safe" to be hawkish on Iraq. Even back in 2002, when many considered an anti-war stance as political suicide, Barack protested publicly against the misadventure.

So the question here is more about credibility than substance. A candidate can offer many promises filled with complex detail, but can they credibly be expected to come through on these plans once elected? And how believable are they in offering these schemes in the first place.

We need to be skeptical if they don't have the record showing a consistent stand on the issue, or if they have a history of "flip-flopping" a lot in their agenda.

What one will find after studying the career of Barack Obama is that he is a very credible politician.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama off to Alabama for kickoff (2007-07-07 17:28)

Barack Obama will attend a rally and grassroots fundraiser in downtown Birmingham on Monday to kickoff his campaign in Alabama.

U.S. Rep. Artur Davis, D-Ala., is helping to organize the event aimed at college students and young people who will pay $25 to attend. Davis' spokesman, Corey Ealons said between 1,500 and 2,000 people are expected to attend.

Obama will also attend a cocktail reception organized by HealthSouth CEO Jay Grinney with tickets at $2,300 a person, and a $1,000 a person luncheon at the Heritage Club in Huntsville.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama shines in Newsweek article (2007-07-08 08:34)

Newsweek has an excellent article on Barack Obama although it deals with the tired theme of whether or not Barack is "black enough."

The interview though does give insight into Obama's views on race in America and some of his struggles dealing with the identity issue during his political career.

It really does give some great examples of how Obama often acts as a bridge between polarized factions. Also outlines how Barack converted Cornel West into a believer after the latter had blasted him at an African American conference. Click on the image to the left to access the article.

New Hampshire office opened

Barack Obama's New Hampshire campaign will open an office in Rochester Monday with an open house.

The Rochester office will be Obama's sixth campaign office in New Hampshire.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack knows money's not everything (2007-07-08 18:28)

Barack Obama is winning the money primary by a wide margin.

He beat Hillary Clinton in the second quarter by more than the total raised by any other Democratic candidate for the primary.

However, Obama probably knows better than most that money isn't everything when it comes to winning an election.

When Barack ran for U.S. Senate in 2004, two other candidates – Blair Hull and Dan Hynes – raised more cash for the primary. Hull, in fact, raised six times more money than did Obama.

And Obama had no clench on establishment backing either. Hynes was a state controller who hailed from an established Democratic family from Chicago. Obama faced quite a challenge even though he eventually raised more than anyone thought he could.

Hull suffered in the last three weeks of the campaign when news broke out about violent incidents in a former marriage. That potentially could have opened the door more for Hynes who supposedly had the backing of the Chicago machine and who had raised slightly more money than Obama.

In the end, Obama made easy work of the opposition: Obama, 52.7 %, Dan Hynes, 23.7 %, Blair Hull, 10.8 %, with the rest going to other candidates.

Barack garnered broad support throughout the state including the South, where he was thought weak, and in Chicago, where he easily defeated Hynes.

Although outraised, Obama managed to save more money for late tv ads than Hynes. Barack had been behind in the polls up until a few weeks before the election.

Barack's support base was firmer than his opponents and his team outworked the competition at the grassroots level. It may be that his experience in that race is one reason that Barack has been rather low-key after such a stunning fundraising effort. All along he had thought that he could win while he was behind in cash. Now as the frontrunner in the money primary, he knows he still has to win the often unseen war at ground level.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama, Yogurt and Transcendental Meditation (2007-07-09 12:24)

Barack Obama's New Hampshire campaign got a boost today when Gary and Meg Hirshberg of Stonyfield Farm Yogurt endorsed Obama today.

The organic yogurt farm in Londonberry is a popular destination and a must-stop for presidential candidates. The Hirschberg's issued this statement:

"America is badly divided and in desperate need of new solutions, new ideas, and a new way of conducting politics," Gary Hirshberg said. "Barack Obama is the candidate who can best help Americans focus on our common strengths and dreams, rather than our differences. We must move forward into the 21st Century and not back to old divisions and Barack will catalyze the change we need—in our disastrous policies, but also in the way the world sees us, and how we see ourselves. Meg and I are thrilled to get to work for Barack here in NH and across the US."

Maybe somewhat related to organic yogurt was Obama's recent encounter with transcendental meditators of Maharishi Mahesh Yogi in Fairfield, Iowa.

Fairfield is the center of the Maharishi's followers in the United States and it happened that Obama gave a speech in the town center aligning himself perfectly with the earth's rotation according to the Maharishi's precepts.

"I saw him and I thought, 'Oh my god, this is somebody who could lead us into a new era,'" said Nancy Watkins, a student adviser at Maharishi University of Management.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

alyceclover (2007-07-10 22:29:00)

We, the people, are surely putting a lot of responsibility on Senator Obama's shoulders. I think he is up to the challenge. If you go to Peace Walker's site, he has a story about being the weight of a snowflake. Obama is gathering together the snowflakes, or so it appears to me.

Your video expresses why we like the man. I get chills watching the videos on his You Tube channel. Thanks again for your work in support of the Senator and Mrs. Obama.

Michelle Obama speaks on the "Empathy Deficit" (2007-07-09 22:59)

A cum laude graduate of Princeton University with a Harvard law degree, Michelle Obama may be one of the smartest people speaking on the campaign trail.

In an interview with National Public Radio (NPR) today, Michelle states that her husband's race is a "test for America."

"You know, politics is a nasty business, and you don't hold out hope that fairness will win, that truth and justice carries the day. You think that it's a business. And there was that part of me that said 'Do we want to put ourselves out for a system that I am not sure about?'"

"What Barack and I talked about when we decided to do this was that we were going to do this authentically and that this was as much a test for us about the country and the [political] process as it was the other way around," Michelle says. "I am curious ... if you offer somebody up that is real and true, will people grasp that? I want to believe that they will, because that's what they've got in front of them."

Michelle also speaks of the "empathy deficit" that's been lacking at the highest levels of American politics and she feels her husband can bring this new perspective to the president's office :

"What he's said time and time again is that this country is suffering from an empathy deficit, and if you don't have it in you to walk in another person's shoes, it's going to be difficult for us to move through these problems, that what we need, as a country, is to start caring for one another in a very deep and fundamental way."

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack returns to Iowa with more cash (2007-07-10 11:41)

Sen. Barack Obama is at a town hall meeting focused on the economy in Des Moines, Iowa today, after raising more than $100,000 in Alabama.

A large number of fundraisers are scheduled to coincide with Barack's birthday celebration on Aug. 4.

On July 12, Obama will participate in the presidential candidates forum of the NAACP 98th Annual Convention in Detroit at the COBO Conference Center

<http://www.naacp.org/events/convention/index.htm>

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama to appear at La Raza conference (2007-07-10 21:19)

Sen. Barack Obama will appear at the National Council of La Raza conference in Miami next week along with Hillary Clinton and Al Sharpton.

Univision will broadcast the event which will also be used to launch a drive to register new Latino voters nationwide.

Four supporters dine with Barack

Four donors who won a contest last quarter dined with the candidate in Washington. The guests were treated to an all-expense paid trip to the capital, a site-seeing tour of the city and dinner with Barack.

One of the original guests, Florida firefighter Jennifer Lasko, decided not to attend after it was discovered she had underwent a sex change operation.

Christina Cheatham, a senior at Georgia College and State University, was selected to take her place.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

alyceclover (2007-07-10 22:03:00)

Decided or was persuaded not to attend?

Barack Obama dominates Nielsen/NetRatings (2007-07-11 11:16)

Nielsen/NetRatings most recent release shows that Barack Obama's campaign website had the most unique visitors of all the candidates.

Obama also led all candidates in web "buzz," the number of times one's name is mentioned in blogs and forums leading Hillary, the second-place Democratic candidate, by a wide margin.

Democrats had twice the buzz as Republicans according to Nielsen.

2008 Presidential Campaign Political Buzz
Blog Post Analysis June 15, 2006-June 15, 2007		Democratic Party		Republican Party
		Candidate	Buzz Share	Candidate	Buzz Share
		Barack Obama	45.5	John McCain	37.9
Political Party	Buzz Share	Hillary Clinton	32.0	Rudolph Giuliani	25.1
Democratic	64.3	John Edwards	17.5	Mitt Romney	22.7
Republican	35.7	Bill Richardson	4.9	Ron Paul	14.2

* Source: Nielsen BuzzMetrics
Data reflects % of messages within discussion of the above political candidates.

According to Nielsen, Obama had no online advertising, which is strange because I could have sworn I've seen ads for barackobama.com while surfing. Maybe these were paid for by third parties?

2008 Presidential Campaign Websites for April 2007
Website	Unique Visitors (000)	Page Views (000)	Active Reach %	Sessions Per Visitor	Time Per Visitor (hh:mm:ss)
Barack Obama for President Website	647	3,797	0.45	1.41	0:06:21
Hillary Clinton for President Website	498	1,616	0.34	1.17	0:04:16
John Edwards for President Website	385	1,744	0.27	1.32	0:04:59
John McCain Presidential Website	212	766	0.15	1.20	0:04:09
Tom Tancredo Presidential Website	142	454	0.10	1.10	0:03:58
Mitt Romney Presidential Website	111	447	0.08	1.12	0:03:08
Ron Paul Presidential Website	103	602	0.07	1.09	0:05:05
Bill Richardson for President Website	72	138	0.05	1.06	0:02:37
Dennis Kucinich for President Website	70	329	0.05	1.56	0:04:57
Rudy Giuliani Exploratory Website	65	562	0.04	1.17	0:02:43
Mike Gravel for President Website	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A
Joe Biden for President Website	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A
Duncan Hunter for President Website	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A
Chris Dodd for President Website	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A
Tommy Thompson Presidential Website	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A
John Cox for President Website	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A
Tom Vilsack for President Website	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A

These Websites do not meet minimum sample size standards. Projected and average measures for these sites may exhibit large changes month-to-month as a result.*

N/A indicates that these Websites have insufficient sample sizes for reliable projection of audience size.

Note Barack's clear lead above despite the money spent on online advertising by three candidates – John McCain, Hilary Clinton and Mitt Romney.

2008 Presidential Campaign Online Political Advertising
Candidate	Image-Based Advertising		Sponsored Link Advertising
	April 2007 Impressions (000)	May 2007 Impressions (000)	April 2007 Impressions (000)	May 2007 Impressions (000)
John McCain	11,616	8,654	14,352	6,262
Friends of Hillary	395	-	966	778
Romney for President, Inc.	-	3,437	877	1,438

Source: Nielsen//NetRatings AdRelevance US*

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

alyceclover (2007-07-11 13:32:00)

Technology is wonderful. Years ago I did not much trust Nielsen ratings because my understanding was that they based their findings on a sampling of households, mostly in the midwest.

Now robots roam the web gathering info and stats, giving a truer picture of reality.

Thanks for sharing.

"Widebody" Charles Barkley endorses Barack Obama (2007-07-11 17:51)

Basketball legend Charles Barkley has endorsed Barack Obama for president.

The Hall of Famer pledged to support Obama all the way through and did an interview for the campaign team in Birmingham, Alabama.

We've heard a lot about Hollywood stars endorsing candidates, but a lineup of sports star supporters would be novel and potentially very effective.

Check out the detailed article from the Chicago Tribune about the Obama campaign's use of book clubs in Iowa and New Hampshire to help people learn more about Barack, his background and his views.

Charles Barkley talks about Barack Obama

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama Resume (2007-07-12 07:12)

To help address the continuing questions over Barack Obama's experience, I have compiled a concise, easy-to-read, one-page resume for the senator. I still have to make up a list of Barack's endorsements to use as references.

Barack Obama

Born: 4 August 1961, Honolulu, Hawai'i

Hometown: Chicago, Illinois

OBJECTIVE Seeking office of President of the United States .

EDUCATION

Occidental College

Columbia University – Bachelor of Arts (1983), Political Science with International Relations specialization.

Harvard University – Juris Doctor (1991), Magna cum Laude , first African American President of Harvard Law Review
.

EXPERIENCE 2004 to Present

United States Senate – U.S. Senator from Illinois. Veteran Affairs Committee member. Has championed legislation on redeployment of troops out of Iraq, increased government accountability, veteran's benefits and care, nuclear non-proliferation, energy independence and global warming action.

1996 to 2004

Illinois State Senate – State Senator . Elected two terms. Among his accomplishments: state earned income tax credit, childhood education expansion, ethics and healthcare reform, gun control, and videotaping of capital case interrogations and confessions.

1993 to 2004

University of Chicago – Lecturer of Constitutional Law at University of Chicago Law School.

1993 to 1996

Miner, Barnhill & Galland – Civil Rights Attorney with Chicago law firm. Represented community organizations, discrimination claims and voting rights cases.

1985 to 1988

Developing Communities Project

– Community Organizer for church-based group in Chicago's South Side. Organized job training programs.

OTHER EXPERIENCE AND ACCOMPLISHMENTS

1995 and 2006 – Author of two best-selling books, Dreams from My Father and The Audacity of Hope. The audio version of Dreams from My Father won the 2006 Grammy Award for Best Spoken Word Album. Time columnist Joe Klein said the book "may be the best-written memoir ever produced by an American politician."

1992 – Chair of voter registration drive in Illinois that brought in 150,000 new voters and helped candidate Bill Clinton carry the state.

2004 – Keynote speaker at Democratic National Convention.

REFERENCES Provided in separate list.

—
X
X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama: "Rock Star" of NAACP Forum (2007-07-12 11:13)

The crowd at the NAACP Presidential Forum in Detroit greeted Sen. Barack Obama with thunderous applause both before and after his three minute speech covering topics from gun control to healthcare.

Both the Detroit Free-Press and MSNBC reported that Obama received extended standing ovations that were more enthusiastic than those for the other candidates.

The Detroit Free-Press called Obama the "rock star" of the event. Other media outlets even conceded that Obama "won" this forum contending, of course, that Clinton had better performances in previous match-ups.

Given the great importance of the black vote in the Democratic primary, none of the candidates appeared willing to concede a national event of America's most important civil rights organization.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack calls for letters on Iraq (2007-07-12 19:07)

Barack Obama broadcasted this appeal not long ago:

X

Dear Friend,

Al Qaeda has recovered to its pre-September 11th strength, according to an intelligence community estimate revealed today.

Think about that.

Almost six years after 9/11, Osama bin Laden is still alive. His organization is still training terrorists. And he and his associates still have a safe haven in the mountains on the Afghanistan-Pakistan border.

Meanwhile, George Bush released his administration's report on the "progress" in Iraq. It's another example of how deep in denial he is about what's really happening. The past three months have been some of the deadliest since the war began, and things are getting worse – not better.

The war in Iraq should never have been authorized, never have been waged, and it must end now.

Al Qaeda's resurgence proves that the Iraq war has been a deadly distraction from the real threats we face – which is why I opposed the war from the beginning.

George Bush just finished a press conference where he tried to tell people that progress is being made in Iraq and against al Qaeda. The press will report his spin and obfuscation – but you can have an impact on their coverage.

Write a letter to the editor of your local paper right now – if you act quickly, your letter could be printed alongside tomorrow's coverage.

Our online letters-to-editors tool makes it simple:

<http://www.BarackObama.com/BushInDenial>

Over 250,000 of us have invested in this campaign because we're willing to do everything we can to change this country.

Now is the time to act.

Millions of Americans are hungry for a president who will end the war in Iraq and confront the threats we face with honesty and sound judgment.

They're waiting to hear from you. Thank you,

X

Barack Obama

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack goes hybrid, collects more cash (2007-07-13 09:34)

Barack Obama traded in his Chrysler 300C with Hemi for a more efficient Ford Escape hybrid.

Obama also owns a flexible fuel GMC Envoy which he drives while in his home state of Illinois.

In Grand Rapids, Michigan, Barack pulled in more than $125,000 at a fundraiser in the strongly Republican area.

In New Hampshire, four grassroots activists announced their support for Obama. Here is the list:

Chip Moynihan, Hampton – New Hampshire Democratic Party State Committee Member; Rockingham County Democratic Executive Committee member; health insurance consultant in Hampton

Joanne Dowdell, Portsmouth – Vice President for Corporate Responsibility for Citizens Advisors Inc., a socially responsible mutual fund firm in Portsmouth

Jerry Slagle, Alton – Democratic activist

John Barriere, Durham – Membership Coordinator of the College Democrats of New Hampshire (UNH student)

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack meets Vegas supporters, Iowa veterans on tour (2007-07-13 20:16)

Sen. Barack Obama visits Las Vegas for a fourth time Friday at a house party hosted by Yvette and Damone Williams. The invitation-only meeting with potential caucus participants will allow Obama to "have a real conversation and dialogue with them, to engage with the issues in sort of a casual environment," campaign spokeswoman Liz Oxhorn said. A few hundred guests are expected.

Iowa Veterans for Obama will stop in Charles City Tuesday as part of their "Obama for Commander in Chief" tour. Major Gen. Scott Gration is joining the four-day tour that seeks to inform Iowans of Barack's plan to end the Iraq War.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama names high profile Nevada team (2007-07-14 08:03)

Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama announced his Nevada campaign prior to his fourth visit to Las Vegas.

The committee consists of state Sen. Steven Horsford, D-Las Vegas; Assemblywoman Sheila Leslie, D-Reno, businesswoman Rose McKinney-James; Democratic stalwart Billy Vassiliadis; and education activist Elaine Wynn, wife of casino magnate Steve Wynn.

"I am proud to have the support of this group of respected leaders and looking forward to working with them as we build a strong team of Nevadans committed to changing our politics so that we can meet the challenges facing our country," Obama said in a released statement.

Horsford runs Nevada Partners, the firm that runs the training academy for the Culinary Workers Union. This is an important connection because the culinary workers may be one of the most coveted local unions in the early states. Vassiliadis, CEO of R & R Partners, is a premier Nevada political consultant.

Elaine Wynn is sometimes called the "First Lady of Las Vegas." Her husband is credited with leading Las Vegas' revival in the 1990s and is associated with hotels like the Golden Nugget, Mirage and Bellagio.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama: Iraq War not helping with al-Qaeda (2007-07-14 13:27)

Campaigning in Oelwein, Iowa, presidential candidate Barack Obama said that the Iraq War has not helped the war on terrorism.

When you look at the facts, it's obvious that Obama is correct. Al-Qaeda does not appear to have lost strength. If you look internationally at the number and intensity of al-Qaeda attacks before and after 9/11, you quickly see that the group's most spectacular success has come afterward.

Remember that al-Qaeda was originally formed to fight the Soviets in Afghanistan as a U.S. ally. It only became an enemy of the United States after U.S. military intervention in the Muslim world by George Bush during the Gulf War. Al-Qaeda interpreted this as a manifestation of the doctrine of the "clash of civilizations" that was a feature of Bush Sr.'s thinking.

Before that period, America and other Western countries had maintained a discrete and stable military presence in Arab countries for decades including bases in Saudi Arabia.

Al-Qaeda had practically no presence in Iraq before the Gulf War. Afterward they were able to establish a foothold only in the U.S.-occupied Kurdish regions of the north. It was only after the U.S. occupation of Iraq that al-Qaeda has become so powerful that even old Baathists in the Sunni region are forced to cooperate with the group..

Previously, al-Qaeda and the Baath Party of both Iraq and Syria were mortal enemies.

The Bush logic in claiming that the Iraq War had some link with fighting terrorism is based entirely on one idea. Bush has claimed repeatedly that fighting in Iraq attracts al-Qaeda fighters to that country and keeps them from going elsewhere and particularly to the U.S.

No obviously Iraqis are probably not pleased to learn about that strategy of their country used as some sort of a bait for Iraqi fighters, but Bush has made many comments that basically imply this very fact.

We are led by the administration to the "proof" of this strategy by lack of any post 9-11 attacks on the United States. Even if we forget that al-Qaeda has struck in many other countries post-9-11 including close U.S. ally Britain, we simply haven't seen any evidence that any planned attacks on the U.S. were foiled by the Iraq invasion or even by the war in Afghanistan.

A number of rather small plots to attack the U.S. both before and after 9-11 have been stopped, but only one major attack even approaching the scale of the World Trade Center bombings.

That was the plan just last year to destroy multiple passenger airlines bound to the U.S. from the United Kingdom using liquid explosives.

Now, did the war in Iraq have anything to do with breaking up that plot? Obviously not.

Those attacks were foiled by homeland security investigations. The plotters were primarily from Pakistan.

So, the fact is that simply don't know that al-Qaeda ever had a long list of planned attacks on the U.S. after 9-11, or if they did what the timetable existed for those attacks. They may have been spread many years apart for all we know. What we do know is that the Iraq War has opened a door for al-Qaeda in Iraq and has established that country as something of a training ground. The recent attacks in England and Scotland, for example, had a direct Iraq connection.

Will we now see techniques like car bombs and IUDs perfected in Iraq used elsewhere in the world?

Definitely we have to look at the Iraq War as a step back in the "war on terrorism." We've simply expanded the playing field, and ignited more passion than existed beforehand.

Just look at the evidence, Hezbollah defeated the mighty Israeli armed forces in Lebanon, Hamas has taken over half of the Palestinian territories and al-Qaeda is striking with greater frequency than ever before.

And I won't even get into other problems with Iran playing its hand now in the region except to say that extremist groups like Hezbollah, al-Qaeda and Hamas are now stronger than ever.

Just look at the evidence, Hezbollah defeated the mighty Israeli armed forces in Lebanon, Hamas has taken over half of the Palestinian territories and al-Qaeda is striking with greater frequency than ever before.

Obama feels we must leave Iraq to deal with its own problems and stop giving the people reasons to listen to al-Qaeda.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama: The more, the merrier (2007-07-15 08:02)

Barack Obama said yesterday that he favors debates with all candidates participating after stories that Hillary Clinton and John Edwards discussed paring the field.

Clinton and Edwards were unknowingly taped during the NAACP when Hillary's microphone picked up a "private" conversation between the two during the event. They talked about barring the bottom tier candidates from future debates.

Obama's name was not mentioned during the taped parts of the discussion.

"My attitude is the more the merrier," Obama said in an interview. "I don't know how you'd draw the line to say some can participate and some can't, particularly when you know historically, for example, Bill Clinton was at 2 percent in the polls in some of these early contests."

Camp Obama expanding

The regular Camp Obama training sessions have until now been conducted at the headquarters office in Chicago. Starting this month Camp Obama goes national with July training in Burbank and August sessions in St. Louis and New York City.

Camp Obama teaches supporters the basics of organizing and executing grassroots campaign activities in three-day courses.

MoveOn.org showing bias for Edwards over Obama (2007-07-15 11:45)

When MoveOn.org conducted its first electronic town hall meeting on the Iraq War plenty of notices were sent out for the live event.

Polls conducted after the meeting showed that MoveOn.org members favored Barack Obama among all the candidates as the best candidate to deal with this issue.

MoveOn.org did make much fanfare over the poll results. In fact, in the archived page for the town hall meeting the poll is not even mentioned nor can you find the poll results. Edwards audio tape and picture are at the top of that page "above the fold" as they say, while Barack Obama is all the way at the bottom of the page.

For the latest MoveOn.org town hall meeting, little notice was given. In fact, I was first reminded of the event on the barackobama.com blog. The email told me to examine the positions of the candidates and then vote.

Edwards won this poll and now MoveOn.org has decided to run paid newspaper ads trumpeting the poll results in the early caucus and primary states of Iowa and New Hampshire. The obvious aim here is to influence the primary election results.

Very disappointing behavior from an organization that advertises itself as "progressive." No wonder so many people that I know who supported that group when it first started have grown disenchanted and believe MoveOn.org is practicing "politics as usual."

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama leading in cash for primary (2007-07-16 09:09)

Candidate Barack Obama has about a million more than Hillary Clinton in primary cash according to financial reports filed by the campaigns.

At the end of the second quarter, Obama had about $34 million to Hillary's $33 million.

Barack would have even a greater lead but he has spent more money this year for the primary, about $22 million compared to Hillary's $17.5 million.

Barack's single largest expense was payroll at $3,209,131.15. He also spent $1,940,086.40 for travel and lodging, and $1,318,502.86 for telemarketing.

Size of Donations for Barack Obama

$200 and Under $16,554,783

$200.01 - $499 $2,802,170

$500 - $999 $3,758,580

$1000 - $1999 $8,437,333

$2000 and Over $27,063,693

[EMBED]

Size of Donations for Hillary Clinton

$200 and Under $4,627,408

$200.01 - $499 $1,426,933

$500 - $999 $2,015,033

$1000 - $1999 $7,596,507

$2000 and Over $36,880,268

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama walks with striking Chicago workers (2007-07-16 14:53)

Barack Obama walked the picket lines outside of Chicago's Congress Plaza Hotel in support of striking workers. Congress workers are represented by Unite Here Local 1, a union closely linked with the powerful Culinary Workers Union in Las Vegas. Obama told the press in Las Vegas last week that he would be supporting the Chicago workers. Obama refused to comment on the new "Obama Girl" video circulating on YouTube. "That's not why we are here," he said.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Heckroth, Fenty endorse Obama (2007-07-16 17:05)

Iowa State Sen. Bill Heckroth endorsed Barack Obama today bringing the presidential candidate's state legislator endorsements to five.

Last week, Sen. Tom Rielly endorsed Obama.

Heckroth noted Obama's "refusal to accept money from" political action committees or federal lobbyists "prove to me he'll bring much needed change to Washington D.C."

Washington Mayor Adrian M. Fenty also announced today that he will endorse Obama tomorrow.

Fenty held off in supporting a candidate but it became apparent he would endorse Obama after his campaign manager Jim Hudson arranged a recent fundraiser for Obama that netted $600,000. Hudson also announced three DC city council endorsements for Obama: Yvette M. Alexander, Muriel Bowser and Tommy Wells.

"He's our Bobby Kennedy," Wells told reporters.

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Anonymous (2010-03-23 18:13:02)

i genuinely love all your writing kind, very interesting, don't give up and also keep writing due to the fact that it simply just worth to look through it, impatient to browse through much of your article content, have a great day ;)

Obama staff harassing Cookie Mom? (2007-07-17 08:51)

Christine Frydenborg is a member of PrioritiesNH, an organization that seeks to shift priorities in the federal budget from military spending to education, health care, energy independence, job training and deficit reduction. She is known as "Cookie Mom" as she brings cookies to campaign events with the message "take a bite out of the budget." A letter to the Nashua Telegraph claims that certain members of Obama's New Hampshire staff may be putting the lid on Cookie Mom:

" Sen. Obama himself has at all times been friendly, welcoming and gracious, and has even held up our cookies when talking about the federal budget. Certain members of his New Hampshire staff have been hostile, and Cookie Mom has been barred from handing out cookies inside his events (the only campaign of either party to do so)."

✕ ✕ ✕

Elected officials who have recently endorsed Barack Obama, from left to right Iowa State Sen. Tom Rielly, Iowa State Sen. Bill Heckroth and DC Mayor Adrian Fenty.

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Steve (2007-07-18 07:19:00)

I spoke last night with Sen. Obama's State Director, Matt Rodriguez, who invited Cookie Mom to hand out cookies and Priorities pens inside their New Hampshire events and said the staffer with whom Cookie Mom had problems is no longer with the campaign. We're pleased; both Sen. Obama and the people attending his events have been very receptive to our message of sensible federal budget priorities.

Steve Varnum

PrioritiesNH Director

Anonymous (2011-04-01 17:06:29)

She's a moron and doesn't even bake cookies OR have children hence, the Cookie Mom is just a farce.

Oprah to throw Obama bash (2007-07-17 09:32)

Oprah Winfrey, by many accounts America's most powerful woman, will host what promises to be a massive Sept. 8 fundraiser for Barack Obama's presidential campaign at her Santa Barbara home.

The media mogul broadcasted an email invitation to the party described as "the most exciting Barack Obama event of the year anywhere ..."

As Oprah's own endorsement is considered the equivalent of the midas touch in the media world for entertainers, authors, producers and the like, the draw to attend this event will be huge. Politicos might also see this as a chance to pull Oprah along with her influence and big bucks more deeply into the political sphere.

Tickets start at $2,300, but those wanting star treatment will have to pay more. Donors who can raise $25,000 may attend the VIP reception, and $50,000 in donations earn a spot at the VIP dinner.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Hollywood contributions in 2Q (2007-07-17 13:50)

Here's a list showing how some Hollywood celebrities donated during the second quarter.

BARACK OBAMA (D)

Adam Arkin, actor $250
Paul Dooley, actor $2,300
Jodie Foster, actress $1,000
Jamie Foxx, actor $2,300
Martha Hackett, "Star Trek" actress $2,300
Bruce Hornsby, singer $2,300
Anna Horsford, "Amen" actress $500
Cedric "The Entertainer" Kyles, actor $2,500
Eriq La Salle, actor $500
Paul Newman, actor $4,600
Tom Skerritt, actor $1,000
Jean Smart, actress $4,600
Jada Smith, actress $4,600
Will Smith, actor $4,600
David Sutcliffe, "Gilmore Girls" Actor $1,250
Isaiah Washington, former "Grey's Anatomy" Actor $2,300
Joanne Woodward, Actress $4,600
Jennifer Anniston , Actress $2,300
Chris Rock , Actor $4,600
Brooke Shields , Actress $2,300
Eddie Murphy , Actor $2,300 will.i.am , musician $2,300
Jamie Lee Curtis , Actress $4,600
George Clooney , Actor $2,300

HILLARY CLINTON (D)

Ruby Dee, actress: $250
Danny DeVito, actor: $2,300
Fran Drescher, TV's "The Nanny": $2,300
Joely Fisher, actress $4,600
Tom Hanks, actor: $2,300
Ed Helms, actor, "Andy Bernard" in NBC's "The Office": $250
Sharon Lawrence, "NYPD Blue" co-star: $1,000
Tobey Maguire, actor $4,600
Marla Maples, actress: $1,000
Paul Newman, actor: $4,600
Rhea Perlman, actress $2,300
Pauly Shore, actor $1,000
Ben Stiller, actor $6,900 ($4,600 is the legal limit)
George Takei, actor $1,000
Lily Tomlin, actress $2,000
Rita Wilson, actress $2,300
Joanne Woodward, actress $4,600

CHRIS DODD (D)

John Lithgow, actor: $1000

Christy Romano, actress, singer, voice of "Kim Possible": $300

JOHN EDWARDS (D)

Oliver Stone, director: $500

Mary Steenburgen, actress: $2300

Ben Stiller, actor: $4600

Peter Coyote, actor: $1054

Sharon Lawrence, actress: $1000

MIKE GRAVEL (D)

Mark Ruffalo, actor: $700

DENNIS KUCINICH (D)

Shelley Morrison, actress ("Rosario" on "Will and Grace"): $1600

Alexandra Paul, actress, "Baywatch" co-star: $1300

Deirdre Hall, "Days of Our Lives" actress: $1000

Hector Elizondo, actor: $300

BILL RICHARDSON (D)

Michael Douglas, actor: $3100

Val Kilmer, actor: $2300

Paul Newman, actor: $2300

Edward James Olmos, actor: $2300

Wendie Malick, "Just Shoot Me" actress: $500

Steven Spielberg, director: $2300

Kate Capshaw, actress, wife of Steven Spielberg: $2300

Jodie Foster, actress: $1000

Christie Brinkley, self-described as "Model/Mom/Environmental activist": $500

Bette Midler, actress/singer: $4600

Sherry Lansing, former film executive: $2300

William Friedkin, director: $2300

James L. Brooks, producer/writer: $1000

RUDY GIULIANI (R)

Tony Sirico, actor, "Paulie Walnuts" on "The Sopranos": $1000

Melissa Gilbert, actress: $4600

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

alyceclover (2007-07-20 10:53:00)

Interesting. I thought the max contribution from an individual contributor was $2,300. Sad that some of my favs are putting their money or backing on candidates I don't endorse.

Obama opens California office, collects funds (2007-07-17 17:50)

Obama for America announced the opening of a new office in downtown San Bernardino today. The public opening is scheduled for 6 pm tonight.

"When you stand back and look at San Bernardino, it has grown in the last 10 years," said Emmett Cash III, Obama's state campaign chairman. "It's no longer a stepchild of Los Angeles. It is on its own." The office plans to conduct campaign training in October.

I wonder why they chose an Inland Empire location rather than Los Angeles?

http://www.redlandsdailyfacts.com/news/ci_6395887

Obama collects cash in Cincinnati

Barack made a quick stop in Cincinnati tonight after attending a news conference with DC mayor Adrian Fenty.

Hundreds of people cheered his speech at a downtown hotel but there was no immediate report on how much money was raised.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Renata_of_Spokane (2007-09-04 11:21:00)

Emmett Cash III is not affiliated with the Obama campaign. He is a fraud who has held so-called "fundraisers" for the candidate, and made off with all of the money.

<http://sfgate.com/cgi-bin/article.cgi?file=/c/a/2007/07/25/MNGUTR6FO61.DTL&type=printable>

Obama's office/staff spending reveals focus (2007-07-18 09:00)

You can get some idea of the priorities of the candidates by the number of offices and paid staff they've hired in different states.

For example, here are the offices that Obama has opened across the country:

Obama for America Offices Iowa - 29

New Hampshire - 6

Nevada - 3

South Carolina - 2

California - 2

New York - 1

Florida - 1

This figure may not include a new office the campaign just opened in San Bernardino, California.

You can see that the Obama campaign is really concentrating on doing well in the first caucus state of Iowa.

One area in which the Democratic frontrunners differ sharply is in their South Carolina efforts.

Obama spent $150,000 on staff in South Carolina during the second quarter and has opened two offices in the state.

Hillary Clinton spent $38,000 on 2Q staff salaries in South Carolina and John Edwards only $11,000.

In comparison, Edwards spent $67,000 on staff in Nevada. While Clinton had only seven staffers in South Carolina, she has 25 in Nevada. Obama spent $105,000 on staff in Nevada.

For more info on staff spending, click here.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack details plan to tackle urban poverty (2007-07-18 12:18)

Sen. Barack Obama today unveiled details of his five-part plan to deal with urban poverty in a speech at the Town Hall Education Arts and Recreation Center (THEARC) in Washington, DC.

The program involves investments in education, jobs, business development and affordable housing. Obama uses the Harlem Children's Zone project as an example of effective strategy toward minimizing urban poverty.

Here's the full text of the speech:

It's been four decades since Bobby Kennedy crouched in a shack along the Mississippi Delta and looked into the wide, listless eyes of a hungry child. Again and again he tried to talk to this child, but each time his efforts were met with only a blank stare of desperation. And when Kennedy turned to the reporters traveling with him, with tears in his eyes he asked a single question about poverty in America:

"How can a country like this allow it?"

Forty years later, we're still asking that question. It echoes on the streets of Compton and Detroit, and throughout the mining towns of West Virginia. It lingers with every image we see of the 9th Ward and the rural Gulf Coast, where poverty thrived long before Katrina came ashore.

We stand not ten miles from the seat of power in the most affluent nation on Earth. Decisions are made on both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue that shape lives and set the course of history. With the stroke of a pen, billions are spent on programs and policies; on tax breaks for those who didn't need them and a war that should've never been authorized and never been waged. Debates rage and accusations fly and at the end of each day, the petty sniping is what lights up the evening news.

And yet here, on the other side of the river, every other child in Anacostia lives below the poverty line. Too many do not graduate and too many more do not find work. Some join gangs, and others fall to their gunfire.

The streets here are close to our capital, but far from the people it represents. These Americans cannot hire lobbyists to roam the halls of Congress on their behalf, and they cannot write thousand-dollar campaign checks to make their voices heard. They suffer most from a politics that has been tipped in favor of those with the most money, and influence, and power.

How can a country like this allow it?

No matter how many times it's asked or what the circumstances are, the most American answer I can think of to that question is two words:

"We can't."

We can't allow this kind of suffering and hopelessness to exist in our country. We can't afford to lose a generation of tomorrow's doctors and scientists and teachers to poverty. We can make excuses for it or we can fight about it or we can ignore poverty altogether, but as long as it's here it will always be a betrayal of the ideals we hold as Americans. It's not who we are.

In this country – of all countries – no child's destiny should be determined before he takes his first step. No little girl's future should be confined to the neighborhood she was born into. Our government cannot guarantee success and happiness in life, but what we can do as a nation is to ensure that every American who wants to work is prepared to work, able to find a job, and able to stay out of poverty. What we can do is make our neighborhoods whole again. What we can do is retire the phrase “working poor” in our time. That’s what we can do, because that’s who we are.

The challenge is greater than it has been in generations, but that’s all the more reason for this generation to act. One in every eight Americans now lives in poverty, a rate that has nearly doubled since 1980. That’s an income of about $20,000 a year for a family of four. One in three Americans – one in every three – is now classified as low-income. That’s $40,000 a year for a family of four.

Today’s economy has made it easier to fall into poverty. The fall is often more precipitous and more permanent than ever before. You used to be able to find a good job without a degree from college or even high school. Today that’s nearly impossible. You used to be able to count on your job to be there for your entire life. Today almost any job can be shipped overseas in an instant.

The jobs that remain are paying less and offering fewer benefits, as employers have succeeded in busting up unions and cutting back on health care and pensions to stay competitive with the companies abroad that are paying their workers next to nothing.

Every American is vulnerable to the insecurities and anxieties of this new economy. And that’s why the single most important focus of my economic agenda as President will be to pursue policies that create jobs and make work pay.

This means investing in education from early childhood through college, so our workers are ready to compete with any workers for the best jobs the world has to offer. It means investing more in research, science, and technology so that those new jobs and those new industries are created right here in America. And while we can’t stop every job from going overseas, we can stop giving tax breaks to the companies who send them there and start giving them to companies who create jobs at home.

We can also start making sure these jobs keep folks out of poverty. When I’m President, I will raise the minimum wage and make it a living wage by making sure that it rises every time the cost of living does. I’ll start letting our unions do what they do best again – organize our workers and lift up our middle-class. And I’ll finally make sure every American has affordable health care that stays with you no matter what happens by passing my plan to provide universal coverage and cut the cost of health care by up to $2500 per family.

All of these policies will give more families a chance to grab hold of the ladder to middle-class security, and they’ll make the climb a little easier.

But poverty is not just a function of simple economics. It’s also a matter of where you live. There are vast swaths of rural America and block after block in our cities where poverty is not just a crisis that hits pocketbooks, but a disease that infects every corner of the community. I will be outlining my rural agenda in the coming weeks, but today I want to talk about what we can do as a nation to combat the poverty that persists in our cities.

This kind of poverty is not an issue I just discovered for the purposes of a campaign, it is the cause that led me to a life of public service almost twenty-five years ago.

I was just two years out of college when I first moved to the South Side of Chicago to become a community organizer. I was hired by a group of churches that were trying to deal with steel plant closures that had devastated the surrounding neighborhoods. Everywhere you looked, businesses were boarded up and schools were crumbling and teenagers were standing aimlessly on street corners, without jobs and without hope.

What’s most overwhelming about urban poverty is that it’s so difficult to escape – it’s isolating and it’s everywhere. If you are an African-American child unlucky enough to be born into one of these neighborhoods, you are most likely to start life hungry or malnourished. You are less likely to start with a father in your household, and if he is there, there’s a fifty-fifty chance that he never finished high school and the same chance he doesn’t have a job. Your school isn’t likely to have the right books or the best teachers. You’re more likely to encounter gang-activities than after-school activities. And if you can’t find a job because the most successful businessman in your neighborhood is a drug dealer, you’re more likely to join that gang yourself. Opportunity is scarce, role models are few, and there is little contact with the normalcy of life outside those streets.

What you learn when you spend your time in these neighborhoods trying to solve these problems is that there are no easy solutions and no perfect arguments. And you come to understand that for the last four decades, both ends of the political spectrum have been talking past one another.

It's true that there were many effective programs that emerged from Lyndon Johnson's War on Poverty. But there were also some ineffective programs that were defended anyway, as well as an inability of some on the left to acknowledge that the problems of absent fathers or persistent crime were indeed problems that needed to be addressed.

The right has often seized on these failings as proof that the government can't and shouldn't do a thing about poverty – that it is a result of individual moral failings and cultural pathologies and so we should just sit back and let these cities fend for themselves. And so Ronald Reagan launched his assault on welfare queens, and George Bush spent the last six years slashing programs to combat poverty, and job training, and substance abuse, and child abuse.

Well we know that's not the answer. When you're in these neighborhoods, you can see what a difference it makes to have a government that cares. You can see what a free lunch program does for a hungry child. You can see what a little extra money from an earned income tax credit does for a family that's struggling. You can see what prenatal care does for the health of a mother and a newborn. So don't tell me there's no role for government in lifting up our cities.

But you can also see what a difference it makes when people start caring for themselves. It makes a difference when a father realizes that responsibility does not end at conception; when he understands that what makes you a man is not the ability to have a child but the courage to raise one. It makes a difference when a parent turns off the TV once in awhile, puts away the video games, and starts reading to their child, and getting involved in his education. It makes a difference when we realize that a child who shoots another child has a hole in his heart that no government can fill. That makes a difference.

So there are no easy answers and perfect arguments. As Dr. King said, it is not either-or, it is both-and. Hope is not found in any single ideology – an insistence on doing the same thing with the same result year after year.

Hope is found in what works. In those South Side neighborhoods, hope was found in the after school programs we created, and the job training programs we put together, and the organizing skills we taught residents so that they could stand up to a government that wasn't standing up for them. Hope is found here at THEARC, where you've provided thousands of children with shelter from the streets and a home away from home. And if you travel a few hours north of here, you will find hope amid ninety-seven neighborhood blocks in the heart of Harlem.

This is the home of the Harlem Children's Zone – an all-encompassing, all-hands-on-deck anti-poverty effort that is literally saving a generation of children in a neighborhood where they were never supposed to have a chance.

The philosophy behind the project is simple – if poverty is a disease that infects an entire community in the form of unemployment and violence; failing schools and broken homes, then we can't just treat those symptoms in isolation. We have to heal that entire community. And we have to focus on what actually works.

If you're a child who's born in the Harlem Children's Zone, you start life differently than other inner-city children. Your parents probably went to what they call " Baby College", a place where they received counseling on how to care for newborns and what to expect in those first months. You start school right away, because there's early childhood education. When your parents are at work, you have a safe place to play and learn, because there's child care, and after school programs, even in the summer. There are innovative charter schools to attend. There's free medical services that offer care when you're sick and preventive services to stay healthy. There's affordable, good food available so you're not malnourished. There are job counselors and financial counselors. There's technology training and crime prevention.

You don't just sign up for this program, you're actively recruited for it, because the idea is that if everyone is involved, and no one slips through the cracks, then you really can change an entire community.

Geoffrey Canada, the program's inspirational, innovative founder, put it best – instead of helping some kids beat the odds, the Harlem Children's Zone is actually changing the odds altogether.

And it's working. Parents in Harlem are actually reading more to their children. Their kids are staying in school and passing statewide tests at higher rates than other children in New York City. They're going to college in a place where it was once unheard of. They've even placed third at a national chess championship.

So we know this works. And if we know it works, there's no reason this program should stop at the end of those blocks in Harlem. It's time to change the odds for neighborhoods all across America. And that's why when I'm President, the first part of my plan to combat urban poverty will be to replicate the Harlem Children's Zone in twenty cities across the country. We'll train staff, we'll have them draw up detailed plans with attainable goals, and the federal government will provide half of the funding for each city, with the rest coming from philanthropies and businesses.

Now, how much will this cost? I'll be honest – it can't be done on the cheap. It will cost a few billion dollars a year. We won't just spend the money because we can – every step these cities take will be evaluated, and if certain plans or programs aren't working, we will stop them and try something else.

But we will find the money to do this because we can't afford not to. Dr. King once remarked that if we can find the money to put a man on the moon, then we can find the money to put a man on his own two feet. There's no reason we should be spending tens of thousands of dollars a year to imprison one of these kids when they turn eighteen when we could be spending $3,500 to turn their lives around with this program. And to really put it in perspective, think of it this way. The Harlem Children's Zone is saving a generation of children for $46 million a year. That's about what the war in Iraq costs American taxpayers every four hours.

So let's invest this money. Let's change the odds in urban America by focusing on what works.

The second part of my plan will do this by providing families the support they need to raise their children. I'll pass the plan I outlined last year that will provide more financial support to fathers who make the responsible choice to help raise their children and crack down on the fathers who don't. And we'll help new mothers with their new responsibilities by expanding a pioneering program known as the Nurse-Family Partnership that offers home visits by trained registered nurses to low-income mothers and mothers-to-be.

This program has been proven to reduce childhood injuries, unintended pregnancies, and the use of welfare and food stamps. It's increased father involvement, women's employment, and children's school readiness. It's produced more than $28,000 in net savings for every high-risk family enrolled in the program. It works, and I'll expand the program to 570,000 first-time mothers each year.

The third part of my plan for urban America is to help people find work and make that work pay.

I will invest $1 billion over five years in innovative transitional jobs programs that have been highly successful at placing the unemployed into temporary jobs and then training them for permanent ones. People in these programs get the chance to work in a community service-type job, earn a paycheck every week, and learn the skills they need for gainful employment. And by leaving with references and a resume, often times they find that employment.

Still, even for those workers who do find a permanent job, many times there's no way for them to advance their careers once they're in those jobs. That's why we'll also work with community organizations and businesses to create career pathways that provide workers with the additional skills and training they need to earn more money. And we'll make sure that public transportation is both available and affordable for low-income workers, because no one should be denied work in this country because they can't get there.

To make work pay, I will also triple the Earned Income Tax Credit for full-time workers making the minimum wage. This is one of the most successful anti-poverty programs in history and lifts nearly 5 million Americans out of poverty every year. I was able to expand this program when I was a state Senator in Illinois, and as President I'll do it again.

The fourth part of my plan will be to help bring businesses back to our inner-cities. A long time ago, this country created a World Bank that has helped spur economic development in some of the world's poorest regions. I think it's about time we had something like that right here in America. Less than one percent of the $250 billion in venture capital that's invested each year goes to minority businesses that are trying to breathe life into our cities. This has to change.

When I'm President, I'll make sure that every community has the access to the capital and resources it needs to create a stronger business climate by providing more loans to small businesses and setting up the financial institutions that can help get them started. I'll also create a national network of business incubators, which are local services that help first-time business owners design their business plans, find the best location, and receive expert advice on how to run their businesses whenever they need it. And I will take steps to help close the digital divide and increase internet access for cities so that urban America is just as connected as the rest of America.

The final part of my plan to change the odds in our cities will be to ensure that more Americans have access to safe, affordable housing. As President, I'll create an Affordable Housing Trust Fund that would add as many as 112,000 new affordable units in mixed income neighborhoods. We'll also do more to protect homeowners from mortgage fraud and subprime lending by passing my plan to provide counseling to tenants, homeowners, and other consumers so they get the advice and guidance they need before buying a house and support if they get in to trouble down the road. And we will crack down on mortgage professionals found guilty of fraud by increasing enforcement and creating new criminal penalties.

What this agenda to combat urban poverty attempts to do is not easy, and it will not happen overnight. Changing the odds in our cities will require humility in what we can accomplish and patience with our progress. But most importantly, it will require the sustained commitment of the President of the United States, and that is why I will also appoint a new director of Urban Policy who will cut through the disorganized bureaucracy that currently exists and report directly to me on how these efforts are going; on what's working and what's not.

Because in the end, hope is found in what works.

The moral question about poverty in America – How can a country like this allow it? – has an easy answer: we can't. The political question that follows – What do we do about it? – has always been more difficult. But now that we're finally seeing the beginnings of an answer, this country has an obligation to keep trying.

The idea for the Harlem Children's Zone began with a list. It was a waiting list that Geoffrey Canada kept of all the children who couldn't get into his program back when it was just a few blocks wide. It was 500 people long. And one day he looked at that list and thought, why shouldn't those 500 kids get the same chance in life as the 500 who were already in the program? Why not expand it to include those 500? Why not 5000? Why not?

And that, of course, is the final question about poverty in America. It's the hopeful one that Bobby Kennedy was also famous for asking. Why not? It leaves the cynics without an answer, and it calls on the rest of us to get to work. I will be doing exactly that from the first day I become your President, and I ask you all to join me in getting it done. Thank you.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

max dugan (2008-02-20 11:25:00)

I like the basic elements of the plan. The key is in helping small business flourish. The vast majority of American jobs are created by small business owners.

As a small business owner I need a reliable and dedicated workforce. I need employees who can read and write english. I need employees who have a work ethic. I need employees who are drug and alcohol free.

By easing the restrictions on SBA loans I can grow my business out and transform it into a major enterprise.

My second biggest challenge is controlling the rising cost of gasoline and the declining purchasing power of our dollar.

We would be better off if President elect Obama implemented a 10:1 reverse split on the dollar and at the same time returned us to the gold standard. The last time the dollar was worth 100 cents was in 1933. The purchasing power of the 2008 dollar against the 1933 dollar is .000000000000000001.

Another side of Barack (2007-07-18 18:45)

Turns out that the California office I had reported on earlier is not connected with Obama for America.

Instead it belongs to an independent 527 PAC known as Californians for Obama chaired by Emmett Cash III.

Obama campaign manager David Plouffe sent out an email today with an interesting video of the Dinner with Barack event showing "another side of Barack."

A week ago, four supporters from all over the country were flown to our nation's capital to share a meal – and their stories – with Barack Obama.

The conversation covered topics ranging from the war in Iraq to student loans to poverty.

But they also talked about cartoons, YouTube, and teaching kids to ride bikes.

You've got to watch this video:

<http://my.barackobama.com/dinner>

These dinner guests were not Washington lobbyists or representatives of special interests.

They were small-dollar donors who participated in our Dinner with Barack campaign – Christina, Haile, Michael, and Margaret each gave between $5 and $25 and got the kind of personal time with Barack that other politicians reserve for the wealthy and powerful.

In addition to the video from the dinner, we have four more short video profiles of each of the participants. Watch the videos, and let us know what you would have asked Barack if you'd been there:

<http://my.barackobama.com/dinner>

Thank you so much for your support.

David

David Plouffe

Campaign Manager

Obama for America

P.S. – One of the dinner guests, Haile Rivera, works with New York City food pantries and spoke to Barack about the challenges of the urban poor. Today, Barack gave a speech outlining his agenda to combat urban poverty. For more on Barack's vision and plan to revitalize our urban centers, click here:

<http://www.barackobama.com/issues/fightingpoverty/>

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-06-28 06:44:00)

THE POSITION OF MISTER OBAMA ON THE DEATH PENALTY IS FOR ME NOT COMPATIBLE WITH MY PICTURE OF CHANGE FOR THE BETTER. ON THE GROUNDS OF MISTER OBAMAS COMMENTS CONCERNING THE DEATH PENALTY I AM WITHDRAWING MY SUPPORT FOR THE OBAMA CANDIDACY.

Critics roil at Obama's broad appeal (2007-07-18 20:41)

One of the latest

Barack Obama started out helping the poor (2007-07-19 09:35)

When Barack Obama revealed his plan to address urban poverty yesterday, he was touching a subject close to his heart.

After graduating from Columbia University, Obama left a corporate job to work as a community organizer in the tough South Side of Chicago. He worked in neighborhoods hit by plant closures.

Three years later, Obama left for Harvard University to get his law degree. He went with the express purpose of eventually getting involved in politics. Obama wanted to make change and he had come to the conclusion that it was necessary to break into the world of electoral politics to accomplish his goals.

When he graduated from Harvard with magna cum laude honors, Obama was offered lucrative corporate positions but turned them down. He did not forget his commitment to make a difference, which included making a difference in poor urban neighborhoods.

After winning a seat on the Illinois State Senate, Obama worked on passing a new earned income tax credit and on health-care reform.

Obama made the war against urban poverty a focal point both of his U.S. Senate and presidential campaigns. For info on his current positions, visit the following page:

<http://www.barackobama.com/issues/fightingpoverty/>

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack's cash from early states, online ads (2007-07-20 08:42)

If fundraising is used as the measure of support in early states like Iowa, Nevada, New Hampshire and South Carolina, Barack Obama would lead in New Hampshire, John Edwards would take Iowa and South Carolina and Hillary Clinton would run away with Nevada.

Barack Obama raised $111,251 in New Hampshire compared to Hillary Clinton's $71,225 and John Edwards' $39,626. Barack raised $63,685 in Iowa compared to Hillary Clinton's $41,809 and John Edwards' $67,566.

Obama has $188,860 in South Carolina to Hillary's $77,114 and Edwards' $226,555. Edwards was born in South Carolina and is based in neighboring North Carolina.

In Nevada, Barack pulled in $105,960 compared to Hillary's $395,730 and Edwards' $96,240.

Interestingly, Barack comes in first or second in all races, never third.

Online ads in New Hampshire

Obama for America will launch an online ad campaign on wmur.com in New Hampshire.

The ads reportedly will feature Obama speaking to the viewers.

"So you're not (getting) sort of a pat, handler sort of line come out of him, but you have him deal with questions in a grounded, intelligent, sincere way," said Obama campaign volunteer Peter Beeson.

Bill Richardson and John Edwards are currently running television ads in New Hampshire. Richardson touts his plan to end the Iraq War, while the Edwards ad features his wife Elizabeth.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

New Obama offices in Charleston, Chicago (2007-07-20 16:26)

The Obama campaign opened a new office in Charleston, South Carolina ahead of the CNN/YouTube debates on Monday. Michelle Obama's older brother Craig Robinson attended and 80 volunteers attended the event.

Charleston office. You can submit questions for the CNN/YouTube debate here.
In Chicago, Michelle Obama and Sen. Dick Durbin helped open the new Obama volunteer headquarters office. Durbin said that a host of volunteers would soon be needed to campaign in Iowa. Michelle told the crowd that he office will be open seven days a week, 24 hours a day.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama: Pressure NH senators on Iraq (2007-07-21 14:34)

Speaking in New Hampshire, Barack Obama urged supporters to pressure the state's senators to vote for an end to the Iraq War.

"We've got a couple Senators here in New Hampshire who say they agree we need a new course, but didn't vote like that in Washington," said Barack. "We're going to have to put some pressure on them to tell them that if they understand that this war is no longer helping make us safer, that they've got to vote in that fashion."

[EMBED]

Barack will be at the AFSCME convention in Des Moines tonight, at the Council of La Raza in Florida on Sunday and at the CNN/YouTube debate on Monday night.

X

X X X X X X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama says he'll walk picket line after elected (2007-07-21 20:12)

Barack Obama addressed the annual convention of Council 61 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees in Des Moines, Iowa today.

He told members that he would walk the picket line as president if organized labor helped him into office.

"I stood on the picket line and marched with workers at the Congress Hotel in Chicago last week," said Obama. "I had marched with them four years earlier and I told them when I left that if they were still fighting four years from now, I'd be back on that picket line as president of the United States."

Obama spoke of the need to break the gridlock that's hampered progress in Washington.

"We've heard promises and slogans about change before," said Obama. "The road to Washington is often paved with good intentions, but it always ends in the same divisive, polarizing politics that's blocked real progress for so many years."

Michelle Obama and Sen. Dick Durbin at opening of Chicago Volunteer Headquarters
[EMBED]

X

X X X X X X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama to visit Sacramento (2007-07-22 11:54)

Sen. Barack Obama will finally be visiting Sacramento on Aug. 8 and we at Sacramento for Obama are preparing to greet him.

The purpose of the visit is a high-end fundraising luncheon thrown by the Friedmans with a goal of raising at least $250,000.

Sacramento for Obama volunteers are arranging a rally and media event outside the venue, which houses Mikuni and PF Changs restaurants.

If you live in the area, you can sign up for the Sacramento Obama rally here.

Before coming to Sacramento, Obama will be at the College Democrats of America Convention at the University of South Carolina-Columbia, and on Aug. 10 he will again visit Las Vegas.

BarackObama.com continues to show a high level of volunteer activity with 671 events listed on that site today:
barackobama.com volunteer events

X

X X X X X X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama campaign loses advisor to military duty (2007-07-23 10:01)

The Naval Reserve has called Mark Lippert, Obama’s top foreign policy adviser, to active duty. Lippert, a master’s graduate from Stanford University, is a lieutenant junior grade in the Navy, which he joined three years ago. Obama for America told reporters that Denis McDonough, a former foreign-policy adviser to then-Senate Democratic Leader Tom Daschle, will increase his involvement in Lippert’s absence.

Obama to offer rural policy

Sen. Obama plans to host a rural policy forum on Friday in Dallas County, Iowa, in mid-August focusing on rural economic development, quality of life, agriculture and green energy.

”People in the rural economies suffer from many of the things people do all across the country,” Obama told the Associated Press.

Obama also announced a team of experts that will help him develop his rural policy.

They include:

- Mike Dunn, of Keokuk, former Clinton under secretary of agriculture for marketing and regulatory programs ,
- Gary Lamb, of Chelsea, has served as president of the Iowa Farmers Union, chairman of the Iowa State Committee of the Farm Service Agency and an agricultural liaison for Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa.
- Neil Hamilton, of Waukee, director of the Agricultural Law Center at Drake University. In 2000, he was appointed by Iowa Gov. Tom Vilsack as chairman of the Iowa Food Policy Council.

X

X X X X X X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

CNN/YouTube debate (2007-07-23 18:39)

I'm watching the CNN analysis of the recently-completed CNN-YouTube debates as I write this blog. Barack turned in a solid performance, although its hard to predict how the media will spin the outcome. One of the most enthusiastic responses to any of the candidates came when Barack answered a question on reparations for African American slavery. He said that the best form of reparations would come in the way of providing a good education to young African Americans. Each candidate was asked to provide a YouTube-style video that was broadcast during the debate. Barack had what I thought as by far the best campaign-produced video. Check it out:
[EMBED]

✕

✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Obama gets rave reviews, launches S.C. ads (2007-07-24 08:04)

Barack Obama won the polls from both the CNN and Fox News focus groups and generally received good reviews from the press and bloggers for his debate performance last night. It was also announced today that Obama for America will begin a radio ad campaign in South Carolina, the location of the CNN-YouTube debate. The ad will begin airing Wednesday on 36 radio stations that target mainly African American listeners. Obama appears to be making sure that Hillary Clinton doesn't make inroads in South Carolina, while he campaigns vigorously in Iowa. His campaign currently has two television ads running in Iowa and an online ad campaign was purchased on wmur.com in New Hampshire. Read more about the South Carolina ads here.

✕

✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Barack dominates debate (2007-07-24 11:14)

Obama campaign manager David Plouffe sent out an email today touting Barack Obama's performance in the CNN-YouTube debate last night. Here is the full text along with video:

Barack Obama's performance stood above the competition in last night's debate as he continued to show the qualities that will make him a strong Commander in Chief.

He displayed the judgment that led him to oppose the war in Iraq before it began and reminded the other candidates that the time to ask how we were going to get out of Iraq was before we went in.

Watch the video and share it with your friends:

<http://my.BarackObama.com/DebateSC>

Televised debates are notorious for rehearsed sound bites and canned answers. Barack demonstrated his leadership by speaking with passion and personal conviction about education, Social Security , and changing the way Washington works.

This morning's news coverage declared Barack the clear winner of the debate. Here's a sample of what they had to say:

Time and time again Obama sought to take specific questions and broaden them into a conversation over who represented real change in the field. He castigated lobbyists and special interests in Washington , offering a sweeping condemnation of business as usual (by both parties) in the nation's capital. "We don't need just a change in political parties," said Obama. "We need a change in attitudes of the people representing Americans."

– Chris Cillizza, Washington Post

We're here with 24 Democrats, independents, who thought that Senator Hillary Clinton would be the best performer here tonight, but the results that we just got in, this is a focus group; show that Barack Obama got the most favorable in terms of the best performance from the 24 people who are here tonight.

– Mary Snow, CNN

Watch Barack's performance and help build our movement for change:

<http://my.BarackObama.com/DebateSC>

We also heard from hundreds of supporters who shared their reactions via Obama mobile:

I loved Obama's comment that we're not going to fix anything until 'we change how business is done in Washington .' As usual, he was spot-on. I have faith that Barack is THE candidate to facilitate these changes. He has shown commitment time and again that he will work across lines of party, race, & religion to make progress in America. United, we can make a difference!

– Lisa in Ann Arbor, Michigan

Once again Barack applied a common sense approach in his response tonight. I was also pleased he continued to reinforce his message of unity. O8AMA!!

– Russ in Cary, Illinois

Barack, you were the best one there and should be the obvious choice for those of us who want true, real, and honest change. Keep it up!

– Tessa in Rochester, New York

Barack's victory in last night's debate was decisive, but he cannot win the Democratic nomination alone. It's up to all of us to spread the word and build this movement for change.

Thanks for your support,

David

David Plouffe
Campaign Manager
Obama for America

✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕

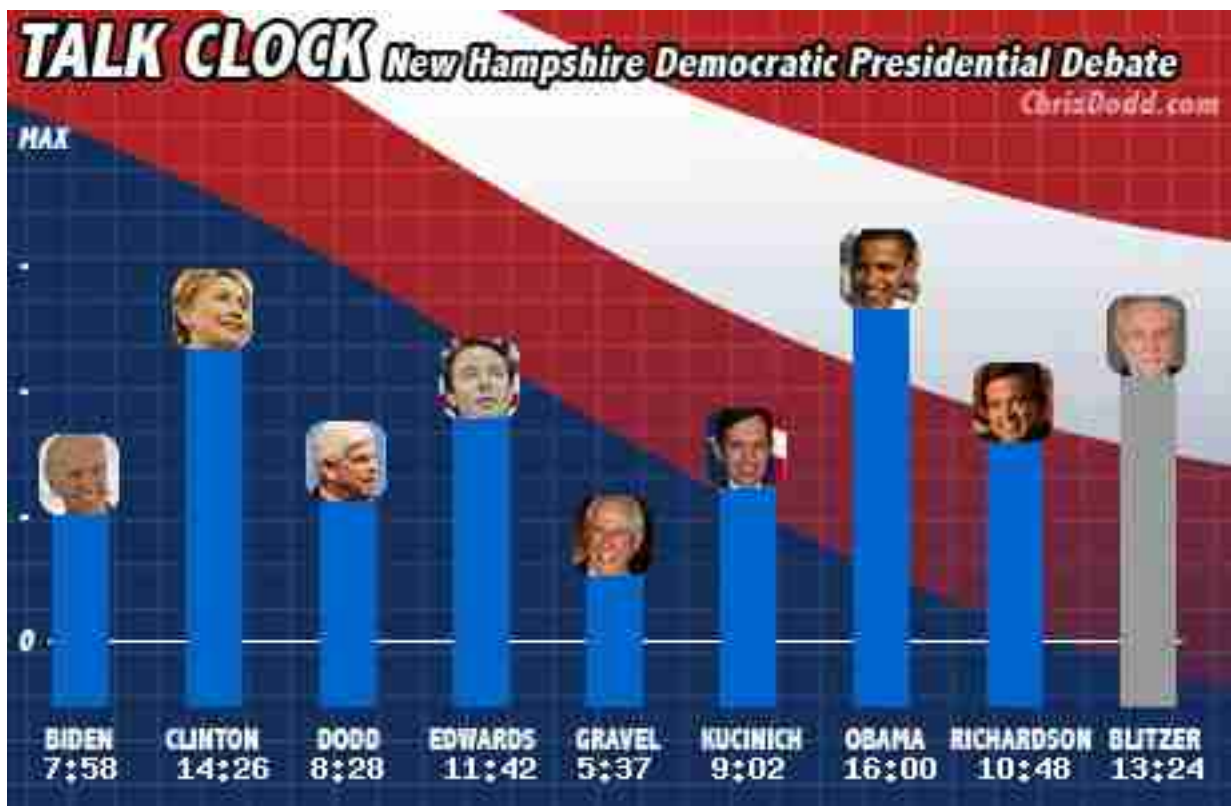

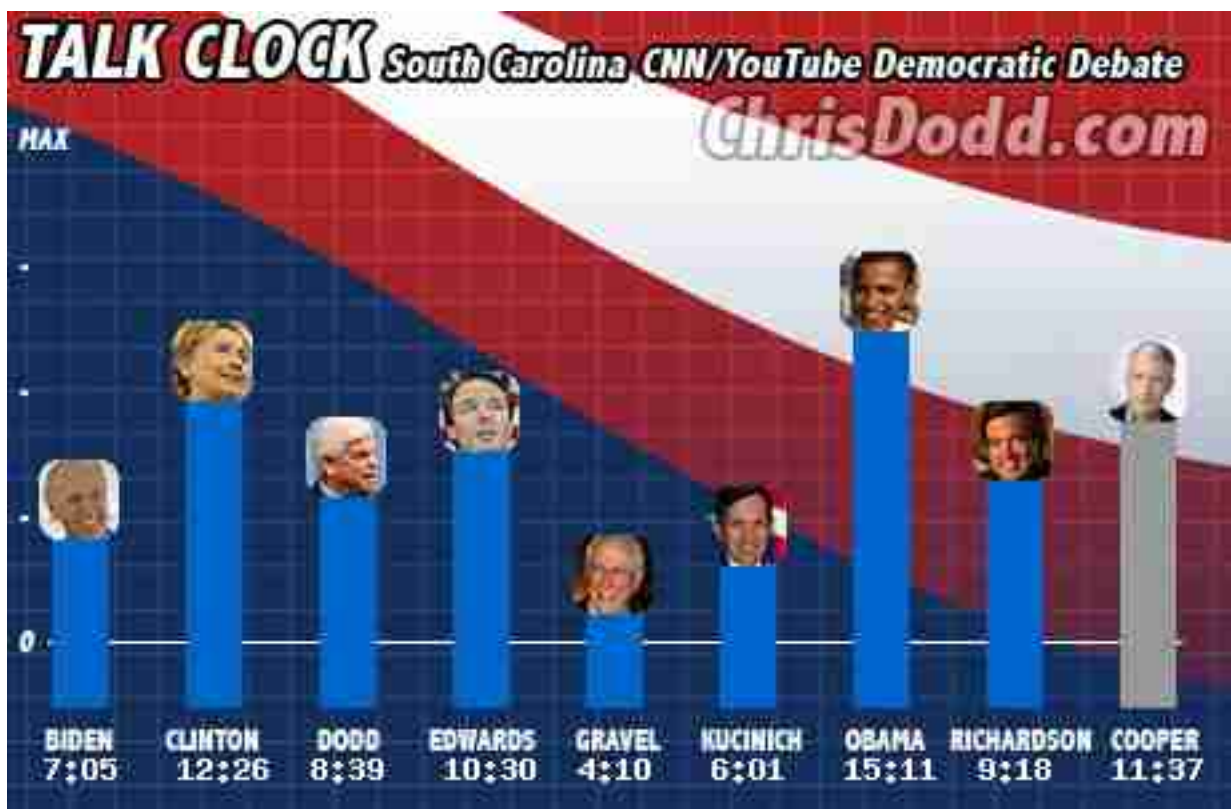

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Is CNN secretly supporting Barack Obama? (2007-07-24 15:27)

Some people are suggesting that CNN is endorsing Barack Obama based on the "Talk Clocks" created at ChrisDodd.com.

Here are the clocks for last night's debate moderated by Anderson Cooper and the New Hampshire debated moderated by Wolf Blitzer.

While Obama does get the most speaking time of all the candidates, the reason may have more to do with ratings than covert support.

CNN after all wants to draw the largest audience possible, to help pay the bills, and Obama is probably attracts the largest audience share.

Missouri state auditor endorses Obama

Barack Obama did receive an open endorsement today from Missouri State Auditor Susan Montee. Montee, a former delegate for John Edwards, is the first statewide official in Missouri to endorse a presidential candidate.

X X X X X X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

diamondebs (2007-07-25 06:47:00)
CNN is not secretly supporting Obama. Now listen to this- are you ready?
Look at the talk once more. What you see on those charts is Divine intervention. I here the spirit of the Lord saying, that is the preference and likely outcome of the democratic nomination:
1- Barack Obama
2- Hillary clinton
3- John Edwards
4- Bill Richardson
5- Denis Kucinich
6- Chriss Dodd
7- Joe Biden
8- Mike Gravel

Obama leads on diplomacy (2007-07-25 11:24)

Katrina vanden Heuvel has it right in her opinion piece on how Obama had it right. Growing up the first I ever heard of this strategy was in reference to Israel's refusal to talk with PLO leader Yasser Arafat. Of course, eventually Israel saw the light and did talk with Arafat. Not negotiating with certain countries and leaders was viewed as a way of combating terrorism by Bill Clinton's administration and has been used in that way ever since. Obviously it has done little to stop terrorism. The two significant foreign terrorist attacks in the U.S., the first WTC attack and 9-11, occurred after the adoption of this policy. Not talking did not stop North Korea from testing a nuclear weapon. It also did not stop Iran from becoming what many consider to be the most powerful nation in the Middle East these days. Stonewalling nations only drives them further into isolation and runs the risk of incubating a truly strong and relatively self-sufficient enemy.

X

X X X X X X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Two House Reps endorse Obama (2007-07-25 16:19)

CNN sources claim that New Hampshire Rep. Paul Hodes will endorse Sen. Barack Obama's for president. New Hampshire's other representative Democrat Carol Shea-Porter has not endorsed a candidate yet. In New Jersey, Steve Rothman officially endorsed Obama today.

"Last week's National Intelligence Estimate proves that we are no safer than we were before the attacks of Sept. 11th," said Rothman. "It's time to turn the page and bring an end to the Bush-Cheney foreign policy that has left Americans vulnerable here at home and reduced matters of war and national defense to signs and slogans. Barack Obama is the best candidate for President, with the strength and character to change our broken politics and restore America's standing in the world. He will engage in the aggressive diplomacy necessary to hold countries that pose the greatest threats to our national security accountable. Senator Obama also possesses the resolve to use military force, if necessary, to protect America."

X

X X X X X X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama names Hodes national co-chair (2007-07-26 07:54)

Barack Obama named New Hampshire Rep. Paul Hodes as one of his national campaign co-chairs as Hodes announced his endorsement of Obama.

The two appeared together in Concord, New Hampshire today. Hodes said of his endorsement:

"Barack and I share an optimistic vision for this country and we share the belief that change is possible when people come together. Campaigning across New Hampshire this fall, people told me that they believe this country can be great again—but they know that we need a new kind of politics if we're going to make progress on the issues that confront us around the world. In Barack Obama, we have a leader who will turn the page on our narrow-minded foreign policy, a leader who will end the war in Iraq and who realizes, just like JFK and Ronald Reagan did, that being a strong nation means having the strength to talk to our enemies."

Hodes' endorsement is a major break for the Obama campaign in the first primary state of New Hampshire.

X

X X X X X X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Dinner with Barack II (2007-07-26 13:24)

The first Dinner with Barack event was very popular with supporters and today campaign manager David Plouffe sent out an email announcing a second to chance to dine with the candidate:

Dear Paul Kekai,

✕ After watching the video of the first Dinner with Barack, thousands of you sent messages asking for another opportunity to participate.

Here's what you had to say:

"This is one of the coolest events I've ever witnessed. Ordinary citizens are never afforded this kind of opportunity – to sit down with someone who might be the leader of the free world and have the opportunity to discuss policies and issues. I contributed just as the others did, and I feel as if they were sitting in those chairs representing all of us out here. Just regular folk having their voices heard. Amazing. Yes! Yes! Do it again!!!"

– Tim in Chehalis, WA

"The dinner video of the Senator and his guests was great. I was very inspired by watching it. This really demonstrates Senator Obama's genuineness and compassion for others. Just to see him sit down, eat, talk and listen to the concerns of average people. This says a lot about his leadership and is the kind of example we need to see more of."

– JoAnn in Moss Point, MI

"First I've got to say WOW! Did i just see a Presidential Candidate sit down with regular folk? WOW! Seriously, I just want to say thank you. This is the first time I have ever felt passion for an election. I am so excited."

– Roger in Lakewood, CA

"This was great. Absolutely you should do it again. I liked the short films profiling the dinner guests too. My Dad sent this link to me, and he would only connect to a politician who seems like a real person. So, you're doing something good here."

– David in Jamaica Plain, MA

"Excellent! This format shows much more than the standard sound bite. It really gives a person a glimpse of the real Obama: down to earth, in-touch with the concerns of American citizens. I would suggest expanding this format of 'Dinner with Barack' into a series."

– Donald in Hallowell, ME

As much as you enjoyed the dinner, no one enjoyed it more than Barack. As soon as it was over he asked, "When are we doing the next one?"

Thank you for your past support. You have helped build this movement, and now you have an opportunity to meet Barack and share your story and your ideas. Here are the details:

If you make a donation in any amount, even as little as five dollars, before 11:59 pm EDT on Tuesday, July 31st, you could join Barack Obama and three other supporters for an intimate dinner for five:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/dinner> Barack's guests told us that the dinner worked out even better than they expected. The casual, friendly atmosphere allowed them to engage Barack on a number of issues that affect them personally.

One of the guests, Christina Cheatham, blogged about her experience:

"The Senator not only spoke candidly with us about many different issues, but he also took interest in how some of the current policies affect our daily lives.

Most important to me, while he is very confident in his own ideas for America, he is still willing to listen – really listen – to dissenting views."

Watch a short video of Barack's dinner with Christina, Haile, Margaret, and Michael. They discussed the war in Iraq, student loans, health care, and urban poverty.

What issues are important to you, and what would you ask Barack if you had the chance?

Share your story and make a small donation before 11:59 pm EDT on Tuesday, July 31st, and you could have dinner with Barack:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/dinner> At a time when Washington lobbyists and special interests are poisoning our politics with their influence, Barack Obama wants to sit down with you and hear what's on your mind.

Our movement has rejected the easy money of politics as usual. Instead, we put our faith in you, and more than a quarter-million supporters have proven that we made the right decision.

The vast majority – more than 90 % – of our donations came from supporters giving $100 or less. However, to make a lasting change in this country we must keep building this base of support.

Make a small donation and you could have the kind of dinner with Barack that other politicians reserve for the wealthy elite:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/dinner> Thank you for your support,

David

David Plouffe

Campaign Manager

Obama for America

P.S. – Barack got involved in politics to advance the concerns of ordinary people and serve the common good of all Americans. There is no better source of ideas or inspiration to make this happen than an intimate conversation with supporters like you. Make a small donation before 11:59 pm on July 31st and you could have dinner with Barack:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/dinner>

X

X X X X X X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

New Obama downloads available @ barackobama.com (2007-07-26 18:29)

BarackObama.com has come up with a new set of downloads – banners, logos, widgets even a dynamic timeline – for supporters to install on their websites, blogs, social networking pages, etc.

Here is the message announcing the new download page from the official blog:

Please visit our new downloads page at www.barackobama.com/downloads and get new webtools to better stay connected with our movement. The pages includes badges, buttons, logos, and more to help you customize your website; buddy icons to show your support for Barack on instant messenger devices; and even widgets to customize your myspace and iGoogle pages with our latest news and video feeds.

✕ ✕

Also check out the “Our Story” widget. This new social networking tool allows us to share a quick timeline and background of Barack’s amazing career. It also will continue to grow as we add important moments in the days ahead.

[EMBED] With more than 250,000 friends on MySpace and Facebook – These download tools are a great way to keep our members engaged and informed.

✕

✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Obama leads iowa mock election, launches new ads (2007-07-27 09:54)

Sen. Barack Obama leads the Johnson County Fair mock election according to an Auditor’s Office press release.

As of 11 a.m. Thursday, Obama took the lead with 163 votes. Hillary Clinton is second with 115 votes, and John Edwards is third with 82 votes.

A total of 474 Democratic ballots were cast.

Of the 158 total Republican ballots, Mitt Romney took the lead, with 48 votes followed by Rudy Giuliani with 26 votes and Fred Thompson, with 13 votes.

New banner ads defend Barack’s position

The Obama campaign is rolling out a new banner ad today that will appear in the Concord Monitor, Des Moines Register and other New Hampshire and Iowa newspaper websites.

The ad defends Barack’s position on diplomacy.

✕

IFRAME: <http://www.barackobama.com/judgmentmatters.html>

<http://www.barackobama.com/judgmentmatters.html>

XXXXXXXXXX

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

XXXXXXXXXX

Barack Obama: Special interests blocking rural reform (2007-07-28 08:48)

Speaking at a rural issues forum in Iowa, Barack Obama said that lobbyists and special interest groups are blocking progress on rural reform.

"Washington lobbyists are working in Congress to block the rural reforms you need," Obama said. "Rather than investing in rural opportunity, our government is handing out subsidies to corporate mega-farms. Over the past decade, our government has handed out $1.3 billion in federal farm money to people who aren't even farmers. We've even got farm money going to Fortune 500 companies."

Surge in Obama videos

In addition to the videos on YouTube, Barack Obama supporters have produced a number of good videos on sites like Veoh.

Here is a sample:

"Young Barack Obama" by Rem Steele

[EMBED]

Online Videos by Veoh.com

XXXXXXXXXX

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

XXXXXXXXXX

(2007-07-28 15:16)

Here are some nice campaign pics of Barack Obama talking to people in Iowa about rural issues.

Today, he spoke in Winterset in front of one of the famous bridges of Madison County.

For more on Barack's trip through Iowa, check out Iowa.BarackObama.com.

Obama stumps in Iowa, New Hampshire (2007-07-28 15:16)

Here are some nice campaign pics of Barack Obama talking to people in Iowa about rural issues.

In front of one of the famous bridges of Madison County.

For more on Barack's trip through Iowa, check out Iowa.BarackObama.com. Earlier this week Barack gave this foreign policy talk while in New Hampshire:

[EMBED]

Obama volunteers continue to maintain a high level of activity with some 690 volunteer events listed on barack-obama.com.

✕

✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

A Hefty influence on young Barack (2007-07-29 10:03)

When Barack Obama was asked on the CNN-YouTube debate to name his favorite teacher he mentioned Mabel Hefty of Punahou School in Honolulu.

A story from the Honolulu Star-Bulletin suggests that Hefty made quite an impression on other students at Punahou as well including others who rose to success like Polynesian Voyaging Society head Nainoa Thompson.

Interestingly, Barack Obama had also made quite an impression on Hefty according to her daughter Carolyn Whorff. According to Whorff, before her mother died and before Obama had ever ventured into politics, his name came up in conversation.

"I know he's going to be somebody," Hefty told her daughter. "You probably will hear about him. If you do, look him up."

Hefty had a special interest in Obama also as she had worked herself in Kenya for the U.S. Agency for International Development.

She once invited Obama's father to speak in class during the latter's visit to Hawai'i.

"I was just coming from overseas, coming back to the United States, felt a little bit out of place," Obama recalled Monday at the CNN/YouTube debate. "And she had actually lived in Kenya and worked there and taught there, and was able to give me some sense that even though I had experiences outside this country, those were actually valuable and important."

Read the whole story of Mabel Hefty and Barack Obama.

COURTESY PUNAHOU SCHOOL

Mabel Hefty with the Hawaiian quilt given to her by Punahou School upon her retirement in 1980.

CLICK FOR LARGE

✕

✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Obama has progressive in Illinois State Senate (2007-07-30 08:23)

The New York Times has a nice article on Barack Obama has a neophyte, former community organizer senator at a time when the Illinois State Senate was dominated by Republicans.

“One of my first comments to Barack was, ‘What the hell are you doing here?’ ” said Denny Jacobs, a former senator and self-described “backroom politician, not one of those do-gooders that stands up front and says we got to make changes.”

Senator Obama’s answer? “He looked at me sort of strange.”

Obama comments on experience at Indianapolis fundraiser

A WISHTV8 reporter questioned Barack Obama at an Indianapolis fundraiser about talk that the current diplomacy rift with Hillary Clinton shows his lack of experience.

“Well, actually that’s not what people are saying. That’s what some of the pundits are saying. The people aren’t saying that at all because they recognize that, if we keep on doing the same things that we’ve been doing over and over and over and they don’t work, at some point you should try something different.”

✕

✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Obama in Vibe Magazine and other news (2007-07-30 10:06)

Candidate Barack Obama is featured on the cover of the latest issue of Vibe magazine along with an accompanying article inside.

Vibe is an urban/music magazine catering toward the African American community and founded by producer Quincy Jones.

✕

Hank Johnson supports Obama

U.S. Rep Hank Johnson of Georgia became the first Democratic congressional representative in that state to endorse Barack Obama.

Johnson stresses Iraq as a key issue in his support for Obama:

“Today more than ever, a fundamental change in the way we do our business in Washington is crucial,” said Johnson. “Barack Obama, who had the sound judgment to oppose the Iraq War early on, is the only candidate who will turn the page on this disastrous foreign policy and lead our nation to a new standing in the world.”

Barack talks “big tent” with CBN In an interview with CBN, the fundamentalist broadcasting network run by Pat Robertson, Obama had this to say on religious tolerance:

Whatever we once were, we’re no longer just a Christian nation; we are also a Jewish nation, a Muslim nation, a Buddhist nation, a Hindu nation, and a nation of non-believers. We should acknowledge this and realize that when we’re formulating policies from the state house to the Senate floor to the White House, we've got to work to translate our reasoning into values that are accessible to every one of our citizens, not just members of our own faith community.

X

X X X X X X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Grist interviews Barack Obama (2007-07-30 21:02)

Environmental mag Grist has published an interview with Barack Obama about his presidential platform on energy and the environment.

Amanda Griscom Little interviews Barack as part of series on the environmental policies of presidential candidates. Here's an excerpt:

Q. How central will energy and the environment be to your campaign?

A. I consider energy to be one of the three most important issues that we are facing domestically, along with revamping our education system and reforming our health-care systems. The opportunities for significant change exist partly because the awareness of the threat of climate change has grown rapidly over the last couple of years. Al Gore deserves a lot of credit for that, as do environmental activists and outlets like Grist. People are ready to recognize the magnitude of the climate problem and take it on.

On the controversial issue of liquid coal, with southern Illinois being rich in coal deposits, Obama says:

Our original bill on coal-to-liquids – which generated a lot of heat in the environmental community, no pun intended – proposed $200 million for demonstration projects, to see where this technology might take us.

If the technology exists for us to use coal in a clean fashion, then that is something all of us should welcome, particularly because China and India are building coal-fired power plants at a rapid rate, and they likely have lifespans of several decades. Coal is a cheaper resource, and they're going to be figuring out a way to exploit it, so we should help to find technologies that will ensure that if it is used, it is used cleanly. The U.S. is recognized as the global leader in understanding better geologic coal-sequestration technologies. If we abandon that leadership, we risk leaving the rest of the planet wide open to investing billions in polluting infrastructure.

But I stress again that my position has been consistent throughout: If we are using coal in the absence of these clean technologies, then we are going to be

And on nuclear power:

I think that with nuclear power, we have got to see if there are ways for us to store the radioactive material in a safe, environmentally sound way, and if we can do that and deal with the some of the safely and security issues, [nuclear power] is something that we should look at.

Note that Illinois has made huge investments in nuclear power and has the largest nuclear industry in the nation.

✕

✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Iredeu (2007-07-31 20:45:00)

I feel that when we are talking about developing an alternative (CTL) to current petroleum based fuels, it is somewhat unfair to put in a pre-requisite that it has to emit 20 % less CO2 than current solutions. Any technology that is in its infant stages needs a level playing field. Mind you, I would be FOR putting that 20 % pre-requisite for CTL in place, but I think in that case you would have to be FOR the exact same cap of 20 % on CO2 emissions from current petroleum based fuels. Then the government would take the lead without influencing the free market.

Oprah's fundraiser reportedly sold out (2007-07-31 08:40)

According to Lynn Sweet, Oprah's big celebrity fundraiser for Barack Obama has already sold out. Even members of Obama's own finance committee are said to have received only seven tickets for the big bash on on Sept. 8 at Oprah's Santa Barbara home. Tickets start at $2,300. In Dallas yesterday, Obama attended three fundraisers, one at Hotel Crescent Court, a low-ticket event at Gilley's for younger supporters, and a picnic at a private home in Prosper.

Obama also received more good news from New Hampshire where State Sen. Jackie Cilley pledged her support for Barack.

"I intend to work on this campaign. This isn't just an endorsement," she said. "I have an opportunity to really participate."

✕

✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

DANIELLECLARKE (2007-07-31 13:39:00)

I gave $50.00 yesterday for a friend I know who has been working real hard for the Obama Campaign for change in hopes he gets picked. His name is Sheldon from Doylestown PA.

Myself I can't get the time away due to having no car or transportation. I also am a disabled Vietnam veteran living with an 84 yr old woman. She needs my help and thanks to her I am not homeless. I get a couch to sleep on and free food. This is a blessing to me. Sometimes she even lets me borrow her 2003 Honda Hybrid, which she did last week so I could drive to Virginia and see my 90 yr old WWII veteran Dad. He just had a stroke. He can't talk and he didn't want to apply for veteran benefits because he was more concerned with Iraq veterans needing help. My dad lays in a old bed in a Medicaid facility. The bed is the crank up style. They don't have air conditioning. Right now I am awaiting an approval for my dad to get into a veterans facility close to me in Philadelphia, but I have to wait because he never applied previously and I have had to apply for him myself.

I am very hopeful Barack gets elected so he can help elders and veterans and homeless to be able to save elders (Like the woman I am helping) from going into old age homes by creating a program for students to share homes with the elderly.

All I can say is I am giving everything I can to help Barack get elected. I am past 1/2 way in what I am allowed for primary giving. I have never before donated to a candidate. I can now because I get a small VA pension and well I can't but help this man (as well as my own two children's college fund and my two kids in Lusaka Zambia I adopted through World Vision and Christian Children's Fund).

I would hope and pray everyone who can afford to help would do so. I am thankful for those with extra cash to be able to go to fundraisers for Barack.

Also there is a fundraiser for the National Food Bank that is running until August 15th. It's for Barack's 46th birthday August 4th. Please donate to it. To make your contribution go to

<http://help.secondharvest.org/obama>

I gave $100.00 but you can give less but please give in Barack's Name.

Respectfully yours

Danielle Clarke

Obama to air new Iowa ad (2007-07-31 15:51)

Obama for America announced Tuesday that it will begin airing a new ad in Iowa focused on ethics reform in Washington.

And speaking of Washington, the Arlington Young Democrats plan to auction off 20 dates in support of Sen. Obama's presidential campaign.

The group, which helped Jim Webb's senate campaign, will raise funds for the Obama campaign on Aug. 25.

"Over 100 young professionals from all over the DC-Metro area will meet on Wednesday night for an event to change America... and possibly their love lives," organizer Jim McBride announced.

Don't forget if you want to qualify for Dinner with Barack, you must donate at least $5 by 11:59 pm tonight. Here's an email appeal sent out by Barack last night:

Dear Friend,

A couple of weeks ago I sat down to dinner with four supporters like you.

Christina, Haile, Margaret, and Michael each made a small online donation, and we flew them across the country for some good food and good conversation.

What I enjoyed most about this dinner was the opportunity to listen to the stories and concerns of ordinary Americans in a relaxed environment. Out on the campaign trail, there isn't always time for that kind of interaction.

Last week we started planning our second dinner, and on Friday evening at 6:42 pm, a woman named Dorothy Unruh of Lakewood, Colorado made a donation.

I'm pleased to announce that Dorothy will be one of my guests for the second dinner. You could join us if you make a small donation before 11:59 pm tomorrow, Tuesday, July 31st:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/dinner>

Here's what Dorothy told us about herself:

I'm a senior citizen fed up with the current state of our government. I'm sad that our great nation has lost its stature in the eyes of the rest of the world. I have been a registered Republican for years, but recently officially changed parties so I can attend the Democratic caucus and help elect Senator Obama. He is like a breath of fresh air to my husband and me. Dorothy has never taken part in a political campaign before, but she and millions of other voters who want change are going to be the key to Democratic victories up and down the ballot next year.

I'm looking forward to having dinner with Dorothy, but there are still three seats left at the table. Will you be in one of them?

If you make a donation by 11:59 pm tomorrow, Tuesday, July 31st, you could join us for dinner very soon: <https://donate.barackobama.com/dinner>

We'll pay for your trip and the meal – all you need to bring is your story and your ideas about how to make this a better country for all Americans.

Small donations from ordinary Americans have set our campaign apart and allowed us to reject the influence of Washington lobbyists and special interest groups. Not only is your support the key to our success, it's essential to reclaiming a government that is of the people, by the people, and for the people. I hope you will make a donation now and participate in this opportunity. Take ownership of your part in this campaign and strengthen your role in our movement.

Together we can put an end to pay-for-influence politics. We can turn the page in Washington, and it all begins with you.

Thank you for your support,

✕

Barack Obama

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

1.8 August

Obama unveils plan to fight terrorism (2007-08-01 09:36)

Sen. Barack Obama outlined his national security plan in a speech today at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars.

The plan stresses that the Iraq War has distracted important resources needed to combat terrorist groups, and that Washington must talk with its "enemies."

Here is the full text of the speech:

Thank you Lee, for hosting me here at the Wilson Center, and for your leadership of both the 9/11 Commission and the Iraq Study Group. You have been a steady voice of reason in an unsteady time.

Let me also say that my thoughts and prayers are with your colleague, Haleh Esfandiari, and her family. I have made my position known to the Iranian government. It is time for Haleh to be released. It is time for Haleh to come home.

Thanks to the 9/11 Commission, we know that six years ago this week President Bush received a briefing with the headline: "Bin Ladin determined to strike in U.S."

It came during what the Commission called the "summer of threat," when the "system was blinking red" about an impending attack. But despite the briefing, many felt the danger was overseas, a threat to embassies and military installations. The extremism, the resentment, the terrorist training camps, and the killers were in the dark corners of the world, far away from the American homeland.

Then, one bright and beautiful Tuesday morning, they were here.

I was driving to a state legislative hearing in downtown Chicago when I heard the news on my car radio: a plane had hit the World Trade Center. By the time I got to my meeting, the second plane had hit, and we were told to evacuate.

People gathered in the streets and looked up at the sky and the Sears Tower, transformed from a workplace to a target. We feared for our families and our country. We mourned the terrible loss suffered by our fellow citizens. Back at my law office, I watched the images from New York: a plane vanishing into glass and steel; men and women clinging to windowsills, then letting go; tall towers crumbling to dust. It seemed all of the misery and all of the evil in the world were in that rolling black cloud, blocking out the September sun.

What we saw that morning forced us to recognize that in a new world of threats, we are no longer protected by our own power. And what we saw that morning was a challenge to a new generation.

The history of America is one of tragedy turned into triumph. And so a war over secession became an opportunity to set the captives free. An attack on Pearl Harbor led to a wave of freedom rolling across the Atlantic and Pacific. An Iron Curtain was punctured by democratic values, new institutions at home, and strong international partnerships abroad.

After 9/11, our calling was to write a new chapter in the American story. To devise new strategies and build new alliances, to secure our homeland and safeguard our values, and to serve a just cause abroad. We were ready. Americans were united. Friends around the world stood shoulder to shoulder with us. We had the might and moral-suasion that was the legacy of generations of Americans. The tide of history seemed poised to turn, once again, toward hope.

But then everything changed.

We did not finish the job against al Qaeda in Afghanistan. We did not develop new capabilities to defeat a new enemy, or launch a comprehensive strategy to dry up the terrorists' base of support. We did not reaffirm our basic values, or secure our homeland.

Instead, we got a color-coded politics of fear. Patriotism as the possession of one political party. The diplomacy of refusing to talk to other countries. A rigid 20th century ideology that insisted that the 21st century's stateless terrorism could be defeated through the invasion and occupation of a state. A deliberate strategy to misrepresent 9/11 to sell a war against a country that had nothing to do with 9/11.

And so, a little more than a year after that bright September day, I was in the streets of Chicago again, this time speaking at a rally in opposition to war in Iraq. I did not oppose all wars, I said. I was a strong supporter of the war in Afghanistan. But I said I could not support "a dumb war, a rash war" in Iraq. I worried about a "U.S. occupation of undetermined length, at undetermined cost, with undetermined consequences" in the heart of the Muslim world. I pleaded that we "finish the fight with bin Ladin and al Qaeda."

The political winds were blowing in a different direction. The President was determined to go to war. There was just one obstacle: the U.S. Congress. Nine days after I spoke, that obstacle was removed. Congress rubber-stamped the rush to war, giving the President the broad and open-ended authority he uses to this day. With that vote, Congress became co-author of a catastrophic war. And we went off to fight on the wrong battlefield, with no appreciation of how many enemies we would create, and no plan for how to get out.

Because of a war in Iraq that should never have been authorized and should never have been waged, we are now less safe than we were before 9/11.

According to the National Intelligence Estimate, the threat to our homeland from al Qaeda is “persistent and evolving.” Iraq is a training ground for terror, torn apart by civil war. Afghanistan is more violent than it has been since 2001. Al Qaeda has a sanctuary in Pakistan. Israel is besieged by emboldened enemies, talking openly of its destruction. Iran is now presenting the broadest strategic challenge to the United States in the Middle East in a generation. Groups affiliated with or inspired by al Qaeda operate worldwide. Six years after 9/11, we are again in the midst of a “summer of threat,” with bin Ladin and many more terrorists determined to strike in the United States.

What’s more, in the dark halls of Abu Ghraib and the detention cells of Guantanamo, we have compromised our most precious values. What could have been a call to a generation has become an excuse for unchecked presidential power. A tragedy that united us was turned into a political wedge issue used to divide us.

It is time to turn the page. It is time to write a new chapter in our response to 9/11.

Just because the President misrepresents our enemies does not mean we do not have them. The terrorists are at war with us. The threat is from violent extremists who are a small minority of the world’s 1.3 billion Muslims, but the threat is real. They distort Islam. They kill man, woman and child; Christian and Hindu, Jew and Muslim. They seek to create a repressive caliphate. To defeat this enemy, we must understand who we are fighting against, and what we are fighting for.

The President would have us believe that every bomb in Baghdad is part of al Qaeda’s war against us, not an Iraqi civil war. He elevates al Qaeda in Iraq – which didn’t exist before our invasion – and overlooks the people who hit us on 9/11, who are training new recruits in Pakistan. He lumps together groups with very different goals: al Qaeda and Iran, Shiite militias and Sunni insurgents. He confuses our mission.

And worse – he is fighting the war the terrorists want us to fight. Bin Ladin and his allies know they cannot defeat us on the field of battle or in a genuine battle of ideas. But they can provoke the reaction we’ve seen in Iraq: a misguided invasion of a Muslim country that sparks new insurgencies, ties down our military, busts our budgets, increases the pool of terrorist recruits, alienates America, gives democracy a bad name, and prompts the American people to question our engagement in the world.

By refusing to end the war in Iraq, President Bush is giving the terrorists what they really want, and what the Congress voted to give them in 2002: a U.S. occupation of undetermined length, at undetermined cost, with undetermined consequences.

It is time to turn the page. When I am President, we will wage the war that has to be won, with a comprehensive strategy with five elements: getting out of Iraq and on to the right battlefield in Afghanistan and Pakistan; developing the capabilities and partnerships we need to take out the terrorists and the world’s most deadly weapons; engaging the world to dry up support for terror and extremism; restoring our values; and securing a more resilient homeland.

The first step must be getting off the wrong battlefield in Iraq, and taking the fight to the terrorists in Afghanistan and Pakistan.

I introduced a plan in January that would have already started bringing our troops out of Iraq, with a goal of removing all combat brigades by March 31, 2008. If the President continues to veto this plan, then ending this war will be my first priority when I take office.

There is no military solution in Iraq. Only Iraq's leaders can settle the grievances at the heart of Iraq's civil war. We must apply pressure on them to act, and our best leverage is reducing our troop presence. And we must also do the hard and sustained diplomatic work in the region on behalf of peace and stability.

In ending the war, we must act with more wisdom than we started it. That is why my plan would maintain sufficient forces in the region to target al Qaeda within Iraq. But we must recognize that al Qaeda is not the primary source of violence in Iraq, and has little support – not from Shia and Kurds who al Qaeda has targeted, or Sunni tribes hostile to foreigners. On the contrary, al Qaeda's appeal within Iraq is enhanced by our troop presence.

Ending the war will help isolate al Qaeda and give Iraqis the incentive and opportunity to take them out. It will also allow us to direct badly needed resources to Afghanistan. Our troops have fought valiantly there, but Iraq has deprived them of the support they need—and deserve. As a result, parts of Afghanistan are falling into the hands of the Taliban, and a mix of terrorism, drugs, and corruption threatens to overwhelm the country.

As President, I would deploy at least two additional brigades to Afghanistan to re-enforce our counter-terrorism operations and support NATO's efforts against the Taliban. As we step up our commitment, our European friends must do the same, and without the burdensome restrictions that have hampered NATO's efforts. We must also put more of an Afghan face on security by improving the training and equipping of the Afghan Army and Police, and including Afghan soldiers in U.S. and NATO operations.

We must not, however, repeat the mistakes of Iraq. The solution in Afghanistan is not just military – it is political and economic. As President, I would increase our non-military aid by $1 billion. These resources should fund projects at the local level to impact ordinary Afghans, including the development of alternative livelihoods for poppy farmers. And we must seek better performance from the Afghan government, and support that performance through tough anti-corruption safeguards on aid, and increased international support to develop the rule of law across the country.

Above all, I will send a clear message: we will not repeat the mistake of the past, when we turned our back on Afghanistan following Soviet withdrawal. As 9/11 showed us, the security of Afghanistan and America is shared. And today, that security is most threatened by the al Qaeda and Taliban sanctuary in the tribal regions of northwest Pakistan.

Al Qaeda terrorists train, travel, and maintain global communications in this safe-haven. The Taliban pursues a hit and run strategy, striking in Afghanistan, then skulking across the border to safety.

This is the wild frontier of our globalized world. There are wind-swept deserts and cave-dotted mountains. There are tribes that see borders as nothing more than lines on a map, and governments as forces that come and go. There are blood ties deeper than alliances of convenience, and pockets of extremism that follow religion to violence. It's a tough place.

But that is no excuse. There must be no safe-haven for terrorists who threaten America. We cannot fail to act because action is hard.

As President, I would make the hundreds of millions of dollars in U.S. military aid to Pakistan conditional, and I would make our conditions clear: Pakistan must make substantial progress in closing down the training camps, evicting foreign fighters, and preventing the Taliban from using Pakistan as a staging area for attacks in Afghanistan.

I understand that President Musharraf has his own challenges. But let me make this clear. There are terrorists holed up in those mountains who murdered 3,000 Americans. They are plotting to strike again. It was a terrible mistake to fail to act when we had a chance to take out an al Qaeda leadership meeting in 2005. If we have actionable intelligence about high-value terrorist targets and President Musharraf won't act, we will.

And Pakistan needs more than F-16s to combat extremism. As the Pakistani government increases investment in secular education to counter radical madrasas, my Administration will increase America's commitment. We must help Pakistan invest in the provinces along the Afghan border, so that the extremists' program of hate is met with one of hope. And we must not turn a blind eye to elections that are neither free nor fair – our goal is not simply an ally in Pakistan, it is a democratic ally.

Beyond Pakistan, there is a core of terrorists – probably in the tens of thousands – who have made their choice to attack America. So the second step in my strategy will be to build our capacity and our partnerships to track down, capture or kill terrorists around the world, and to deny them the world's most dangerous weapons.

I will not hesitate to use military force to take out terrorists who pose a direct threat to America. This requires a broader set of capabilities, as outlined in the Army and Marine Corps's new counter-insurgency manual. I will ensure that our military becomes more stealth, agile, and lethal in its ability to capture or kill terrorists. We need to recruit, train, and equip our armed forces to better target terrorists, and to help foreign militaries to do the same. This must include a program to bolster our ability to speak different languages, understand different cultures, and coordinate complex missions with our civilian agencies.

To succeed, we must improve our civilian capacity. The finest military in the world is adapting to the challenges of the 21st century. But it cannot counter insurgent and terrorist threats without civilian counterparts who can carry out economic and political reconstruction missions – sometimes in dangerous places. As President, I will strengthen these civilian capacities, recruiting our best and brightest to take on this challenge. I will increase both the numbers and capabilities of our diplomats, development experts, and other civilians who can work alongside our military. We can't just say there is no military solution to these problems. We need to integrate all aspects of American might.

One component of this integrated approach will be new Mobile Development Teams that bring together personnel from the State Department, the Pentagon, and USAID. These teams will work with civil society and local governments to make an immediate impact in peoples' lives, and to turn the tide against extremism. Where people are most vulnerable, where the light of hope has grown dark, and where we are in a position to make a real difference in advancing security and opportunity – that is where these teams will go.

I will also strengthen our intelligence. This is about more than an organizational chart. We need leadership that forces our agencies to share information, and leadership that never – ever – twists the facts to support bad policies. But we must also build our capacity to better collect and analyze information, and to carry out operations to disrupt terrorist plots and break up terrorist networks.

This cannot just be an American mission. Al Qaeda and its allies operate in nearly 100 countries. The United States cannot steal every secret, penetrate every cell, act on every tip, or track down every terrorist – nor should we have to do this alone. This is not just about our security. It is about the common security of all the world.

As President, I will create a Shared Security Partnership Program to forge an international intelligence and law enforcement infrastructure to take down terrorist networks from the remote islands of Indonesia, to the sprawling cities of Africa. This program will provide $5 billion over three years for counter-terrorism cooperation with countries around the world, including information sharing, funding for training, operations, border security, anti-corruption programs, technology, and targeting terrorist financing. And this effort will focus on helping our partners succeed without repressive tactics, because brutality breeds terror, it does not defeat it.

We must also do more to safeguard the world's most dangerous weapons. We know al Qaeda seeks a nuclear weapon. We know they would not hesitate to use one. Yet there is still about 50 tons of highly enriched uranium, some of it poorly secured, at civilian nuclear facilities in over forty countries. There are still about 15,000 to 16,000 nuclear weapons and stockpiles of uranium and plutonium scattered across 11 time zones in the former Soviet Union.

That is why I worked in the Senate with Dick Lugar to pass a law that would help the United States and our allies detect and stop the smuggling of weapons of mass destruction.

And that is why, as President, I will lead a global effort to secure all nuclear weapons and material at vulnerable sites within four years. While we work to secure existing stockpiles, we should also negotiate a verifiable global ban on the production of new nuclear weapons material.

And I won't hesitate to use the power of American diplomacy to stop countries from obtaining these weapons or sponsoring terror. The lesson of the Bush years is that not talking does not work. Go down the list of countries we've ignored and see how successful that strategy has been. We haven't talked to Iran, and they continue to build their nuclear program. We haven't talked to Syria, and they continue support for terror. We tried not talking to North Korea, and they now have enough material for 6 to 8 more nuclear weapons.

It's time to turn the page on the diplomacy of tough talk and no action. It's time to turn the page on Washington's conventional wisdom that agreement must be reached before you meet, that talking to other countries is some kind of reward, and that Presidents can only meet with people who will tell them what they want to hear.

President Kennedy said it best: "Let us never negotiate out of fear, but let us never fear to negotiate." Only by knowing your adversary can you defeat them or drive wedges between them. As President, I will work with our friend and allies, but I won't outsource our diplomacy in Tehran to the Europeans, or our diplomacy in Pyongyang to the Chinese. I will do the careful preparation needed, and let these countries know where America stands. They will no longer have the excuse of American intransigence. They will have our terms: no support for terror and no nuclear weapons.

But America must be about more than taking out terrorists and locking up weapons, or else new terrorists will rise up to take the place of every one we capture or kill. That is why the third step in my strategy will be drying up the rising well of support for extremism.

When you travel to the world's trouble spots as a United States Senator, much of what you see is from a helicopter. So you look out, with the buzz of the rotor in your ear, maybe a door gunner nearby, and you see the refugee camp in Darfur, the flood near Djibouti, the bombed out block in Baghdad. You see thousands of desperate faces.

Al Qaeda's new recruits come from Africa and Asia, the Middle East and Europe. Many come from disaffected communities and disconnected corners of our interconnected world. And it makes you stop and wonder: when those faces look up at an American helicopter, do they feel hope, or do they feel hate?

We know where extremists thrive. In conflict zones that are incubators of resentment and anarchy. In weak states that cannot control their borders or territory, or meet the basic needs of their people. From Africa to central Asia to the Pacific Rim – nearly 60 countries stand on the brink of conflict or collapse. The extremists encourage the exploitation of these hopeless places on their hate-filled websites.

And we know what the extremists say about us. America is just an occupying Army in Muslim lands, the shadow of a shrouded figure standing on a box at Abu Ghraib, the power behind the throne of a repressive leader. They say we are at war with Islam. That is the whispered line of the extremist who has nothing to offer in this battle of ideas but blame – blame America, blame progress, blame Jews. And often he offers something along with the hate. A sense of empowerment. Maybe an education at a madrasa, some charity for your family, some basic services in the neighborhood. And then: a mission and a gun.

We know we are not who they say we are. America is at war with terrorists who killed on our soil. We are not at war with Islam. America is a compassionate nation that wants a better future for all people. The vast majority of the world's 1.3 billion Muslims have no use for bin Ladin or his bankrupt ideas. But too often since 9/11, the extremists have defined us, not the other way around.

When I am President, that will change. We will author our own story.

We do need to stand for democracy. And I will. But democracy is about more than a ballot box. America must show – through deeds as well as words – that we stand with those who seek a better life. That child looking up at the helicopter must see America and feel hope.

As President, I will make it a focus of my foreign policy to roll back the tide of hopelessness that gives rise to hate. Freedom must mean freedom from fear, not the freedom of anarchy. I will never shrug my shoulders and say – as Secretary Rumsfeld did – “Freedom is untidy.” I will focus our support on helping nations build independent judicial systems, honest police forces, and financial systems that are transparent and accountable. Freedom must also mean freedom from want, not freedom lost to an empty stomach. So I will make poverty reduction a key part of helping other nations reduce anarchy.

I will double our annual investments to meet these challenges to $50 billion by 2012. And I will support a $2 billion Global Education Fund to counter the radical madrasas – often funded by money from within Saudi Arabia – that have filled young minds with messages of hate. We must work for a world where every child, everywhere, is taught to build and not to destroy. And as we lead we will ask for more from our friends in Europe and Asia as well – more support for our diplomacy, more support for multilateral peacekeeping, and more support to rebuild societies ravaged by conflict.

I will also launch a program of public diplomacy that is a coordinated effort across my Administration, not a small group of political officials at the State Department explaining a misguided war. We will open “America Houses” in cities across the Islamic world, with Internet, libraries, English lessons, stories of America’s Muslims and the strength they add to our country, and vocational programs. Through a new “America’s Voice Corps” we will recruit, train, and send out into the field talented young Americans who can speak with – and listen to – the people who today hear about us only from our enemies.

As President, I will lead this effort. In the first 100 days of my Administration, I will travel to a major Islamic forum and deliver an address to redefine our struggle. I will make clear that we are not at war with Islam, that we will stand with those who are willing to stand up for their future, and that we need their effort to defeat the prophets of hate and violence. I will speak directly to that child who looks up at that helicopter, and my message will be clear: “You matter to us. Your future is our future. And our moment is now.”

This brings me to the fourth step in my strategy: I will make clear that the days of compromising our values are over.

Major General Paul Eaton had a long and distinguished career serving this country. It included training the Iraqi Army. After Abu Ghraib, his senior Iraqi advisor came into his office and said: “You have no idea how this will play out on the streets of Baghdad and the rest of the Arab world. How can this be?” This was not the America he had looked up to.

As the counter-insurgency manual reminds us, we cannot win a war unless we maintain the high ground and keep the people on our side. But because the Administration decided to take the low road, our troops have more enemies. Because the Administration cast aside international norms that reflect American values, we are less able to promote our values. When I am President, America will reject torture without exception. America is the country that stood against that kind of behavior, and we will do so again.

I also will reject a legal framework that does not work. There has been only one conviction at Guantanamo. It was for a guilty plea on material support for terrorism. The sentence was 9 months. There has not been one conviction of a terrorist act. I have faith in America’s courts, and I have faith in our JAGs. As President, I will close Guantanamo, reject the Military Commissions Act, and adhere to the Geneva Conventions. Our Constitution and our Uniform Code of Military Justice provide a framework for dealing with the terrorists. This Administration also puts forward a false choice between the liberties we cherish and the security we demand. I will provide our intelligence and law enforcement agencies with the tools they need to track and take out the terrorists without undermining our Constitution and our freedom.

That means no more illegal wire-tapping of American citizens. No more national security letters to spy on citizens who are not suspected of a crime. No more tracking citizens who do nothing more than protest a misguided war. No more ignoring the law when it is inconvenient. That is not who we are. And it is not what is necessary to defeat the terrorists. The FISA court works. The separation of powers works. Our Constitution works. We will again set an example for the world that the law is not subject to the whims of stubborn rulers, and that justice is not arbitrary.

This Administration acts like violating civil liberties is the way to enhance our security. It is not. There are no short-cuts to protecting America, and that is why the fifth part of my strategy is doing the hard and patient work to secure a more resilient homeland.

Too often this Administration's approach to homeland security has been to scatter money around and avoid hard choices, or to scare Americans without telling them what to be scared of, or what to do. A Department set up to make Americans feel safer didn't even show up when bodies drifted through the streets in New Orleans. That's not acceptable.

My Administration will take an approach to homeland security guided by risk. I will establish a Quadrennial Review at the Department of Homeland Security – just like at the Pentagon – to undertake a top to bottom review of the threats we face and our ability to confront them. And I will develop a comprehensive National Infrastructure Protection Plan that draws on both local know-how and national priorities.

We have to put resources where our infrastructure is most vulnerable. That means tough and permanent standards for securing our chemical plants. Improving our capability to screen cargo and investing in safeguards that will prevent the disruption of our ports. And making sure our energy sector – our refineries and pipelines and power grids – is protected so that terrorists cannot cripple our economy.

We also have to get past a top-down approach. Folks across America are the ones on the front lines. On 9/11, it was citizens – empowered by their knowledge of the World Trade Center attacks – who protected our government by heroically taking action on Flight 93 to keep it from reaching our nation's capital. When I have information that can empower Americans, I will share it with them.

Information sharing with state and local governments must be a two-way street, because we never know where the two pieces of the puzzle are that might fit together – the tip from Afghanistan, and the cop who sees something suspicious on Michigan Avenue. I will increase funding to help train police to gather information and connect it to the intelligence they receive from the federal government. I will address the problem in our prisons, where the most disaffected and disconnected Americans are being explicitly targeted for conversion by al Qaeda and its ideological allies.

And my Administration will not permit more lives to be lost because emergency responders are not outfitted with the communications capability and protective equipment their job requires, or because the federal government is too slow to respond when disaster strikes. We've been through that on 9/11. We've been through it during Katrina. I will ensure that we have the resources and competent federal leadership we need to support our communities when American lives are at stake.

But this effort can't just be about what we ask of our men and women in uniform. It can't just be about how we spend our time or our money.

It's about the kind of country we are.

We are in the early stages of a long struggle. Yet since 9/11, we've heard a lot about what America can't do or shouldn't do or won't even try. We can't vote against a misguided war in Iraq because that would make us look weak, or talk to other countries because that would be a reward. We can't reach out to the hundreds of millions of Muslims who reject terror because we worry they hate us. We can't protect the homeland because there are too many targets, or secure our people while staying true to our values. We can't get past the America of Red and Blue, the politics of who's up and who's down.

That is not the America that I know.

The America I know is the last, best hope for that child looking up at a helicopter. It's the country that put a man on the moon; that defeated fascism and helped rebuild Europe. It's a country whose strength abroad is measured not just by armies, but rather by the power of our ideals, and by our purpose to forge an ever more perfect union at home.

That's the America I know. We just have to act like it again to write that next chapter in the American story. If we do, we can keep America safe while extending security and opportunity around the world. We can hold true to our values, and in doing so advance those values abroad. And we can be what that child looking up at a helicopter needs us to be: the relentless opponent of terror and tyranny, and the light of hope to the world.

To make this story reality, it's going to take Americans coming together and changing the fundamental direction of this country. It's going to take the service of a new generation of young people. It's going to take facing tragedy head-on and turning it into the next generation's triumph. That is a challenge that I welcome. Because when we do make that change, we'll do more than win a war - we'll live up to that calling to make America, and the world, safer, freer, and more hopeful than we found it.

X

X X X X X X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama creates big question for anti-war supporters (2007-08-01 13:49)

Pakistan reacts to Obama warning (2007-08-02 07:31)

Pakistan reacted today to Barack Obama's speech when he indicated he might launch military strikes if Islamabad failed to take appropriate action on terrorist intelligence reports. Obama's statements could be interpreted as meaning that he would strike unilaterally in violation of Pakistan's sovereignty. Here is the relevant paragraph:

I understand that President Musharraf has his own challenges. But let me make this clear. There are terrorists holed up in those mountains who murdered 3,000 Americans. They are plotting to strike again. It was a terrible mistake to fail to act when we had a chance to take out an al Qaeda leadership meeting in 2005. If we have actionable intelligence about high-value terrorist targets and President Musharraf won't act, we will.

And here is a Times of India article describing Pakistan's reaction to the Obama speech.

Pakistan slams Obama's 'ignorant' attack warning 2 Aug 2007, 1631 hrs IST,AFP

ISLAMABAD: Pakistan accused Democratic Presidential candidate Barack Obama of "sheer ignorance" on Thursday for threatening to launch US military strikes against Al-Qaida on Pakistani soil.

Obama warned on Wednesday that if he is elected president, he would order US forces to hit extremist targets on Pakistan's frontier with Afghanistan if embattled military ruler President Pervez Musharraf failed to act.

"Such statements are being made out of sheer ignorance," Pakistan's Minister of State for Information, Tariq Azeem, said.

"They are not fully apprised about the ground realities and not aware of the efforts by Pakistan."

Islamabad has bristled against a string of similar threats in recent weeks by the administration of US

President George W. Bush, whose top counter-terror official in July refused to rule out US strikes in Pakistan.

Musharraf, struggling to contain a wave of Islamist violence unleashed by the army's bloody storming of the radical Red Mosque in Islamabad three weeks ago, last week firmly rejected any US action.

"We have said before that we will not allow anyone to infringe our sovereignty," Azeem said.

"If there is any actionable intelligence they should tell us, and only our forces will take action on it and they are quite capable of it."

The Minister suggested that Obama's comments were prompted by Washington's inability to curb the ongoing Taliban insurgency in neighbouring Afghanistan, where US-led forces toppled the hardline regime in late 2001.

"This seems to be a reaction to their own failure in Afghanistan to control the US casualties and instead of addressing the situation there, they are finding scapegoats and damaging their own cause," Azeem added.

Pakistan Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Tasnim Aslam on Wednesday warned against "point-scoring" by US presidential candidates on vital security issues.

Musharraf abandoned Islamabad's support for the Taliban in the wake of the 9/11 attacks on the United States.

He has said that a top US official warned that Pakistan would be bombed back to the "stone age" if it failed to join Washington's "war on terror".

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

'To the right, to the right,' Obama ditching progressives? (2007-08-02 12:03)

Salim Muwakkil has a thought-provoking article on alternet.com that suggests Barack Obama is being molded into a traditional "centrist" politician by his handlers and advisers:

Somehow, though, the magic has gone missing. The cut-and-parse, political calibrations employed by Obama's campaign staff have devalued enchantment and put a premium on marketing. His political masterminds have transformed Obama from a political visionary into an electoral product (with demographically designed components) just like every other presidential aspirant. His handlers have excised the very quality that distinguished Obama from the usual suspects... [Paul] Street has been a consistent critic of the Obama phenomenon, but many of us who know the candidate begged to differ. We argued he was a true progressive who would use his extraordinary time in the limelight to speak unpopular truths about U.S. foreign and domestic policy while unflinchingly reminding the nation of its racial obligations. That prospect was the magic ingredient in Obama mania. His strategists are busy squandering it.

– The Squandering of Obama

Thomas Edsall of the Huffington Post suggests Obama's recent pronouncements suggesting an interventionist approach with U.S. ally Pakistan might represent Obama's "Sister Souljah moment." The reference is to Bill Clinton's break with the progressive base of the party toward the "center" when he confronted Jesse Jackson during the 1992 campaign.

According to Edsall, Chris Bowers and others, Obama has gradually adopted stands that represent a shift to the right from his perceived positions. For example, his statements in May on race-based affirmative action, which seem starkly at odds with what he has said and written about in the past.

Obama's speech and his recent foreign policy article, where he says he might attack North Korea or Iran to stop WMD efforts (sound familiar?) got me thinking about accusations that he supported Israel's misbegotten invasion of Lebanon.

The actual evidence doesn't point to his "support" of the invasion, but at the same time he failed to oppose the war in the same way he opposed the Iraq War.

If Obama is indeed moving to right under the guidance of his advisers, or on his own initiative, it might be a poll-driven shift. Maybe one of the things about George W. Bush worth admiring is his tendency not take commercial opinion polls too seriously.

I'm reminded of what I would call a Kerry moment, when John Kerry, under the advice of John Edwards, decided to take a hawkish stance on Iraq in his contest with W.

Democrats just can't match up with the Republicans when they frame the debate in terms of hawkish issues. Maybe it won't matter that much this time around as the Republicans are in such disarray, but why take the chance?

Of course, Obama's stand on foreign policy issues will continue to become clearer as we near the election. And if it happens that he as hawkish as some suggest, to whom do those who believe in another way flee?

And how likely is Obama to beat Hillary on her own turf?

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Pakistan Foreign Minister weighs in on Obama speech (2007-08-03 10:15)

Pakistan's Foreign Minister Khusheed Kasuri today commented on Obama's speech, which apparently warned of unilateral action against terrorists in his country.

"It's a very irresponsible statement, that's all I can say," he said in a television interview. "As the election campaign in America is heating up we would not like American candidates to fight their elections and contest elections at our expense."

There has been no clarification of Obama's stance and indeed the campaign has reiterated their statements in an email broadcast to supporters yesterday.

It's hard to argue now with those asserting that Obama is building up a clear policy of foreign intervention, based on the idea of "U.S. interests." To his statements on Pakistan, one must add his comments that he would consider unilateral military intervention to stop nuclear proliferation in Iran and North Korea made in the journal Foreign Affairs.

Even if this is just posturing it threatens to tear down bridges made with moderate elements in the Muslim world. Together with Tom Tancredo's statements about nuking the holy cities of Mecca and Medina, it can only fortify perceptions of American arrogance and "manifest destiny," even though Obama yesterday swore off using nukes against terrorist targets much less holy sites .

Al-Qaeda and Taliban recruiting only goes up when they can broadcast media reports of this type of U.S. military interventionist thinking without respect to borders or international law.

Realize that the situation in Pakistan is very tenuous. Al Qaeda and the Taliban are not simply confined to the border areas with Afghanistan. The most recent evidence of this was the mosque standoff right in the capital of the country, indeed within walking range of President Pervez Musharraf's own office. There have been two nearly successful assassination attempts on Musharraf's life.

Unfortunately, it's much harder to see now the "clash of civilizations" ending any time soon regardless of what administration comes to office unless Dennis Kucinich, Ron Paul or Ralph Nader can pull off an election miracle.

The thing is with the exception to those two intervention caveats, Obama's foreign policy speech and Foreign Affairs article, would tend to agree with the idealistic vision of the author of "Dreams from My Father."

Many of us hoped that the son of a Kenyan Muslim father, partially raised by an Indonesian Muslim stepfather, both of whom were secular and non-religious, would be able to span the lacuna created by extremists in both the East and West.

But those two caveats are like elephants that can't be ignored. They swallow up the rest of what Obama has stated and make it impossible for advocates of peace to truly know where he's coming from. And I'm not just talking about absolute pacifists. Even those who agree with the use of military force for purposes of national defense, meeting defense treaty obligations or combating international terrorism, have to be worried about such openly interventionist statements.

Even conservatives talk eloquently about peace. But it's often those little caveats that they later use to build a case for war.

Obama must clarify his position on international law and the sovereignty of nations.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Bush assures Musharraf over Obama warnings (2007-08-03 21:21)

In a rather curious turn of events, George W. Bush has seemingly taken the role of moderate by reassuring Pakistani President Pervez Musharraf over Barack Obama's warnings of a unilateral attack.

According to the Pakistani Foreign Ministry, Bush called Musharraf today for the nation's independence celebrations and reassured him that the U.S. would respect Pakistan's sovereignty. There was some disagreement between Islamabad and Washington though over the exact words conveyed by Bush.

Reacting to Obama's comments, Pakistan's Prime Minister

Shaukat Aziz said:

"Such statements are unacceptable to Pakistan and we will not tolerate any interference of the sort from any quarter." During the day, hundreds of people demonstrated in Pakistan burning the American flag and chanting slogans against Obama and Tom Tancredo, who repeated threats to bomb the holy cities of Mecca and Medina.

The Obama campaign though sent out a memo by foreign policy adviser Samantha Power basically repeating the vague threat without specifically addressing the question of Pakistan's sovereignty. There has been no response to the reaction of Pakistan's government.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Bush assures Musharraf over Obama warnings (2007-08-03 21:21)

In a rather curious turn of events, George W. Bush has seemingly taken the role of moderate by reassuring Pakistani President Pervez Musharraf over Barack Obama's warnings of a unilateral attack.

According to the Pakistani Foreign Ministry, Bush called Musharraf today for the nation's independence celebrations and reassured him that the U.S. would respect Pakistan's sovereignty. There was some disagreement between Islamabad and Washington though over the exact words conveyed by Bush.

Reacting to Obama's comments, Pakistan's Prime Minister Shaukat Aziz said: "Such statements are unacceptable to Pakistan and we will not tolerate any interference of the sort from any quarter."

During the day, hundreds of people demonstrated in Pakistan burning the American flag and chanting slogans against Obama and Tom Tancredo, who repeated threats to bomb the holy cities of Mecca and Medina.

The Obama campaign though sent out a memo by foreign policy adviser Samantha Power basically repeating the vague threat without specifically addressing the question of Pakistan's sovereignty.

Obama appears to be fighting hard to get to the right of the other Democratic frontrunners in what I have described as his Kerry moment.

Chaudhuri on Obama's move to the right (2007-08-04 20:11)

Pramit Pal Chaudhuri of the Hindustan Times has some interesting comments on what I'm calling the Kerry moment of the Democratic presidential campaign.

Chaudhuri believes Obama's speech advocating unilateral action in Pakistan is the beginning of a new phase among Democratic frontrunners when they go beyond simply suggesting withdrawing from Iraq, the "wrong war," but start suggesting instead new battlefields for the "right war."

It is important for Obama to lead this shift because the other candidates do not want him to take the spotlight as the viable candidate who opposed the Iraq War from the start. Now that he is fighting for the strongest position on the right, the other Democratic frontrunners have shown no hesitation in joining a game they truly believe in anyway.

Obama made this move, according to Chaudhuri, because of polls which have consistently shown Hillary Clinton ahead. His campaign apparently believes this is primarily because Obama is seen as weaker and/or less experienced than Clinton.

The Democrats look likely to be drawn into another "cowboy" contest with the Republicans as happened in the Kerry campaign, with the Iraq War now a secondary consideration.

Unlike the Republicans who play to their base, Democrats look like they will again desert their own base to take a center right position.

Note that by the time the next president takes office, only one other Democrat has been elected chief executive in the last 28 years – Bill Clinton who "pioneered" the idea that the Democratic base was too far to the "left."

Interestingly also, the Bush administration and at least one Republican frontrunner have come out openly slamming Obama's warnings, and attempting to appear more moderate.

"We consider him (President Musharraf) as a major partner. We have good relations with him and we respect the sovereignty of Pakistan," Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs Nicolas Burns said today. Republican candidate Mitt Romney has also spoken out against Obama's statements calling for greater cooperation between Pakistan and the United States.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

ConsiderThis (2007-08-05 00:39:00)

When it comes down to the truth of the matter, Barack is right about his view concerning Pakistan. He was right about his view concerning The U.S. staying out of Iraq. If you just flip the script and say suppose a some like Bin Ladden ordered and help aided in carrying out destruction in Pakistan on the scale that the United States recieved on 9/11/01 and then took up residence in the mountains of Nevada and the U.S. did not turn him over, was not doing enough to turn him over and was unwilling to get the proper help to turn him over to the proper authorities, what would that make America look like? You do'nt have to answer that but it is what Pakistan is probally doing all we need to know is whether he is truly in Pakistan and then we need to make the correct decision on how to apprehend him after diplomacy has taken its course and war being on the table as our last option. We as a nation should take that right, after all it's the "American Way".

Beating world poverty (2007-08-09 17:07)

Leaders from Africa and Asia met in Langkawi, Malaysia this week for the Smart Partnership International Dialogue aimed at reducing poverty in both regions.

I've always thought the main problem in developing world poverty is found in the colonial mentality still cemented in the minds of the developing world's people.

Interestingly enough, the non-Western nations that have succeeded economically in our times are mostly those who had not suffered Western colonization.

Japan, of course, is the biggest example. Of the Asian tigers, we have China, South Korea, Taiwan and Thailand all who avoided the experience of Western colonization. Only Malaysia among the current tigers was colonized.

But Malaysia had the stalwart Dr. Mahathir bin Mohamad, a man often reviled by neighbors because of his anti-Western rants. If you compare what Malaysia has done to tackle poverty in the country during Mahathir's reign, and it compare to the other boot-licking countries in the region, and you can see the results of a proper mindset.

Malaysia went from a 50 percent poverty rate in 1970 to 15 percent in 1990 and 5.5 percent in 2000.

The problem with most developing countries is that they are waiting to be saved by the West. They're waiting for Western aid, waiting for Western private investment, waiting for the West to tell them what to do.

Vietnam may be ready to emulate Malaysia's performance, but possibly again because of the difference of its experience. After the Vietnam War, the country was forced to make it on its own without Western help. It took the tough mindset of the war and applied it to building up the country.

Be that as it may, whatever the attitude of the people, there are some things that can help in addressing the problems of poverty.

Beating world poverty (2007-08-09 17:07)

Leaders from Africa and Asia met in Langkawi, Malaysia this week for the Smart Partnership International Dialogue aimed at reducing poverty in both regions.

I've always thought the main problem in developing world poverty is found in the colonial mentality still cemented in the minds of the developing world's people.

Interestingly enough, the non-Western nations that have succeeded economically in our times are mostly those who had not suffered Western colonization.

Japan, of course, is the biggest example. Of the Asian tigers, we have China, South Korea, Taiwan and Thailand all who avoided the experience of Western colonization. Only Malaysia among the current tigers was colonized.

More Pakistani reaction to Obama's American "exceptionalism" (2007-08-15 08:12)

"Any transgression of the accepted parameters would be unacceptable and would damage the interests between the two countries," Tasnim Aslam, the Foreign Ministry's spokeswoman, was quoted as saying at a briefing in Islamabad. On Monday, Pakistani protesters shouted slogans against Obama outside a Chicago fundraiser organized by South Asian backers.

I still stand bewildered. But maybe the clues were there all along. I was willing to give Obama the benefit of the doubt for some statements made to the press in the past. After all, politicians have many comments on the record that they make on the fly. Sometimes they say things that don't really reflect their stands on issues or that can be interpreted in such a way.

Now the article in Foreign Affairs was another matter but it was vaguely worded. It mentions intervention to stop some forms of nuclear proliferation involving North Korea and Iran but without specifics. Would it be a UN sanctioned action? Would these countries be transferring nuclear weapons to organizations internationally recognized as terrorist?

The Pakistan statements were crystal clear though and reiterated afterward by the campaign.

Sorry to say, but Obama's foreign policy doesn't look much different than the Bush Doctrine now. There's the idea there that America is exceptional in that it doesn't have to abide by the same rules that it expects other nations to follow. That won't work in today's world.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

David (2007-08-17 11:17:00)

"I still stand bewildered. But maybe the clues were there all along. I was willing to give Obama the benefit of the doubt for some statements made to the press in the past. After all, politicians have many comments on the record that they make on the fly. Sometimes they say things that don't really reflect their stands on issues or that can be interpreted in such a way."

Have you been watching too much Fox news lately? Be specific about which comments your talking about. Are they the ones about talking to opposing foreign leaders? Or the ones about not using nuclear weapons? Which ones?

"Now the article in Foreign Affairs was another matter but it was vaguely worded. It mentions intervention to stop some forms of nuclear proliferation involving North Korea and Iran but without specifics. Would it be a UN sanctioned action?"

Did you not watch the CNN debates? Obama supports UN sanctioned actions.

"Sorry to say, but Obama's foreign policy doesn't look much different than the Bush Doctrine now. There's the idea there that America is exceptional in that it doesn't have to abide by the same rules that it expects other nations to follow. That won't work in today's world."

Please log into youtube and watch lovingj1's videos. In one of them you see Hillary saying the same thing about taking out terrorist forces if the Pakistan government refuses to.

Your not looking at the big picture here. You need to step back for a few seconds and try to look at the big picture with an objective point of view. I know you feel offended with the recent Pakistan comments but please look beyond the words.

Bill Clinton was the one that didn't take out the terrorist when he had a chance. Are you suggesting this was a good move by him?

How can you even compare Bush with Obama...

So who do you support now? Clinton? Edwards? Romney?

"O" Factor, debates, hip-hop and Obama (2007-08-18 18:51)

Latest news headlines:

Oprah's influence on Obama campaign:

"In America, it is known simply as the "O" Factor. As the reigning talk-show queen, trusted arbiter of taste and general adviser on everyday life, Oprah Winfrey has persuaded millions of devoted viewers to buy everything from bras to books.

"Now the world's richest black person is aiming to transfer her Midas touch to the world of politics, as she tries to market Barack Obama as the first black American president."

* Barack opts out of debates:

Enough's Enough: Obama Will Limit Forum/Debate..

Enough's Enough: Obama Will Limit Forum/Debate Participation
Enough's Enough: Obama Will Limit Forum/Debate Participation
18 Aug 2007 10: Barack Obama's campaign manager has put his foot down: Obama won't attend any more debates that aren't ... Plouffe writes that Obama has already spoken at 19 different candidate forums and has participated

Hip-hoppers are plugging Barack Obama in their songs:

Barack Obama gets name-dropped in hip-hop

WASHINGTON (CNN) – Vibe magazine has dubbed him "B-Rock." He's getting shout-outs in some of the most popular hip-hop singles of the summer. He's even had a high-profile meeting with Ludacris.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2007-08-18 18:51)

Latest news headlines:

Oprah's influence on Obama campaign:

"In America, it is known simply as the "O" Factor. As the reigning talk-show queen, trusted arbiter of taste and general adviser on everyday life, Oprah Winfrey has persuaded millions of devoted viewers to buy everything from bras to books.

"Now the world's richest black person is aiming to transfer her Midas touch to the world of politics, as she tries to market Barack Obama as the first black American president."

(2007-08-19 18:49)

Barack is preparing a veteran's speech for this week.

Obama previews veterans speech by John McCormick Previewing a speech he is expected to give Tuesday, presidential candidate Sen. Barack Obama told military veterans on a conference call Sunday evening During the conference call, Obama said he would continue to call for a refocusing of the nation's Posted in The Swamp The Obama family was spotted riding bumper cars in Iowa:

Photo: Reuters

More on Barack Obama and the Bumper Cars

Barack Obama, wisely arriving after the sun went down one night last week, actually did. He brought the whole family — wife Michelle, 9-year-old Malia and 5-year-old Sasha.

[EMBED]

Obama supporter Sharon Mahlerio, a Des Moines attorney, speaks for the candidate during Iowa debate.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama News: Afrobella, black voters, butter statue (2007-08-20 11:19)

Michelle Obama was chose "Afrobella of the Week" on this website which extols the candidate's wife:

Michelle Obama: Afrobella of the Week

While I certainly have my own political leanings, my goal with this post isn't to sway anyone ... , so Barack Obama piqued my interest early on. I think the senator is a charming and fascinating enough ... she wears her hair. 1. Because she keeps it real.

Is Barack the candidate that black voters have been waiting for? This essay says no:

Why Obama Is not the Black Dream Candidate?

Signal, CA - Aug 18, 2007

As opposed to Spike Lee hosting a high-moneyed fundraiser for the senator, it was David Geffen. Such "breaches" have bred skepticism...

Obama's like butter:

Obama butter sculpture

Former Iowa State Fair butter sculptor Duffy Lyon has endorsed Barack Obama through a butter sculpture of his campaign logo ...

Obama butter statue

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Rep. Patrick Murphy gives support to Obama (2007-08-21 19:21)

Democratic House Representative Patrick Murphy announced that he is backing Barack Obama's candidacy.

Penn. Rep. Patrick Murphy endorses Obama for president

WQAD, IL - 6 hours ago

AP - August 21, 2007 1:04 PM ET PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Pennsylvania Congressman Patrick Murphy has endorsed Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama ...

Barack also called for easing of travel restrictions to Cuba:

Obama calls for lifting US-Cuba family travel limits restrictions

Sun-Sentinel.com, FL - 10 hours ago

Obama will speak at a fundraiser for the chapter Saturday at the Miami-Dade Auditorium...

Obama says Bush's Cuba policy 'strategically blundering'

CNN International - 1 hour ago

Obama will speak at a fundraiser for the chapter Saturday at the Miami-Dade Auditorium, the same Little Havana site where Ronald Reagan won over many in the ...

Is the early state strategy a wise plan? Do Iowa and New Hampshire act as racial barriers guarding the gates for "good old boy" types?

Seems like not much attention is given to South Carolina and Nevada. The latter state in particular is much closer to the overall U.S. demographic.

The early states may be important if candidate's seem them as important. Those candidates who don't choose to be taken in by results in early states have gone on to win including the last two presidents to win open elections – Bill Clinton and George W. Bush – each losing both states in their first presidential runs. They were able to recover though and win.

However, if the candidate and supporters collapse after losing one or both of these states, if they collapse internally, then of course one has to look at them as important.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama on Daily Show (2007-08-22 15:55)

Barack Obama will appear on the Daily Show tonight. The news first appeared on the campaign's Twitter account.

Obama visits Stewart tonight

Boston Globe, United States - 2 hours ago

You've heard, perhaps, of the "Russert Primary," where candidates for office are subjected to a thorough grilling by tenacious NBC newsman Tim Russert on ...

Is Obama gaining ground on all sides of the political spectrum? David Ignatius thinks so:

Obama is beating... rivals on the left and right

Daily Star - Lebanon, Lebanon - 2 hours ago

By David Ignatius Senator Barack Obama is getting polite applause...

I

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama gets support from sole Iraq combat veteran in Congress (2007-08-22 22:20)

The Obama campaign got a step up on their opponents when the Iraq War combat veteran in Congress endorsed Barack over the other candidates.

Iraq War Vet in Congress Backs Obama over Hil by Michael Saul, NY ...

The only combat veteran from the war in Iraq serving in Congress endorsed Barack Obama yesterday, a major coup for the Illinois senator as he seeks to persuade voters he's best equipped...

When Barack rolled into Hillary's turf in Brooklyn, NY, elected officials of Caribbean descent were conspicuous by their absence:

Caribbean leaders missing in action From Obama Brooklyn Stump

Hardbeatnews.com, NY - 58 minutes ago

Congresswoman Yvette Clarke, who recently endorse Obama's rival, Senator Hillary Clinton...

Presidential Hopeful, Senator Barack Obama, greets fans during Brooklyn stump, August 22, 2007. (Hayden Roger Celestin Image, <http://www.hardbeatnews.com/>)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama announces NY endorsements, launches Generation Obama (2007-08-23 18:53)

Barack Obama announced a long list of New York supporters during his Brooklyn fundraiser raising a challenge to Hillary Clinton on her own turf.

The list of endorsements includes: Senator Eric Adams (D-Brooklyn); Assemblyman Michael Benjamin (D-Bronx); Suffolk County Legislator Jon Cooper (D-Suffolk County); City Councilwoman Helen Diane Foster (D-Bronx); Rev. Wendell Foster (Christ Church, Bronx); Rev. Clinton M. Miller (Brown Memorial Baptist Church, Brooklyn); Senator Kevin Parker (D-Brooklyn); Senator Bill Perkins (D-Manhattan); City Councilman James Sanders, Jr. (D-Queens); City Councilman Al Vann (D-Brooklyn), Assemblyman Karim Camara (D-Brooklyn), Suffolk County Legislator Elie Mystal (D-Suffolk County), Senator John L. Sampson (D-Brooklyn), and Suffolk County Legislator Vivian Vilorio-Fisher (D-Suffolk County).

About 300 people attended the fundraising event. The Obama campaign stressed the role of Camp Obama graduates in organizing grassroots support for the Illinois senator.

Obama for America is also launching the Generation Obama campaign aimed at turning out record numbers of young voters to support the candidate. Several chapters will start up in cities across the country this weekend:

Barack Obama: Obama Campaign unleashes Generation Obama

All American Patriots (press release), Sweden - 13 hours ago

"Obama's youth support is thriving and Generation Obama will help turn interest and support into organizing action. GO chapters are a clear indication that ...

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama wins two surveys (2007-08-23 22:53)

Barack Obama won the Spartan Internet Political Performance poll beating out Republican poll and Democratic rival Hillary Clinton.

Barack Obama heads Presidential Election Internet Performance Index

Currently maintaining the top three positions are Barack Obama 21.29 percent, Ron Paul 11.51 percent and Hillary Clinton 11.36 percent...

Barack also won a poll conducted by a major Washington state labor union coming ahead of Hillary Clinton and John Edwards, the latter landing hard in third place.

Obama First Choice In WFSE Presidential Survey

The Washington Federation of State Employees, one of the larger Labor organizations in Washington State, ... Federation of State Employees Barack Obama 21.3 % Hillary Clinton 15.6 % John Edwards...

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama and Indian Country, Brzezinski endorsement (2007-08-24 14:51)

A Cherokee Nation attorney examines Barack Obama's policy toward Indian Country:

Obama and India Country - Tulsa ...

Native Times allegations of Barack Obama not factual Tulsa Native American Times, OK - 1 hour ago I need not tell you that the stakes in the 2008 Presidential election could not be higher – for America and for Indian Country.

Obama also snagged an important endorsement from Zbigniew Brzezinski, former national security adviser to Jimmy Carter.

Brzezinski Endorses Barack Obama

Bloomberg reports that Zbigniew Brzezinski, the former chief foreign policy adviser to President Jimmy Carter, endorsed Senator Barack Obama (D-Illinois) for president. Obama “recognizes that the challenge is a new face...

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2007-08-24 14:51)

Zbigniew Brzezinski Endorses Barack Obama

Bloomberg reports that Zbigniew Brzezinski, the former chief foreign policy adviser to President Jimmy Carter, endorsed Senator Barack Obama (D-Illinois) for president.

More on Obama as community organizer (2007-08-26 14:45)

U.S. News & World Report has an article that further explores Barack Obama's roots as a community organizer, an usual starting-place for a viable presidential candidate.

As a community organizer, Obama was a pragmatic leader

U.S. News & World Report, DC - 5 hours ago

By Kenneth T. Walsh CHICAGO—Far from the centers of power and privilege that have spawned so many commanders in chief,

Barack also revealed a list of Republicans that he would willing to work with if elected:

Obama names Republicans he will bring to the table

KTEN, TX - 3 hours ago

AP - August 26, 2007 2:25 PM ET KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. (AP) - Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama often says he will be a candidate that will bring...

[EMBED]

Former Carter national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski discusses his support of Barack Obama.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama wants FEMA separate from Homeland Security (2007-08-27 18:58)

Barack Obama wants the Federal Emergency Management Agency separated from Homeland Security.

Obama: Break off FEMA from Homeland Security

Post Chronicle - 5 hours ago by Staff US Sen. Barack Obama, a 2008 Democratic presidential contender, says the main federal agency for responding to disasters should be independent...

Oprah's bash for Barack is expected to push the limits on extravagance with guests like George Clooney, Halle Berry, Jamie Foxx, Beyoncé Knowles, David Geffen and Jeffrey Katzenberg expected to attend.

OPRAH: In The Secret Garden with Barack Obama

The BV Entertainment Newswire Blog, NY - 4 hours ago

By Karu F. Daniels, AOL Black Voices Just about everyone knows that no one does up an extravagant affair the way Oprah Winfrey does...

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama picks up VA support, leads in mobile campaign (2007-08-28 21:29)

Barack Obama picked up an important Virginia endorsement today when former governor and current Richmond mayor Doug Wilder pledged his support to the candidate today.

Barack's campaign is reportedly doing well with its mobile campaign. Jupiter Research analyst Julie Ask wrote, "Barack Obama is the clear leader among his peers in terms of leveraging the cellphone for his campaign."

Obama campaign leads SMS race

Distributive Networks has launched the latest version of its mobile messaging platform, which is being leveraged successfully by US Presidential hopeful Senator Obama to provide ... of Obama Mobile, supporters from every state in the union had participated via their mobile devices...

Posted in SMS Text News

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Yarmulkes for Obama, Calypso King endorses (2007-08-30 09:05)

Jewish supporters of Barack Obama are selling yarmulkes emblazoned with "Obama '08":

Only Obama between his supporters and heaven

Jewish Telegraphic Agency, NY - 9 hours ago

Jewish supporters of the presidential bid of Sen. Barack Obama (D-III.) are selling "Obama '08" yarmulkes to raise funds...

Calypso music's The Mighty Sparrow endorsed Barack saying if Americans want respect they should vote for Obama.

Calypso King Of The World give nod to Obama

Hardbeatnews.com, NY - 10 hours ago

Hardbeatnews, BROOKLYN , NY , Thurs. Aug. 30, 2007: Grenadian-born national, The Mighty Sparrow, is among the latest crop of Barack Obama supporters...

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Open letter to Obama; Barack leads Wikipedia race (2007-08-31 13:49)

Mil Sylvan has written a blog on barackobama.com expressing his view that Barack has to get tough and project an image of a take-charge person, an action person, because that's what Americans like to see in their presidential candidates.

Open Letter to Senator Barack Obama

Open Letter to Senator Barack Obama Barack Obama is terrific candidate for the presidency. He has all the credentials, the charm and the tools needed to win this election. But my gut tells me, he will not win the nomination unless Barack is leading in Wikipedia readership with 41,007 readers compared to Hillary's 18,555.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama targets youth, faithful (2007-08-31 16:19)

The Obama campaign continues its strategy of reaching out to, and activating young voters:

Obama's youth registration drive

The State, SC - 57 minutes ago

COLUMBIA, SC - Beginning tomorrow, Barack Obama's South Carolina campaign will launch a week-long effort to register 1000 new voters on college and...

Barack Obama also continues to talk about faith on his campaign. He's embarking on a 10-day "faith tour" across Iowa. The strategy may backfire among people, including many religious people, who don't feel comfortable with a president or presidential candidate who is too immersed in religion. Two presidents famous for claiming to have 'talked to God' are William McKinley, the Manifest Destiny, president and George W.(MD) Bush.

Obama to host faith forum in Iowa City

Iowa City Press Citizen, IA - 5 hours ago

By the Press-Citizen Sen. Barack Obama will be in Iowa City Friday, Sept. 7, as part of a 10-day faith tour throughout Iowa...

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

1.9 September

Obama gets Iowa endorsement, Chicago money (2007-09-02 11:00)

Iowa Sen. Steve Warnstadt, D-Sioux City endorsed Barack Obama who is campaigning hard in that state.

"America is facing a lot of division, and I think (Obama) has unique skills to bring people together," Warnstadt said. Barack has been doing a good job at winning corporate donations in his home state. Even Republicans adverse to new taxes are supporting the senator.

Obama Winning "Hearts And Wallets" Of Corporate...

The typical Midwestern business leader is a rock-ribbed Republican who favors socially moderate policies but strongly opposes more regulation and higher taxes. That makes it somewhat of a surprise that Barack

Obama...

Here's a funny video from Mike Gravel's campaign:

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack vs. Hillary (2007-09-02 18:49)

"People who like Barack Obama really like Barack Obama":

Obama phenomenon

Vail Daily News, CO - 9 hours ago

This is not an endorsement or a prediction, just an observation. People who like Barack Obama really like Barack Obama

Here's another funny YouTube video featuring Hillary and Barack:

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Iran next? (2007-09-03 22:17)

A recent op-ed piece in the New York Daily News has a number of blogs buzzing over whether Barack Obama's intents with regard to Iran.

The decision to wage a misguided war in Iraq has substantially strengthened Iran, which now poses the greatest strategic challenge to U.S. interests in the Middle East in a generation. Iran supports violent groups and sectarian politics in Iraq, fuels terror and extremism across the Middle East and continues to make progress on its nuclear program in defiance of the international community. Meanwhile, Iran's President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad has declared that Israel must be "wiped off the map."

Now let it be known that even W. was not promising war during his first election campaign.

Clearly all the Democratic front-runners are developing strong interventionist positions regardless of whether they say they will pull out of Iraq or not.

What kind of pressure can be applied on Iran that hasn't been used in the decades since the hostage crisis? Obviously the only way to escalate things further is by some type of military action.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Hoping for Obama on Pakistan (2007-09-04 07:57)

Here's an interesting, in-depth analysis of Barack Obama's Pakistan position by a Pakistani intern at the Woodrow Wilson Center and Brookings Institution. You may remember this is the same place that Barack gave his speech in which he stated he would unilaterally attack Pakistan on "actionable intelligence" on the whereabouts al-Qaeda leadership.

Obama and Pakistan: Let's Hope for the Best

The author, Haider Mullick, tries to give a positive spin on the issue.

Black Women for Obama A new organization, Black Women for Obama, has announced its formation through a press release.

The group states that it has opened chapters in "Georgia, Missouri, South Carolina, Texas and Indiana, and are actively recruiting members to form state chapters in the remaining first primary states - New Hampshire, Iowa, Florida, and Nevada."

I checked the organization's website but could not determine whether they were an independent campaign group, commonly known as a "527" or not. Most of the links at the site returned error messages.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2007-09-04 07:57)

Here's an interesting, in-depth analysis of Barack Obama's Pakistan position by a Pakistani intern at the Woodrow Wilson Center and Brookings Institution. You may remember this is the same place that Barack gave his speech in which he stated he would unilaterally attack Pakistan on "actionable intelligence" on the whereabouts al-Qaeda leadership.

Obama and Pakistan: Let's Hope for the Best

The author, Haider Mullick, tries to give a positive spin on the issue.

(2007-09-04 17:30)

Nicole Belle over at crooksandliars.com says about Barack's recent op-ed on pressuring Iran:

He even justifies the threat by citing Ahmadinejad's words against Israel, although, unfortunately, he relies on the Bush administration's translation of Farsi, which as we've seen before, only has a glancing relationship with reality.

This is not to single out Obama either; all of the top tier candidates have tried to earn their "I'm not a wimpy Democrat but a strong leader" bona fides with tough talk against Iran. But this kind of talk is incredibly irresponsible and we—as the progressive community—MUST be clear with the Democratic contenders who are seeking our support that if they think the occupation in Iraq is going bad, any military actions against Iran would be like Iraq on steroids. We've already seen how much damage a president with no understanding of the geo-political or cultural circumstances of an area can do. We simply cannot afford another one.

Can one remember the last time a president attacked a foreign nation based on "actionable intelligence?"

Yes, that would be the cause for getting into the current Iraq War quagmire.

How many wars have been started based on "actionable intelligence?" Not many. Generally one doesn't waste lives on things that can't be confirmed. But then we have to realize that the current policy on both sides of the aisle favor intervention and preemption. Strike first, or risk getting hit.

Now even if we believe that the next president will try to limit attacks to "surgical strikes," things don't always work out the way. Escalation happens, especially when you have the type of mindset found in Washington today.

Now, I suspect that the focus on Iran is really about Israel. About Israel's failed invasion of Lebanon and war with Hezbollah, the Shi'ite militia sponsored by Iran. Even if we don't hear much about that on the surface, people don't forget things like that easily.

Israel is an extension of America and Anglo-Saxon Protestantism in the Middle East. Yes, you heard that right. Hitherto it has easily handled the Muslim enemies that surrounded it, but now the aura of invincibility is gone. And in the process, America looks weaker also.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama, Clinton back bigger Army (2007-09-05 08:24)

Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama are supporting an increase in the size of the military to combat charges they are too weak on security according to Wall Street Journal article by Heidi Przybyla.

Obama, Clinton support bigger Army to counter security slams

Bloomberg -

A poll released in March by Third Way, a Washington-based policy research organization, suggests 58 percent of Americans think Democrats are "not tough enough...

[EMBED]

Barack Obama campaigns at a fire hall in Waukeg, Iowa on Sept. 4.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama and Clinton for "Change" (2007-09-05 12:18)

Both Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton began airing ads together with the same name and theme, "Change."

Hillary's ad is running in New Hampshire, while Barack's ad will air in Iowa.

The Obama ad highlights the candidate's efforts in ethics reform and bring the government back to the people.

Anyone who has closely followed both campaigns from the start will know that Obama for America starting using the "Change" first with a number of events including the "Walk for Change," all organized around the same concept.

Later on, both the Clinton and John Edwards campaign picked up on theme. Edwards for example had a "Change for Change" fundraising drive in which very small donations were solicited for the purpose of bringing about change in government. Here also the Edwards followed the Obama strategy of pursuing a large number of very small donations going down to only $5.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

The Oprah Factor (2007-09-05 20:00)

With Oprah Winfrey's big fundraiser coming up this weekend the question being asked is whether the mega-media star can sway the election toward her candidate Barack Obama.

The last star of Oprah's caliber to get active in electoral politics at this level that I can think of now was Frank Sinatra, who helped both Democrat John F. Kennedy and Republican Ronald Reagan during their successful campaigns. Sinatra was disenchanted by his Kennedy's standoffish approach after taking office and became a Republican for the rest of his life.

Oprah Winfrey will host a fundraiser for Obama's Democratic presidential campaign at her Montecito, Calif., mansion.

(By Kevin Clark – The Washington Post)

Sinatra was leader of the "Rat Pack" during Kennedy's time and a cultural icons to multiple generations when Reagan first ran for the White House.

Oprah is said that Barack will be the only candidate on her show during the election since fair time laws don't apply to talk shows.

That alone can be a tremendous advantage. In fact, she can support Barack through her entire media network.

There are also reports that Oprah may take a more active role in Obama's campaign. This could include appearing in television ads and at campaign events.

While Sinatra likely appealed mostly to men, Oprah's legions are found among voting age women – a group particularly powerful in the Democratic Party, and a group that many feel would tend to favor Hillary Clinton as the first woman president. If Oprah can wield the same type of influence as she has shown in other areas, this might help Barack cut into Hillary's base of support.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack leads the way on the internet (2007-09-06 21:22)

Hillary Clinton may be leading in the polls, but Barack Obama is the undisputed internet champion according to the most recent Nielsen NetRatings report.

BarackObama.com had 717,000 unique visitors or about 91 percent of the total for the websites of both Hillary Clinton and John Edwards combined.

Clinton's site drew 437,000 unique visitors in July, and Edwards had 348,000.

Fred Thompson drew the most visitors among Republicans with 381,000 during the same month.

[EMBED]

The new Obama television ad airing in Iowa.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Roland Martin on Oprah's support (2007-09-07 16:04)

Roland S. Martin, a regular commentator on both CNN and TVOne, disagrees with Oprah that her greatest contribution to the Obama campaign would be herself rather than her money.

Martin notes that Oprah can open an independent campaign organization known as a 527 and run her own tv ads. She can spend as much money as she likes, and she's a billionaire.

Unlike most other billionaires, Oprah is neither unknown or greatly disliked, something that will probably be in her favor if she decides to open a 527. Independent tv ads require that the person who paid for the ads be identified by name.

Ads coming from George Soros or Bill Gates might be viewed as negative by some who distrust corporate types. However, Oprah has a completely different image. The fact that she hasn't been involved much in politics before doesn't hurt either.

If she decided to go this route, she would be unable to consult with the official Obama campaign on any matter related to her efforts. Most likely she would hire a political consulting and media firm to develop a strategy for helping Obama win.

Pena backs Obama

Former Clinton Cabinet member Federico Pena has become a co-chair of the Obama for America campaign. Pena is one of Obama's highest profile Hispanic supporters yet and he will be tasked with helping build support in that community.

(Source: <http://www.wifr.com/elections/headlines/9646092.html>)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Black scholar says Obama is the right choice (2007-09-07 20:46)

Theodore Cross, editor of the Journal of Blacks in Higher Education, published a detailed comparison of Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama on issues of specific importance to African Americans.

Cross concluded that Obama's program was much better for African Americans. He also felt that many black voters are not giving Barack sufficient consideration primarily because they do not think he has a chance of winning.

For the first time in the history of our country, a black man has a credible chance of becoming president of the United States. After the long nightmare years of slavery, lynchings, Jim Crow, and enduring race discrimination, one would expect that, in the upcoming presidential primary contest, Illinois Senator Barack Obama would be the overwhelming choice of black American voters.

You can read the entire article online here.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Oprah hosts gala fundraiser (2007-09-08 19:28)

The rich and famous gathered at Oprah Winfrey's mansion for her much-anticipated fete for Barack Obama. Guests payed at least $2,300 to the Obama campaign to attend, and the event is expected to raise about $3 million. Stevie Wonder performed at the event where guests included such names as Sidney Poiter, Halle Berry, Linda Evans, Cindy Crawford, Jamie Foxx, Jimmy Connors, Forest Whitaker, Chris Rock and others. No media was allowed at the fundraiser.

Earlier in the day, Obama spoke to a crowd of 1,000 supporters at Santa Barbara City College.

He mentioned his experience volunteering with a home health care worker in California in August.

"Listening to her talk about the hardships of her life, talking about her struggles without a trace of self-pity ... I thought, there is the essence of what America is about, this generosity of spirit," Obama said.

X

Guests arrive at the Earl Warren Showgrounds in Santa Barbara, Calif. where they were taken by buss across town to the 42-acre estate of Oprah Winfrey for a private fundraiser for presidential candidate Sen. Barack Obama, Saturday, Sept. 8, 2007. Oprah feted her favorite candidate with a private gala fundraiser at her estate in Montecito, just south of Santa Barbara. (AP Photo/Michael A. Mariant)

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama-Edwards ticket? (2007-09-09 22:39)

David Swanson, a writer who was the Press Secretary for the 2004 Dennis Kucinich for President campaign, thinks progressives should support an Barack Obama-John Edwards ticket to help defeat Hillary Clinton.

Fearing that a Clinton primary win will mean defeat for the Democrats in the general election, Swanson believes that an Obama-Edwards combo would shoot ahead of Clinton in the polls.

Although not terribly sure of what either Obama or Edwards would do if elected president, he believes that clearly Clinton would "govern from the right" based on her record. He also thinks Hillary would choose a running mate to the right of herself.

The strategy of combining Edwards and Obama ought to be especially appealing to those who really support Edwards or Obama. But it's even appealing to those, like me, who support some other candidate.

I would be surprised though if Edwards would concede at this point of the game even though he's well behind in the polls. He may agree to work with Obama to help whittle down Hillary's apparent lead with an "understanding" that if either wins, they will select the other as their running mate for the general election.

[EMBED]

Dr. Boyce Watkins analyzes Oprah Winfrey's support of Barack Obama and how it could impact the election, and possible negative effects of Oprah's political involvement among her audience.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack ain't finished yet (2007-09-12 18:19)

Reading some of the news stories, it would seem that many people are handing the race to Hillary Clinton too early. Polls are not accurate at this early stage of the game and most likely are only showing Hillary's name recognition built up over nearly two decades.

Barack Obama had a big boost early on in name recognition but then hit that predictable ceiling where he's still at basically right now. I think it won't be until "election time" when people start looking at their candidate's statements and sample ballots that we will see a possible "break" one way or another.

Not that this will necessarily go Obama's way.

Obama has built quite a campaign organization, unlike any I've seen before. They are really systematically preparing for election day. Locally and statewide in California I didn't see anything like this even when Kerry and Edwards were running with all the Democratic resources at their disposal for the general election against George W. Bush.

Barack Obama asks question on LinkedIn

Barack appeared on the professional LinkedIn.com network today with the following question publicly posted:

How can the next president help small business and entrepreneurs thrive?

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama wins Nebraska straw poll (2007-09-14 19:13)

Barack Obama received some campaign boosts recently including winning a Nebraska straw poll. It was reported today that Obama won the Husker Harvest Days straw poll attended mainly by farmers and ranchers. Of the 165 votes cast by Democrats, 35 % were for Obama, 31 % were for Sen. Hilary Clinton of New York and 16 % were for John Edwards, the former senator from North Carolina.

California Black Caucus endorsement

On Thursday, Obama picked up an important endorsement from the California legislature's black caucus. There are eight members in the caucus, but Assemblyman Sandre Swanson, D-Oakland dissented throwing his support instead for Hillary Clinton.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama does well with military, environmentalists (2007-09-16 13:23)

A report by the non-partisan Center for Responsive Politics shows that Barack Obama leads all other presidential candidates in donations from people in the military. Ron Paul, another candidate who like Obama opposes the Iraq War, was in second place.

Good news also comes to the Obama campaign from the League of Conservation Voters that rates Barack highest on environmental issues among all the presidential candidates. Obama had a 96 rating compared to Dennis Kucinich who came in second with a 92 rating.

Iowa endorsements

The Lawmaker Endorsement War is heating up in Iowa as Democrat presidential candidate Sen. Barack of Illinois threw kerosene on to the fire by announcing the endorsement of four Iowa lawmakers. Iowa State Senators Rich Olive of Story City, Frank Wood of Eldridge, Representative Helen Miller of Fort Dodge and Representative Janet Peterson of Des Moines endorsed Obama for president today.

[EMBED]

Barack Obama discusses George W. Bush's 9-13 address on the Iraq War with CNN's Larry King.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama does well with military, environmentalists (2007-09-16 13:23)

A report by the non-partisan Center for Responsive Politics shows that Barack Obama leads all other presidential candidates in donations from people in the military. Ron Paul, another candidate who like Obama opposes the Iraq War, was in second place.

Good news also comes to the Obama campaign from the League of Conservation Voters that rates Barack highest on environmental issues among all the presidential candidates. Obama had a 96 rating compared to Dennis Kucinich who came in second with a 92 rating.

Iowa endorsements

The Lawmaker Endorsement War is heating up in Iowa as Democrat presidential candidate Sen. Barack of Illinois threw kerosene on to the fire by announcing the endorsement of four Iowa lawmakers. Iowa State Senators Rich Olive of Story City, Frank Wood of Eldridge, Representative Helen Miller of Fort Dodge and Representative Janet Peterson of Des Moines endorsed Obama for president today.

[EMBED]

Barack Obama discusses George W. Bush's 9-13 address on the Iraq War with CNN's Larry King.

Obama names National Outreach Team (2007-09-17 21:16)

The Obama campaign announced its national outreach team today that will focus on growing support for Barack in specific communities. Here's the lineup:

National Advisory Outreach Team:

Preeta Bansal, AAPI Outreach

Reverend Willie Barrow, Faith Outreach

Assemblywoman Karen Bass, African American Outreach

Stampp Corbin, LGBT Outreach

Wizipan Garriott, Native American Outreach

General Scott Gration, Veteran Outreach

Rep. Luis Gutierrez, Latino Outreach

John Hurley, Veteran Outreach

Reverend Joseph Lowery, Faith Outreach

Rep. Gwen Moore, African American Outreach

Majority Leader Gloria Romero, Latino Outreach

Rep. Robert Wexler, Jewish Outreach

Tobias Wolff, LGBT Outreach

Jim Zogby, Arab American Outreach

I believe Jim Zogby of the Arab American Outreach group is the same senior analyst that works with polling company Zogby International.

In a new pitch to raise money for the September fundraising deadline the Obama campaign is offering 10 lawn signs for $12.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama offers $80 billion tax fairness plan (2007-09-18 17:12)

Seeking to reverse the Republican plan of tax relief for the wealthy, Barack Obama unveiled a new plan that would cut $80 billion in taxes for the middle class and poor.

His "tax fairness" plan would make up the difference by closing corporate tax loopholes.

Obama will dump income taxes for 7 million senior citizens making less than $50,000 a year, establish a universal credit for 10 million homeowners who do not itemize deductions, and providing 150 million Americans with tax relief of up to $1,000.

The new plan will also seek to simplify the filing process with a new "five-minute" form.

Obama for America phonebanking nationwide

The Obama campaign has organized online phone-banking to take advantage of its hefty netroots support.

Currently, they're using online phone-bankers to help organize the big rally in New York City on Sept. 27:

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack aims for 350,000 donors (2007-09-24 09:21)

The Obama campaign today sent a letter saying that it was aiming for a goal of 350,000 donors and 500,000 donations by the end of September, the close of the third fundraising quarter.

Currently they have 333,774 donors who have made 472,524 contributions.

Now at the end of the second quarter, Obama had a total of 258,000 donors with more than 100,000 donors in the first quarter and about 150,000 in the second.

So it looks like this time around the campaign will be hard-pressed to get 100,000 contributors with just several days left in the month.

Has the Obama fundraising phenomenon peaked?

Maybe at least in terms of the breadth of donors. The campaign still had some very major fundraisers this time including the Oprah bash and presumably still could do as well as previous quarters in terms of overall money raised. Indeed they could still exceed those totals.

Also, it might not make much of a difference if Obama is still able to outraise the other candidates including Hillary Clinton in money available for the primary.

Compared to last quarter, the Clinton campaign is rather low-key on fundraising and appears satisfied with its strong lead in the polls. The Clinton website is not pushing in major fundraising goals. In comparison, John Edwards has a "10 Days/ $1 million" drive going on at this site.

More endorsements

Obama picked up the endorsement of correctional officers in New York City today and also the support of former Iowa Democratic Party Chairman Gordon Fischer.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama's NH debate performance (2007-09-27 08:40)

Barack Obama did reasonably well in the NBC New Hampshire debate last night.

It seemed that Obama was talking the cool, composed approach while most of his opponents were sound very fired-up and aggressively seeking to distinguish themselves. Obama is doing well in the post-debate online MSNBC poll suggesting that online users at least liked Obama's performance

However, Obama's lack of aggressiveness may account for his for the first time not leading on the Chris Dodd campaign's debate "Talk Clock":

IFRAME: http://chrisdodd.com/files/talkclock/nh_d_2-chart.html

In past debates, Obama has led other opponents by a large margin in the amount of time that he talked on-screen. Clinton's lead seemed to me to come from her many interjections and her repeated instances of talking over moderator Tim Russert, when the latter was trying to keep her on topic.

Although generally Obama looked fresh at times his eyes looked tired as if he has been doing a lot of reading. His posture though was good and he looked quite presidential.

He also did a good job with the 30 second answer questions. In previous debates, Obama had some problems fielding questions requiring very short answers.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama holds NYC mega-rally (2007-09-28 10:29)

Barack Obama did what he did best again in New York City attracting a massive crowd of about 24,000 months before a primary election on Hillary Clinton's home turf.

While Obama opponents may say crowds do not win elections, certainly they would also rather have similar shows of support for their own favored candidate.

If Obama can mobilize these crowds not only to give money but to donate time in volunteering substantial hours to the campaign, they can surely make a great difference. This has been demonstrated many times in the past in well-run grassroots efforts.

Barack Obama at Washington Square Rally in New York City [EMBED]

Barack on the Tyra Banks Show. Tyra gave Barack a crystal ball which she suggested as a gift to Michelle in celebration of their 15th anniversary.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama reaches fundrasing goal, leads in Iowa (2007-09-30 14:02)

There is reason to celebrate in the Barack Obama camp today as it was announced the campaign had met both of its goals for the third quarter fundraising deadline.

A note from campaign manager David Plouffe indicated the campaign has collected more than 350,000 donors contributed at least 500,000 donations by Sunday, the last day of the 3rd quarter.

Sometime tomorrow we should find out which candidates had taken in the most cash for the quarter, which traditionally a slow one for raising money.

The Obama camp also got good news from a just-released Newsweek poll that shows Barack leading in the first primary state of Iowa. Obama won 28 percent in that poll while Clinton gets 24 percent and Edwards has 22 percent. If one includes second and third place votes in the scoring of the poll, Barack leads by eight points.

Obama's campaign strategy is to do well in the early states and build up momentum toward Super Duper Tuesday.

Democratic presidential candidate, Barack Obama, D-Ill., shakes hands during stop in Concord, N.H., Saturday, Sept. 29, 2007. AP Photo/Jim Cole via Yahoo News.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

1.10 October

Clinton buries Obama for first time in 3Q (2007-10-02 08:14)

After outraising Hillary Clinton in the first quarter to everybody's surprise, and then topping that significantly in the second quarter, many were seeing Barack Obama's money machine as unstoppable.

However, the early third quarter reports are ominous for the Obama campaign. Not only is Hillary leading in the polls, but now she's raising more cash with more donors than the Illinois senator.

What happened to the vaunted grassroots Obama fundraising effort?

Although its impossible to say for sure, I wonder if Obama's militaristic positions expressed in the last quarter might not have turned away many supporters from the Democratic base.

It was in this quarter, through a journal article and a foreign policy speech that Barack for the first time since the start of the campaign clearly stated positions demonstrating his attitudes on preemptive military action and foreign intervention.

Not only did he express such views but he reiterated and clarified them several times to the media. Democrats looking to "turn the page" on this type of policy surely must have been disheartened.

Furthermore, there was the appearance that Obama's foreign policy is largely being driven by advisers of whose views and history we know little. And there also could have been the perception that Obama was modifying his positions to pander to more conservative voters and reverse his flagging poll numbers.

All these factors could have influenced the confidence of supporters that Obama would not lead the country into further possibly even more devastating warfare through a series of "surgical strikes" that could quickly escalate into something bloodier.

Obama's distinction was that he appeared as the choice for voters looking for peace early on, but now he may have lost that edge. If this is true, he will need to replace that highly motivated segment of voters with others that will pick up the slack. Not an easy job with the start of the primary election just three months away.

Of course, the Obama campaign never expected to outraise Hillary in the first place, but once the expectation was created after the first two quarters, this comes as a big letdown. And momentum is very important in politics.

Probably even more important than the gross amount raised is the fact that Hillary had more donors than Barack for the first time.

Today, Obama gives a foreign policy speech in which he will announce a plan to rid the world of all nuclear weapons. While it sounds good, I think many may see it as a purely political attempt at winning back support that he has lost from base voters. Not only confidence but trust has also been lost in my view.

Whether that trust can be regained is a big question. In the meantime, a lot of bandwagon jumpers can be expected to shift toward the Hillary camp.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Rep. Schakowsky endorses Obama (2007-10-02 18:22)

Barack Obama picked up the endorsement of fellow Illinois Dem. Jan Schakowsky today.

Schakowsky said that Obama was the only candidate " who really has the capacity to send a very different signal around the world, someone who can effectively go to capitals of both our allies and our adversaries and create a new new tone that creates the space for peace."

In Obama's foreign policy speech today he spoke of ridding the world of nuclear weapons and also stressed these points:

He would personally conduct negotiations with other nations, including hostile countries.

Give the director of national intelligence a fixed term of office, so he could not be replaced by the president for political reasons.

Fight global poverty and double foreign assistance to $50 billion a year.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama focusing in on Iowa and New Hampshire (2007-10-03 19:41)

Barack Obama has been running tv ads in Iowa for some time now. Those ads are probably at least partly responsible for his recent favorable poll showing in that state.

Obama is hoping to win or do very well in Iowa to boost his campaign but some analysts wonder if there is enough time between Iowa and New Hampshire to make a difference.

The campaign recently announced it would begin running tv ads in New Hampshire also so it seems they are expanding now to a two-state strategy.

Television in Nevada and South Carolina may be just a month or two away. Up to now, Obama has spent nearly $2 million in ads next only to Bill Richardson among Democrats, the latter spending about $2 million. However, unlike Richardson, Obama has concentrated his air time in Iowa.

I still feel South Carolina will make or break the Obama campaign. If he can do well in the first three states and win South Carolina, he has a good chance on Super Duper Tuesday. Things would look very grim, on the other hand, if he loses South Carolina.

Obama really needs the black vote now as I believe he has lost a lot of Iraq War opponents this quarter. If he can win South Carolina, it could signal that black voters have come to believe in him as a candidate.

That could tip the scales in a number of states on Super Duper Tuesday and possibly also in Florida, which is also holding early polls. His supporters would be highly motivated after winning a big primary before Feb. 5 when as many as 20 states will vote for a Democratic candidate.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama might want to lay low (2007-10-04 09:27)

With the "inevitability" of Hillary Clinton again becoming a dominant theme in the media, Barack Obama might want to go into stealth mode.

Some Republican candidates are already starting to concentrate on attacking Clinton while ignoring Obama and the other Democrats. Allow Hillary to be built up as much as possible, driving up expectations.

Then if Hillary loses in January (or December) or even if she wins but just barely and below expectations, she will look vulnerable and momentum can shift rapidly in that case.

[EMBED]

Barack Obama on anniversary of his decision to oppose the Iraq War.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack on Federal Spending Transparency (2007-10-05 07:47)

Here is a YouTube video of the Coburn/Obama bill on federal spending transparency.

This was Obama's first successful bill in the U.S. Senate. Here is Barack's resume to get an idea of his wider accomplishments.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

New Obama ad features Air Force General (2007-10-05 18:17)

Barack Obama began airing a new television ad featuring General Merrill A. McPeak, a combat veteran who has endorsed the Illinois senator.

[EMBED]

"As a combat pilot and Air Force chief during Desert Storm, lives depended on the judgments I made. And judgment is what we need from our next commander in chief. Barack Obama opposed this war in Iraq from the start, showing insight and courage others did not."

Obama's previous tv ads have run in Iowa.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama tops in Iowa staff (2007-10-06 14:22)

The extent to which Barack Obama is concentrating his forces in Iowa was revealed in reports that he has some 200 staff members in the state.

In comparison, Hillary Clinton and John Edwards have somewhere between half and three-quarters that amount of staff in Iowa.

Most of Obama's tv ad campaigns have also been concentrated in Iowa.

Recently though, Barack has started tv ads in New Hampshire as well. Previously the Obama campaign had run an online advertising effort in the Granite State.

Obama in Iowa and New Hampshire

Barack Obama meets with people in New Hampton, Iowa. AP Photo/Charlie Neibergall via Yahoo News.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama announces green energy plan (2007-10-08 15:12)

Barack Obama today unveiled an ambitious plan to combat climate change by cutting U.S. green house gas emissions 80 percent from 1990 levels by 2050.

In a speech Obama will deliver in New Hampshire, he says: "Now, some of these policies are difficult politically. They aren't easy. But being president of the United States isn't about doing what's easy. It's about doing what's hard."

Obama plans to invest about $150 billion in developing green energy sources like biofuels, and he promised to cut dependence on foreign oil at least 35 percent by 2030.

Former Secretary of Energy Federico Pena, an Obama supporter, commented on the aggressive proposal:

"Support Barack Obama's comprehensive, bold, and thoughtful strategy to address global warming and to put our country on the path to energy independence. It is time to stop talking and time to take bold and effective actions towards reducing our greenhouse gas emissions. Our nation must become a leader in attacking global warming and Barack Obama is just the leader to do that."

Barack recently won a straw poll taken by the League of Conservation Voters in which respondents were asked to rate candidates on environmental issues.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

fred_thelion (2007-10-12 09:08:00)

I believe this will up Obama's scores very much because almost every American wants to help with green house gasses yet do not want to fix the problem themselves. This will help America unite its self with Obama.

Obama supports Peru FTA (2007-10-09 16:07)

Barack Obama announced today he will support a free trade agreement with Peru as it met environmental and labor standards.

According to some sources, the AFL-CIO does not support the agreement.

Barack said that he was for free trade under the right conditions: "I am not going to say on a blanket basis that I'm going to vote against trade agreements. We cannot draw a moat around the U.S. economy because China is still trading, India is still trading."

Michelle Obama involved in traffic accident

A campaign van carrying Michelle Obama collided with a motorcycle on a narrow country road in Iowa Tuesday, sending the motorcyclist to the hospital.

No one in Obama's Chevrolet Uplander was hurt, although the van was badly damaged. The campaign suspended its final event of the day.

[EMBED]

Rasmussen Reports has an article that examines whether Obama is experiencing a turnaround in the polls.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama warns against Iran attack in op-ed (2007-10-11 09:52)

The New Hampshire-based Union Leader published an important op-ed article from Barack Obama today. Obama talks about the Lieberman-Kyl amendment that opens the door for an attack on Iran via the current war in Iraq.

The new opinion piece gives pro-peace progressives something to grab on after Obama's previous confusing and seemingly militaristic declarations on Iran and Pakistan.

His position is also clearly at odds with that of his presidential race opponent Hillary Clinton, who supports Lieberman-Kyl.

Sen. Clinton says she was merely voting for more diplomacy, not war with Iran. If this has a familiar ring, it should. Five years after the original vote for war in Iraq, Sen. Clinton has argued that her vote was not for war – it was for diplomacy, or inspections. But all of us knew what the Senate was debating in 2002. John Edwards has renounced his own vote for the war, and he should be applauded for his candor. After all, we didn't need to authorize a war in order to have United Nations weapons inspections. No one thought Congress was debating diplomacy. No newspaper headlines ran on Oct. 12, 2002, reading, "Congress authorizes diplomacy." This was a vote to authorize war, and without that vote, there would have been no war.

The Union Leader article gives Obama supporters ammunition to show that their candidate really is interested in pursuing peaceful solutions. Here is the full text of the article:

Sen. Barack Obama: Five years after Iraq war vote, we're still foolishly rattling our sabers

By SEN. BARACK OBAMA

<http://www.unionleader.com/article.aspx?headline=Sen.+Barack+Obama%3A+Five+years+after+Iraq+war+vote%2C+we're+still+foolishly+rattling+our+sabers&articleId=a41d44e5-0c56-4353-b9f6-5eda09c81236>

ON THE FIFTH anniversary of the Senate's vote to authorize an open-ended war in Iraq, we should resolve to never repeat the terrible mistake of launching a misguided war. But unfortunately, the Senate risked doing exactly that when it recently opened the door to an extension and escalation of the ongoing war in Iraq to include military action against Iran.

There is no doubt that Iran poses a threat. It has armed terrorists beyond its borders, maintains an illicit nuclear program, and its leaders have issued belligerent threats that are a concern to us all. But our first and most important avenue to contain Iranian aggression is to try the tough and direct diplomacy that the Bush administration has too often disdained. Instead of encouraging that diplomacy, an amendment passed last month by the Senate could be used by the President as justification to strike Iran under the authority granted to him by the 2002 Iraq war resolution.

The amendment, offered by Sens. Joe Lieberman and Jon Kyl, directly links the ongoing war in Iraq – including our troop presence – to checking the threat from Iran. The amendment opens with 17 findings that highlight Iranian influence within Iraq. It then states that we have to “transition(s) and structure” our “military presence in Iraq” to counter the threat from Iran, and states that it is “a critical national interest of the United States” to prevent the Iranian government from exerting influence inside Iraq.

Why is this so dangerous? The Bush administration could use language like this to justify a continued troop presence in Iraq as long as it perceives a threat from Iran. Even worse, the Bush administration could use the language in Lieberman-Kyl to justify an attack on Iran as a part of the ongoing war in Iraq.

As my colleague Sen. Joe Biden, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, said in opposing the amendment, “I do not want to give the President and his lawyers any argument that Congress has somehow authorized military actions.”

He is exactly right. Because as we learned with the original authorization of the Iraq war – when you give this President a blank check, you can’t be surprised when he cashes it.

I strongly differ with Sen. Hillary Clinton, who was the only Democratic presidential candidate to support this reckless amendment. We do need to tighten sanctions on the Iranian regime, particularly on Iran’s Revolutionary Guard, which sponsors terrorism far beyond Iran’s borders. But this must be done separately from any unnecessary saber-rattling about checking Iranian influence with our “military presence in Iraq.” Above all, it must be done through tough and direct diplomacy with Iran, which I have supported, and which Sen. Clinton has called “naive and irresponsible.”

Sen. Clinton says she was merely voting for more diplomacy, not war with Iran. If this has a familiar ring, it should. Five years after the original vote for war in Iraq, Sen. Clinton has argued that her vote was not for war – it was for diplomacy, or inspections. But all of us knew what the Senate was debating in 2002. John Edwards has renounced his own vote for the war, and he should be applauded for his candor. After all, we didn’t need to authorize a war in order to have United Nations weapons inspections. No one thought Congress was debating diplomacy. No newspaper headlines ran on Oct. 12, 2002, reading, “Congress authorizes diplomacy.” This was a vote to authorize war, and without that vote, there would have been no war.

America needs a leader who will make the right judgments about matters as grave as war and peace, and America needs a leader who will be straight with them. When I spoke out against going to war in Iraq in 2002, I knew that I was putting my political career on the line. Going to war was popular; so was President Bush. But I felt strongly that a war in Iraq would lead to an open-ended and destructive occupation of Iraq, and weaken us in the fight against al-Qaida in Afghanistan. And I felt a responsibility to say so.

Now, the Senate has once again voted for an amendment that goes out of its way to draw connections between distinct threats, and that replaces judicious policy-making with unnecessary saber-rattling. And once again, we hear that it is not really a vote for more war, it is a vote for more diplomacy.

But the way to support diplomacy is to actually pursue it, which is what I have called for in this campaign. Not the ad hoc Bush-Cheney diplomacy of not talking to people we don’t like, but real, direct, and sustained diplomacy that exhausts all of our options instead of rushing to war.

In choosing their next President, the American people need to look at the judgments each of the candidates has made on war in the past, and at who has clearly learned the lessons of this disastrous war going forward.

This is not a debate about 2002; it’s about the future, and in that debate I can run on, and not from, my record.

Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., is running for the Democratic nomination for President.

-

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Durbin disagrees on Iran, but says Obama poised for Iowa win (2007-10-12 15:39)

Sen. Dick Durbin disagreed with fellow Illinois Sen. Barack Obama on the latter's criticism of Hillary Clinton over her Iran War vote. However, he continues to support Obama and said that a win by Barack in Iowa will springboard the candidate toward the front of the pack.

"It's rare that Barack and I disagree on an issue of this magnitude," Durbin said in a Bloomberg tv interview. "I have the same concerns that Barack Obama does about this administration and what they might do with the power that they have. But I don't think this resolution gives them a green light to do anything."

[EMBED]

Barack Obama speaks with Wolf Blitzer on CNN's Situation Room on his opposition to moves to justify military action against Iran and in particular the Lieberman-Kyl amendment.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama goes door-to-door in Iowa (2007-10-13 21:43)

Barack Obama continued to press a grassroots strategy in his campaign going door-to-door himself in Iowa as part of a nationwide canvassing effort.

The walk emphasized Obama's opposition to the Iraq War.

"The main thing that we want to communicate today is that this war that we've been fighting in Iraq has got to stop, that we can no longer afford $275 million (€198.31 million) a day spent on a civil war between factions in Iraq where there is no military solution to be had, that it's time for us to begin bringing our young men and women home — they have been there long enough," Obama said during a morning talk at a high school in Des Moines.

In the evening, Obama joined Hillary Clinton and John Edwards for a black women's political action group forum.

Illinois teachers union endorses Obama

The Illinois Federation of Teachers (IFT) endorsed Obama on Saturday

"On the critical issues facing our country - from creating a health care system that works to supporting public schools and increasing access to higher education to ending the war - Barack Obama's beliefs and his record of public service place him above a strong field of candidates," said IFT President Ed Geppert Jr.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Illinois SEIU endorses Obama, Iowa goes for Edwards (2007-10-15 11:04)

Illinois state chapter of the Service Employees International Union has unanimously voted to endorse Barack Obama for president.

SEIU President Tom Balanoff described Obama as "a real fighter for working families."

However, the Iowa chapter of SEIU announced today it will be supporting John Edwards. This reportedly will prevent Illinois SEIU members from coming to campaign for Obama in Iowa.

The national SEIU will not be making an endorsement, but other state chapters are expected to announce their support soon.

One of the most important union endorsements the candidates can seek for the early states is that of the Culinary Workers in Nevada, which has a reputation of turning elections one way or another. Another important union is AFSCME.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Campaign collects funds in London, Madison (2007-10-15 16:34)

According to reports in The Swamp, a campaign fundraiser Monday evening in London attended by Michelle Obama was veiled in secrecy with guests apparently not wanting their identities known.

The event was closed to the press, and a Tribune reporter interviewing supporters in the Landmark Hotel lobby was reportedly rebuffed by a campaign aide.

Barack himself was attending a fundraiser in Madison, Wisconsin on Monday where supporters paid $500-a-head. About 130 people showed up including Gov. Jim Doyle, who however has not yet endorsed Obama.

Obama's first quarter and second quarter funds topped those of other candidates but he fell behind Hillary Clinton in third quarter fundraising. However, he still has the most money of any candidate left to spend for the primary.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Alice Walker endorses Obama (2007-10-15 20:47)

Writer Alice Walker, whose books include "The Color Purple" has endorsed Barack Obama's campaign for the presidency.

She characterized Obama as strong but compassionate, calling his candidacy "joyful."

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack banking on Iowa (2007-10-16 08:06)

Sen. Barack Obama is investing heavily in Iowa field offices and is hitting one voter at a time.

Obama is outspending Hillary Clinton by 20 percent in the state with 31 offices and abundant paid staff. In addition, the campaign has been running extended television ads in the state.

One recent Newsweek poll showed the Illinois senator leading in Iowa.

Obviously the campaign wants to win Iowa or at least knock one of the other candidates out to be in position for a head-on-head match in Nevada and New Hampshire. They probably do not want to come in third!

As Nevada comes before New Hampshire, it may impact any momentum gained in Iowa and thus is a hard state to ignore. One strategy the campaign is using is bringing in supporters from other states, particularly from California to help in Nevada.

In both Nevada and Iowa, Obama is trying to avoid mistakes made by Howard Dean by using supporter cards to register his strength in any voting area. Dean is thought to have overestimated his support leading to not putting enough resources in the right places.

The supporter cards are like pledges that also register how committed each respondent is to Barack's campaign.

Obama will also hold statewide house parties as practice sessions for caucus night.

Barack Obama talks with supporters during a neighborhood canvas in Des Moines, Iowa, on Saturday, Oct. 13, 2007. AP Photo/Kevin Sanders via Yahoo News.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack details rural development policy (2007-10-16 15:26)

Barack Obama released details of his rural development policy Tuesday promising aid to small farms and support for biofuels and organic farming.

"We must be vigilant to ensure that we do this in a sustainable fashion so that land and water resources are conserved," Obama said.

Here are some of the key points of Obama's rural plan:

- A $250,000 limit on subsidies to farmers and strict environmental standards for large livestock operations.

- Creation of new cost-sharing programs to help farmers get certification as organic farmers, and revamping crop insurance programs to avoid penalizing organic producers.

- A goal of a 50 percent increase in the economy's energy efficiency by 2030.

- A change to allow small businesses to pool together to offer health insurance for workers, with subsidies for those who can't afford it. Also, overhaul the Medicare and Medicaid reimbursement system that can penalize rural areas.

In July, Obama released his plan to tackle urban poverty.

Major Owens endorses Obama

Former Congressman and Brooklyn leader Major Owens has endorsed Barack Obama going against the local Democratic Party, which endorsed Hillary Clinton on the previous day. In a statement, Owens says:

"Obama stands for the concerns of the masses in the black community who have been let down by the broken promises of past leadership. Our leadership on both sides of the aisle has continued to fail us by supporting the war in Iraq and by standing by while poverty, disparities in our healthcare system and lack of affordable education opportunities for young people weaken our communities. It is time to shake loose from the past and Senator Obama's record shows that he will deliver on his promise to stand up for us in the White House."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Youth vote still key for Obama (2007-10-16 20:34)

Although some polls are showing Hillary Clinton beating all the other candidates combined, Barack Obama still draws thousands of supporters to campaign events.

Many of this enthusiasts are young people, the kind of people likely to be overlooked in opinion polls.

Indeed, most campaign polls only consider people who have voted in the last election or the last two elections. So new voters, or young people that have not been consistent voters will be left out.

Mobilizing and turning out these young voters will take some resources though. That is why it is necessary for Obama to have funds left over after Iowa. Even if he wins Iowa, there's not enough time to raise a whole lot of money before voting starts again.

So the campaign has to watch its budget.

Networking on BlackPlanet

In addition to young voters another possible sleeper for Obama would be the African American vote.

Recently, Barack opened up a page on BlackPlanet a social networking site with some 17 million registered users. So far, Obama's page has accrued 60,000 friends. Barack also has pages on Migente.com, a Latino community site; AsianAvenue.com and GLEE.com, a site for the GLBT community.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

New Obama ad targets greenhouse emissions, Detroit (2007-10-17 10:32)

Barack Obama's campaign has unveiled what I feel is their best television ad yet focusing on reducing the dependence on foreign oil and reducing greenhouse gas emissions.

The ad takes a jab at Detroit automakers with Obama saying: "We can't just tell them what they want to hear, we need to tell them what they need to hear, we need to tell them the truth!"

Titled "Quiet," the ad reiterates points Barack made in a speech in Detroit last May.

Click here to see "Quiet."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Deval Patrick set to endorse Barack Obama (2007-10-17 15:44)

It was expected sooner or later, so it's no surprise that the Boston Herald is reporting that Massachusetts Gov. Deval Patrick will endorse Barack Obama .

Patrick and Obama are friends with both having links to Chicago.

The endorsement is expected to help Obama raise money in the state, which traditionally gives millions to presidential candidates.

Nearly $1 million in a day

Urging supporters to make up a $2.1 million deficit in campaign funds behind Hillary Clinton, Obama has succeeded in raising nearly $1 million in the last day.

The campaign is asking for donations of $25, and first-time donors are allowed to send campaign messages urging others to contribute.

Barack could use the extra money to help pay for his new Obama campaign office in Carson City, Nevada.

[EMBED]

Obama talks about foreign policy and how the administration convinced Democrats that the only way for them to appear patriotic and sound on defense was to talk, act and vote like Republicans on the Iraq War.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2007-10-17 15:44)

It was expected sooner or later, so it's no surprise that the Boston Herald is reporting that Massachusetts Gov. Deval Patrick will endorse Barack Obama.

Patrick and Obama are friends with both having links to Chicago.

The endorsement is expected to help Obama raise money in the state, which traditionally gives millions to presidential candidates.

Nearly $1 million in a day

Urging supporters to make up a $2.1 million deficit in campaign funds behind Hillary Clinton, Obama has succeeded in raising nearly $1 million in the last day.

The campaign is asking for donations of $25, and first-time donors are allowed to send campaign messages urging others to contribute.

Barack could use the extra money to help pay for his new Obama campaign office in Carson City, Nevada.

Paul, Obama lead in military contributions (2007-10-17 19:35)

Republican Ron Paul lead all presidential candidates in contributions from the military according to the third quarter finance reports. Barack Obama came in second and first among Democrats.

In the previous quarter, Obama led followed by Paul in second.

Paul received $63,440 in donations from current military employees and several retired military personnel followed by Obama with $53,968 and John McCain came in third with $48,308.

McCain is a decorated Vietnam Veteran and ex-Navy pilot.

Obama and Paul both publicly oppose the war in Iraq.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More SEIUs endorse Barack Obama (2007-10-18 13:32)

The Missouri-Kansas state SEIU labor union has endorsed Barack Obama according to the group's leader Lenny Jones. Illinois' SEIU has already endorsed Obama, while Iowa went for John Edwards.

Obama did get some good news also from Iowa where Rep. Mark Smith, D-Marshalltown endorsed the Illinois senator on Wednesday.

"He comes from the great state of Illinois, near Iowa, and has a good sense of what issues are important to people in the heartland," Smith said.

Responding to news of Smith's support, Obama said in a press release, "Rep. Smith will play an instrumental role in building our grassroots support in Marshalltown and throughout Iowa. We're proud to have his support in our effort to challenge the conventional thinking in Washington, D.C. and transform our nation."

Mark Smith, Iowa Rep.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack leads in higher education donations (2007-10-18 15:13)

The latest campaign-finance reports, released today by the Center for Responsive Politics, a nonpartisan research group, show Senator Barack Obama with nearly $2.1-million in donations from college administrators, faculty members, and other higher-education employees.

That keeps Senator Obama well in front among 2008 presidential candidates in funds raised from higher education sources, ahead of fellow Democrat, Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton, at nearly $1.7-million.

Mitt Romney, the leading Republican raised $568,000 from education sources. Fourth is Rudolph W. Giuliani with $429,000; followed by John Edwards at $408,000; Gov. Bill Richardson at $333,000; and Sen. John McCain at $231,000.

Former Sen. Fred Thompson, who entered the race last month, is in 11th place with $54,000. Barack has also been a leader in raising funds from military personnel and environmentalists.

Closing funding gap

Barack Obama is quickly nearing his goal of $2.1 million to help close the fundraising gap with Hillary Clinton.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama emphasizes Iraq War stance in Reno (2007-10-19 07:35)

Barack Obama highlighted the contrast of his opposition to the Iraq War with the authorization voted for by some of his opponents, while campaigning in Reno Thursday.

"The American people were failed by a president who led us to war and didn't tell us the whole truth," Obama said. "But the American people were also failed by the majority of Congress, who voted to give the president opened-ended authority to wage war that he uses to this day. 'Let's be clear, without that vote there would be no war.'"

Obama also mentioned the Senate's vote last month making Iran's Republican Guard a 'foreign terrorist organization,' a move that could be used to justify an Iran attack.

"George Bush and Dick Cheney must hear loud and clear: You don't have our support, you don't have our authorization for another war. You don't have it," Obama told an enthusiastic crowd. Polls show that the Iraq War is far away the most important issue for Nevada voters in the presidential election.

This was Obama's second visit to the early voting state and he heads to Las Vegas where he hopes to drum up labor support.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Targeted committees growing in Obama campaign (2007-10-19 10:43)

Sen. Barack Obama may have been a little slow getting his focus groups going, but they have been coming online at a good clip recently.

Currently, Obama's website shows the following groups have been targeted:

- African Americans
- Americans Abroad
- Environmentalists
- First Americans
- Generation Obama
- Kids
- Latinos
- LGBT
- People of Faith
- Students
- Women
- More coming soon

This list excludes states for which committees have already been formed:

- Iowa
- Nevada
- New Hampshire
- South Carolina
- Illinois
- More States

A total of 23 state-specific committees are up and running.

Committees focused on specific communities and demographics are very important for any campaign. These groups prefer to work with at least some people from within their group that they consider leaders, activists, etc.

A group-specific committee will know the ropes in how to deal most effectively with that community. The Obama campaign worked quickly to open up groups like Students for Obama and Women for Obama. However, some believe that he may have been a little slow in targeting minorities as he does not want to be perceived as a "minority candidate." Hillary Clinton, on the other hand, has not hesitated in portraying herself as a hope for women in politics.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2007-10-19 11:31)

Winter Sonata is a Korean telenovela, the second part of the KBS TV drama Endless Love.

Winter Sonata is a part of what is known as the Korean Wave, highly popular television dramas that have attracted huge followings in Asian countries. The show is known as 겨울연가 in Japanese, Sonata de Invierno in Spanish, and 冬季恋歌 in Chinese. Many fans seek Winter Sonata lyrics.

As to why Winter Sonata has become such a big hit in Asia, Diana Lee writes:

What is it about Winter Sonata that touches so many women of all ages throughout Asia? Upon a closer scrutiny, this Korean TV drama series offers more than a complex love story, intriguing plot twists, good acting, memorable scenes and lines, not to mention, breathtaking winter scenery backed up by melancholic music tunes. Under the crafty direction of Yun Seok Ho, the series presented a mastery of cinematic techniques tugging at one's heartstrings, like the sound and visual effects of a big screen effectively capturing one's imagination. Moreover, it addressed the perennial theme of love in all its complexity in our ever-changing society.

Some Winter Sonata links:

Winter Sonata - Wikipedia

Love Story, Korean: 겨울연가) was the second part of the KBS TV drama series Endless Love.

Winter Sonata (2002) - Korean Drama Reviews - spcnet.tvReviews of TV series from TVB, ATV, Taiwan, China, Japan, Korea and Singapore. Forums and stars galleries.

"Gyeoul yeonga" (2002) Also Known As:. Endless Love: Winter Sonata

(Philippines: English title) Winter Sonata (International: English title) (literal title)

Barack reaches out to Nevada Latinos (2007-10-19 12:40)

Barack Obama 's campaign team is launching a statewide effort to court the Latino vote in Nevada with events in Las Vegas and Reno on Friday.

Former Energy and Transportation Secretary and Obama National Campaign Co-Chair Federico Peña will host the events on Friday, October 19th at Si Amigos Restaurant in Reno and Ricardo's Mexican Restaurant in Las Vegas.

These events are free and open to the public. To RSVP, email nevada@barackobama.com or call Stephen Brokaw at 702-253-2008. Nevada also has a significant Asian Pacific Islander population with strong presence in the unions of Las Vegas, Reno and Lake Tahoe.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Assorted Obama News and Videos (2007-10-19 13:00)

Here are some clips from Barack Obama 's appearance on the Tavis Smiley Show last night.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Obama's Iowa MySpace team has organized youth forums in that state together with MySpace and MTV.

Here is an excerpt from the official campaign blog:

Our Iowa MySpace team introduced Barack's Iowa Presidential Dialogue at Coe College sponsored by MySpace and MTV. The forum will stream live on MySpace.com, MTV's ChooseOrLose.com and MTV Mobile, airing at 7 p.m. ET that evening on MTV. The dialogue will be moderated by MTV News correspondents Gideon Yago and Sway Calloway, as well as WashingtonPost.com political reporter Chris Cillizza. For additional information on this event visit either www.myspace.com/barackobama_IA or www.myspace.com/election2008.

YouTube videos of Barack's recent appearance on the Tonight Show with Jay Leno: [EMBED]

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Patrick to endorse Obama at Boston Common rally

Boston Herald AP – Gov. Deval Patrick will announce his endorsement of presidential contender Barack Obama on Tuesday.

Barack Obama: Pragmatist learned to adapt to different worlds

By SHARON COHEN

CHICAGO - It was a Wednesday night ritual for Barack Obama: After a day of debating taxes, the death penalty or some other divisive issue, he'd head to a meeting of "The Committee."

Lawmakers and lobbyists, Democrats and Republicans alike, would put politics on hold and gather for ... their weekly poker game.

It was a chance for Obama, then an Illinois state lawmaker, to socialize over cards and cigars (or, in his case, cigarettes). It also was a way for this son of an African goat herder, this Harvard-educated lawyer, author and professor to show he could be just one of the guys.

Read more...

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama promises immediate Iraq pullout (2007-10-19 20:45)

Speaking to a crowd of 5,000 Friday at Arizona State University in Tempe, Sen. Barack Obama pledged to order a U.S. troop pullout from Iraq upon taking office.

Raul Alvarar, director of Obama's campaign in Arizona, said he thinks Obama's consistent opposition to the war in Iraq will present a clear choice to Hillary Rodham Clinton, who voted to authorize the war. This

More combative style

Many observers have noted that Barack is taking on Hillary much more in his public statements. A Politico blogger speculates that this may be driven by supporters who are getting worried by Obama's position in the polls.

Obama's handlers, however, keep assuring the faithful that the strategy of winning or beating expectation in Iowa and building up momentum will work.

I have to think that Hillary Clinton's camp is under a lot pressure now. If she goes up any more in the polls, even Pollyanna would have to suspect something was fishy in Denmark.

The Obama camp was able to celebrate they're reaching the goal of $2.1 million to close the funding gap with Clinton.

X

A crowd of Obama supporters in Nevada on Thursday.

There is a great article in Esquire about the Bush administration's moves toward war with Iran:
The Secret History of the Impending War with Iran That the White House Doesn't Want You to Know

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama campaign strategy (2007-10-20 07:51)

After having discussed Barack Obama's campaign with some other supporters, I've been musing a bit over campaign strategy .

One thing I've been hearing a lot is that Barack isn't edgy enough, that he's taking too much of an intellectual approach to the campaign. They want to see that game face, the posture and behavior of someone who already feels they own the office. My suspicion is that Obama may be saving something for the "fourth quarter" as it's difficult to keep energies at high levels for sustained periods of time. However, that's just a feeling.

Possibly, Obama's handlers could be pushing their candidate a bit too hard wearing him out in the process. It's probably better to be at your best and create a buzz at fewer events than to fail to impress at a larger number of venues. Image is everything in electoral campaigns.

Focusing, targeting

Obama observers know that the senator is concentrating a lot of resources and energy toward an Iowa strategy. Is he doing enough, though, in other early states or other major states? I've heard this question a lot also.

There will be less time than usual to build up support after early state voting. On Feb. 5, 2007, the election will likely be decided. Right now, it looks like a three-way race and the third place finisher in Iowa will be in a big hole. But there will be a chance to recover in Nevada before the very important New Hampshire primary.

New Hampshire is often seen as the king-maker state, but in the last two open primary elections, eventual winners Bill Clinton and George W. Bush both lost in the Granite State. I think South Carolina will be the most important state this time around. If a candidate does reasonably well in the first three states and wins in South Carolina, they should have the momentum going into Super Duper Tuesday (Feb. 5).

Resources

Television advertising this early is probably not very effective. Those people who are paying attention, read newspapers, visit campaign websites, etc. and are unlikely to be swayed by tv ads.

Those who are not paying attention are the classic last-minute decision-makers. They are not making the effort to register anything on their mental hard drives.

When the election nears and they have to make a decision they will begin focusing on the candidates.

Television ads now are probably mainly to appease poll-watchers among Obama's supporters, especially the big contributors. This is unfortunate because it's expensive to change poll numbers with tv ads. You want to hit the last minute folk when they are in the decision-making process, not now months before Christmas. But then again, the Iowa caucus is so close after the holidays that it becomes confusing when to advertise.

Do you message Iowa voters with "seasons greetings" type ads?

Michigan and Florida

To add to the confusion, the states of Michigan and Florida have moved their polls up before Feb. 5.

These are states with large delegations and obviously the campaign cannot ignore them. However, at the same time the Democratic National Convention has been threatening not to recognize Florida's delegates if they don't move their primary back.

So you also don't want to get burned by committing too much in these states. Probably a safe plan is to take them as Super Duper states as they may eventually reschedule their voting back to Feb. 5.

A good campaign strategy in my view would be to budget enough money to do well in the first three states culminating in a victory in South Carolina. You would want to have enough money left over to at least keep your offices running until Super Duper Tuesday. There is only about a week to raise money and buy ads between South Carolina and Feb. 5.

Issues

Obama's key strategic issues are the Iraq War and the environment.

He is locked in a tight race with Hillary Clinton in wooing high technology voters. He also does well among people in higher education, although Clinton is attracting the teachers' unions.

The issues that seem to clearly offer the best hope for distinguishing himself from the other candidates is his consistent opposition to the Iraq War, and his general favorable position among environmental voters.

In my view, he needs to work this base of support more than trying to reach out in other directions. Not that he can't reach out, but a campaign needs to focus on key issues and keep repeating them to drive their points home.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Carrington (2007-10-22 15:15:00)

It's interesting; my experience is that Obama hasn't gotten all that much traction amongst 'green' voters, this in spite of his high LCV rating.

Probably part of the problem is that Bush II made Clinton I look good – something of an accomplishment – and greens, unlike peaceniks, don't have a specific Clinton vote to call the Clinton record into question..

I'm not sure what is going on with this, but it seems like an area where the campaign could make significant gains.

Mark (2008-06-18 11:52:00)

Regardless of the critiques flying around out there, Obama's campaign has clearly been able to reach voters on all levels. His ability to inspire citizens on all levels is unlike anything we've seen before.

Take for example the following he has online. Across all kinds of social networks, blogs, forums, news websites, Barack Obama has consistently had the strongest following, even since back in June. Its displayed here, in this study done by an internet consulting company www.spartaninternet.com/2008

As you can see, Barack is also beating McCain in this arena. This study predicted that Obama would get the nomination, who's to say it won't do the same with the presidency?

Anonymous (2008-07-05 21:19:00)

glad Barack didn't follow your advice to save just enough money for the Feb 5th Super Tues... I guess Hillary did though. Hindsight is always 2020

albie (2008-08-25 18:18:00)

obama is all talk.. the convention is week

Richard (2008-09-03 15:58:00)

I've contacted Wikipedia and I'm changing the name of this disease to Obamaism:

The term is derived from the Greek myth of Narcissus. Narcissus was a handsome Greek youth who rejected the desperate advances of the nymph Echo. As punishment, he was doomed to fall in love with his own reflection in a pool of water. Unable to consummate his love, Narcissus pined away and changed into the flower that bears his name, the narcissus.

James (2008-09-11 05:14:00)

Stay on the Republicans – everyone can relate to their miserable track record and the pain it's caused. Here's the way to go on a campaign ad that delivers the knock out blow, linking McCain and the Republican party:

First, chronicle the miserable Republican record using compelling images (lines of people filing for unemployment, the floor of the NYSE in turmoil, the billboard showing the national debt total and counting, explosions in Iraq and Afganistan, Republicans in Congress arguing with each other, etc.) and commentary that essentially pleads for "no more". Next, follow these images and commentary with a black screen that fades in the white words: "No More Republican Pain" then, "No on John McCain". With music, this slogan even has the potential as a jingle – and we all know how powerful a jingle can be. Or it could also be a chant... You get the idea. Essentially, Obama has to quit defending and instead, in a simple straight-forward way, bring home the devastation wrought by a Republican administration the last eight years – the pain – the deep down, visceral pain that even Republicans have felt. Make McCain defend the Republicans – his campaign will die trying.

natto (2008-09-15 18:33:00)

Obama needs to keep focusing on the economy and relate the Mc Cain strategy to further worsening of the situation. The middle class needs breaks. As far as the surge this was not the main cause for the change in fortunes but it was the difference in approach in terms of reaching agreements with Sunni groups and their split with Al Queda in Iraq. This came after more than 4000 have lost their lives.

I get the impression that President Bush never understood the significance of the position of the leader of the free world and so does Mc Cain.

I call them John Bush and George Mc Cain because they can use each other name. They are the same.

Obama and Residual Troops (2007-10-20 13:26)

On another part of the net there was a discussion about how many residual troops, Barack Obama would leave in Iraq if elected president.

Sometimes you hear that Obama will leave thousands or even tens of thousands of troops, but on repeated occasions he has stated that he doesn't want to get into "precise numbers" until consultations with ground-level military advisers. He's also said he doesn't support any permanent military bases but does plan to keep the embassy open and U.S. civilians safe. He also wants to possibly continue anti-terrorism operations there.

After listening to the exchanges for months, I've come up with my own views. I'm no military expert, but did serve in the military and have stayed at the Holiday Inn on several occasions.

I don't think Obama can say he is removing all troops and continue anything but intelligence service-level anti-terrorism operations in Iraq. Any type of military operation on Iraqi soil will create the same problems we see today. Indeed, there's nothing needed more than a reinforced detachment of the ordinary Marine guards for the embassy. Now, my view is not too much different than that of Gov. Bill Richardson on this issue:

Leave Marine guards at the embassy, but nothing too unsimilar to what is seen at other embassies. Some degree of reinforcement is justified.

Station rapid emergency response forces in Kuwait and in at least one battle carrier group that is always offshore in the Persian Gulf. Aircraft from these forces can fly over Iraq but not engage in military activity except in certain emergency cases i.e., genocide, attack on embassy, certain types of special requests by Iraqi government, etc.

The rapid response force would have the ability to fully evacuate U.S. embassy and civilian personnel if needed.

An international force of peace-keepers from Muslim nations would replace U.S. forces partially with the express purpose of protecting foreign embassies and civilians, and monitoring against genocide.

Significant quantities of U.S. military stores and equipment in Iraq would be turned over to Iraqi forces and the international peace-keepers allowing a quicker pullout and also increasing Iraqi capability. Training of Iraqi personnel would continue.

A portion of the savings from winding down military operations in Iraq will be used to further bolster the security and economy of Iraq and promote stability.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2007-10-20 21:41)

Barack Obama addresses Latino Dropout Rate in East LA (2007-10-21 07:30)

Talking to young people and parents at an East Los Angeles high school, Barack Obama called for a comprehensive plan to tackle the Latino dropout rate.

"When I'm President, we'll give our kids everything they need to have a fighting chance," said Obama at the high school on which the movie "Stand and Deliver" was based. "Let's not pass a law called No Child Left Behind and then leave the money behind. Let's rebuild our crumbling schools and recruit an army of new teachers because what makes the most difference in any child's education is the person standing at the front of the classroom. And we also have to make sure that every child who wants to learn English has the resources to learn English. And that any child who comes here and studies here and does well in school has the same chance to attend a public college as anyone else."

Obama said he would push a middle school investment bill to help lower the Latino dropout rate. The Illinois senator also mentioned plans to help alleviate urban poverty.

Barack Obama at Garfield High School in East Los Angeles from barackobama.com

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2010-02-17 16:43:31)

You have really great taste on catch article titles, even when you are not interested in this topic you push to read it

Anonymous (2010-03-12 17:10:16)

Very shorts, simple and easy to understand, bet some more comments from your side would be great

Anonymous (2010-07-03 23:37:54)

Not bad article, but I really miss that you didn't express your opinion, but ok you just have different approach

Obama Game Plan (2007-10-21 09:09)

One observer of Barack Obama 's campaigns in Illinois, and of his strategist David Axelrod, believes that the Obama game plan involves a big push in the late going.

In his Senate primary race, Obama surged ahead in the last few months. Presumably then, the campaign would be holding back some key ammunition for use at the last minute.

Stealth plans of this type are quite commonly used by underdog candidates. There could be some important endorsements, contributions, ads, etc. in storage for a late assault just before the Iowa caucuses. According to this mode of thinking, Hillary Clinton's "inevitability" is not such a bad thing. In fact, it contributes to the environment that this type of game plan tries to create.

Often a stealth plan will have some "dirt" that is unloaded at the last second giving the opposition minimum time to respond. Obama's camp has disavowed any kinds of personal mudslinging, but possibly they could have some bombs that are relevant and fair game for a electoral campaign. Basically anything that has do with a candidate's public record and service is considered vital information for the electorate.

Of course, stealth means keeping things secret, working quietly to build up the apparatus needed to execute the "big push."

There may be some questions over whether such an Obama game plan would work in a national election were such great resources are needed to do anything. Obama's handlers are working one state at a time, so the first goal would be to make it work in Iowa. But then will there be more surprises for the other three early states, and for Super Tuesday?

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-04-17 15:03:00)

I have been A Barack Obama fan from the start of this whole primary mess and until last night's debate, I could go along with most everything Barack has done. Now however, my opinion of him as a candidate in a national race for the presidency, has slipped somewhat. Why did it take him 50 minutes of talking about REv Wright, the "Bitter" comment, etc....before deflecting the debate to things that matter.

Charlie Gibson, George S., and Hillary had him totally on the ropes all night and would appreciate it if someone on his advisory staff would tell him its OK to push back a little. ALSO give him some training in avoiding noticeably long pauses and have him stay away from the "UHS", "ERRS", and "UHMS". It has him coming across as either uninformed or just plain slow.

Anotherafrican (2008-09-07 16:57:00)

Are the 3 Doing some Serious Strategic Planning?

I think Obama's capaign is in serious trouble and if the three top people Barack Hillary and Joe are not meeting in serious caucus, they should be.

May I suggest a strategy?

I recommend that they swallow their pride and consider Joe resigning in favor of Hillary as the VP. Joe can immediately be appointed to the job he is most qualified for - Secretary of State in the new Obama government. Hillary will be able to win back all her supporters who have already decided, or are seriously considering voting for the McCain/Palen ticket. This is the only way the Dems can be assured of winning the votes needed to occupy the White House. Now, it's not going to be easy to do this for either Joe or Barack, but if they are sincere about putting the country first, this is the answer.

Anotherafrican (2008-09-07 17:02:00)

Are the 3 Doing some Serious Strategic Planning?

I think Obama's capaign is in serious trouble and if the three top people Barack Hillary and Joe are not meeting in serious caucus, they should be.

May I suggest a strategy?

I recommend that they swallow their pride and consider Joe resigning in favor of Hillary as the VP. Joe can immediately be appointed to the job he is most qualified for - Secretary of State in the new Obama government. Hillary will be able to win back all her supporters who have already decided, or are seriously considering voting for the McCain/Palen ticket. This is the only way the Dems can be assured winning the votes needed to occupy the White House. Now, it's not going to be easy to do this for eithe Joe or Barack, but if they are sincere about putting the country first, this is the answer.

South Carolina for Barack Obama Beauty & Barber Shop Program (2007-10-21 20:14)

The Obama campaign has launched a creative grassroots effort in South Carolina called the Beauty and Barbershops

South Carolina for Barack Obama Beauty & Barber Shop Program

When Barack Obama first came to Chicago, he didn't know a soul. One of the first places he found a sense of community was in a small barber shop on Chicago's South Side, and he's been going there ever since. Recently he found a similar sense of community when he visited Emerson's barbershop in Marion, SC.

Beauty and Barbershops are where communities come together and they're where we know Barack's message of hope and change can really grow.

But to make that happen, to get the conversation going about Barack in your local beauty and barber-shops, we need your help.

BarackObama.com has a new feature know as My Neighborhood that allows users to bring up bloggers, events, people, groups, etc. in their own local area.

We should look for pages on barackobama.com focused on other groups like seniors, Asian Pacific Islanders, etc. fairly soon, I would hope.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama launches new ad in New Hampshire (2007-10-22 09:03)

Barack Obama has a new TV ad rolling out in New Hampshire that focuses on Democrats's "conventional thinking." The new 30-second ad is titled "Conventional" features Obama saying that he will talk to both friends and foes alike. [EMBED]

The spot highlights differences between Obama and Hillary Clinton and John Edwards in negotiating with states like Iran, Syria and North Korea. Recently, the Illinois senator has also spoke out against a Senate vote recognizing Iran's Revolutionary Guard as a terrorist organization. Clinton voted for the legislation.

Can Oprah make you vote for Obama?

A USA Today article examines whether television superstar Oprah Winfrey's endorsement will help Barack Obama get elected president.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Deval Patrick to endorse Obama at Boston Rally (2007-10-22 12:50)

Gov. Deval Patrick will formally endorse Sen. Barack Obama at a free rally starting at 6:30 pm on Boston Common.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama fans (2007-10-22 17:01)

Obama fans (2007-10-22 17:01)

Campaigns pushing ground campaigns (2007-10-22 19:46)

The top-tier Democratic candidates are revving up their ground campaigns as the primary is not less than three months away.

Hillary Clinton is doing a bus tour through Iowa and also registering volunteers to commit to a million hours of volunteer work.

John Edwards' campaign has "Road Trip for One America" encouraging volunteers to travel to key early states like Iowa, Nevada, New Hampshire and South Carolina.

Barack Obama is traveling across the country as part of the "Countdown for Change" drive holding rallies that double as grassroots fundraisers. Obama supporters are trained in "Camp Obama" campaigning sessions.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Letter: John Tanner must be removed (2007-10-22 22:17)

David Plouffe of the Obama campaign sent out an email urging supporters to send letters calling for the firing of John Tanner, the voting rights chief who made the preposterous statements about minority voters. Barack has already called for Tanner to be sacked.

John Tanner must be removed from his position as the nation's top voting rights official.

His recent comments that elderly minority voters are not disenfranchised by photo ID requirements because "they die first" reveals an obvious disregard for their voting rights.

Tanner's record as voting rights chief demonstrates that same disregard. Join Barack in sending a letter to the Attorney General's office demanding that he be replaced.

BarackObama.com/JohnTannerMustGo

Dear Paul,

This is pretty unbelievable.

John Tanner, the top ranking voting rights official at the Justice Department, was caught on video claiming that photo ID requirements do not disproportionately disenfranchise minority voters because: "Our society is such that minorities don't become elderly the way white people do; they die first."

He went on to argue, irrationally, that these requirements actually benefit minorities because: "Anything that disproportionately impacts the elderly has the opposite impact on minorities."

Barack sent a letter to Acting Attorney General Peter D. Keisler last week demanding that John Tanner be removed from his position – but the Justice Department needs to hear from you as well. The more they hear from people like you, the more pressure they will feel to do the right thing.

Send a message to the Attorney General's office and tell him to replace Tanner immediately:

<http://Action.BarackObama.com/JohnTannerMustGo>

As absurd and wrong-headed as Tanner's remarks were, they are less surprising in the context of his record as voting rights chief.

Tanner has been an outspoken advocate for photo ID requirements for voters, going so far as to overrule the recommendations of Justice Department lawyers in order to support a controversial photo ID requirement in Georgia .

The Georgia law has been repeatedly compared to a poll tax. In 2005, Barack Obama spoke out against this law, noting that, "in our democracy, the goal should be to encourage eligible voters to vote, not to create new barriers to make it more difficult for them to exercise their most basic right." Barack also introduced a resolution in response to Tanner's decision to approve the Georgia law, expressing his belief that any law requiring a photo ID to vote would put an undue burden on voters.

Numerous studies show that photo ID requirements have a discriminatory impact on African American and other minority voters. Yet, in public statements like his October 5th remarks, Tanner continues to justify them with faulty logic. And it adds insult to injury to use tragic discrepancies in life expectancies for African Americans as justification for policies that would further disenfranchise them.

The situation is clear. John Tanner has an obvious disregard for the voting rights of minorities and should not be in charge of protecting them.

John Tanner must go. Join Barack in demanding that he be removed from his position immediately:

<http://Action.BarackObama.com/JohnTannerMustGo>

From the beginning, our campaign has been about increasing the number of Americans who are engaged in the political process. We took our lead from Barack's days as a community organizer and built a network of hundreds of thousands of supporters nationwide, many of whom are getting involved in politics for the first time.

John Tanner and others like him have been appointed to positions of power in the Bush administration with the specific intent of limiting participation in ways that benefit the Republican Party. It's time to turn the page on that kind of politics.

All we demand – and all that any reasonable person of either party should demand – is that voting rules be fair and enforced equally, regardless of race.

John Tanner has demonstrated time and again that he has other things in mind. His recent comments are the last straw – he must go:

<http://Action.BarackObama.com/JohnTannerMustGo>

Thank you,

David

David Plouffe
Campaign Manager
Obama for America

Paid for by Obama for America

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama on the Issues (2007-10-23 07:17)

Obama on Foreign Policy Issues

- Immediate pullout from Iraq on taking office, one to two brigades a month. Opposed war from start.
- No permanent bases in Iraq but embassy presence and unspecified number of residual troops.
- Focus on Afghanistan and possibly Pakistan in combating terror.
- Opposed legislation labeling Iran's Revolutionary Guard a terrorist organization, a move he viewed as a possibly prelude to military action. Believes diplomacy and economic sanctions are needed to address Iranian nuclear program. Has not ruled out military action.
- Supports Israel but has problems with that country's policy.
- Considers China a "competitor."
- Supports 6-way talks in North Korea.

Obama on Free Trade Issues

- Voted yes on Peru and Oman free trade pacts, but no on Central American pact.
- Supports reform of NAFTA.
- Insists on labor and human rights standards in China trade.
- Wants to reinvest in communities hit by outsourcing. Discourages outsourcing.

Obama on Immigration Issues

- Wants better patrolling of borders
- Supports welfare and Medicaid for immigrants.
- Wants undocumented immigrants to have opportunity to earn citizenship.
- Supports a guest worker program.

Obama on Civil Rights Issues

- Supports affirmative action.
- Opposes gay marriage; supports civil unions with full rights. Opposed constitutional ban on gay marriage.
- Wants to close Guantanamo and restore right of habeus corpus.
- Voted no on Patriot Act wiretapping.
- Voted yes on reauthorizing Patriot Act.

Obama on Job Issues

- Wants to end tax breaks for companies that outsource.
- Make minimum wage a living wage.
- Supports unions and organized labor.
- Does not believe tax cuts for rich create jobs.
- Has detailed plan for improving urban and rural development.

Obama on Healthcare Issues

- Supports "universal" health care system, but without automatic coverage.
- Wants U.S. to lead in global fight against AIDS.
- Has worked on reform of Medicare.

Obama on Environmental Issues

- Wants greater use of biofuels.
- Cut dependence on foreign oil.
- Open to liquid coal if it can be proven to be less polluting than petroleum.
- Open to nuclear power if issues of waste disposal, security, etc. can be managed.
- Supports significant reduction of greenhouse gas emissions.

For more, see Barack Obama on the Issues.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-03-18 12:40:00)

I would like to know why Mr. Obama refuses to respond to direct questions, BEFORE he has a Speech or answer written by someone else at his disposal????

James (2008-03-18 20:44:00)

Guys, it is scary to have Obama particularly in this situation of grave consequences facing our country.

The War,

The Economy,

The Social Security,

The HealthCare,

The Job market,

The Middle Class

Problems so serious needs someone with experience.

Now this guy does not have a long history and he wants to change the world (US to start with).

He is a man of a race. Black man has never been a President (Not to say he is racial) it adds one more issue to above mentioned list.

The Race.

I know the race, religion and caste issues since I have moderated few elections in the East and they are ugly.

A person who becomes a President is not a one man show. If he tries to be that he looks like Bush who is to the right and this guy Obama is to the left.

A government is a big machine made of millions of people who are going to be there even when the Presidents and Govt. change. A senate and a house which change but not totally. The people are still same.

If you have someone so ideological but at the same time having no networking with government 'machinary' how in the hell can he bring change other than VeTO. WE have seen this more so often these days.

No matter how you look at it this is a dangerous combination of an in-experienced political figure raised to the alter by sheer disappointment for the current administration.

The mob mentality in US politics is the last straw on camels back so to say.

If we get someone with these credentials it would be a disaster I could see the same American people being more angry than they are now when the war is right now outside the US.

This man can bring this war within us. The reason is simple we cannot change things overnight and that is what he is trying to say. He says it is not going to happen overnight but gives a feeling it might.

There is an attribute of socialism in his speech which can further hurt our structure.

Now let me be clear, there is nothing that he says is wrong.

But the fact is it is not that simple. Bush would do it if it was so and get his 4 generations guaranteed Presidents of the USA.

This man Barack may have a good character, notion, and good intentions but what he is promising is to naive and is dangerously day dreaming.

He is taking about change which needs to start but at the grass roots in local govt, senate, and house and than at the center.

He by far needs more time, more experience and more to show us all of us that he can deliver. If he has the stuff he would come back.

But even if he is right and I am wrong right. If we get him the Presidency it would be the last Presidency that would shatter the USA from what it used to be.

God Bless US ALL

Independent (2008-05-03 16:40:00)

I was an Obama supporter until I learned more. He is talking about gimmicks to win an election, well, Obama asked to put signs up at the fuel pumps in his Illinois home senate district stating, "Senator Obama reduced your gasoline prices" after voting for a gas tax suspension in his home state of Illinois. (source: Illinois senate transcript 4/15/2000)

<http://www.ilga.gov/senate/transcripts/strans91/ST041500.pdf> pg 80-81

Anonymous (2008-06-17 22:06:00)

Hmmm! Right experience like GWB and Dick Cheney. Who got us in this war? Who opposed the war? Who has the experience? Think this is rocket science? Think again! How much is this war costing YOU, the American Tax Payer? And the Republicans say they are "Fiscally Conservative"? You're kidding right? Are Americans that easily fooled? hink again!

Rob Dodd (2008-07-09 21:55:00)

My hope has soared during the past year with the prospect of having a new administration under Senator Obama.

However on this day with the passage of the FISA bill I am deeply disappointed in his disregard for the Constitution of the United States which he swore to defend and uphold. No matter which excuse is given it is wrong to spy on anyone without a proper warrant and probable cause. See the Fourth Amendment.

I spent 14 year hardworking years in the military to uphold the constitution and freedoms to make elections like this are possible. I feel betrayed and hurt I am reconsidering my rationale to vote for Senator Obama.

Senator, please prove me wrong.

Anonymous (2008-07-18 09:35:00)

Obama is a fool who wants to ruin america he wants to raise taxes for people who make over 200,000 .But also wants to repeal the bush tax cuts which gives people under 200,000 a year a 2,500 tax cut.He says he will give us low income familys a 1,000 tax cut well if he becomes president low income fanilys will lose 1,500 dollars a year so he is in fact raising the taxes on every single tax bracket wake the hecll up and get educated this guy is pissin on your heads and tryin to say its rain.

Furthermore everytime He brings up a social problem he turns it into a black thing like black fathers need to take care of there kids and not run off well look Obama white ,mexican and every other race has dead beat fathers that dont take care of there kids.

This guy didnt even get involved heavily into the black community until he was 26 years old out of college and out of his white moms familys home so if anything this guy is a spoiled white boy who thinks he is black now and thatr he has been some civil rights activist forever please Oppybama.

Andrew V (2008-08-28 16:43:00)

On August 28th, 2008 Mr. Obama shouted to the enthusiastic audience that he would return America to being the world's super power. Is it the unalienable right of an American presidential campaigner to claim the right of world's super power? Would the west react with the same blind and effusive enthusiasm if the Chancellor of Germany, Angela Merkel announced that her country will be the world's super next power? Will the world welcome a decision by Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao that China is assuming the mantle of world policeman? Why do such flagrant, egotistical and self-assuming proclamations by North American leaders go unchallenged when similar comments by other political leaders would have the UN in a blind panic?

Anonymous (2008-10-29 02:23:00)

Well, the big day is here.

The big day when Obama, in concert, literally, with the Leftist Media, tries to make his case for why we should vote for him.

He still expects so many of us to believe him, even after him being one of the biggest LIARS, on the face of this planet, in ALL of human history.

Now that there's been uncovered, yet ANOTHER, of his Blatant and Obvious examples of his root and core Socialist ideological beliefs, and no doubt why they will NOT reveal his writings from his College / University years, he has more 'splaining to do.

Can ANY amount of Obama bought air time, be enough for him to explain how it is possible that, since he has, from at least 2001 or before, held the beliefs, as he was eager to explain in the 2001 radio interview, in which he SAID there should be MORE Redistribution (of wealth), and the SUPREME COURT (probably other courts too) SHOULD be MORE involved. And, in CONTRADICTION to the Constitution, AND he STILL expects us to NOT think he IS a Socialist? Not to mention, him apparently being hell bent on our Constitution NOT being followed, which he MUST take an Oath TO Uphold and Protect. HOW and WHY would / could, We The People, believe ANY oath HE would take, under ANY circumstances?

Obama is either sooooo INCOMPETENT, or it's ANOTHER of his BIG LIES.

SO, just as has been asked in many ways, in cross examinations, and by those who REALLY want to know, was he LYING, LYING, LYING THEN, or, is he LYING, LYING, LYING Now? Or, is he just a CONSTANT Psychopathic Lying Sociopath? In ANY case, Obama is either sooooo INCOMPETENT, or it's ANOTHER of his BIG LIES. Or, BOTH? It sure looks like it, more, and more, and more.

Can ANY amount of Obama bought air time, be enough for him to explain how it is possible, that 20 years in front of a "mentor" / Wright, was not enough for Obama to KNOW what Wright was all about, and hear and see the divisive anger and rage, which was demonstrated a number of times in sermons?

Obama is either sooooo INCOMPETENT, or it's ANOTHER of his BIG LIES.

Can ANY amount of Obama bought air time, be enough for him to explain how it is possible that, since he is supposedly so well educated from his college and university years, that he is apparently NOT well read enough, or NOT in touch with RECENT American History, that he has no clue of who Ayers was?

Obama is either sooooo INCOMPETENT, or it's ANOTHER of his BIG LIES.

Can ANY amount of Obama bought air time, be enough for him to explain how it is possible that, IF he has any REAL sense of politics, or the REAL world around him, how is it that when he started to get involved with Ayers, and ESPECIALLY Ayers involved in Obama's political career, that Obama did NOT properly do research about Ayers, to make sure of who or what he was?

Obama is either sooooo INCOMPETENT, or it's ANOTHER of his BIG LIES.

Can ANY amount of Obama bought air time, be enough for him to explain how it is possible that, since he was so involved with ACORN, but he did NOT apparently also know, or care about, the following:

(From <http://pajamasmedia.com/>)

The Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now (ACORN) is a community-based organization that advocates for low and moderate income families founded in 1970 by Wade Rathke and Gary Delgado. Rathke, one of the most powerful hard-Left activists in America, is a former member of a radical 1960s group, the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS). The Weathermen terrorist group split off from the SDS in 1969. And,

Although the organization prides itself for its registration efforts, it also has a long history of scandal. In the state of Missouri in 1986, 12 ACORN members were convicted of voter fraud. But that case was not an isolated incident in the state. In December 2004, in St. Louis, six volunteers pleaded guilty of dozens of election law violations for filling out registration cards with names of dead people and other bogus information. Authorities launched an earlier investigation after noticing that among the new voters was longtime St. Louis alderman Albert "Red" Villa, who died in 1990. The volunteers worked for "Operation Big Vote" — a branch of ACORN — in St. Louis.

On February 10, 2005, Nonaresa Montgomery, a paid worker who ran Operation Big Vote during the run-up to the 2001 mayoral primary, was found guilty of vote fraud. Montgomery hired about 30 workers to do fraudulent voter-registration canvassing. Instead of knocking on doors, the volunteers sat at a St. Louis fast food restaurant and wrote out names and information from an outdated voter list. About 1,500 fraudulent voter registration cards were turned in.

In October 2006, St. Louis election officials discovered at least 1,492 "potentially fraudulent" voter registration cards. They were all turned in by ACORN volunteers.

In November 2006, 20,000 to 35,000 questionable voter registration forms were turned in by ACORN officials in Missouri. Most all of these were from St. Louis and Kansas City areas, where ACORN purportedly sought to help empower the "disenfranchised" minorities living there. But the ACORN workers weren't just told to register new voters. The workers admitted on camera that they were coached to tell registrants to vote for Democrat Claire McCaskill.

In 2007, in Kansas City, Missouri, four ACORN employees were indicted for fraud. In April of this year eight ACORN employees in St. Louis city and county pleaded guilty to federal election fraud for submitting bogus voter registrations.

And, that was just Missouri.

(The whole story: <http://pajamasmedia.com/blog/the-complete-guide-to-acorn-voter-fraud/>)

So, since Obama is supposedly so smart, HOW can it be he did NOT know ANY of this FRAUD history of ACORN?

Obama is either sooooo INCOMPETENT, or it's ANOTHER of his BIG LIES.

Can ANY amount of Obama bought air time, be enough for him to explain how it is possible that, IF he is supposedly so smart, politically, or otherwise, HOW is it, he did not make sure of the ethicalness of his relationship and deals with Rezko? WHY did Obama not realize the potential, for even the appearance of scandal, let alone the ACTUAL deals we're now aware of? Maybe because it's so accepted in Chicago / Illinois corrupt street thug politics?

Obama is either sooooo INCOMPETENT, or it's ANOTHER of his BIG LIES.

Can ANY amount of Obama bought air time, be enough for him to explain how it is possible that, IF he has ANY amount of understanding of economics, or our country's financial mechanisms, he could NOT see the potential for disaster, with the KNOWN mismanagement, CORRUPTION, and artificial housing market success, being perpetrated by, and because of, Fannie, Freddie, and BAD legislation and requirements, for banks to make HIGH risk mortgages? Maybe because so many DEMOCRATS were ALREADY getting away with it.

Obama is either sooooo INCOMPETENT, or it's ANOTHER of his BIG LIES.

Can ANY amount of Obama bought air time, be enough for him to explain how it is possible that, IF he had ANY inkling of Foreign Policy, or even reality in general, that it would be OK, to sit down with a KNOWN adversary, of ANY degree, to discuss, and TO NEGOTIATE, almost anything, would be done with NO preconditions, AND that ANY one, with an ounce of IQ, would ANNOUNCE ahead of time, their strategy, like, NO preconditions?

Obama is either sooooo INCOMPETENT, or it's ANOTHER of his BIG LIES.

Can ANY amount of Obama bought air time, be enough for him to explain how it is possible that, . . . , well, I guess the list could go on and on. And, I probably have missed some things in my above chronology.

It all just comes down to this,

Obama is either sooooo absolutely, totally, INCOMPETENT, or, he just, LIES, LIES, LIES, LIES, LIES, LIES, LIES, LIES, LIES.

In EITHER case he WILL be one of the WORST presidents we'd EVER have.

Maybe that won't happen.

Dalene (2009-02-26 23:01:00)

All About Children asks...There is a situation here in Texas. This is regarding two families. One is in the middle of getting custody of their son's daughter. His wife already has a son who is half black which her partents are getting custody of him. They will continue to get state help with taking care of this little boy, but the other grandparents of the all white baby will not receive any state help once they get custody because she is white. I feel this is rascist and unfare for people who are trying to do the right thing by taking on this grandchild. Is this fare in your mind Mr. Pesident, isn't there anything that can be done to change this unfare and uncaring situation?February 26, 2009

Anonymous (2009-05-06 16:22:00)

Impeach Obama. People actually supported you till you got in office. What a joke

Anonymous (2009-05-06 16:26:00)

Were you born in US or Africa? That is the answer we all want to know. You have never answered the question. Why is that? Just because the supreme court did not want top go to trial. HHHHMMMM that is crap. Tell us Obama, Tell us

Funny Bush-Clinton dynasty video (2007-10-23 14:25)

Here is an hilarious video by UndergroundObama asking whether we're ready for 36 straight years of Bush-Clinton dynasty.

[EMBED]

Obama has also released a new video ad called "Choices" airing in New Hampshire that highlights his choice to work as a community organizer as a young college graduate.

Barack is currently leading the Democracy for America straw poll when write-in candidate Al Gore is taken out of the picture. He's just barely ahead of John Edwards though:

Total Votes: 74708 as of Tue, 23 Oct 2007 17:40:43 -0400 Candidate Votes %

Al Gore (write in)	22542	30.17 %	✕
Barack Obama	16304	21.82 %	✕
John Edwards	13349	17.87 %	✕
Dennis Kucinich	12934	17.31 %	✕
Hillary Clinton	3864	5.17 %	✕
Bill Richardson	2100	2.81 %	✕
Other	1558	2.09 %	✕
Joe Biden	828	1.11 %	✕
Mike Gravel	660	0.88 %	✕
Christopher Dodd	569	0.76 %	✕

VOTING IS STILL OPEN!! Polls close at midnight on November 5th, 2007. Cast your vote now at <http://www.DemocracyforAmerica.com/PulsePoll>

If Al Gore doesn't run: Now the live stats for candidates who have announced their candidacy Candidate Votes %

Barack Obama	20394	26.98 %	✕
John Edwards	20100	26.59 %	✕
Dennis Kucinich	16236	21.48 %	✕
Hillary Clinton	6979	9.23 %	✕
Bill Richardson	3202	4.24 %	✕
Joe Biden	1727	2.28 %	✕
Christopher Dodd	1465	1.94 %	✕
Mike Gravel	878	1.16 %	✕

This chart counts the second choice of DFA members who wrote Al Gore in for their first choice. Results updated hourly.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Patrick endorses Obama before crowd of 9,500 (2007-10-23 20:49)

A crowd of 9,500 cheered on as Gov. Deval Patrick publicly endorsed Barack Obama on Boston Common Tuesday.

(AP Photo/Steven Senne)

Patrick said of Obama in his introduction:

For once, I want a campaign that's not about the candidate, but about us.

Not about a resumé, but about character. Not about connections or convenience, but about conviction. Not about smearing the competition, but about lifting us all up. Not about the right and the left, but about right and wrong. Not about yesterday, but about tomorrow.

I don't care whether the next president has experience in the White House. I care whether he understands life in your house.

I don't care whether the next president has already met foreign heads of state. I care whether he knows something about how people live and think in distant cities and villages and can remember that our actions affect them, too.

I don't care whether the next president is the first black president or the first woman president or the first whatever, to tell you the truth. I care that the next president has moral courage, a political backbone, the humility to admit what he doesn't know, and the wisdom to learn from others.

In Iowa, the Obama campaign sent out mailers contrasting his position on Iran with that of Hillary Clinton.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama gets interesting endorsements (2007-10-24 10:35)

Sen. Barack Obama received some unusual endorsements of late from a world champion boxer and Iowa's "Butter Cow Lady."

Norma "Duffy" Lyon, known for her life-sized cow sculptures made of butter, is supporting Barack and she's featured in radio ads supporting the senator in Iowa.

"It's the first time I've done this," said Lyon. "He's my candidate and I want to see him do well."

Boxer Floyd Mayweather Jr., a world champion who also was recently featured on the TV hit "Dancing with the Stars," has also lent his name to Obama.

The boxer has had some trouble with the law and a fiery temper, but an Obama spokesperson said that Mayweather has paid for his mistakes.

Mayweather is a Las Vegas resident and will be helping out with the Nevada campaign.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama asks supporters to help in California (2007-10-24 15:40)

Barack Obama released this statement on the fires in California:

"Our nation's attention is turned to the fires engulfing Southern California for the fourth straight day, as hundreds of thousands flee their homes and the smoke threatens the health of others. Michelle and I send our thoughts and prayers to the families of the victims, and we honor the brave firefighters who are risking their lives to contain the fires."

"We must employ all federal resources to fight these fires, care for the displaced, and help communities rebuild from the ashes."

"In times like these, Americans stand firm, and we stand together. There have been incredible acts of bravery and generosity over the past four days, as Californians have pitched in to help their neighbors. I have asked my supporters in California to take time out from campaigning this weekend to assist the relief efforts, and I'm encouraging all Americans to take action to help those in need."

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama and Asian Pacific Americans (2007-10-25 07:31)

Asian and Pacific Islander Americans (APIAs) can make a difference in at least three big states – Nevada, California, New York and Washington. Of course, they are very powerful in Hawai'i, a state though sends only a few delegates to the convention.

California has 13 percent of its population that is APIA, and Nevada about 7 percent, but APIA growth in Nevada has been so explosive its hard to tell what the real numbers are. About 6.8 percent of New Yorkers are APIA.

APIA voters have been growing faster than the population in general and trending strongly Democratic. One poll, for example, showed about 74 percent of APIA voters favored Kerry-Edwards in 2004 with nearly 40 percent of those first-time voters.

Since 1992, when most APIAs supported Republicans, the percentage that favor Democrats has risen from 30 percent to more than 60 percent in 2004 according to a New York Times study.

The population is economically prosperous and has becoming increasingly politically involved over the last decade. Hillary Clinton has done much work in securing APIA support nationwide. Barack Obama definitely is trailing in this area.

In California, for example, where APIAs could potentially make up to 20 percent or more of the Democratic primary vote depending on turnout and other factors, Clinton has organized an impressive committee of APIA supporters.

I haven't heard of a similar committee in the state from Obama's camp yet.

Obama: Role for Gore offered (2007-10-25 10:16)

Barack Obama said there could be a key slot in his administration for Al Gore when asked if he would ask him to run as his vice president.

Obama though joked, "I will also be honest with you: having won the Nobel Peace Prize and an Oscar, being vice president again would probably be a step down for him."

Fielding another question about whether he would expect "swift boat" like attacks should he become the nominee, Obama replied:

"I have no doubt there will be some of that — trying to make me into this foreign, odd, clearly black person and to scare people,. When people try to Swift Boat you, you have to respond forcefully, you have to respond immediately and you have to respond truthfully. ... We are prepared for whatever they will throw at us."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama wins mock presidential election (2007-10-25 15:39)

Sen. Barack Obama has won the early primaries and "Super Tuesday" in Western Illinois University's mock presidential election.

The event is expected to be the largest most complex simulated election ever held at a college campus.

Obama won the Democratic primaries by a margin of 3 to 1, receiving 1,180 delegates to Hillary Rodham Clinton's 311 and John Edwards's 302. The process continues tonight with national party conventions.

[EMBED]

Michelle Obama speaks about the challenges of keeping her family grounded during the presidential campaign.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama winning mock presidential election (2007-10-25 15:39)

Sen. Barack Obama has won the early primaries and "Super Tuesday" in Western Illinois University's mock presidential election.

The event is expected to be the largest most complex simulated election ever held at a college campus.

Obama won the Democratic primaries by a margin of 3 to 1, receiving 1,180 delegates to Hillary Rodham Clinton's 311 and John Edwards's 302. The process continues tonight with national party conventions.

Barack Obama gets two new endorsements (2007-10-26 16:28)

The Wisconsin SEIU labor organization publicly endorsed Barack Obama for president today, and in Ohio, Columbus mayor Mike Coleman also voiced his support for the Illinois senator.

Wisconsin SEIU State Council President Dian Palmer cited in a press release Obama's "commitment to expanding access to affordable health care and to protecting workers' rights." The union has a little more than 15,000 members.

Obama has already received the endorsements of the Illinois and Missouri-Kansas SEIUs.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders for Obama (2007-10-27 21:45)

✕ Barack Obama announced the formation of the Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders National Leadership Council as part of his campaign today.

A new group called Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders for Obama is also live now on barackobama.com.

Many of the senator's AAPI supporters are from Hawai'i where he was born and grew up.

His sister Maya, brother-in-law Konrad Ng and niece still live in Honolulu.

Obama Announces Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders National Leadership Council

by Eugene Kang

Friday, October 26, 2007 at 11:38 AM

Continuing to expand on the historic grassroots campaign to bring fundamental change to Washington and our politics, the Obama for America campaign today announced its Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders National Leadership Council. This Leadership Council consists of Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders leaders and activists from across the nation, representing every sector of our society, including community, nonprofit, entertainment, business, government, law, academia and media.

"I am proud of the strong personal ties I have had with the Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders communities that go back to my birth, and I am humbled to have the widespread support from these communities in my campaign," said Barack Obama. "Like most Americans, the AAPI community knows that with the great challenges facing our nation today, we need leadership that can unite us to bring change we can believe in."

The Obama campaign also unveiled its Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders website today (<http://aapi.barackobama.com>). This tool will provide Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders from across the country the ability to connect with one another and to learn how to educate their friends and neighbors about Obama's record of bringing change to their communities.

Senator Obama was born in Hawaii, a state where Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders make up a significant portion of the population. As a child of a multi-racial, multi-ethnic family that included Asian Americans, Obama lived in Indonesia, sharing some of the same personal experiences that many Asian immigrants in the United States have also experienced before arriving on these shores.

"My brother is the only candidate with an intimate connection with Asia and the Pacific," says Maya Soetoro-Ng, Obama's sister of Indonesian descent. "Our mother's work and values brought us into contact with a wide range of worlds. The movement of our childhood and adolescence required that we be able to walk between worlds and, in particular, to communicate broadly within Asian and Pacific Islands cultures. Barack understands the values, needs, and expectations that are unique to Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders."

"There hasn't been a presidential candidate who understands the Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders experience as intuitively as Barack," says Konrad Ng, Obama's brother-in-law of Chinese descent. "I hope that Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders will recognize this opportunity to support a candidate who can speak to our diverse communities and bring real and beneficial change to our country. It is time that we have someone in the White House who can do it all."

Obama studied and worked alongside strong and diverse Asian American and Pacific Islander populations in Honolulu, Los Angeles, New York, and Boston. After college, he moved to Chicago, another city with a large and diverse Asian American population, where he worked as a grassroots organizer, advocating for civil rights and economic fairness.

"Barack Obama has a long track record of promoting policies that are important to the AAPI community. His depth of experience in bridging the many divides combined with his sound judgment is what I believe will make a better America," says Ann Lata Kalayil, Chicago-based AAPI community leader and Co-Chair of the Obama Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders Leadership Council.

In state and federal elected offices, he continued to push for legislative policies to protect the rights of immigrants and minorities at the local, state, and national levels. For example, he led the fight in Illinois to identify and end racial profiling and provide health insurance coverage to 150,000 low-income children and parents. And in the U.S. Senate, Obama has been a leader in the bipartisan effort to enact comprehensive immigration reform.

As president, he will continue to chart a better course for all Americans, and Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders can be assured that Obama will continue to work for these communities, as he has already demonstrated throughout his life. Former New York Solicitor General Preeta Bansal says, "As we try to work to clean up America's image and policy toward the world and its policies at home, I can think of no better leader than Senator Obama, who – in part because who he is and where he came from, but also because of what he believes in – would give America a whole new fresh chance."

Members of the Obama Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders National Leadership Council include (Note: Their affiliation is to be used for identification purposes only):

Nancy Chen, IL, Former APA Outreach Director for the Office of Presidential Personnel (1996 – 1997) and Former Chicago Director for Senator Paul Simon (D – IL) (1991 – 1996); Co-Chair, Obama AAPI National Leadership Council

Ann Lata Kalayil, IL, Former DNC At-large Member and APIA Caucus; Co-Chair, Obama AAPI National Leadership Council

Stanley Toy, CA, Chairman of Los Angeles County Hospital and Healthcare Delivery Commission and President and CEO of TEAM Healthcare; Co-Chair, Obama AAPI National Leadership Council

Preeta Bansal, NY, Former New York State Solicitor General (1999 – 2001) and Partner, Skadden Arps, and Former Counselor, U.S. Department of Justice and Special Counsel, White House (1993 – 1996)

Paul Igasaki, Former Vice Chair and Commissioner, U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (1994 – 2002)

Angela Oh, CA, Former Member, President's Initiative on Race (1997 – 1998)

Amy Agbayani, HI, Community Activist and Administrator, University of Hawaii

Anilesh Ahuja, NY, Investment Banker

Tania Ahuja, NY

Della Au Bellatti, HI, State Representative

Som Baccam, IA, Community Activist

Priya Bhatia, IL, Attorney, Goldberg Kohn

Umbreen Bhatti, PA, Attorney

Eric Byler, VA, Activist and Award-winning Filmmaker

C.W. Chan, IL

Wilma Chan, CA, Former Assemblywoman

M. Hasan Chandoo, NY, Businessman

Raazia Chandoo, NY, Artist

Subodh Chandra, OH, Principal, The Chandra Law Firm

Kan Chou, IL, President, Elitegen Corp

Marisa Chun, CA, Partner, Coblenz, Patch, Duffy & Bass LLP

Jerry Clarito, IL, Skokie Park District Commissioner

Jun Choi, NJ, Mayor of Edison

Siddarth Desai, GA, Management Consultant and South Asians for Obama – Atlanta

Selma D'Souza, IL, Attorney

Gautam Dutta, CA, Attorney and Board Member, Asian American Action Fund

Tong-Jen Fu, IL, Former President, Naperville Chinese Association

Ram Gajjala, IL, President, Indo-American Democratic Organization

Kasturi Halder, IL, Professor, Northwestern Medical School

Alamdor Hamdani, Partner, Hamdani & Simon, LLP

Ferial Hamid, NY

Wahid Hamid, NY, Senior Vice President, PepsiCo

Anjana Hansen, IL, Alderman in Evanston

Pakou Hang, MN, Community Activist

Bob Hasegawa, WA, State Representative

Kelly Hu, CA, Actress

Imad Husain, MA, Director of Credit Risk, Enterprise Risk Management, State Street Corporation

Jin, Hip-Hop Artist

Jon Karamatsu, HI, State Representative and House Vice Speaker

Hrishi Karthikeyan, D.C., Attorney and Co-Founder of grassroots South Asians for Obama
 Eddie Kim, CA, Executive Producer, Projekt Newspeak
 Paul Kim, CA, Executive Director, Kollaboration Talent Show
 Ming King, WI, Chairman, Precast Engineering Company
 Ramey Ko, TX, Attorney and Chair of grassroots Asian Americans for Obama
 Ann Kobayashi, HI, Honolulu City Councilmember
 Russell Kokubun, HI, State Senator
 Raja Krishnamoorthi, IL, Deputy Treasurer for Policy and Programs, State of Illinois
 Dave Kumar, D.C., Attorney, Goldberg, Godles, Wiener & Wright
 David Lang, CA, Principal, Lang/Pan/Chan Public Relations
 Russell Leong, CA, Editor, Amerasia Journal UCLA
 Henry Lo, CA, Garvey School Board Vice President
 Monica Macer, CA, Television and Feature Screenwriter
 Michael Magaoay, HI, State Representative and House Majority Whip
 Theresa Mah, IL, Assistant Director and Lecturer, Center for the Study of Race, Politics and Culture, University of Chicago and Board Member and Chicago Chapter Coordinator, Asian Pacific Americans for Progress (APAP)
 Zachariah Mampilly, CA, Assistant Professor, Political Science, Vassar College
 Hydra Mendoza, CA, Commissioner, San Francisco Board of Education
 Ken Mok, CA, President of 10 x 10 Entertainment
 Hung Nguyen, D.C., Chair, Asian American Advisory Board and Former President of the National Congress of Vietnamese Americans
 Clarence Nishihara, HI, State Senator
 Catherine Park, CA, Chief Operating Officer of Giant Robot
 Jan Pastores, IA, Community Activist
 Anthoni Patel, CA, Writer
 Robert Plang, IA, Community Activist
 Sunil Puri, IL, President, First Rockford
 Rahul Rajkumar, MA, Physician, Brigham and Women's Hospital
 Anita Ramasastry, WA, Law Professor
 Scott Saiki, HI, State Representative
 Norman Sakamoto, HI, State Senator and Senate Majority Whip
 Rahul Sharma, IL, Founder of Funkades
 Pramod Shah, IL, Niles Township Trustee
 Woon-Wah Siu, IL, Attorney, Bell, Boyd & Lloyd LLP
 Mora Mi-ok Stephens, CA, Activist and Award-winning Filmmaker
 Cary Tagawa, HI, Actor
 Christina Tchen, IL, Partner, Skadden Arps
 Vinai Thummalapally, CO, President, Mam-A Inc.

Nancy Tom, IL, Director, Center for Asian Arts and Media, Columbia College

Emme Tomingbang, HI, Television Personality

Glenn Wakai, HI, State Representative

Eddie Wong, CA, Executive Director of the Center for Asian American Media

Martin Wong, Co-Editor, Giant Robot Magazine

Swallow Yan, IA, Business Owner

Janet Yang, CA, Film Producer and Producer, Joy Luck Club

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama news in the early states (2007-10-29 11:28)

Obama for America has a new television ad airing in Iowa as part of their early state strategy.

Click on the graphic below to see a video of the ad that deals with fixing Social Security.

X

In Nevada, the campaign is working to recruit precinct captains for walks, phone-banking and other grassroots work. There is also a Latino radio campaign in the state.

Two television ads are airing in New Hampshire, "Choices " and "Conventional."

X

X

In South Carolina, Obama just finished a gospel concert tour, "Embrace the Change."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama: Show restraint on Iran (2007-10-29 16:41)

In an interview with the Des Moines Register, Barack Obama urged restraint in dealing with Iran.

"Typically, we have made our biggest blunders when we overreached militarily, and we have had our greatest foreign policy successes ... where we showed restraint," Obama said.

The Illinois senator has recently drawn a sharp contrast between his position on Iran and that of Sen. Hillary Clinton, who recently voted to declare Iran's Revolutionary Guard a terrorist organization. Many observers see the move as the first step toward military conflict with the Islamic nation.

Barack boogies with Ellen DeGeneres [EMBED]

IFRAME: <http://link.brightcove.com/services/player/bcpid1272266643>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

A new Barack Obama in tonight's debate? (2007-10-30 11:35)

Supporters and observers will be watching tonight's MSNBC debate to see if Barack Obama comes out swinging against Hillary Clinton.

Many believe that the time is right for Obama to clearly separate himself from Clinton on certain matters particularly with reference to the Iraq War and Iran.

Although their policies on an Iraq withdrawal look nearly the same, Obama still needs to convince folks he is more believable as an Iraq War opponent.

Obama picked up some more today when John Hutson, Dean of Franklin Pierce Law Center and former Judge Advocate General of the U.S. Navy endorsed his candidacy.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

All Quiet on Obama Front (2007-10-30 14:56)

According to The New Republic blog, the Obama camp is far from scared of the polls showing Hillary Clinton dominating against a field of hapless wannabes.

Iowa, they say, Iowa is the key.

The early states leading up to South Carolina will be a battle for the progressive camp regardless even if Hillary wins many of these early states.

At some point, probably either Barack Obama or John Edwards, with Bill Richardson having an outside shot, will emerge as the heir apparent.

When and if this happens, the winner will likely start siphoning votes from the other practical progressives very fast.

Then there's that big jello-like glob of voters who don't decide on a candidate until the last minute. They are usually deeply impressed in their thinking by the performance of the candidates in the early states.

Now, losing Iowa alone will not likely sink Hillary's experienced team. However, Obama's handlers believe it could be the start of a multi-stage process leading to her defeat. At the very least, Iowa can set the stage for narrowing down the field to two viable candidates.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Debate reviews (2007-10-31 11:08)

Here is a gleanings of news reviews from last night's debate compiled by Sarah Ramey and Gary Brooks of the official barackobama.com blog:

Associated Press

X

...Barack Obama...sharply challenged Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton's candor, consistency and judgment Tuesday in a televised debate that underscored her front-runner status two months before the first presidential primary votes.

Obama, the Illinois senator, began immediately, saying Clinton has changed her positions on the North American Free Trade Agreement, torture policies and the Iraq war. Leadership, he said, does not mean "changing positions whenever it's politically convenient."

Washington Post

X

Sen. Barack Obama...criticized [Hillary Clinton] directly for not releasing her correspondence as first lady. But he kept his cool demeanor, describing her tendency toward secrecy as simply "a problem."

Obama pursued Clinton most pointedly over her White House papers, most of which are still locked away in her husband's presidential library in Little Rock. She said that she had approved the release of the papers, a point that national archivists dispute.

"We have just gone through one of the most secretive administrations in our history, and not releasing, I think, these records at the same time, Hillary, that you're making the claim that this is the basis for your experience, I think, is a problem," Obama said.

Politico

POLITICO

The heart of Clinton's case was that if Republicans hate her, she must be doing something right. But Obama came back sharper.

"Part of the reason Republicans are obsessed with you, Hillary, is I think that's a fight they're very comfortable having," he responded, adding that "what we don't need is another eight years of bickering."

Obama's criticisms were about philosophy and process; about another eight years of polarizing politics; about the approach to the issue, rather than the issue itself. Twice at the end he showed his sense of humor – very effectively.

It is too soon to tell whether Obama sufficiently abandoned his inner McClellan to satisfy some of his allies and pacify his donors. He may not have met the expectations of the press, but those expectations are fairly ethereal. Obama will argue against Clinton on his own terms; he will not throw sound bites at her. He does not lack the fortitude to craft a zinger, he just doesn't, as a matter of course, like to traffic in them – they are too base, too customary, too politics-as-usual for him. There is a reason why Obama only compared Clinton's foreign policy to Bush-Cheney Lite once – he felt he had gone to too far. So – on his own terms, yes, Obama did not temporize and drew strong contrasts with Clinton.

Los Angeles Times

[Bill Clinton], Russert pointed out, has specifically requested the National Archives to delay any such release [of Hillary Clinton's records of her activities as first lady] for several years. "Would you lift that ban?" Russert asked.

"Well, that's not my decision to make...[b]ut certainly we'll move as quickly as our circumstances and the processes of the National Archives permits."

An answer guaranteed to make most eyes glaze over. But Obama effectively jumped in, noting that on one hand Clinton stresses her experience as first lady, while on the other she takes a passive approach to allowing a thorough examination of her activities during those years.

"Part of what we have to do is invite the American people back to participate in their government again," Obama said. "Part of what we need to do is rebuild trust in our government again. And that means being open and transparent and accountable to the American people."

POLITICO

This debate ended wacky, with a question to Kucinich about his UFO sighting, which he confirmed, and joked about.

That handed Obama his best spontaneous moment, in response to a question about life beyond earth.

"What I know is there's life here on Earth, and we're not attending to life here on Earth," he said.

The Telegraph

A Navy judge advocate general and lifelong Republican endorsed Sen. Barack Obama's Democratic presidential campaign Tuesday.

John Hutson is also dean of Franklin Pierce Law Center in Concord.

During a conference call with reporters, Hutson praised Obama's early opposition to the war in Iraq and said he's the best candidate to restore America's moral standing in the world.

House Democrats sharply criticized the head of the Justice Department's voting section yesterday for making a series of racially charged statements, including his suggestion that black voters are not hurt as much as whites by voter identification laws because "they die first."

Tanner's testimony followed a series of remarks this month that have caused a political uproar and led to calls from some Democrats, including senator and presidential hopeful Barack Obama (Ill.), that Tanner resign or be fired.

MSNBC - (Howard Fineman): She talked about the process. And also that was the one time where Obama turned toward her, what we used to call in old debate language, the pivot, remember that? He turned toward her and he said look, this will not stand because if you're claiming the presidency based on your being the first lady, you've got to come clean on that. I thought that was his best debating point that he's made in any of these debates so far."

ABC News - Political Radar (Jake Tapper): I think Obama's having a pretty good night. LINK

Fox News (Major Garrett): [On Social Security] ...Obama took the question and enlarged it both philosophically and tangibly. ...Thus, Obama trumped the stage by giving his tax policy a philosophic core (help young earners and cash-pinched retirees), while taxing the rich with either higher income or payroll taxes. Obama's best substantive moment, by quite some distance. LINK

Atlantic - Marc Ambinder: Bottom line, before all the analysis: ...Barack Obama's were more resonant... LINK

ABC News - Political Radar: "You asked me if I would pledge, and I have pledged." - Clinton, sounding, shall we say, Clintonian. Then Obama gets a bit deeper: "We have been governed by fear these past six years." THERE is the link to his campaign message that was missing earlier this evening. It does seem like the Obama camp has plotted this out a good bit this evening. LINK

Washington Post - The Fix (Chris Cillizza) "Obama: We Will Not Be Governed by Fear": ...It was a nice moment for Obama especially because both Clinton and Edwards, whose answers had preceded his own, simply said they would do everything in their power to keep Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon. These debates are about creating opportunities and taking advantage of them. Obama just did it. LINK

Washington Post - The Fix (Chris Cillizza): ...Obama Scores on His Background LINK

New York Times - The Caucus (Katharine Seelye): Alternative Minimum Tax - 10:39 p.m. ...Mr. Obama also said he would not campaign on the Rangel plan, but here he made a smart tactical move, turning the discussion to problems faced not by the richest people in the country but by struggling single mothers. LINK

Huffington Post: Glynnis (9:48:12 PM): The reason the GOP is focusing on You is cause that's the fight they're comfortable having...Obama steps out of the corner!! LINK

New York Times - The Caucus (Katharine Seelye): Licenses for Undocumented Immigrants - 10:58 p.m. ...Mr. Obama uttered a devastating phrase for anyone who remembers the 2004 campaign: he said he couldn't tell if she is "for it or against it." LINK

Frank Luntz' focus group of Fox judged Obama the debate winner:
[EMBED]

Clip from the debate [EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack's plan to stop violence against women (2007-10-31 20:49)

Barack Obama has a new plan to help tackle the problem of violence against women.

Read Barack's op-ed – then share it with your friends

Violence against women, at home and abroad, must cease

Chicago Defender | October 31, 2007

By Senator Barack Obama

President Bush has an opportunity to assert America's moral leadership in the aftermath of last week's meeting with President Joseph Kabila of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). President Bush should seize it by stepping up efforts to stop the epidemic of sexual violence in the DRC – an epidemic that is similarly devastating places like Darfur, where rape is the weapon of choice.

In recent years, tens of thousands of women and girls have been raped, tortured, and assaulted in the DRC by disgruntled soldiers and bands of marauders. One expert says this is so common in some places that it is "almost normal."

The decision to stop the violence rests with the Congolese, but the United States has a number of options – many of which were included in legislation I helped pass last year and addressed in a letter I sent to Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice earlier this month. These options range from making U.S. support contingent on Congolese efforts to stop the violence and care for the victims to building a coalition of donor nations to pressure the DRC into action. President Bush should make it clear that no diplomatic option is off the table.

But asserting America's moral leadership abroad requires more than strong, principled diplomacy. It requires setting a better example by stopping the violence that's committed against women here at home. One in four women suffers from domestic violence in her lifetime. In 2005, over 175,000 women reported being victims of rape or sexual assault. These statistics are numbing; they are also heartbreaking.

And yet, they only dimly reflect the full scale of the problem. Too often, women fear their stories of abuse will not be believed or blame themselves, and as a result, they don't come forward. But while a crime can go unreported, its consequences cannot be undone.

Use this form to share the op-ed with your friends:

To:

[illegible]

Enter up to 10 email addresses above, separated by commas.

[BUTTON]

Your Email:

Your First Name: _____

Your Last Name:

Subject: _____

Message: _____

[illegible]

Abuse scars not only the victim but her loved ones, sending currents of violence that ripple across our society. Right now, a woman who's fled an abuser is living on the streets, wondering how long it will be before she has to turn to crime or prostitution to feed herself. Down the street, a child has shut the door and buried his head under the pillow so he doesn't have to hear his mother's cries, and there's a good chance he will grow up to be an abuser just like his father.

Government has a critical role to play in stopping this cycle of violence. Over the course of more than a decade in elective office, I have fought to assist the victims of sexual assault. And this is a commitment I will carry with me to the White House. As President, I will pass my plan to provide millions of dollars to strengthen programs aimed at preventing domestic violence and caring for those affected by it. I will also expand government efforts to offer domestic violence counseling in urban areas. And I will ensure that we fully fund the Violence Against Women Act, an important piece of legislation that I commend my colleague Senator Joe Biden for drafting.

We also need to ensure job security for victims of sexual assault, up to half of whom report losing their jobs as a result of being attacked. In Illinois, I led the fight to ensure that victims could seek shelter or treatment without losing their jobs, passing one of the strongest job protection laws in the nation. As President, I will make this a federal law. And I will expand the Family and Medical Leave Act to give additional job security to victims who need to take time off.

Finally, combating this problem demands a sustained high-level commitment. That is why, as President, I will appoint a special advisor who will report to me regularly on issues related to violence against women. This advisor will ensure that our agenda is coordinated across federal agencies, and fully implemented.

But government cannot stop a husband from striking his wife, or a woman from being assaulted on a deserted street. Ultimately, this problem has to be addressed by neighbors who are willing to report suspected crimes and by families who are willing to help loved ones come out of the darkness of isolation and into the light of justice. And we can all do our part by discussing this issue in public until we break down the stigma that still stops so many women from coming forward and bring about a change in the misogynistic attitudes that foster this violence.

Let's stop treating this as just a woman's issue. Whether it's hundreds of thousands of women being brutalized in the United States and around the world, or just a single friend whose boyfriend took advantage of her one night – when a woman is attacked on account of her gender, it is a human rights issue. And so long as it continues, the conscience of our nation cannot rest.

Download the Full Plan

Click here to read the op-ed from the Chicago Defender

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

1.11 November

Former SC chief justice, Durham mayor endorse Obama (2007-11-02 14:28)

South Carolina's former Supreme Court chief justice and the mayor of Durham, North Carolina have cast their lots with Barack Obama's candidacy.

Ernest Finney, South Carolina's first black state Supreme Court chief justice since Reconstruction, told The Associated Press that the Illinois senator's views on education helped him make up his mind.

Durham Mayor Bill Bell gave Obama his endorsement on Thursday.

"Obama brings a different dimension to the campaign and the country in terms of his vision, the energy he has and his ideas," Bell said in an interview with The Associated Press. "He was out front in opposing the Iraq War and I think that conflict probably the biggest damage that this country has experienced."

Watch the latest videos on YouTube.com

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2007-11-03 12:29)

Here is the speech delivered by Sen. Barack Obama in Spartanburg, South Carolina.

Remarks of Senator Barack Obama: A Change We Can Believe In
Spartanburg, SC | November 03, 2007

One year from now, you will have the chance to walk into a voting booth, pull back the curtain, and choose the next President of the United States.

Here's the good news - for the first time in a long time, the name George Bush will not appear on the ballot. The name Dick Cheney will not appear on the ballot. The era of Scooter Libby justice, and Brownie incompetence, and the Karl Rove politics of fear and cynicism will be over.

But the question you will have to ask yourselves when you pick up your ballot a year from today is, "What next?" How do we repair the enormous damage of these dismal years and recapture that sense of common purpose that has seen America through our toughest times?

I'm running for President because I believe we find ourselves in a moment of great challenge and great promise - a moment that comes along once in a generation.

It's a moment of challenge because America is less safe and less respected than at any time in recent history. We are more dependent on oil from dictators and closer to the day when climate change becomes a climate catastrophe.

In the midst of great prosperity, families all across this country feel further from the American Dream. You know this from your own lives. Most Americans are working harder for less and paying more for health care and college than ever before. It's harder to save. Harder to retire. And the policies of the last seven years have added to that unfairness.

George Bush said whatever the politics of the moment required in order to get elected in 2000. And those seven years of broken promises have left the American people with less trust in their leaders and less faith in their government than they have in years.

We were promised compassion and conservatism but we got Katrina and wiretaps.

We were promised a uniter, but we got a divider who couldn't even lead the half of the country who voted for him.

We were promised a kinder, gentler Washington but got a town that's more bitter, secretive, and corrupt than ever before. And the only mission ever accomplished was using fear and falsehoods to take us to a war that should've never been authorized and never been waged.

This catastrophic failure of leadership has led us to a moment where it's not just Democrats who are listening to what we have to say, but Independents and Republicans who have never been more disillusioned with what the state of our leadership in Washington has done to this country.

That's why this is also a moment of great promise. It's a chance to turn the page by offering the American people a fundamentally different choice in 2008 - not just in the policies we offer, but in the kind of leadership we offer. It's a chance to come together and finally solve the challenges that were made worse by George Bush, but existed long before he took office - challenges like health care and energy and education that we haven't met for decades because of a political system in Washington that has failed the American people.

And that's what this debate in our party right now is all about.

Much has been said about the exchanges between Senator Clinton and myself this week. Now, understand that Hillary Clinton is a colleague and a friend. She's also a skilled politician, and she's run what Washington would call a "textbook" campaign. But the problem is the textbook itself.

It's a textbook that's all about winning elections, but says nothing about how to bring the country together to solve problems. As we saw in the debate last week, it encourages vague, calculated answers to suit the politics of the moment, instead of clear, consistent principles about how you would lead America. It teaches you that you can promise progress for everyday people while striking a bargain with the very special interests who crowd them out.

Now, Senator Clinton is certainly not the only one in Washington to play this game. It's gone on for years, and I understand the reasoning behind it. It's a game that usually gets politicians where they need to go. But I don't believe it gets America where we need to go. When it comes to issues like war and diplomacy; energy and health care, I don't believe we can bring about real change if all we do is change our positions based on what's popular or politically convenient. If we are going to seize this moment of challenge and promise, the American people deserve more when they head to the voting booth in 2008.

I believe that our party has made the most difference in people's lives and the life of this country when we have led not by polls but by principle; not by calculation but by conviction; when we've been able to summon the entire nation to a common purpose - a higher purpose. That's how Roosevelt led us through war and lifted us from depression. It's how Kennedy called on a new generation to ask what they could do for America. And I am running for the Democratic nomination for President of the United States because that's the kind of leadership America needs right now.

I don't pretend to be a perfect man, and I will not be a perfect President. But I am in this race because I believe that if we want to break from the failures of the past and finally make progress as a country, we can't keep telling different people what we think they want to hear - we have to tell every American what they need to know. We have to be honest about the challenges we face.

When I called for higher fuel standards so we could reduce our dependence on foreign oil, I didn't say it to some environmental group in California - I said it in front of automakers in Detroit. When I called for corporate responsibility so that middle-class Americans could get a tax cut, I said it in front of CEOs on Wall Street. And when I was invited to speak out against George Bush's plan to invade Iraq as a Senate candidate five years ago, I didn't listen to those who warned me that it was politically risky position to take, I listened to my gut, and I said loud and clear that this was the wrong war at the wrong time and Congress should stand up and say so.

That's the kind of leadership we need right now. That's why I'm this race. Because I don't think you should settle for a President who's only there for you when it's easy or convenient or popular - I think you deserve a President who's willing to fight for you every hour of every day for the next four years.

That's the change we can offer in 2008 - not change as a slogan, but change we can believe in.

One year from now, we have the chance to tell all those corporate lobbyists that the days of them setting the agenda in Washington are over. I have done more to take on lobbyists than any other candidate in this race - and I've won. I don't take a dime of their money, and when I am President, they won't find a job in my White House. Because real change isn't another four years of defending lobbyists who don't represent real Americans - it's standing with working Americans who have seen their jobs disappear and their wages decline and their hope for the future slip further and further away. That's the change we can offer in 2008.

When I am President, I will end the tax giveaways to companies that ship our jobs overseas, and I will put the money in the pockets of working Americans, and seniors, and homeowners who deserve a break. I won't wait ten years to raise the minimum wage - I'll raise it to keep pace every single year. And if American workers are being denied their right to organize when I'm in the White House, I will put on a comfortable pair of shoes and I will walk on that picket line with you as President of the United States.

One year from now, we can stop campaigning on the outrage of 47 million uninsured Americans and finally start doing something about it. I reformed health care in Illinois, and I didn't do it alone - I did it by reaching out to Democrats and Republicans. We took on the insurance industry, and we won. That's how I'll pass a universal health care bill that allows every American to get the same kind of health care that members of Congress get for themselves and cuts every family's premiums by up to $2500. And mark my words - I will sign this bill by the end of my first term as President. That's the change we can offer in 2008.

One year from now, we can stop sending our children down corridors of shame and start putting them on a pathway to success. When I am President, we will stop passing bills called No Child Left Behind that leave the money behind and start making real investments in education from cradle to adulthood. That means early childhood education. That means recruiting an army of new teachers, and paying them better, and supporting them more so they're not just teaching to test, but teaching to teach. And it means finally putting a college education within reach of every American. That's the change we can offer in 2008.

One year from now, we can stop sending hundreds of millions of dollars to dictators for their oil while we melt the polar ice caps in the bargain. I will raise our fuel standards, and put a cap on carbon emissions to reduce them 80 % by 2050. We'll tell polluters that they have to pay for their pollution, because they don't own the skies, the American people own the skies. And we'll use the money to invest in the clean, renewable fuels that are our future. That's the change we can offer in 2008.

In this election, we have the chance to turn the page on the last six years of being told that the only way for Democrats to look tough on national security is to talk, and act, and vote like George Bush Republicans.

When I'm your nominee, my opponent won't be able to say that I was for the war in Iraq before I was against it; or that I supported an extension of the Iraq war into Iran; or that I support the Bush-Cheney diplomacy of not talking to leaders we don't like. And he won't be able to say that I flip-flopped on something as fundamental as whether our nation should use torture. Because we are not a nation that makes excuses for torture, we are a nation that rejects it. That's the change we can offer in 2008.

When I am President, I will end this war in Iraq. I will bring our troops home within sixteen months. I'll finish the fight against al Qaeda in Afghanistan. And I will lead the world against the common threats of the 21st century - nuclear weapons and terrorism; climate change and poverty; genocide and disease. That's what Democrats must stand for, and that's what America must stand for. And I'll be a President who finally sends a message to the black, white, and brown faces beyond our shores; from the halls of power to the huts of Africa that says, "You matter to America. Your future is our future. And our moment is now."

America, our moment is now. Now is our chance to turn the page. Now is our chance to write a new chapter.

I am in this race because I don't want to see us spend the next year re-fighting the Washington battles of the 1990s. I don't want to pit Blue America against Red America, I want to lead a United States of America. I don't want this election to be about the past, because if it's about the future, we all win. If this election is about whether or not to end this war, or pass universal health care, or make more college affordable, it won't just be a Democratic victory; it will be an American victory.

That's the victory this country needs right now. This election and this moment are too important to settle for what we already know. The time has come to reach for what we know is possible.

I am not running for this office to fulfill any long-held plans or because I believe it is somehow owed to me. I never expected to be here, and I always knew the journey would be improbable. I've never been on one that wasn't.

I am running because of what Dr. King called "the fierce urgency of now." I am running because I do believe there's such a thing as being too late. And that hour is almost here.

I'm running because I don't want to wake up one morning four years from now, and turn on one of those cable talk shows, and see that Washington is still stuck in the same food fight it's been in for over a decade. I don't want to see that more Americans lost their health care and fell into bankruptcy because we let the insurance industry spend millions to stop us for yet another year. I don't want to see that.

I don't want to see that the oceans rose another few inches and the planet has reached the point of no return because we couldn't find a way to stop ourselves from buying oil from dictators. I don't want to see that.

I don't want to see that we risked more American lives in another misguided war because no one had the judgment to ask the tough questions before we sent our troops to fight. I don't want to see that.

I don't want to see homeless veterans on the street. I don't want to send another generation of children through corridors of shame. I don't want this future for my daughters and I do not accept this future for America. It is time to turn the page.

I run for the presidency for the same reason I drove halfway across the country over two decades ago to bring jobs to the jobless and hope to the hopeless on the streets of Chicago; for the same reason I stood up for justice and equality as a civil rights lawyer; for the same reason I've fought for Illinois families for over a decade. Because I will never forget that the only reason I am standing here today is because someone, somewhere stood up when it wasn't popular, when it was risky; when it was hard. And because that someone stood up, a few more did. And then a few thousand. And then a few million. And together, they changed the world.

That's why I run in this election. I run to give my children and their children the same chances that someone, somewhere gave me. I run so that a year from today, there is a chance that the world will look at America differently, and that America will look at itself differently. And I run to keep the promise of the United States of America alive for all those who still hunger for opportunity and thirst for equality and long to believe again.

That is the change that's possible in this election. That is the moment I want to seize as President. And I ask you all to join me in this journey. Thank you.

As Prepared for delivery

Watch the latest videos on YouTube.com

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

'One brick at a time' (2007-11-03 16:43)

Barack Obama gave an inspiring speech on working for the future of our children at the Clarendon County Court House in South Carolina yesterday.

Currently, Obama is blanketing Nevada and South Carolina with radio ads, but is reserving television campaigns so far only to Iowa and New Hampshire.

[EMBED]

Watch the latest videos on YouTube.com

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

NH SEIU may reendorse Obama (2007-11-04 12:24)

New Hampshire's SEIU endorsement might eventually go to Barack Obama after all when the union's convention reconvenes on Nov. 17.

The short version of all this is that the union's executive board voted Oct 23 to endorse Obama, 7-5. The Associated Press reported last week that the union actually called Obama to tell him the news.

Barack Obama speaking in Charlottesville, South Carolina

[EMBED]

Watch the latest videos on YouTube.com

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2007-11-04 13:44)

Barack Obama made a surprise appearance on Saturday Night Live last night and didn't miss the chance to lampoon opponent Hillary Clinton. Watch the video:

Barack and Michelle will appear with Grammy Award winning singer John Legend at a Nov. 10 rally in Des Moines, Iowa.

Watch the latest videos on YouTube.com

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Althouse: "I would say, 'Go, Obama, you're black enough for me.'" (2007-11-04 20:57)

Althouse: "I would say, 'Go, Obama, you're black enough for me.'"

It's not entirely clear who started the whole debate over whether Obama is black enough or not.

The media and blogs certainly have picked up this theme though.

Obama has been campaigning hard in South Carolina lately with its major black voting population, and continues to receive high level endorsements from black elected officials. Most recently, Massachusetts Gov. Deval Patrick, Columbus mayor Mike Coleman and Durham mayor Bill Bell have voiced their support for Obama.

In the end, it will likely be the perception of Obama's stand on the issues rather than his color that will decide the votes of most voters, whatever their own hue.

Watch the latest videos on YouTube.com

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Handicapping Obama (2007-11-05 08:53)

If we just look at the polls, then candidate Barack Obama might seem like a real long shot right now. He would not be the horse to bet on.

However, in early Democratic polls historically are not very accurate. By "early," you could make the argument that any poll other than the actual voting is early! For example, if you would have bet on the winner of the last Democratic primary election based on polling just a week before Iowa, you would have lost.

Not only was the national polling wrong, even the polling for Iowa turned out way off the mark.

When election time is at hand, the spotlight on the candidate's becomes that much brighter. People start really thinking about who they want to support. The weaknesses and strengths of the different candidates, at least the appearance of those qualities, starts to weigh heavily on the mind.

Issues that are important to the voting population, like the Iraq War and the economy, will likely take center stage depending on how the different campaigns frame the issues. Also, the media, including bloggers, play a role as to which issues take the commanding role.

Hillary Clinton probably has the most experienced, established campaign staff and quite a lot of external organizational support. John Edwards is amassing good support from organized labor. Barack Obama arguably has the younger, most innovative team behind him.

Barack seems to have lower negatives than the other front-runners and less unfavorable history. That could make a difference when the election is actually at hand. To me, the race is much closer than indicated by the polls.

Washington Post/ABC Poll

10/29 - 11/1, 2007

Fav/Unfav

Obama 51 / 36

Clinton 50 / 46

Edwards 49 / 35

Giuliani 50 / 40

McCain 43 / 42

Thompson 33 / 37

Romney 28 / 41

Huckabee 21 / 30

Of course, this is also only a poll. But I think things could get worse for Clinton and to a lesser extent Edwards as game time approaches because of their history particularly on the Iraq War.

A lot depends on how the Obama team's Iowa strategy works. They've invested a lot of time and resources in this state. If he comes in first or second, maybe third if the race is extremely tight and Hillary is not on top, I think he has a good chance. Otherwise, he becomes a big underdog.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Scatablog: Obama: passing the torch to a new generation? (2007-11-05 18:14)

Scatablog: Obama: passing the torch to a new generation?

Scatablog asks why Republicans hate Hillary Clinton so much while having overall a rather favorable view of Barack Obama .

The dislike of Clinton is related probably to her connection to Bill Clinton or "Slick Willie" as the Republicans sometimes call him.

Republicans claim that Bill was responsible for the highly divisive environment in Washington that today is preventing Congress from getting anything done.

The last time Congress was able to set aside political differences to any meaningful degree was back when Tip O'Neil was Speaker of the House.

Whether Clinton actually started the animosity is debatable. However, Hillary remains a highly-polarizing figure because of her husband. Although Bill and George Sr. are now pretty good buddies, many ground-level Republicans still hold a grudge against Clinton, or actually the Clintons.

One question the Obama campaign asks is whether Hillary as president will be able to break through the current gridlock that exists in Washington or whether instead the fireworks will only get worse.

This may explain the following news release from the campaign today:

Today 268 Iowa Republicans announced that they will caucus for Senator Barack Obama and 68 New Hampshire Republicans announced that they had changed their party registration to vote for Barack Obama in the primary, saying he is the only candidate in either party who can break through the gridlock in Washington because he has a proven record of bringing Republicans and Democrats together to solve problems. In Illinois, Obama bridged the partisan divide to extend health care to 150,000 Illinois families, pass a $100 million tax cut for working families and enact historic ethics reform.

"With all of the challenges our country faces, we cannot elect a President who will go to Washington and just get bogged down by the same partisan gridlock," Brett Blix said. "That's why I'm supporting Senator Obama even though I'm a Republican. He's the only candidate in either party with a record of bringing Republicans and Democrats together to solve problems, and he will always tell you where he stands even when you disagree. There are thousands of disaffected Republicans like me who are disappointed by President Bush and the Republican presidential candidates who would consider voting for a Democrat who can bring about change we can believe in."

Brett Blix is 30-year-old Iraq war veteran from Northwood, Iowa. He recently switched his party registration so that he can caucus for Senator Obama.

"I've been a Republican all my life, but the challenges we face are too great to choose a candidate based on his party—we need to choose the candidate who can bring fundamental change to Washington and start getting things done again," Jerry Spivak said. "Barack Obama is the only candidate who will be able to break the partisan logjam and inspire Americans to come together around real solutions."

Jerry Spivak is a 57-year-old engineer from Nashua, New Hampshire. He recently switched his party registration so that he can vote for Senator Obama in the primary.

This public support from Republicans is yet another sign of Senator Obama's crossover appeal. Previously, Obama received third place in a poll of Republican Iowa caucus goers – receiving more support from Republicans than Mike Huckabee, John McCain and Sam Brownback combined.

"I've always believed that you can only bring about real change when people come together across party lines, and I've seen what happens when folks put politics aside and get down to work," Senator Obama said. "If you can't bring people together across the old fault lines, you simply aren't going to be able to make progress on the challenges we face."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Manning Civil Rights Speech (2007-11-06 08:29)

[EMBED]

USA Today

When Sen. Barack Obama took to the steps of the Clarendon County Courthouse in Manning, S.C., Friday to give a speech on civil rights, the symbolism of the location was as chilling as the unspoken reason for his address.

It was in Clarendon County that a 1948 lawsuit was filed by a black farmer whose children had to walk miles to school while white students were provided free bus transportation. That suit launched a legal campaign that culminated six years later in the Supreme Court's historic Brown v. Board of Education decision that outlawed school segregation.

"It would have been easy for them to stay home. To heed the voices of caution and convenience that said,

'wait,' 'the timing isn't right,' or 'the country just isn't ready.' It would have been easy for them to give in to the fears that no doubt kept them awake some nights," the Illinois senator said of the blacks who went to court to end the racial imbalances in the county's school system.

"Now, I've heard that some folks aren't sure America is ready for an African-American president, so let me be clear," he told his mostly black audience. "I never would have begun this campaign if I weren't confident I could win. But you see, I am not asking anyone to take a chance on me. I am asking you to take a chance on your own aspirations."

...a victory by Obama in the race to become the Democratic nominee would put a black man in position to take the helm of the world's most powerful nation.

...No one should back away from supporting him out of fear that his race might cause others to reject his candidacy — or cause him harm.

Had blacks in Clarendon County been afraid to confront their fears, they would not have made the history that changed this nation for the better.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

The Case for Obama (2007-11-06 14:17)

Barack Obama's campaign launched a new radio ad on 36 stations across the state of South Carolina. The ad is entitled "Difference." Here's the script:

"Difference"

Script:

Sen. Barack Obama:

I'm Barack Obama and I approved this message.

My father left when I was two. I only saw him once after that. My mother did her best, struggling to take care of my sister and me. But it's hard to heal that hole in your heart.

I think about that when I see young boys running loose on the streets of our community, without that male role model...without opportunity, hope or direction.

It's not a hurricane— just another disaster Washington can't see.

The stakes are so high in this election. Millions of our kids attend failing, underfunded schools. Too many young black men in prison, too few in college. Even in the middle of the world's richest country, so many are left behind.

Unless we try something different, we're going to get the same old results; the same tinkering at the edges. The same unkept promises.

This is Barack Obama.

We must change the ways of Washington to bring jobs and better schools and health care to America's forgotten places.

That's why I'm running for President, South Carolina. Join me.

Paid for by Obama for America

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama begins swing through Iowa (2007-11-07 14:59)

Barack Obama launched a five-day circuit through Iowa with a speech in Bettendorf entitled "Reclaiming the American Dream."

Specific points of Obama's plan to help working families include:

- Provide a middle class tax cut of up to $1,000 for working families, and eliminate the income tax for retirees making less than $50,000 per year.
- Address the challenge of balancing work and family by guaranteeing workers paid sick days, expanding the Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA), supporting paid FMLA, and doubling funding for after-school programs.
- Help Americans buy and keep their homes.
- Protect American families by reforming bankruptcy laws, predatory credit card policies, and abusive payday lending practices.
- Reduce health care costs by $2,500 for a typical family.
- Strengthen retirement security by automatically enrolling workers in portable retirement accounts and providing additional incentives for Americans to save.
- Put the cost of college in reach by providing a $4,000 refundable tax credit available at the time of enrollment, and create a Community College Partnership Program to strengthen this vital resource for American students.

The highlight of the Iowa visit is the Pre-JJ Rally on Nov. 10 with singer John Legend.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2007-11-07 16:56)

"I really believe we are at a critical moment when it comes to rural America. Over the next several years, we are going to determine whether or not rural America is empowered to join in a broader prosperity, or whether Washington continues policies that leave rural communities behind. That's why I've introduced a rural agenda that shows the kind of leadership that is needed if we are going to make progress. The focus of the plan revolves around me listening to the concerns of rural Nevadans and rural Americans across the country."

Barack Obama Monday, November 6, 2007

Las Vegas, NV – Senator Barack Obama unveiled his “Real Leadership for Rural Nevada” plan today on a conference call with reporters. The plan was crafted with the input of Nevadans from across the state who Obama and his campaign have spoken with over the course of the last several months.

Listen to the Conference Call with Senator Barack Obama: [EMBED]

“For far too long, politicians entrenched in Washington have listened to special interests while shutting out rural Americans. The result is policies that work for corporate interests, but against rural communities,” said Obama.

Obama is calling for new initiatives to support rural economic development, improve the quality of life for rural communities and promote America's leadership in the development of renewable energy.

“We need to seize opportunities in rural America to secure our energy future and save our planet. The research and development that has already taken place in Nevada will be critical to advancing this initiative and tapping resources in rural communities,” Obama said.

During his conference call with Nevada reporters, Obama specifically discussed his policies to strengthen the mining industry, improve rural health care including veterans' health care, combat the methamphetamine crisis and support Nevada's family ranchers.

“We need to give a hand to the next generation of ranchers, so they get the skills and incentives they need to help them afford their first ranch, and we need to stop tilting the scales against family ranchers,” said Obama. “I support a packer ban and strict enforcement of antimonopoly laws, because when meatpackers own livestock, they can drive down prices and manipulate markets.”

The plan can be viewed in full HERE.

Obama: Leadership for Rural Nevada (2007-11-08 11:51)

According to Obama 's one-state-at-a-time strategy, the campaign cannot overlook the state of Nevada after Iowa in anticipation of the first primary-style poll in New Hampshire. Nevada looks more like the nation demographically than Iowa, so every candidate would want to look strong in that state.

Yesterday, Obama released his “Real Leadership for Rural Nevada” plan:

”I really believe we are at a critical moment when it comes to rural America. Over the next several years, we are going to determine whether or not rural America is empowered to join in a broader prosperity, or whether Washington continues policies that leave rural communities behind. That’s why I’ve introduced a rural agenda that shows the kind of leadership that is needed if we are going to make progress. The focus of the plan revolves around me listening to the concerns of rural Nevadans and rural Americans across the country.”

Barack Obama Monday, November 6, 2007

Las Vegas, NV – Senator Barack Obama unveiled his “Real Leadership for Rural Nevada” plan today on a conference call with reporters. The plan was crafted with the input of Nevadans from across the state who Obama and his campaign have spoken with over the course of the last several months.

Listen to the Conference Call with Senator Barack Obama: [\[EMBED\]](#)

“For far too long, politicians entrenched in Washington have listened to special interests while shutting out rural Americans. The result is policies that work for corporate interests, but against rural communities,” said Obama.

Obama is calling for new initiatives to support rural economic development, improve the quality of life for rural communities and promote America's leadership in the development of renewable energy.

"We need to seize opportunities in rural America to secure our energy future and save our planet. The research and development that has already taken place in Nevada will be critical to advancing this initiative and tapping resources in rural communities," Obama said.

During his conference call with Nevada reporters, Obama specifically discussed his policies to strengthen the mining industry, improve rural health care including veterans' health care, combat the methamphetamine crisis and support Nevada's family ranchers.

"We need to give a hand to the next generation of ranchers, so they get the skills and incentives they need to help them afford their first ranch, and we need to stop tilting the scales against family ranchers," said Obama. "I support a packer ban and strict enforcement of antimonopoly laws, because when meatpackers own livestock, they can drive down prices and manipulate markets."

The plan can be viewed in full HERE.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2007-11-08 15:37)

Here's an entry from the official barackobama.com blog with an audio from NPR radio. The section on Obama is near the end of the clip.

This morning, NPR ran a piece about the real people who get to meet the candidates on the campaign trail, and how it affects their lives.

The second half of the audio is devoted to Geri Puntene, an Iowan from the small town of Oelwein. Geri has a brother who is dying of cancer, and at a recent event in Iowa, she was able to stand up and ask Barack a question about healthcare – about why her brother should have to continue to work so hard, even with stage 3 lymphoma.

The exchange was a profoundly moving experience for Geri, who was overwhelmed by Barack's attention to her question, his progressive healthcare plan which would help people like her brother, and that after the event, he came and spoke with her personally, holding her hand.

This is a must-listen...click here for the whole piece on NPR.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

New Hampshire Presidential Watch: Patrick To Campaign for Obama (2007-11-08 15:48)

New Hampshire Presidential Watch: Patrick To Campaign for Obama
Massachusetts Gov. Deval Patrick will stump for presidential candidate

Barack Obama in the early state of New Hampshire at Danville on Nov. 10.

Here's a funny video from an Obama supporter:

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama speaks to retirees left "High and Dry" in Iowa (2007-11-09 23:09)

Barack Obama's most recent television ad in Iowa entitled "High and Dry" tells of the Illinois senator's plans for pension reform.

Dave Hartgrave, 72, of Cedar Rapids tells of his fortunes after the pension he was expecting was cut by almost 75 percent.

"I worked here for 33 years, did everything they asked me to do," he says. "The executives decided to take $19 million out of our pension fund, didn't return it. Thought I was going to be getting $1,500 a month, I only got $379."

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama's Strengths (2007-11-10 10:20)

With the election nearing, many Barack Obama supporters are wondering if their candidate can pull it off and just how that can happen.

Let's examine Obama's strengths. Specifically his campaign strengths. For Obama's potential strengths as president, see my posts on his leadership ability and on his platform.

No doubt, Barack Obama is a great campaigner. He whipped up a front-running campaign in the least amount of time of all the other candidates. Barack had a previous roadmap to the presidency that involved first becoming governor of Illinois. However, when he saw a good opportunity this election, he moved swiftly and decisively.

Although John Edwards had carefully prepared for years to build up a "next phase" internet campaign on the model of Howard Dean's, Obama was able to quickly become the online star.

Not only he has raised extraordinary amounts of money, but as a newcomer on the Washington scene he has garnered impressive endorsements from established political powers.

Obama can fire up a crowd but importantly he also fires himself up very well. He has spent the most time in Iowa of any Democratic contender this year, often walking door-to-door to meet with voters.

He has managed to raise an army of strong, motivated supporters. These troops could make the difference in the end depending on how hard they are willing to work for the senator.

Money is not an important issue with this campaign. From all appearances they should have enough cash to get their message out, if the budget is well-controlled.

Much of Obama's support is of the latent type. Young and first-time voters who will need to be fired up at the last minute to ensure they vote. This is one area where the candidate himself has some telling experience. He led a highly successful get-out-the-vote drive for Bill Clinton's campaign in his home state of Illinois.

What is extraordinary is the effort the campaign has made in putting together their ground attack. In California, for example, they have organized the whole state by congressional districts. I didn't notice anything like this even during the Kerry-Edwards campaign during the general election last time around.

I suspect this has a lot to do with Barack's own experience as a grassroots organizer.

The groundwork is surely being laid, and as I see it will be up to Barack to "fire up" the troops during the last phase of the election that will determine victory or defeat.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama supporters fired up for Jefferson-Jackson Dinner (2007-11-10 11:10)

Barack Obama's troops are really hyped for the tonight's Jefferson-Jackson Dinner, the Iowa Democratic Party's fundraiser held in Des Moines. This is a traditional event for the Iowa caucuses.

Here's a YouTube video of preparations for the dinner from last night.

[EMBED]

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=kLex2xKauvk>

[EMBED]

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=SQFLXj3-THc>

Video footage from JJ Dinner rallies (2007-11-10 18:53)

Plenty of video footage coming in from the Obama campaign at the Jefferson-Jackson Dinner in Iowa:

[EMBED]

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=voX9v7pgtOA>

[EMBED]

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Ybk4MeUGBVo>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Rave reviews for Obama at JJ Dinner (2007-11-11 11:50)

Well, Barack Obama's supporters last night at the Jefferson-Jackson Dinner were truly "fired up." They also dominated the crowd at this classic campaign event.

Influential Iowa columnist David Yepsen thought Obama came out of the JJ Dinner with the "Big Mo" (momentum).

Des Moines Register

The leading Democratic presidential candidates showed up for the Iowa Democratic Party's big Jefferson Jackson Dinner Saturday night.

Five of them gave really good speeches.

Barack Obama's was excellent.

It was one of the best of his campaign. The passion he showed should help him close the gap on Hillary Clinton by tipping some undecided caucus-goers his way. His oratory was moving and he successfully contrasted himself with the others - especially Clinton - without being snide or nasty about it.

Obama was particularly impressive Saturday night. Should he win the Iowa caucuses, Saturday's dinner will be remembered as one of the turning points in his campaign in here, a point where he laid down the marker and began closing on Clinton, the national frontrunner...

While the Democratic candidates all had a good night, Obama clearly had the best.

Barack Obama's speech at JJ Dinner

[EMBED]

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=tydfsfSQiYc>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama gobbles mouse (2007-11-12 15:55)

Sen. Barack Obama grabbed a mouse by the tail and gobbled it down before a crowd of people – a chocolate mouse that is.

✕

✕

Democratic presidential hopeful, U.S. Sen Barack Obama, D-Ill., eats a white chocolate mouse during a campaign stop before a working women's roundtable at Walpole Chocolates in Walpole, N.H., Monday, Nov. 12, 2007. (AP Photo/Jim Cole)

The candy mice are the specialty of L.A. Burdick chocolates of Walpole, New Hampshire. And in New Hampshire over the weekend, Gov. Deval Patrick led a team of volunteers on a canvass of neighborhoods for Sen. Obama.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Obama campaign in Nevada and New Hampshire (2007-11-12 16:02)

Candidate Barack Obama's sister Maya Soetoro-Ng is campaigning for the senator in Nevada today:

Las Vegas, NV- Barack Obama's sister Maya Soetoro-Ng held a breakfast discussion at Coco's bakery with local supporters, and will be holding several meetings today in Las Vegas with local precinct leaders, students, and other supporters discussing Barack's little known feminist roots and his commitment to families. The breakfast was hosted by members of Women for Barack Obama.

Barack Obama will be in Claremont and Lebanon in New Hampshire on Nov. 12:

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

'Mother of all fundraising challenges' (2007-11-12 22:19)

Barack Obama 's grassroots supporters are looking to outdo Ron Paul's online $4.2 million haul in a 24 hour time period.

The "Mother of all fundraising challenges" is dubbed "Barack's Friday," and organizer Girish Manchaiah hopes to raise $5 million by Nov. 16 following the previous day's debate.

X

Event Link: <http://my.barackobama.com/page/event/detail/4vzvl>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

74 days left in South Carolina (2007-11-13 17:11)

Barack Obama supporters in South Carolina are making canvassing sweeps with 74 days left until primary time. Sheila is one of those supporters leading the way:

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama on high tech and innovation (2007-11-14 12:53)

Sen. Barack Obama released details of his technology platform today as he visits Googleplex in California's Silicon Valley.

Included in his plan is the creation of a national Chief Technology Officer position to oversee progress in high tech areas.

Key points of the proposal are:

- Ensure the full and free exchange of information among Americans through an open Internet and diverse media outlets.
- Create a transparent and connected democracy.
- Encourage the deployment of a modern communications infrastructure.
- Employ technology and innovation to solve our nation's most pressing problems, including reducing the costs of health care, encouraging the development of new clean energy sources, and improving public safety.
- Improve America's competitiveness.

Read the full press release at:

<http://www.barackobama.com/pdf/InnovationTechnology.pdf>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Tech proponent Lessig endorses Obama (2007-11-14 21:21)

Tech guru and Creative Commons co-founder Lawrence Lessig endorsed Barack Obama today. Here is what the Stanford professor had to say:

First the importantly balanced: You'll read he's a supporter of Net Neutrality. No surprise there. But read carefully what Net Neutrality for Obama is. There's no blanket ban on offering better service; the ban is on contracts that offer different terms to different providers for that better service. And there's no promise to police what's under the technical hood (beyond the commitment already articulated by Chairman Powell): This is a sensible and valuable Net Neutrality policy that shows a team keen to get it right – which includes making it enforceable in an efficient way, even if not as radical as some possible friends would like.

Second, on the important: As you'll read, Obama has committed himself to a technology policy for government that could radically change how government works. The small part of that is simple efficiency – the appointment with broad power of a CTO for the government, making the insanely backwards technology systems of government actually work.

But the big part of this is a commitment to making data about the government (as well as government data) publicly available in standard machine readable formats. The promise isn't just the naive promise that government websites will work better and reveal more. It is the really powerful promise to feed the data necessary for the Sunlights and the Maplights of the world to make government work better. Atomize (or RSS-ify) government data (votes, contributions, Members of Congress's calendars) and you enable the rest of us to make clear the economy of influence that is Washington.

And here is Barack's speech announcing his new technology plan:

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Nevada supporters prepare for tonight's debate (2007-11-15 08:31)

Democratic candidates will face off tonight at 5pm PST during the CNN-Nevada State Democratic Party debate at the University of Nevada in Las Vegas.

A sign war that will ensue in the parking lot of the Thomas & Mack Center before the debate.

[EMBED]

Preparations for Nevada debate

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

UAW regional group endorses Obama, includes Iowa (2007-11-15 17:24)

United Auto Workers (UAW) Region 4 endorsed Barack Obama today pledging to promote the senator among its 64,000 active members and 122,000 retirees.

UAW Region 4 includes 30,000 members and retirees residing in the early state of Iowa. It also covers the states of Illinois, Wisconsin and Minnesota.

"There are many talented Democrats in the presidential field this year, but Barack Obama is the leader who will bring the kind of change to Washington that America's working men and women can believe in," said UAW Local 442 President Paul Erickson of Webster City, Iowa. "For the last two decades, working families have been able to count on Barack Obama to stand up for us and our values. We are supporting him, because we know he'll do the same thing in the White House."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama wins CNN poll in raucous debate (2007-11-16 09:31)

Barack Obama won the debate according to a CNN online poll, but it was a wonder he got through it relatively unscathed.

There was a lot of booing from the crowd directed mainly at Obama and Edwards, and for awhile a heckler could be heard in the background while Obama was speaking. Usually in these debates, the audience is instructed not to make any noise at all during the moderated session.

Nevertheless, here are some positive reviews for Obama from the news dailies:

"Obama Exposes Regional Difference With Clinton As Debate Turns For Him"

U.S. Sen. Barack Obama tonight turned in his strongest presidential debate performance and exposed a clear regional difference with front-runner Hillary Clinton.

Is $97,000 a lot of money? In most of Obama's Illinois and just about all of Iowa, the answer to that is "yes," which makes Obama's position on the question of whether to raise or lift the cap on Social Security taxes more reasonable to Hawkeye State voters than the New York shape-shifting of Clinton.

As it stands, the first $97,500 of a person's annual income is subject to the Social Security tax. Obama supports lifting that to shore up the future of the system while Clinton went with the nostalgia card, suggesting that she could resurrect the macroeconomic picture that prevailed under her husband and cause the Social Security problem to disappear without hard choices. She suggested that popping the cap would hurt middle-class Americans and argued that in some parts of the nation (namely high-priced New York City which she represents) $97,500 isn't a lot of money. It would be interesting to hear her make that argument in Audubon County, Iowa, where the average home is worth half that much: $49,000.

The Washington Post

Obama offered himself as a credible and – more importantly – safe alternative to Clinton in last night's debate...

Obama offered his "we can do more" vision succinctly and forcefully. "Don't keep on assuming we can't do something," Obama scolded Blitzer at one point. "I am running for president because I think we can do it."

Obama got the best word count of all the candidates:

- Obama: 3,316
- Clinton: 2,618
- Gov. Bill Richardson: 2,180
- Sen. Joseph Biden: 1,892
- Edwards: 1,776
- Sen. Christopher Dodd: 1,560
- Rep. Dennis Kucinich: 1,080

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Gov. Kaine to campaign for Obama in Iowa (2007-11-16 17:29)

Gov. Timothy M. Kaine will be coming to Iowa this weekend to campaign for Sen. Barack Obama with elections over in his home state of Virginia.

"In Virginia and the rest of our great nation, people from across the political spectrum are excited by Senator Obama's commitment to uniting our country to make progress on the issues that matter to everyday Americans," Kaine said in a statement.

Kaine will stump in Cedar Rapids, Vinton, Waverly, Charles City, Osage, Mason City, Algona, Fort Dodge and Webster City, and plans another out-of-state trip for Obama this year.

Barack speaks of the fundamental need for a spirit not just of bipartisanship but of truly approaching America's problems together with all Americans.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Dirty campaigning ahead? (2007-11-18 19:25)

The Obama campaign released this statement today on the report by journalist Robert D. Novak that the Clinton camp has "scandalous" dirt on Sen. Barack Obama:

Later in the day, Clinton aides denied Novak's reports.

Obama Statement on Reports of Clinton Campaign Tactics

Chicago, IL | November 17, 2007

"During our debate in Las Vegas on Thursday, we heard Senator Clinton rail against the politics of 'throwing mud.'

"At the very same time, in Washington, Robert Novak was publishing a column in which he reported the following: 'Agents of Sen. Hillary Clinton are spreading the word in Democratic circles that she has scandalous information about her principal opponent for the party's presidential nomination, Sen. Barack Obama...'

"The item did not identify these 'agents,' nor did it reveal the nature of the charge. It was devoid of facts, but heavy on innuendo and insinuation of the sort to which we've become all too accustomed in our politics these past two decades. If the purpose of this shameless item was to daunt or discourage me or supporters of our campaign from challenging and changing the politics of Washington, it will fail. In fact, it will only serve to steel our resolve.

"But in the interest of our party, and her own reputation, Senator Clinton should either make public any and all information referred to in the item, or concede the truth: that there is none.

"She of all people, having complained so often about 'the politics of personal destruction,' should move quickly to either stand by or renounce these tactics.

"I am prepared to stand up to that kind of politics, whether it's deployed by candidates in our party, in the other party or by any third party.

"The cause of change in this country will not be deterred or sidetracked by the old 'Swift boat' politics. The cause of moving America forward demands that we defeat it."

#

NY Post: HILL SHILLS HINT AT 'BAM SLAM

By ROBERT D. NOVAK

November 17, 2007 – Agents of Sen. Hillary Clinton are spreading the word in Democratic circles that she has scandalous information about her principal opponent for the party's presidential nomination, Sen. Barack Obama, but has decided not to use it. The nature of the alleged scandal was not disclosed.

This word-of-mouth among Democrats makes Obama look vulnerable and Clinton look prudent. It comes during a dip for the front-running Clinton after she refused to take a stand on New York Gov. Eliot Spitzer's now discarded plan to give driver's licenses to illegal aliens.

Experienced Democratic political operatives believe Clinton wants to avoid a repetition of 2004, when attacks on each other by presidential candidates Howard Dean and Richard Gephardt were mutually destructive and facilitated John Kerry's nomination.

Read the full article from the NY Post

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Rumors fly over Obama JJ turnout (2007-11-18 19:48)

Seems like many folk are not able to accept the exceptionable organization displayed by the Obama campaign at the important Jefferson-Jackson Dinner in Iowa.

Often a turning point in presidential campaigns, this year's JJ dinner was owned by Obama according to all reports. About a third of the crowd was for Obama and they were generally the best prepared group.

Now, all kinds of suggestions have been circulating that Obama organized supporters from his neighboring home state of Illinois to create a false impression of his Iowa support.

Now, people who spend considerable time at barackobama.com and particularly at his Illinois-dedicated page might have a hard time believing that thousands of supporters were secretly ordered to Iowa to pack the JJ event.

However, it has to be scary to Obama's opponents to think that Obama has real organized support of that type in Iowa. Winning caucuses in that state is about sending trained teams of campaigners to stump for your candidate at the meetings in which people decide who to support.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack outlines Veterans Homelessness Prevention Act (2007-11-19 12:56)

[EMBED]

Barack Obama talks about his Veterans Homelessness Prevention Act yesterday after meeting with residents at Buckingham Place, a facility for homeless veterans in Nashua, New Hampshire. The Act would launch a $26 million pilot program providing housing for at-risk veterans, along with mental health counseling, job training and financial planning.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

FreePoliticsdotUS (2007-11-19 21:49:00)

It's great to see Obama talking about the veterans, he's one of the few, which is saddening.

Obama reveals new $18 billion education plan (2007-11-20 09:20)

Presidential candidate Barack Obama on Tuesday unveiled a $18 billion education plan to prepare students for college and to train teachers to lead in classrooms.

"It's pretty popular to bash No Child Left Behind out on the campaign trail, but when it was being debated in Congress four years ago, my colleague Dick Durbin offered a chance to vote so that the law couldn't be enforced unless it was fully funded," Obama said. "A lot of senators, including Senator Edwards and Senator Clinton, passed on that chance. And I believe that was a serious mistake."

Obama's plan encourages universal pre-kindergarten programs, expands teacher mentoring programs and provides pay increases for teachers that are not linked with standardized test scores.

"In this election, at this defining moment, we can decide that this century will be another American century by making a historic commitment to education. We can make a commitment that's more than just the rhetoric of a campaign, one that's more than another empty promise made by a politician looking for your vote," Obama said.

Obama's campaign said he would pay for the $18 billion program by delaying NASA's Constellation Program, which develops space exploration rockets, by bulk buying, by auctioning surplus federal property and by reducing errant payments identified by the Government Accountability Office.

Obama wants to remove poorly performing teachers from classrooms , increase time spent on math and science instruction, establish 40,000 new scholarships for potential teachers, pay for continuing education programs and invest in new schools.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Events in the Early States (2007-11-20 13:37)

In Iowa after Thanksgiving, Barack Obama will be appearing personally at various locations:

Town Hall Meeting With Barack Obama in Council Bluffs

Saturday, November 24, 2007 @ 12:00pm

Council Bluffs, IA

Meet the Candidate with Barack Obama in Dunlap

Saturday, November 24, 2007 @ 2:45pm

Dunlap, IA

Meet the Candidate with Barack Obama in Harlan

Saturday, November 24, 2007 @ 5:15pm

Harlan, IA

Meet the Candidate with Barack Obama in Audubon

Saturday, November 24, 2007 @ 7:30pm

Audobon, IA

Bremer/Butler Women for Obama Get Together

Thursday, November 29, 2007 @ 7:00pm

Waverly, IA

The Obama campaign has opened a new office in Pahrump, Nevada:
[EMBED]
Barack unveiled his education plan in Manchester, New Hampshire today.

Obama supporters will canvas in New Hampshire after the Thanksgiving holiday.
In South Carolina, Michelle Obama is campaigning for her husband.
Michelle Obama in Orangeburg
Tuesday, November 20, 2007 @ 12:00pm
Orangeburg, SC
Michelle Obama in Columbia
Tuesday, November 20, 2007 @ 3:45pm
Columbia, SC
The campaign has also released its first television ad in South Carolina:
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Rep. Quirk endorses Obama (2007-11-20 18:00)

State Representative Brian Quirk of New Hampton, Iowa endorsed Barack Obama today, his 16th endorsement from state legislative endorsement.

"Our next president must be able to bring America together to make progress on the tough challenges we face," Rep. Quirk said. "Barack Obama's unique ability to build consensus resonates with Iowans who are tired of divisive politics and ready for a change in the way we do politics. Barack represents that change, and I'm proud to join his grassroots movement to transform our country."

Oprah to stump in Iowa

Oprah Winfrey is coming to Iowa and then New Hampshire to campaign for Obama according to Lynn Sweet's blog. The hope is that she will be able to convince more women to vote for the Illinois senator.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Tino Villareal on Obama (2007-11-21 10:55)

Tino Cuellar, Professor of Law and Deane F. Johnson Faculty Scholar at Stanford Law School, is an immigration advisor to Barack Obama's campaign.

Here is an interview where he discusses the Obama campaign's outreach to Latinos:

Why did you decide to support Barack Obama?

People around the world face historic challenges. War and disease are devastating many parts of the developing world. Global warming remains a threat. And rampant poverty crushes the dreams of hundreds of millions across the planet. American leadership is central to forging solutions. Within our own country, we find a health care system that leaves tens of millions of people uninsured and satisfies few of those who are covered, a failing immigration system, vulnerable critical infrastructures at risk from disasters and terrorism, and growing economic insecurity. I support Barack Obama because these problems call for uncommon leadership that can transcend our existing political divisions. He can deliver this leadership. He has built a national movement founded on integrity, intellectual honesty, and decades-long experience working to achieve public policies that improve people's lives. Over the course of his career as a community organizer, a civil rights lawyer, a law professor, and a legislator, Barack Obama has consistently defied the odds, demonstrating a distinctive ability to speak with people across conventional social, racial, economic, and ideological divisions. His energy, his ability to transcend existing political battles, and his capacity for helping the public understand and find principled responses to complicated challenges can help us leave the country and the planet in better shape than we found it.

What do you think distinguishes Barack Obama's position on immigration from the rest of the field?

Although a number of Democratic candidates have demonstrated interest in immigration issues during this election cycle, Barack Obama stands out. First, as an Illinois State Senator and a U.S. Senator, Obama has led in seeking sensible, comprehensive immigration reform that would serve the interests of the American people and help immigrants become productive members of American society. He has also taken clear positions on key aspects of immigration policy that demonstrate his core principles in this area. For example, during the recent debate over immigration policy, he emphasized preserving family unity as a touchstone of our immigration policy. He has unambiguously supported state policies that provide access to driver's licenses because of public health and public safety imperatives. Furthermore, he has established a high-level working group within his campaign to analyze more complex issues in immigration policy, such as improving how the federal government is organized to implement effective migration policy, and combining improved training and education opportunities for U.S. workers with immigration reforms that attract skilled workers. In his policy proposals and public pronouncements, he has shown an uncommon recognition of the connections between immigration policy and other critical issues that our country faces, such as trust in government and security.

Why is immigration reform such a critical issue in this election cycle?

Our immigration policy has always been central in defining our country. But in recent years, it has become one of the nation's most pressing issues. We have over ten million nationals of other countries without visas. We have a system that fails to focus scarce resources on genuine security threats. Our existing policies also create massive backlogs, neglect the needs of local communities and businesses, and exacerbate humanitarian problems. Surveys indicate that the majority of Americans believe that fixing our existing system requires a number of key reforms, including the creation of a path to citizenship for undocumented immigrants who pay a fine, as well as strengthening security and managing the demand for migration. Our national conversation about immigration should be an example of how Americans can deliberate respectfully about a major challenge. But our failure to address existing concerns with sensible reforms means an ever larger population of undocumented immigrants living in the shadow, further polarizing opinion and creating divisions that may become far more difficult to bridge over time.

Can you point to specific issues that Obama has shown leadership on that demonstrate his commitment to Latinos?

Barack Obama has spent his career fighting to help people share in the American dream. He deeply understands, and is intensely committed to addressing, major policy challenges facing Latinos, including immigration, health care, criminal justice, and the role of the military. He was an architect of efforts in Illinois to better integrate new permanent residents and citizens into the web of communities and professional opportunities that can foster a productive role in society. To help immigrants attain their full measure of promise as educated citizens in a democratic society, he passed the Illinois version of the DREAM Act and has supported the DREAM Act in the U.S. Senate. He called national attention to an unacceptably high Latino dropout rate, and called on Congress and the American people to reconsider harsh mandatory minimum sentences of dubious value that often disproportionately impact African Americans and Latinos. And perhaps most important, he has focused attention on these issues during a campaign that might have otherwise neglected them.

[EMBED]

Testimonial from Teno Villareal of San Antonio, Texas

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Reasons to vote for Barack Obama (2007-11-21 11:23)

Reasons to vote for Barack Obama (Top Ten) 1. Barack has experience with poverty. His mother was on food stamps at times. He can empathize with the struggles of the poor.

2. After graduating from Cornell, he left a corporate job to become a community organizer. After graduating from Harvard Law School, he practiced civil rights law rather than corporate law.

3. Barack was a professor teaching constitutional law. He has displayed respect for the rights guaranteed by the Constitution and for human and civil rights in general. People died for their rights in the past, but there are some willing to sacrifice them to feel a bit more secure.

4. He has demonstrated an ability to work on both sides of the aisle. He carries less baggage than the other front-runners that is likely to polarize. Therefore, he offers the best hope at breaking the existing gridlock in Congress.

5. He opposed the Iraq war before it started and has a specific plan for redeploying all combat troops by March 31, 2008.

6. Barack will talk to enemies as well as friends, and will reinstate a policy of diplomacy.

7. Barack has committed to providing universal health care. He has a realistic plan for the near-term.

8. He has a plan for significant reductions in greenhouse emissions with target dates and a considerable government investment ($150 billion) in promoting new green technology.

9. His experience growing up and as an adult gives him the experience to deal effectively with the diversity of the country. He has one of the most diverse staffs in the Senate. His support is very broad from the fullest spectrum of society.

10. Barack Obama is highly intelligent as shown by his academic record and his very well-written and thoughtful books.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

cwilcox (2007-11-22 07:11:00)

I had to stop in to say Happy Thanksgiving! I hope you and yours have a fantastic day. I'm thankful for your site and thankful that Obama gives us the "Audacity of Hope"

Enjoy!

Paul Kekai Manansala (2007-11-23 10:51:00)

Hope you had a happy Thanksgiving!

Time Portraits of Barack Obama (2007-11-23 10:51)

Time magazine has a nice photo essay on Barack Obama :

Callie Shell / Aurora for TIME

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

NH primary (2007-11-23 15:47)

"Why I'm supporting Barack Obama" (2007-11-24 15:58)

Need more reasons to vote for Barack Obama? Check out this column from a DailyKos diarist:

"Why I'm supporting Barack Obama"

With only about 40 days left until the Iowa caucuses, it's time for all of us who have been undecided to start making up our minds. As voters, we have the privilege of waiting until stepping into the voting booths to make our choice. As activists, though, it's up to us to drive the direction of the primaries. For me, that means deciding who I'm going to support and then working to make it happen.

Last year, I've volunteered my time to Ned Lamont during the CT-Sen primary and to Patrick Murphy in the general election (of which many reports about my time there can be found in my diary history). This year, there's a lot more at stake - a choice that could define our country for a generation. We have a great field of candidates on our side, and any of them would be far better than the GOP candidate. But the one candidate who will drastically change America for the better and will turn the Democratic Party into the dominant political party for the foreseeable future is Barack Obama. Of that, there is no question in my mind now.

...Of the serious candidates, Obama is the only one whom I feel has been consistently liberal during his lifetime...

...his record as a community organizer, as one of the most liberal state senators in Illinois, and his ability to communicate a vision of progressive politics that appeals far beyond the left side of the political spectrum speaks to a generational talent not seen since the Kennedys in the 1960s. While rhetoric and campaign speeches are just words, I feel that he would be able to pass policies this country needs - universal health care, proper immigration reform, and so forth - quite easily because he knows how to talk with people - not to them - on issues in the proper context. He's also the candidate that I inherently trust the most. There are qualms with the other candidates that sometimes make it difficult for me to believe what they are saying, but with Obama, I trust that he is saying what he thinks - and he means it...

...The last reason, strangely enough, comes from John Edwards. It was in one of the debates, or possibly on the campaign trail, but he urges people to 'vote with their hearts'. Obama's background - a person of multiracial background who has lived around the world and overcame great odds to succeed - appeals to me (similarly, a person of mixed ethnicity who has lived in a few different places around the country and the world) as well. He represents a break from America's past, one where everyone - no matter how they look or where they come from - has the opportunity to make it in this country. In a time where it seems increasingly less and less that this is true, it would instill a great sense of hope and pride if he were to become president. No longer would American politics be about cynicism, which it seems to have been since the assassinations of the 1960s and the fallout from Watergate. Instead, it would be about what can be done to right the wrongs that exist - not about what wrongs will inevitably happen as a result of the government. I don't think that a simple slogan, such as "The Audacity of Hope", is a cure-all. But I do believe it helps to live the words you speak, and Obama has done that.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama touts health care plan in Council Bluffs (2007-11-24 20:28)

Sen. Barack Obama speaks in Council Bluffs, Iowa today about how his health care plan is different from that of Hillary Clinton and John Edwards.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Things looking up for Obama in Iowa (2007-11-25 11:42)

Long-suffering Obama poll-watchers have been getting some bright news lately in Iowa where Obama is looking very well-organized.

Hope is up that Obama can in some way or another pull out a "win" in Iowa that gives him momentum going into the next state, now possibly New Hampshire rather than Nevada.

Yes, New Hampshire looks like it will hold the nation's first primary on Jan. 8 only five days after the Iowa caucus. That's not a lot of time to build on the momentum of any success in Iowa.

However, much of the impetus from an early win is psychological with people throwing their bets toward whoever is winning or perceived as coming from behind.

If they should do well in Iowa, one strategy would be to blast this success over the New Hampshire airwaves particularly on available television slots.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2007-11-25 23:27)

Barack Obama unveiled his education plan in New Hampshire today.

[EMBED]

Jason Kamras, the 2005 national Teacher of the Year, commented on Barack's plan:

Education is, in my estimation, the civil rights and national security issue of our time and Obama has demonstrated through this plan that he has the bold and visionary leadership that our public schools – and our children – deserve.

The main points of the proposal are:

- Reform No Child Left Behind.
- Ensure access to high-quality early childhood education programs and child care opportunities so children enter kindergarten ready to learn.
- Work to place effective teachers in every classroom in America, especially those in high-poverty, high-minority areas.
- Reward effective teachers for taking on challenging assignments and helping children succeed.
- Support highly-effective principals and school leaders.
- Make science and math education a national priority.
- Reduce the high school dropout rate by focusing on proven methods to improve student achievement and enhance graduation and higher education opportunities.
- Close the achievement gap and invest in what works.
- Empower parents to raise healthy and successful children by taking a greater role in their child's education at home and at school.

Read the full speech given in Manchester.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Oprah joins Obama on bus tour (2007-11-26 10:28)

Oprah Winfrey is confirmed to stump with Barack Obama in Iowa, New Hampshire and South Carolina, the Obama campaign has announced. While experts may be divided on the "Oprah Factor," the Obama camp appears positive about the star's appeal.

Oprah is known for her Midas Touch in the world of entertainment, and may be the biggest star to campaign actively for a presidential campaign since Frank Sinatra helped John F. Kennedy, and then, switching parties, aided Ronald Reagan in winning office.

Over the decades, Oprah has gained a loyal following who trust her judgment on things like books and films, but this is her first venture into the world of politics.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Historians for Obama (2007-11-26 16:52)

Sen. Barack Obama got support today from a group of historians working in academia. The endorsement includes many Ivy League professors. Here is there official statement:

Historians for Obama

Joyce Appleby, David Blight, Edward J. Blum, Clayborne Carson, Dennis C. Dickerson, W. Marvin Dulaney, James Grossman, Nancy A. Hewitt, Jonathan Holloway, Randal Jelks, Robert KC Johnson, Michael Kazin, Steven Lawson, James Livingston, Ralph E. Luker, James McPherson, Albert J. Raboteau, Edward B. Rugemer, Nick Salvatore, Daniel J. Singal, Harvard Sitkoff, Daniel Soyer, Paul Spickard, Siva Vaidhyanathan, Craig Steven Wilder, David W. Wills

Our country is in serious trouble. The gap between the wealthy elite and the working majority grows ever larger, tens of millions of Americans lack health insurance and others risk bankruptcy when they get seriously ill, and many public schools do a poor job of educating the next generation. Due to the arrogant, inept foreign policy of the current administration, more people abroad mistrust and fear the United States than at any time since the height of the Vietnam War. Meanwhile, global warming speeds toward an unprecedented catastrophe. Many Republicans and overwhelming numbers of Independents and Democrats believe that, under George W. Bush, the nation has badly lost its way. The 2008 election thus comes at a critical time in the history of the United States and the world.

We endorse Barack Obama for president because we think he is the candidate best able to address and start to solve these profound problems. As historians, we understand that no single individual, even a president, leads alone or outside a thick web of context. As Abraham Lincoln wrote to a friend during the Civil War, "I claim not to have controlled events, but confess plainly that events have controlled me."

However, a president can alter the mood of the nation, making changes possible that once seemed improbable. Lincoln signed the Emancipation Proclamation and kept the nation united; Franklin D. Roosevelt persuaded Americans to embrace Social Security and more democratic workplaces; John F. Kennedy advanced civil rights and an anti-poverty program.

Barack Obama has the potential to be that kind of president. He has the varied background of a global citizen: his father was African, his stepfather Indonesian, his mother worked in the civil rights movement, and he spent several years of his childhood overseas. As an adult, he has been a community organizer, a law professor, and a successful politician - both at the state and national level. These experiences have given him an acute awareness of the inequalities of race and class, while also equipping him to speak beyond them.

Obama's platform is ambitious, yet sensible. He calls for negotiating the abolition of nuclear weapons, providing universal and affordable health insurance, combatting poverty by adding resources and discouraging destructive habits, investing in renewable energy sources, and engaging with unfriendly nations to ease conflicts that could otherwise lead to war. He takes more forthright stands on these issues than do his major Democratic competitors.

But it is his qualities of mind and temperament that really separate Obama from the rest of the pack. He is a gifted writer and orator who speaks forcefully but without animus. Not since John F. Kennedy has a Democrat candidate for president showed the same combination of charisma and thoughtfulness - or provided Americans with a symbolic opportunity to break with a tradition of bigotry older than the nation itself. Like Kennedy, he also inspires young people who see him as a great exception in a political world that seems mired in cynicism and corruption.

As president, Barack Obama would only begin the process of healing what ails our society and ensuring that the U.S. plays a beneficial role in the world. But we believe he is that rare politician who can stretch the meaning of democracy, who can help revive what William James called "the civic genius of the people." We invite other historians to add your name to this statement. You can do so by contacting mk8@georgetown.edu and/or Ralph Luker, ralphluker@mindspring.com.

Joyce Appleby, University of California, Los Angeles*

David Blight, Yale University

Edward J. Blum, San Diego State University

Clayborne Carson, Stanford University

Dennis C. Dickerson, Vanderbilt University

W. Marvin Dulaney, College of Charleston

James Grossman, Newberry Library

Nancy A. Hewitt, Rutgers University

Jonathan Holloway, Yale University

Randal Jelks, Calvin College

Robert KC Johnson, Brooklyn College

Michael Kazin, Georgetown University

Steven Lawson, Rutgers University

James Livingston, Rutgers University

Ralph E. Luker, Cliopatria

James McPherson, Princeton University

Albert J. Raboteau, Princeton University

Edward B. Rugemer, Yale University

Nick Salvatore, Cornell University

Daniel J. Singal, Hobart and William Smith Colleges

Harvard Sitkoff, University of New Hampshire
Daniel Soyer, Fordham University
Paul Spickard, University of California, Santa Barbara
Siva Vaidhyanathan, University of Virginia
Craig Steven Wilder, Dartmouth College
David W. Wills, Amherst College

*Institutional affiliations are listed for identification purposes only and, of course, do not indicate an institutional endorsement.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama Foreign Policy Forum in New Hampshire (2007-11-26 19:55)

Sarah Sewall, Faculty Director of the Carr Center for Human Rights Policy, cross-posted a message on barack-obama.com, DailyKos, Blue Hampshire for Obama's foreign policy forum in New Hampshire Tuesday.

I've spent a career in foreign policy and national security, but it doesn't take an expert to know that after eight years of the Bush Administration's narrow-minded foreign policy and disastrous war in Iraq, our next president will urgently face enormous challenges in restoring America's global leadership.

We must renew America's image and show a new face to the world after eight years of alienating our allies and refusing to engage our enemies.

We must end a misguided war and restore a military stretched to the breaking point by a war that has already cost hundreds of billions of dollars and thousands of lives while distracting us from the real threat of Al-Qaeda and making us less safe.

We must reclaim our nation's values by rejecting torture and the violation of our civil liberties, and by trusting in our Constitution and proud legacy of individual freedoms.

We must proactively and patiently use all of our nation's strength - diplomatic, economic, and intelligence - to lead the world instead of relying solely upon military power because we ignored or rejected other options.

We must rebuild strong alliances and rally international action to combat the common enemies of the 21st - terrorism and nuclear weapons, poverty and disease, genocide and climate change.

We must genuinely redefine American leadership and challenge conventional Washington thinking, so that hope triumphs over fear in a world with real danger and unconventional challenges.

This is what America needs, and it will take bold leadership to meet this challenge. I'm supporting Senator Barack Obama because he has the courage, the judgment, and the vision to achieve these goals, and to meet the unanticipated new challenges that are certain to arise. True leadership is based upon courage, not driven by fear. True leadership calls us to our better selves, to come together, and to summon our collective courage to create the world we wish for. Barack Obama has proven that he understands our changing world, thinks unconventionally, speaks forthrightly, and fights for his ideals. On the day he is inaugurated, he will fundamentally transform the way the world thinks about America, and what we expect of ourselves.

Barack Obama is the leader who will speak directly to nations and peoples disillusioned with America's policies. His life both abroad and here at home reflects his deep understanding of the universal human struggle for dignity and security. He recognizes that our security and future are increasingly linked to those of others. And Obama knows that America cannot just stand against terrorism, it must stand for freedom, hope and opportunity for all and for common security and international stability.

He offers a comprehensive foreign policy vision that combines national values and interests and reflects America at its best. He has developed concrete policies and initiatives to fulfill that vision - from doubling investment in international economic development and helping others build prosperity and peace; to calling Americans to service and launching a new era of American diplomacy; to creating a Shared Security Partnership to fight terrorism and training other nations to protect their citizens; to helping secure all loose nuclear materials and leading toward a world without nuclear weapons.

Obama offers smart, strong, and sustainable policy alternatives at this crucial juncture in our history. Not only did he have the courage and judgment to oppose the Iraq War from the start; his plan to end that war reflects understanding of the broader regional context and America's long-term interests. Not only is he standing up to the saber-rattling toward Iran; he's offering a credible alternative path to security through vigorous presidential diplomacy.

Obama's foreign policy represents not just a break from the Bush-Cheney years of failed foreign policy, but from the decades of conventional thinking that led us to this perilous moment in our history.

It is no coincidence that one of the most secretive Administrations in history has pursued disastrous and deceitful international policies. This stands in stark contrast to Barack Obama's commitment to openness and his honesty about where he stands on the tough issues. Consistent with this commitment, Obama will host a foreign policy forum with New Hampshire residents on Tuesday, November 27th.

The forum will bring together scholars and soldiers, national security experts and university professors, for a participatory discussion with New Hampshire voters about the foreign policy challenges we face and the kind of leadership and action it will take to tackle them.

There, Senator Obama and I will be joined by leading local and national Obama advisors and foreign policy experts, all of whom share my belief that it's time for a fundamental change in our foreign policy - time for a 21st century vision that replaces empty threats with smart, tough diplomacy, and regains our moral leadership by staying true to the values and ideals on which America was built. Panels will feature:

- Richard Danzig - Former Secretary of the Navy under President Clinton
- Tony Lake - National Security Advisor to President Clinton
- Adm. John Hutson (USN Ret.) - Bow, NH resident; Dean of Franklin Pierce Law Center; former U.S. Navy Judge Advocate General and nationally-known expert on detention and interrogation policy
- Samantha Power - Pulitzer Prize-winning author and renowned professor of human rights and foreign policy
- Susan Rice - Former Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs
- Gen. Jim Smith (USAF Ret.) - Salem, NH resident; retired U.S. Air Force Brigadier General
- Ryan Gray (USMC Ret.) - Goffstown, NH resident; served two tours in Iraq with the Marine Corps

I hope you can join us online for this important discussion about our nation's security challenges and how Barack Obama's strength and vision can help create a safer and more hopeful world.

Please join us tomorrow at 11:00 am for a live broadcast at nh.barackobama.com/fpforum

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack discusses foreign policy with expert panel (2007-11-27 09:47)

Barack Obama is holding a live foreign policy forum as I write this blog.

They have discussed issues like Iraq and Iran, and the need for greater cultural sensitivity and knowledge in foreign policy and service.

Obama has mentioned his international experience growing up with an African father, and Indonesian stepfather and living for years in Indonesia.

You can watch it live at nh.barackobama.com/fpforum

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2007-11-27 09:47)

Barack Obama is holding a live foreign policy forum as I write this blog. They have discussed issues like Iraq and Iran, and the need for (2007-11-27 17:18)

ObamaGirl: Why Obama? (2007-11-27 17:31)

When I received an email offering an exclusive on the new ObamaGirl video, I was hesitant. However, this clip is in good taste and light-hearted.

BarelyPolitical.com produces political humor videos that are sometimes a bit on the edge.

Here is the new video:

IFRAME: <http://asiapacificuniverse.com/obamag.htm>

<http://www.why08.org/index.php?s=viewpost &postid=8746>

Comments?

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Michelle Obama in Iowa (2007-11-27 23:04)

Michelle Obama will be appearing in Iowa as Oprah and Barack travel to New Hampshire and South Carolina. Here is her schedule:

Meet and Greet with Michelle Obama in Ottumwa

Wednesday, November 28, 2007 @ 10:15am

Ottumwa, IA

Meet and Greet with Michelle Obama in Centerville

Wednesday, November 28, 2007 @ 12:30pm

Centerville, IA

Meet and Greet with Michelle Obama in Corydon

Wednesday, November 28, 2007 @ 2:30pm

Corydon, IA

Meet and Greet with Michelle Obama in Indianola

Wednesday, November 28, 2007 @ 7:45pm

Indianola, IA

West Des Moines Office Opening with Michelle Obama

Thursday, November 29, 2007 @ 2:00pm

West Des Moines, IA

A new Caucus Center is also live on barackobama.com teaching supporters about the caucus process:

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama aiming for Feb. 5? (2007-11-28 11:51)

A Washington Post article claims the Obama campaign may be looking for victory on Feb. 5 as much as winning the early states.

Obama has 19 offices in different early states, much less than his total in Iowa alone, but again much more than total five offices of her leading opponent Hillary Clinton. This can be taken to indicate that the Obama camp believes things may not be over after polls are done in the four early states of Iowa, New Hampshire, Nevada and South Carolina.

On Feb. 5, known as "Super Duper Tuesday" or "Tsunami Tuesday" some 20 states will hold primary elections.

Obama is generally less well-known in these states as compared to Clinton. It may be that Obama's belief in grassroots campaigning is driving the investment in Super Duper Tuesday states. It's difficult to start up a person-to-person campaign in a short span of time, as compared to simply launching a television ad blitz.

By opening offices in these states, Obama may be showing his community organizing background and his experience in the importance of making personal contact.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Campaign opens Utah office (2007-11-28 17:22)

More evidence that Barack Obama is looking toward Super Duper Tuesday in case the early states do not decide the winner. The campaign is opening an office in Utah, not usually a prime Democratic primary state.

I have a feeling the offices also help with the grassroots fundraising effort. Everyday supporters often contribute more, both monetary and in-kind contributions, when they are actively involved in a ground campaign.

Video highlights from the Obama Foreign Policy Forum "The Judgment to Lead" [EMBED]

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

PunditMom: Oprah and Obama (2007-11-28 23:50)

PunditMom: Oprah and Obama

PunditMom says:

It's one thing to take her advice for which book is going to sit on our nightstands or which shows she thinks will hit with American audiences. But I have a feeling politics may be taking Oprah's fiefdom a bit too far. This one has "backfire" written all over it. To me, it seems like Oprah is trying to take her influence a bit too far. It's one thing to have fund-raisers and support a candidate. But for some reason it just doesn't feel right to have the queen of daytime TV stumping for a candidate and bestowing the official Oprah seal of approval.

However, all the candidates have supporters from all walks of life stumping for them, why should it be any different when Oprah is involved?

There was news, for example, that Hillary Clinton is having Barbara Streisand help out in her campaign. John Edwards is using Bonnie Raitt and Jackson Browne.

All the candidates have called on elected official supporters to stump for them in the early states.

At the very least, it may help bring some new people out to see Barack who might not have come sans Oprah.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

PunditMom (2007-12-05 09:53:00)

The difference is Oprah's expectation that everything she touches Americans will go along with. There is no other celebrity who is able to elevate something or someone to star status like Oprah. Of course it is her right to support and help any candidate she chooses. But she knows her power and impact and I am sure she thinks her fans will follow simply because of her stamp of approval.

CA Assembly leader Karen Bass touts Obama (2007-11-29 11:25)

From the official barackobama.com site, California Assembly leader Karen Bass tells why she is supporting Barack Obama:

I have spent the last 30 years working to improve the quality of life for people throughout California. As a social justice activist, I've worked to bridge disparity gaps by developing and implementing solutions to make a difference. Over the years, one of my main goals was to ensure that every voice is heard, especially those from the most vulnerable communities.

When I was just a teenager, I got involved in community organizing and from then it became a major part of my personal and professional life. As a physician assistant at the nation's largest trauma center I witnessed first-hand the despair and violence unleashed by the crack cocaine epidemic. I used my organizing experience to found the Community Coalition, a direct response to the devastation of the drug epidemic. Today, the organization is recognized as a national model for grassroots organizing and a center for training the next generation of social justice activists and leaders.

After 13 years of leading the Community Coalition, I took state office representing the 47th Assembly District. Last year, I was appointed the Majority Leader for the California State Assembly during the 2007-2008 legislative session, making me the first African American and the first woman to hold this leadership position.

As an elected official, community leader and a social activist, I did not hesitate to endorse Senator Barack Obama. As a community activist, he helped build coalitions to empower residents to fight for change. As a state legislator, he worked with law enforcement to pass a law that required interrogations and confessions in all capital cases to be video taped after a number of inmates on death row were found innocent. He has a proven commitment to education and working families.

As a Senator, he has shown true leadership while dealing with our country's domestic and foreign policy concerns. He has consistently opposed the war in Iraq. He is the candidate who will end the war as well as ensure that the country uses those wasted funds to address poverty issues throughout the nation.

I am confident that he will inspire thousands of new voters to go to the polls because we are all ready for change. Senator Obama reminds all of us that hope can move us forward. I am proud to serve on the Obama for America National Diversity Advisory Council and as the chair of the California African Americans for Obama Campaign. And I am thrilled to be a part of the Women for Obama Campaign.

Majority Leader Karen Bass

California State Assembly

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2010-01-05 04:50:32)

Your blog keeps getting better and better! Your older articles are not as good as newer ones you have a lot more creativity and originality now keep it up!

More on Obama's "Grassroots Tuesday" (2007-11-29 13:10)

The more I think about it, the more it appears Barack Obama is preparing for the possibility of a big showdown on Feb5. or "Tsunami Tuesday."

Obama is laying out the infrastructure to win using the grassroots approach reaching people with phone banks, canvassing, tabling, rallies, etc.

Obviously he still wants to do very well in the early states of Iowa, New Hampshire, Nevada and South Carolina. He particularly is putting a lot of emphasis in Iowa.

But his 19 offices in Feb. 5 states as compared to five for Hillary Clinton indicate how serious a ground campaign he is planning.

For example, here in California, the Obama camp has divided the whole state into congressional districts with one committee for each district. This is not just for show. They've been holding meetings and arranging direct voter contact activities.

Now, even in the last general election for president, there wasn't this kind of organization for Kerry-Edwards.

Some people might think it a waste of money to attempt something on this scale. The common strategy would be to dump nearly all one's cash in the early states and then hope for the best.

That might not be the most effective way of leveraging Obama's grassroots support though. He has many young supporters who don't have much or anything monetary-wise to contribute campaign. They might be willing to volunteer, however, with their time and effort.

Barack speaks out on healthcare [EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama at the Apollo (2007-11-29 19:48)

Sen. Barack Obama invaded Hillary Clinton territory today selling out the famed Apollo Theater in Harlem and meeting with African American leader Al Sharpton.

Clinton and Obama are locked in a battle for the black vote that will play an important role in South Carolina and many other states particularly in the South.

The $50-a-head fundraiser sold out the Apollo, which has a capacity of 1,400 people.

Sharpton and Obama had dinner at the soul food restaurant Silvia's after which Sharpton denied he was yet endorsing Obama. He did say that he and Obama "have been talking."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama Biography (2007-11-30 09:20)

Barack Obama was born on Aug. 4, 1961 to Barack Hussein Obama of Kenya and Ann Dunham of Kansas. His parents met in Hawai'i and divorced when Barack was still young. Barack's father was from the Luo people of Kenya coming as a scholar to study in the United States. His mother was also an intellectual, an anthropologist by training.

His mother remarried to Indonesian Lolo Soetoro and the family moved to Indonesia when Barack was six years old. He has one sister, Maya, the daughter of Lolo and Ann. At the age of 10, Barack returned to live with his grandparents in Hawai'i.

He became a student at the prestigious Punahou School in Honolulu and after graduating studied at Occidental College in California before transferring to Columbia University in New York. He graduated with a B.A. in political science and specialization in international relations.

After working a short while with a corporation, Barack decided to follow his calling and took a low-paying job as a community organizer in Chicago, a city he had never lived in before.

After working a few years at community organizing, he entered Harvard Law School in 1988. Obama has stated that he believed that in order to effect real change, someone had to work at the political level. He became the first African American president of the prestigious Harvard Law Review and completed his J.D. degree with magna cum laude honors in 1991.

Rather than accept corporate job offers, Obama became a civil rights lawyer with Miner, Barnhill & Galland from 1993 to 1996. In 1996, he was elected to the Illinois State Senate. He also was a lecturer in constitutional law at the University of Chicago Law School from 1994 until his election to the U.S. Senate in 2004.

In the Illinois State Senate, Barack worked on ethics and health care reform, and sponsored legislation improving tax credits for low-income workers. He negotiated welfare reform, and better subsidies for child care. Obama also played the key role in legislation requiring videotaping of homicide interrogations, and a law to monitor racial profiling.

In 2004, during his bid for the U.S. Senate, Obama gave the keynote address at the 2004 Democratic Convention.

As a U.S. Senator, Obama is a Veteran Affairs Committee member. He has championed legislation on redeployment of troops out of Iraq, increased government accountability, veteran's benefits and care, nuclear non-proliferation, energy independence and global warming action.

In 2007, Barack Obama announced his candidacy for President of the United States. He has mounted an impressive grassroots campaign up to Nov. 2007.

He married his wife Michelle in 1992 and has two daughters, Malia and Sasha. In 2004, he published an autobiography, Dreams From My Father: A Story of Race and Inheritance. His second book, The Audacity of Hope, was published in 2006. Barack lives with his family on Chicago's South Side where they attend Trinity United Church of Christ.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

concerned about America (2008-02-09 23:16:00)

Barack is not a practical choice and here is my argument in a nutshell. Anyone who knows anything about democratic politics knows that if a lot of "pricey" celebs are backing you its for a reason. For those of you who may be a bit in the dark, I thought I should remind you that Oprah and the many, many others who are dishing out the cash aren't exactly the working class citizens and tend to like Barack's policies for a reason....not because he plans to tax the hell out of them..that's for sure. Lets face it, the disparity between poverty and middle class is closing and Barack, aside from oweing favors to many people who may have gotten him in office, is not going to help the disparity. A good speaker yes.. I fully agree;however,I'll take Hillary because she is clearly the better of the two. Please, before you vote, do some research and don't get caught in the above average media coverage. Our national media also follows Brittney Spears close, so would you vote for her?

Anonymous (2008-02-11 23:29:00)

?. are you saying that barack obama's presidency will owe favors to oprah? hillary is looking more ridiculous and less presidential every day with her bitterness and ill-wrought reactionary campaign. "don't get caught in the above average media coverage"...what in the world do you even mean? barack is smarter, more appealing, more electable, has more forward thinking policies, and would actually beat mccain in a general election, whereas hillary would not. i'd encourage you to not be caught up in the press the clinton campaign churns out, and look objectively at all factors. as far as a "practical choice" goes, if you're interested in your candidate winning the white house, the answer is obama.

ed (2008-02-12 11:37:00)

What is obama's religious affiliation? I hear he is muslim. Is this true?

Anonymous (2008-05-08 20:16:00)

Why OBAMA not qualify to be a president!

He can't even tell anything about his pastor for which he associated with for over 20 years. How can he make dicision as a commander and chief of the US? not to mention he can make a good one. A poor dicision to stick with a bunch of physcos and just simply said I didn't know anything about it -is no the kind of person anyone want to rule or run the country. It is plain STUPID! the world will be burning b/c we vote a stupid person to be a president.

Also if he didnt distance himself from these physcos b/c he kind of believe them. Then why would we want this kind of person to be a president? This the hightest of honor and the most important job of all. Why would someone with this kind of background or story deserve to be in such important position?

If he only hang out with these phsycos for 20years and now he is not or that he didnt know anything about it -then you just simply said those people who hang out the Osama Bin Leden one time can simply come back and be our presient b/c he didnt know anything about bin Leden??

The OBAMA guy is jut too much. With this kind of credential — I don't know how he got to be a US senator.

American people WAKE UP, don't be stupid about this.

Patricia (2008-06-23 09:15:00)

I heard that Barack Obama is actually an Irish citizen or is at least of partial Irish descent, and that he changed his name from Bearach O'Bama to make him sound more ethnically appealing in the United States. Does anyone have more information about this?

Patricia in Dublin, Ireland united we stand? (2008-06-24 08:44:00)

I have not heard about him being "Irish" and I am not concerned about his heritage. I believe everyone in America should have their chance to make their dreams come true..black, hispanic, white, indian etc as long as they abide by the country's laws (including paying taxes which means working for a living!) Race should not matter if we are all united but unfortunately we are not. My ? is WHY? This is where I find fault in Obama. In a debate with Mrs. Clinton, Obama could not bring himself to say the word white. Charlie Gibson actually called him out on it saying "you mean white people". How can we vote a man or woman in as president of the United States of America if he/she cannot overcome their own racism. Which brings me to Oprah..someone who would never "allow" herself to go public on her political choice UNTIL a partial black man was on the ticket!?!? Interesting..don't you think?

Anonymous (2008-07-07 08:21:00)

I will vote and support any candidate that does the following (In this order):

- 1.) Stands for the underprivileged, the children, the infants, the ones that can't protect themselves.
- 2.) Clearly and distinctly states their beliefs, and does not sway from that belief.
- 3.) Will support and honor a belief in the Christian faith and will uphold the entire scripture as the word of God.

Unfortunately, Obama has none of these qualities.

There are better candidates.

Anonymous (2008-07-07 10:12:00)

I thought I would point out a few areas of Change that we should expect with the new presidential candidate.

Since we hear we need a CHANGE, I did some easy research to understand what change we were looking at.....

I don't know that I discovered the real change we are to receive, but I did walk away with a few questions that I had after doing some light reading are noted below:

- 1) What religion is Barack Obama?
- 2) Does he stand for and defend America (the United States)?
- 3) What is likely to really Change?
- 4) What Real Qualifications does he have?

I couldn't find answers to all of these, but found some easy indicators and noted some information below for the interested voter.

Answers

1 & 2) He is not a Christian, as I was raised to know all true Christians would not debate truths of the bible. You stand on the Jesus' salvation and the bible as the cornerstones of a religious Christian faith. Obama has defiled this belief in only accepting portions of the bible as truth, so I will just ask, what religion does he place his foundation.

Apparently a belief that life is not precious and made by God ... he clearly states on his own web page that he is an abortion supporter (url:http://my.barackobama.com/page/content/womenissues).

Therefore life is not precious, and God's creation is not precious.

REPRODUCTIVE CHOICE

Supports a Woman's Right to Choose:

Barack Obama understands that abortion is a divisive issue, and respects those who disagree with him. However, he has been a consistent champion of reproductive choice and will make preserving women's rights under Roe v. Wade a priority as President. He opposes any constitutional amendment to overturn the Supreme Court's decision in that case.

He proclaims he has stayed with his Christian church (and pastor) for 20 years, but he just recently turned on this pastor as the vulgar and racist pastor to have used curse words toward his the USA (<http://abcnews.go.com/Blotter/DemocraticDebate/story?id=4443788&page=1>).

Sen. Barack Obama's pastor says blacks should not sing "God Bless America" but "God damn America."

He admits to staying with this church for 20 years and sitting in the pulpit as his pastor continued this preaching. He compares him to an uncle that you let rant.

I wouldn't sit in a church that talked about my country, my god, and the races of the world in this manner. But, I will admit I am not presidential.

So, is his faith built upon this pastor, since he is using him as a reference for his relationship with Jesus? Does he represent this reference to help us believe he is a Christian and then turn against it because he doesn't want us to believe he is anti-American?

3) What change is he going with? Should we be ready to accept his doctrine as truth, since it "Changes" when it suits him?

I would ask each of you one serious question:

4) If you were going to hire a CEO of your company, and you could be the HR screener of this resume.... Would the following resume impress you to hire Obama as your CEO (or Chairman of the Board/President... etc)?

=====

Barack Obama's Experience

<http://www.linkedin.com/in/barackobama>

US Senator

US Senate (IL-D)

(Government Administration industry)

January 2005 — Present (3 years 7 months) (WOW 3 & ½ Years of US Senator Experience - Couldn't make it through one entire term in DC)

In the U.S. Senate, I have sought to focus on tackling the challenges of a globalized, 21st century world with fresh thinking and a politics that no longer settles for the lowest common denominator.

(WHAT DOES THAT MEAN??)

.

Senior Lecturer in Law

University of Chicago Law School

(Educational Institution; 501-1000 employees; Law Practice industry)

1993 — 2004 (11 years) (Well he taught for 11 years – that seems equivalent to running the largest power on the GLOBE)

.

State Senator

Illinois State Senate

(Legislative Office industry)

1997 — 2004 (7 years) (7 Years of STATE Senator Experience)

Proudly representing the 13th District on Chicago's south side.

» » » » » AND YES IT ENDS THERE » » » » »

=====

+++++

=====

Consider an Opposing (and Intelligent) View on Abortion (John McCain's view) <http://www.johnmccain.com/Informing/Issues/95b18512-d5b6-456e-90a2-12028d71df58.htm>

Overturning Roe v. Wade

John McCain believes Roe v. Wade is a flawed decision that must be overturned, and as president he will nominate judges who understand that courts should not be in the business of legislating from the bench.

Constitutional balance would be restored by the reversal of Roe v. Wade, returning the abortion question to the individual states. The difficult issue of abortion should not be decided by judicial fiat.

However, the reversal of Roe v. Wade represents only one step in the long path toward ending abortion. Once the question is returned to the states, the fight for life will be one of courage and compassion - the courage of a pregnant mother to bring her child into the world and the compassion of civil society to meet her needs and those of her newborn baby. The pro-life movement has done tremendous work in building and reinforcing the infrastructure of civil society by strengthening faith-based, community, and neighborhood organizations that provide critical services to pregnant mothers in need. This work must continue and government must find new ways to empower and strengthen these armies of compassion. These important groups can help build the consensus necessary to end abortion at the state level. As John McCain has publicly noted, "At its core, abortion is a human tragedy. To effect meaningful change, we must engage the debate at a human level."

Anonymous (2008-10-29 02:22:00)

Well, the big day is here.

The big day when Obama, in concert, literally, with the Leftist Media, tries to make his case for why we should vote for him.

He still expects so many of us to believe him, even after him being one of the biggest LIARS, on the face of this planet, in ALL of human history.

Now that there's been uncovered, yet ANOTHER, of his Blatant and Obvious examples of his root and core Socialist ideological beliefs, and no doubt why they will NOT reveal his writings from his College / University years, he has more 'splainin to do.

Can ANY amount of Obama bought air time, be enough for him to explain how it is possible that, since he has, from at least 2001 or before, held the beliefs, as he was eager to explain in the 2001 radio interview, in which he SAID there should be MORE Redistribution (of wealth), and the SUPREME COURT (probably other courts too) SHOULD be MORE involved. And, in CONTRADICTION to the Constitution, AND he STILL expects us to NOT think he IS a Socialist? Not to mention, him apparently being hell bent on our Constitution NOT being followed, which he MUST take an Oath TO Uphold and Protect. HOW and WHY would / could, We The People, believe ANY oath HE would take, under ANY circumstances?

Obama is either sooooo INCOMPETENT, or it's ANOTHER of his BIG LIES.

SO, just as has been asked in many ways, in cross examinations, and by those who REALLY want to know, was he LYING, LYING, LYING THEN, or, is he LYING, LYING, LYING Now? Or, is he just a CONSTANT Psychopathic Lying Sociopath? In ANY case, Obama is either sooooo INCOMPETENT, or it's ANOTHER of his BIG LIES.

Or, BOTH? It sure looks like it, more, and more, and more.

Can ANY amount of Obama bought air time, be enough for him to explain how it is possible, that 20 years in front of a "mentor" / Wright, was not enough for Obama to KNOW what Wright was all about, and hear and see the divisive anger and rage, which was demonstrated a number of times in sermons?

Obama is either sooooo INCOMPETENT, or it's ANOTHER of his BIG LIES.

Can ANY amount of Obama bought air time, be enough for him to explain how it is possible that, since he is supposedly so well educated from his college and university years, that he is apparently NOT well read enough, or NOT in touch with RECENT American History, that he has no clue of who Ayers was?

Obama is either sooooo INCOMPETENT, or it's ANOTHER of his BIG LIES.

Can ANY amount of Obama bought air time, be enough for him to explain how it is possible that, IF he has any REAL sense of politics, or the REAL world around him, how is it that when he started to get involved with Ayers, and ESPECIALLY Ayers involved in Obama's political career, that Obama did NOT properly do research about Ayers, to make sure of who or what he was?

Obama is either sooooo INCOMPETENT, or it's ANOTHER of his BIG LIES.

Can ANY amount of Obama bought air time, be enough for him to explain how it is possible that, since he was so involved with ACORN, but he did NOT apparently also know, or care about, the following:

(From <http://pajamasmedia.com/>)

The Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now (ACORN) is a community-based organization that advocates for low and moderate income families founded in 1970 by Wade Rathke and Gary Delgado. Rathke, one of the most powerful hard-Left activists in America, is a former member of a radical 1960s group, the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS). The Weathermen terrorist group split off from the SDS in 1969. And,

Although the organization prides itself for its registration efforts, it also has a long history of scandal. In the state of Missouri in 1986, 12 ACORN members were convicted of voter fraud. But that case was not an isolated incident in the state. In December 2004, in St. Louis, six volunteers pleaded guilty of dozens of election law violations for filling out registration cards with names of dead people and other bogus information.

Authorities launched an earlier investigation after noticing that among the new voters was longtime St. Louis alderman Albert “Red” Villa, who died in 1990. The volunteers worked for “Operation Big Vote” — a branch of ACORN — in St. Louis.

On February 10, 2005, Nonaresa Montgomery, a paid worker who ran Operation Big Vote during the run-up to the 2001 mayoral primary, was found guilty of vote fraud. Montgomery hired about 30 workers to do fraudulent voter-registration canvassing. Instead of knocking on doors, the volunteers sat at a St. Louis fast food restaurant and wrote out names and information from an outdated voter list. About 1,500 fraudulent voter registration cards were turned in.

In October 2006, St. Louis election officials discovered at least 1,492 “potentially fraudulent” voter registration cards. They were all turned in by ACORN volunteers.

In November 2006, 20,000 to 35,000 questionable voter registration forms were turned in by ACORN officials in Missouri. Most all of these were from St. Louis and Kansas City areas, where ACORN purportedly sought to help empower the “disenfranchised” minorities living there. But the ACORN workers weren’t just told to register new voters. The workers admitted on camera that they were coached to tell registrants to vote for Democrat Claire McCaskill.

In 2007, in Kansas City, Missouri, four ACORN employees were indicted for fraud. In April of this year eight ACORN employees in St. Louis city and county pleaded guilty to federal election fraud for submitting bogus voter registrations.

And, that was just Missouri.

(The whole story: <http://pajamasmedia.com/blog/the-complete-guide-to-acorn-voter-fraud/>)

So, since Obama is supposedly so smart, HOW can it be he did NOT know ANY of this FRAUD history of ACORN?

Obama is either sooooo INCOMPETENT, or it’s ANOTHER of his BIG LIES.

Can ANY amount of Obama bought air time, be enough for him to explain how it is possible that, IF he is supposedly so smart, politically, or otherwise, HOW is it, he did not make sure of the ethicalness of his relationship and deals with Rezko? WHY did Obama not realize the potential, for even the appearance of scandal, let alone the ACTUAL deals we’re now aware of? Maybe because it’s so accepted in Chicago / Illinois corrupt street thug politics?

Obama is either sooooo INCOMPETENT, or it’s ANOTHER of his BIG LIES.

Can ANY amount of Obama bought air time, be enough for him to explain how it is possible that, IF he has ANY amount of understanding of economics, or our country’s financial mechanisms, he could NOT see the potential for disaster, with the KNOWN mismanagement, CORRUPTION, and artificial housing market success, being perpetrated by, and because of, Fannie, Freddie, and BAD legislation and requirements, for banks to make HIGH risk mortgages? Maybe because so many DEMOCRATS were ALREADY getting away with it.

Obama is either sooooo INCOMPETENT, or it’s ANOTHER of his BIG LIES.

Can ANY amount of Obama bought air time, be enough for him to explain how it is possible that, IF he had ANY inkling of Foreign Policy, or even reality in general, that it would be OK, to sit down with a KNOWN adversary, of ANY degree, to discuss, and TO NEGOTIATE, almost anything, would be done with NO preconditions, AND that ANY one, with an ounce of IQ, would ANNOUNCE ahead of time, their strategy, like, NO preconditions?

Obama is either sooooo INCOMPETENT, or it’s ANOTHER of his BIG LIES.

Can ANY amount of Obama bought air time, be enough for him to explain how it is possible that, . . . , well, I guess the list could go on and on. And, I probably have missed some things in my above chronology.

It all just comes down to this,

Obama is either sooooo absolutely, totally, INCOMPETENT, or,

he just, LIES, LIES, LIES, LIES, LIES, LIES, LIES, LIES.
In EITHER case he WILL be one of the WORST presidents we'd EVER have.
Maybe that won't happen.

Navi Arora (2008-11-05 22:58:00)
Barack Obama's Official Blog

GMONEY (2008-12-28 12:44:00)

I guess what I find interesting about Obama's racial appeal is that, when I was growing up (I'm 44), African-Americans were anything BUT supportive of a man who's upbringing was not touched by an African-American (Uncle Tom, etc). Obama was raised strictly by white people (his mother, and grandparents), with the values AND AMBITION of those white people, etc. Further, he had little to no involvement with African Americans in his life as that population is next to zero in Hawaii. Coming from a white mother, and raised by (lets admit it, bigoted) white grandparents I think the real hidden story is NOT that whites accepted his candidacy, but that African Americans did! With that said, I hope the African American population realizes that "one of their own" has not been elected. That will take place when an individual who is brought up around, schooled by and raised by African Americans is elected President...and that has NOT taken place yet. Not even close. It is my hope that the African American community will not take Obama's election as some sort of accomplishment (as it is not for that ethnic group) but strive to achieve until one that is TRULY their own can call the highest office in the land their job. Now, what this SHOULD point out and signal is that we can now END affirmative action programs as the white population demonstrated en masse that we will actively participate in giving a job to the best man (or woman) for it. (Barrack, Hillary, Sarah, etc.) It has to happen sometime. If we are to see each other as equals (which is what Obama's election should signal) affirmative action HAS TO be eliminated...and lets get on to treating everything equally.

Anonymous (2009-01-19 17:13:00)

One thing everyone is forgetting, he's Mulatto-TERM FOR BIRACIAL/MIXED PEOPLE WITH HALF BLACK AND HALF WHITE BLOOD SO, he should be for EVERY race.
The world needs to refer to him as Mulatto not African-American.

Cacá - Brazil (2009-01-29 08:59:00)

Vou dizer uma coisinha; que monte de discursos fedidos e sem fundamento.que bando de discursos perdido por quem não defende uma real mudança , uma real autonomia da população americana.Por quem não defende uma real igualdade do povo americano.

Gente pare de falar besteiras.... não importa nada do que disseram , tudo bobagem , o que importa mesmo é o HOMEM ; sua qualificação , seus desejo de transformar essa politica de merda dos presidentes americanos que o passado os levem , essa politica de merda dos estados unidos que só tem olhos para a guerra e a destruição do planeta.Só tem olhos pra cima e não vê o sofrimento do povo miserável do mundo.

VIVA OBAMA , O SALVADOR DOS ESTADOS UNIDOS.

E PRONTO.

ELE VENCEU E A MUDANÇA IRÁ PREVALECER.

Anonymous (2009-08-05 09:10:00)

He born in Malaysia. Sand Moslems is not eligable to be president. He need to resign and let Bill Clinton be president.

Anonymous (2010-01-30 21:06:10)

hi guys so happy to be between you yayaay love the blog soo much ^^

Anonymous (2010-09-29 21:54:19)

I always motivated by you, your opinion and attitude, again, appreciate for this nice post.

- Murk

Admin (2011-01-06 10:15:46)

I will vote and support any candidate that does the following (In this order):

- 1.) Stands for the underprivileged, the children, the infants, the ones that can't protect themselves.
- 2.) Clearly and distinctly states their beliefs, and does not sway from that belief.
- 3.) Will support and honor a belief in the Christian faith and will uphold the entire scripture as the word of God.

Barack Obama Quotes (2007-11-30 10:37)

Barack Obama Quotes

- Obama Quotes on Climate Change
- Obama Quotes on the Iraq War
- Obama Quotes on Social Issues
- Obama Quotes on Education
- Obama Quotes on Politics
- Miscellaneous Obama quotes

Obama Quotes on Climate Change All across the world, in every kind of environment and region known to man, increasingly dangerous weather patterns and devastating storms are abruptly putting an end to the long-running debate over whether or not climate change is real. Not only is it real, it's here, and its effects are giving rise to a frighteningly new global phenomenon: the man-made natural disaster.

- Barack Obama

The issue of climate change is one that we ignore at our own peril. There may still be disputes about exactly how much we're contributing to the warming of the earth's atmosphere and how much is naturally occurring, but what we can be scientifically certain of is that our continued use of fossil fuels is pushing us to a point of no return. And unless we free ourselves from a dependence on these fossil fuels and chart a new course on energy in this country, we are condemning future generations to global catastrophe.

- Barack Obama

Today we're seeing that climate change is about more than a few unseasonably mild winters or hot summers. It's about the chain of natural catastrophes and devastating weather patterns that global warming is beginning to set off around the world.. the frequency and intensity of which are breaking records thousands of years old.

- Barack Obama

Obama Quotes on the Iraq War

"Why are you always reminding us that you opposed the war? Isn't that yesterday's news? Is that experience really relevant?" And what I always say is this – this isn't just about the past, it's about the future.

- Barack Obama

I didn't see the weapons of mass destruction at the time, I didn't think there was an imminent threat from Saddam Hussein.

- Barack Obama

I don't oppose all wars. What I am opposed to is a dumb war. What I am opposed to is a rash war.

- Barack Obama

There are patriots who opposed the war in Iraq and there are patriots who supported the war in Iraq. We are one people, all of us pledging allegiance to the stars and stripes, all of us defending the United States of America.

- Barack Obama

We're not going to baby sit a civil war.

- Barack Obama

Obama Quotes on Social Issues We reward people a lot for being rich, for being famous, for being cute, for being thin... one of the values I think we need to instill in our country, in our children, is a sense of 'usefulness', in other words, are we useful, are we making other peoples' lives a little bit better?

- Barack Obama

My parents shared not only an improbable love, they shared an abiding faith in the possibilities of this nation. They would give me an African name, Barack, or blessed, believing that in a tolerant America your name is no barrier to success. They imagined me going to the best schools in the land, even though they weren't rich, because in a generous America you don't have to be rich to achieve your potential.

- Barack Obama

People don't expect government to solve all their problems. But they sense, deep in their bones, that with just a slight change in priorities, we can make sure that every child in America has a decent shot at life, and that the doors of opportunity remain open to all. They know we can do better.

- Barack Obama

Focusing your life solely on making a buck shows a certain poverty of ambition. It asks too little of yourself. Because it's only when you hitch your wagon to something larger than yourself that you realize your true potential.

- Barack Obama

No one is pro-abortion.

- Barack Obama

This budget tells our veterans that if they want increased funding for the VA they'll have to pay for it themselves.

- Barack Obama

Obama Quotes on Education Community colleges play an important role in helping people transition between careers by providing the retooling they need to take on a new career.

- Barack Obama

We have an obligation and a responsibility to be investing in our students and our schools. We must make sure that people who have the grades, the desire and the will, but not the money, can still get the best education possible.

- Barack Obama

We need to internalize this idea of excellence. Not many folks spend a lot of time trying to be excellent.

- Barack Obama

With the changing economy, no one has lifetime employment. But community colleges provide lifetime employability.

- Barack Obama

Obama Quotes on Politics

A good compromise, a good piece of legislation, is like a good sentence; or a good piece of music. Everybody can recognize it. They say, 'Huh. It works. It makes sense.'

- Barack Obama

In the end, that's what this election is about. Do we participate in a politics of cynicism or a politics of hope?

- Barack Obama

My first job is to say thank you to those who voted me. Those who didn't, I'm going to get your vote next time.

- Barack Obama

My job is not to represent Washington to you, but to represent you to Washington.

There is not a liberal America and a conservative America - there is the United States of America. There is not a black America and a white America and latino America and asian America - there's the United States of America.

- Barack Obama

There's not a liberal America and a conservative America - there's the United States of America.

- Barack Obama

We worship an awesome God in the Blue States, and we don't like federal agents poking around our libraries in the Red States. We coach Little League in the Blue States and have gay friends in the Red States.

- Barack Obama

Miscellaneous Obama quotes A nation healed. A world repaired. An America that believes again.

- Barack Obama

That's why I can stand here today. Because somebody stood up when it was hard; stood up when it was risky.

- Barack Obama

I am running in this race because of what Dr. King called "the fierce urgency of now." Because I believe that there's such a thing as being too late. And that hour is almost upon us.

- Barack Obama

In my heart I know you didn't come here just for me, you came here because you believe in what this country can be. In the face of war, you believe there can be peace. In the face of despair, you believe there can be hope. In the face of a politics that's shut you out, that's told you to settle, that's divided us for too long, you believe we can be one people, reaching for what's possible, building that more perfect union.

- Barack Obama

That is the true genius of America, a faith in the simple dreams of its people, the insistence on small miracles. That we can say what we think, write what we think, without hearing a sudden knock on the door. That we can have an idea and start our own business without paying a bribe or hearing a sudden knock on the door. That we can participate in the political process without fear of retribution, and that our votes will be counted-or at least, most of the time.

- Barack Obama

This is our time, and I'm grateful to be a part of that.

- Barack Obama

If you're walking down the right path and you're willing to keep walking, eventually you'll make progress.

- Barack Obama

It took a lot of blood, sweat and tears to get to where we are today, but we have just begun. Today we begin in earnest the work of making sure that the world we leave our children is just a little bit better than the one we inhabit today.

- Barack Obama

Money is not the only answer, but it makes a difference.

- Barack Obama

That's silly talk... Talk to my wife. She'll tell me I need to learn to just put my socks on the hamper.

- Barack Obama

We need to steer clear of this poverty of ambition, where people want to drive fancy cars and wear nice clothes and live in nice apartments but don't want to work hard to accomplish these things. Everyone should try to realize their full potential.

- Barack Obama

You know, my faith is one that admits some doubt.

- Barack Obama

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-04-14 08:21:00)

I believe your comment about small town anger and frustration to be absolutely correct. I live in a small town in Northeast Ohio on the Lake Erie that is like a forgotten area. I know many people here who are angry, bitter, and frustrated with the government. I volunteer at the local hospital and to see the people who come in without health insurance in need of care and they are very bitter, angry and my heart aches for them. I have seven members of my extended family who have no health insurance. Presently I am paying Cobra for my daughter-in-law who lost her job because of a medical condition and needs surgery to correct it. ($470.02) per month for Cobra so she can eventually go back to her job and be self-sufficient. Am I bitter? A little as my husband and I are retired living on small pensions and S.S. But at age 77 and 78 we did not think we would be helping family members who through no fault on their own are in need of medical care. Jobs are scarce in this area and the pay is pitiful. My daughter works at a pre-school for 7.00/hr. Divorced after 25 years of marriage with a son 23 who goes to college. They live with us and we help them financially They have no hospitalization as her ex-husband lost his job and his insurance. Am I bitter? A little. We do what we can for them but that doesn't mean there is not some bitterness and anger and I see it all around our neighborhood. Families on both sides of us have adult children living with them for many different reasons. None of them have health insurance. All of them work but not enough money to pay health insurance. Our town is like the forgotten area.

Anonymous (2008-05-02 12:16:00)

What are your sources for these quotes? some of us need to know they have a good source...

Paul Kekai Manansala (2008-05-02 12:39:00)

You can find all the quotes on Google. Most are from ontheissues.org (www.ontheissues.org/Senate/Barack_Obama.htm) or barackobama.com.

If you need information on specific quotes, I can track them down.

Anonymous (2008-09-10 07:34:00)

I was onboard until the lipstick remark...I guess if I watch this process unfold (which I certainly will) completely, I will see each of their true opinions come forward. Senator Obama apparently has a very low opinion of women. I wear lipstick, am a working mom, and certainly don't consider myself a "PIG"

Anonymous (2008-11-07 23:04:00)

In keeping with the original focus of Obama quotes, I discovered some excerpts from Obama's 11/4 speech have been set to music in a rather interesting way. The arrangement is called "Yes We Can" and is found at <http://www.myspace.com/lcomsongs>

Joel (2009-03-23 08:31:00)

I track and follow Obama's speeches every day. I've found a really cool website that allows you to submit your favorite quotes and have them on a shirt.

I've bought a couple for myself and family members and they are really great. Check it out here: www.obamaspoketome.com
Very cool products.

Thanks for blogging!

Anonymous (2010-09-15 23:22:56)

Wow neat! This is a really great site! I am wondering if anyone else has come across something exactly the same in the past? Keep up the great work!

1.12 December

Is Obama Tough Enough? (2007-12-01 10:30)

The proposition that American voters might not view Barack Obama as tough enough was discussed recently on a few nationwide television news talk shows.

Basically, the idea is that Barack Obama is viewed as a pushover and that he might be seen in the light of say, Jimmy Carter.

However, I don't remember seeing anything in the sense of poll data or opinion surveys that suggest Obama is seen as a weak figure. So it seems that much of this discussion is based on the personal opinions of various pundits.

A tough exterior does not necessarily translate into greater security or stability. George W. Bush cultivated the cowboy image, but that didn't stop al-Qaeda from launching a brazen attack on 9-11.

Even with American troops overextended on two battlefields, terrorist networks have continued to launch major attacks worldwide since the bombing of the World Trade Center.

It was during tough guy Bush's watch, that fundamentalist Iran has become the major power in the Middle East region, Hezbollah is now stronger than ever in Lebanon, and Hamas has come to ascendancy in Palestine.

On other fronts, the world's worse humanitarian crises in Darfur is mostly the result of military confrontation between Sudan and Chad.

Oil prices, long linked with U.S. security, are high at about $90 a barrel and many think they will eventually go much higher. High oil prices are often cited as one of the "failings" of a "weak" Carter administration.

In Asia, North Korea tested its first nuclear weapon against the warnings of the cowboy administration. Islamic fundamentalism has become a more serious problem in countries like Malaysia, Thailand, Indonesia and the Philippines.

Malaysia, once seen as the shining example of a tolerant multi-cultural Muslim-majority state, has been moving at an alarming rate toward hard-line Islamism since the invasion of Iraq.

Russia, once seemingly on a benign path has been moving increasingly toward the right under the Bush administration igniting fears of a new Cold War.

So, tough images and tough action does not translate into security or stability. If America does not like to be pushed around, neither do people in most other parts of the world. And in not a few cases, they are willing to fight when pushed to a certain point even if out-gunned.

Good judgment, diplomacy and sound knowledge of the situation at hand trump cowboy images and tough talk.

Bush, for example, showed his ignorance of the situation in launching his attack on Iraq, when it was revealed that he was unfamiliar with the sectarian strife between Sunni and Shi'ite sects.

Obama, on the other hand, as shown an intricate knowledge in the area of international relations and foreign policy. Likewise, Obama showed good judgment when he failed to accept the administration's case on WMD in Iraq. He spoke before the war began of the chaos that would ensue in the country.

An aggressive foreign policy will not work because it is not concerned with creating a win-win situation for everybody involved. It's only concerned with American interests at the expense of everybody else. Now, when those others decide not to cooperate, it turns into a lose-lose situation as we have today.

One of the strange things I've seen in this campaign, is that many people seem to be judging Obama's "toughness" on his willingness to attack Hillary Clinton on the stump. One has to wonder how this should translate to Obama's foreign policy performance if elected.

The world may not be a friendly place, but those perceived most unfriendly are the bullies. Everyone loves to take down a bully. Obama's approach, it would seem, would be to promote an environment where peace and stable relationships actually have a chance to flourish.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Ambmack (2008-03-01 19:34:00)

I don't agree with your basic logic that Obama is tough enough. He consistently voted "present" instead of yea or nea on too many votes in his State Legislature and no shows in the U.S. Senate. I am an Independent in voting history and have a real fear that Obama is too indecisive or reluctant to make tough decisions when required by the circumstance.

A recent cartoon I saw in a local newspaper showed the White House with "training wheels" on it. Struct me as a pretty strong analogy. Good Luck!

Anonymous (2008-04-24 01:37:00)

I LOVE OBAMA AND HIS MESSAGE.

HE NEEDS TO RESPOND SUBTLY TO HELLARY AND NOT RUIN HIS MESSAGE, BUT HE NEEDS TO FIGHT HER, SHE'S DANGEROUS IMO.....ALL THAT REV. WRIGHT STUFF ON FOX NOISE IS KILLIN HIM. YET I SAW A YOU TUBE ON FOX NOISE 10 AM 2 DAYS AGO.....SHOWING GOV. RENDEL?? OF PA PRAISING FARRAKAN.....ALSO, WHAT IS HELLARY'S REAL FAITH, RELIGION? RESEARCHING IT, YOU FIND ALL KINDS OF INFO, AND REV. HAGGEE.

SPELLING? ENDORSING MCCAIN AND AGAIN TODAY REPEATING HIS REMARKS.

MSNBC IS FOR OBAMA. <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=yCKTnJjiE5U>

Anonymous (2008-04-24 01:41:00)

YOU TUBE VIDEO OF <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=yCKTnJjiE5U>

GOV. RENDEL AND FARRAKAN, WAS SHOWN ON FOX NOISE 2 DAYS AGO ABOUT 10 AM.

HAGGEE AND MCCAIN, WHY AREN'T THEY SPOKEN ABOUT?? I KNOW THE CAMPAIGN WILL GET DIRTY.....AND OBAMA IS NOT FOR THAT, BUT ITS POLITICS AND HELLARY WILL DO ANYTHING. SEAN HANNITY HAS BEEN TALKING ABOUT REV. WRIGHT EVERY NIGHT FOR WEEKS. IS THIS HURTING BARACK?

PLEASE SOMEONE DO IT SUBTLY, AS MC CAIN DID IN NORTH CAROLINA....LOL

HE DENOUNCED THE MESSAGE, THEREBY ENABLING IT TO BE SHOWN EVERY 1/2 HOUR.....WE NEED OBAMA, 8 YEARS OF GOP IS A DISGRACE!

ERIN (2008-04-24 01:48:00)

ENUFF WITH REV. WRIGHT HOW ABOUT HAGGEE, GOV. ED RENDELL/PRAISING FARRAKAN ON YOU TUBE.....????

MC CAIN HAD NO PROBLEM, SUBTLY DENOUNCING THAT NORTH CAROLINA AD, AND NOW ITS POSTED EVERY 1/2 HR ON EVERY CABLE CHANNEL.

SEAN HANNITY FOR WEEKS IS HARPING ON REV. WRIGHT.....WHAT IS HELLARY'S FAITH? RELIGION.....SOMEONE PLEASE RESEARCH IT.....I HAVE BUT NOT CERTAIN WHATS POSTED IS REAL BUT BARACK HAS THE STAFF TO DO IT.

ITS DIRTY POLITICS AND OBAMA HAS TO BE SUBTLE BUT FIGHT BACK....8 YEARS OF THIS DISGRACEFUL PRESIDENT IS ENUFF.....THANKS FOR LISTENING.

Carol Pitner (2008-04-29 16:03:00)

I want Obama to fight Hillary all the way. She is a dangerous individual that we do not need in the White house. I believe in what Obama stands for however I think Obama is now being viewed as weak and they are stating he should come out stronger against Rev Wright more then he did. They are also saying he could not go to a church and not know how radical this Rev wright was. I have to agree with this statment. However I think Obama is what this country needs and I want him to fight and fight hard against Hillary. If he can win the primary then John McCain will not be hard to beat as John McCain does not have the fire in his belly to beat the democrates or stand up to Obama or Hillary...PS I am a republican and have voted as one for many years. This is a time for Change...Please Obama come out more firm and direct in your statements and denoucement of Rev Wright. Do not wait go on Fox news and go on O'Reily.....Please we need you! Carol

Anonymous (2008-05-01 16:30:00)

America, Americans love a fighter—especially in our leaders. Leadership is what this election has come to. People want to feel that you're going to truly fight for them. We want to feel comfortable that when things get tough that leader possesses the internal fortitude and resolve to do what is in the best interest of this country.

Now, almost more than any time in the history of this country we need leadership and a leader that possesses a strong relationship with their inner being, and is able to forcefully and unequivocally communicate GOOD.

Too often we misinterpret ego driven ideology for toughness. Senator Clinton was backed into a corner and she came out fighting. It was her resolve that I admired, not the way she's conducted herself in battle.

The Rev. Wright controversy has backed Senator Obama into that same proverbial corner, and now America is watching with baited breath to experience his resolve and witness his conduct in battle.

The battle that he must fight must come from his heart. He must forcefully and decisively communicate his GOOD. He must move ego and ideology out the way in order that GOOD might flow. GOOD, like TRUTH, is unmistakable.

GOOD, delivered from the heart will always find the appropriate tone, and body language in order that it might be heard. Let's continue to fight on to a victory in November.

The Independent (2008-05-07 13:48:00)

Obama's Race Against Race

The Independent

A black man runs from a howling crowd. If he's caught he'll be torn apart. If he reaches sanctuary he'll be loved. This ritual is the Sacred Lynching. It's a scene from Olaf Stapledon's science fiction book, The First and Last Men. Set in the future, humanity has mixed and few people are "white" or "black," and the ritual is a nostalgic celebration of racism in a post-racial world. It resembles our own supposed post-racial politics, and I see Senator Barack Obama as that last black man on earth trying to outrun our media mob.

And the mob tries. At ABC's Democratic primary debate in Philadelphia, hosts Charles Gibson and George Stephanopoulos tied trivia around Obama's feet. What about your angry black pastor? Are you patriotic? Are you a friend of a Weathermen terrorist? Obama questioned their questions until they looked absurd. The audience caught his cue and afterwards, when the cameras blinked off, they heckled the hosts.

The media chase Obama because, if he wins the presidential race, he'll break the last American color line, which is also the line between our repressed history and our collective consciousness. A nation, just like an individual, will repress images and ideas that conflict with its self-image. The violence that created who we are — enslavement of Africans, indigenous peoples marched off their land, workers hanged for unionizing — contradicts our self-image as the greatest nation on earth, so our media-represses it.

To read more:

http://www.independent.org/2008/04/25/obama %e2 %80 %99s-race-against-race/

Anonymous (2008-05-31 22:53:00)

Judging by his first campaign in Illinois, Obama might be considered tough enough by Chicago (or Washington ...) standards ... but not in the spirit of "A change we believe in." The candidate of hope is just another politician after all ... with little experience to boot! And this is the best candidate that we can find to represent our party in November?!

ronik (2008-06-02 12:43:00)

The only future problem I see for Obama, are the Hillary supporters that would rather vote for McCain than see him in the White House. They feel Obama and his church have created racial divides that have split the democratic party.

Then, there's the question regarding a "whitey" video that is purported to have been made by Michelle Obama. It is said to have Michelle spewing racial narrative from the pulpit of the Trinity Church. Apparently, it is rumored to be in the possession of the republican party who is waiting until closer to the election to debut it.

Add that to a murder investigation currently underway in Chicago where Donald Young, the choir leader at Trinity was killed after claiming some rather nasty things about Obama. Not to mention the two murders that followed.

Don't be so quick to get Hillary out of the race people! We may need her in it until the end if we are to retake the White House.

Anonymous (2008-07-20 17:42:00)

I think Sen. Obama may be tough enough but he needs some better guidance. For example, when the neo-cons made a big deal about his not wearing a flag lapel pin, instead of caving and wearing one every now and then, he should have worn the biggest, glitziest pin he could (2"x2") and then accuse McCain et al. of not being as patriotic as he. He should stop letting them dictate his actions.

Sandy Dumont (2008-08-12 16:28:00)

Obama is tough enough, but he needs an image consultant. I'm standing by to help! What he wore Monday in Hawaii was not good. Recently I was quoted as saying he looked good in black, but what I actually said was that he looked good in his black suit with a white shirt and red power tie.

Anybody know how to get a message to him? I'm a seasoned image consultant working with Fortune 500 companies. Check my website: www.theimagearchitect.com

Sandy Dumont (2008-08-12 16:28:00)

Obama is tough enough, but he needs an image consultant. I'm standing by to help! What he wore Monday in Hawaii was not good. Recently I was quoted as saying he looked good in black, but what I actually said was that he looked good in his black suit with a white shirt and red power tie.

Anybody know how to get a message to him? I'm a seasoned image consultant working with Fortune 500 companies. Check my website: www.theimagearchitect.com

Anonymous (2008-10-31 19:34:00)

I am not sure if I will vote for Obama or not. Does he have any experience with international politics?

Anonymous (2009-04-01 14:32:00)

Apr. 1, 2009...I am an Obama supporter and yet, I'm unsure about his 'toughness' too. I like the fact that he's willing to talk and make new assessments on old situations and old conflicts, but I really hope he has the balls to do what might need to get done (including standing firm against US geopolitical opponents). Obama reminds me of the kid in school who wanted everyone to be his friend...the world isn't that friendly, Barack. Unfortunately, we can't all be friends.

Paul Merai (2012-09-03 14:53:55)

http://www.youtube.com/watch?feature=endscreen &NR=1 &v=k8TwRmX6zs4 this one alone should get you one billion votes.

Time Magazine features Obama (2007-12-01 16:15)

Senator Barack Obama made the cover story of latest edition of Time Magazine:

Click here for the full story.

Endorsements Obama also picked up some endorsements at the end of the week. The Illinois chapter of the AFSCME labor union broke with the national endorsement to support their hometown boy. The Alabama New South Coalition, a mostly black organization, also voted to endorse Obama on Saturday.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Change Rocks Concert/Rally (2007-12-02 10:01)

If you're in the Chicago area, you're not going to want to miss this. Get your tickets now.

Friday, December 7th

Doors Open at 7PM

Riveria Theater
4746 Racine Avenue
Chicago, Illinois 60640

— Here's a video of Obama supporters at the Brown/Black Presidential Forum in Iowa:
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama Speech List (2007-12-02 15:29)

- Obama Speeches on Energy and the Environment
- Obama Speeches on Foreign Policy including Iraq War
- Obama Speeches to Labor Organizations
- Obama Quotes on Education
- Obama Quotes on Healthcare
- Miscellaneous Obama speeches

Obama Speeches on Energy

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama: Real Leadership for a Clean Energy Future October 8, 2007
Two weeks ago, representatives from some of the world's largest emitters of greenhouse gases were invited to Washington by the President for a global conference on climate change.
- Energy Independence and the Safety of Our Planet April 3, 2006
The issue of climate change is one that we ignore at our own peril. There may still be disputes about exactly how much we're contributing to the warming of the earth's atmosphere and how much is naturally occurring, but what we can be scientifically certain of is that our continued use of fossil fuels is pushing us to a point of no return. And unless we free ourselves from a dependence on these fossil fuels and chart a new course on energy in this country, we are condemning future generations to global catastrophe.

- Energy Security is National Security February 28, 2006

In this year's State of the Union address, President Bush told us that it was time to get serious about America's addiction to foreign oil. The next day, we found out that his idea didn't sit too well with the Saudi Royal Family. A few hours later, Energy Secretary Bodman backtracked and assured the world that even though the President said he planned to reduce the amount of oil we import from the Middle East, he actually didn't mean that literally.

- Securing Our Energy Future September 15, 2005

The days of running a 21st century economy on a 20th century fossil fuel are numbered - and we need to realize that before it's too late. Our persistent dependence on oil is a danger our government has known about for years. And despite constant warnings by researchers and scientists, major corporations and our own government officials, it's a danger they have failed to prepare for, listen to, or seriously try to guard against.

Obama Speeches on Foreign Policy

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama: Lessons from Iraq October 12, 2007

Now, some have asked me, "Why are you always reminding us that you opposed the war? Isn't that yesterday's news? Is that experience really relevant?" And what I always say is this - this isn't just about the past, it's about the future. I don't talk about my opposition to the war to say "I told you so." I wish the war had gone differently. But the reason I talk about it is because I truly believe that the judgment, and the conviction, and the accountability that each of us showed on the most important foreign policy decision of our lives is the best indicator you have of how each of us will make those decisions going forward.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama: Turning the Page in Iraq September 12, 2007

In a major national security address at Ashford University in Clinton, Iowa, U.S. Senator Barack Obama will today outline his plan to end the war and his vision for what America can achieve once it turns the page in Iraq.

- Remarks of Senator Obama: The War We Need to Win August 1, 2007

In a major national security address at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars, U.S. Senator Barack Obama today said that the war in Iraq and our failed leadership in Washington have made us less safe than we were before 9/11. Obama said that the U.S. has been fighting on the wrong battlefield, and outlined his comprehensive strategy to fight terrorism worldwide.

- Remarks of Senator Obama: A Sacred Trust August 21, 2007

In an address to the 108th National Convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, U.S. Senator Barack Obama today articulated his plan to keep America's sacred trust with our active duty servicemen and women and our veterans, rebuild our overstretched military, and develop the capabilities we need to face the challenges of the 21st century.

- A Way Forward in Iraq November 20, 2006

Throughout American history, there have been moments that call on us to meet the challenges of an uncertain world, and pay whatever price is required to secure our freedom. They are the soul-trying times our forbearers spoke of, when the ease of complacency and self-interest must give way to the more difficult task of rendering judgment on what is best for the nation and for posterity, and then acting on that judgment - making the hard choices and sacrifices necessary to uphold our most deeply held values and ideals.

- Moving Forward in Iraq November 22, 2005

Today, nearly 160,000 American soldiers, sailors, airmen, and marines are risking their lives in the Middle East. They are operating in some of the most dangerous and difficult circumstances imaginable. Well over 2,000 men and women have made the ultimate sacrifice - given their full measure of devotion. Thousands more have returned with wounds like those that I saw at Walter Reed.

- Non-Proliferation and Russia: The Challenges Ahead November 1, 2005

Good morning. As some of you know, Senator Lugar and I recently traveled to Russia, Ukraine, and Azerbaijan to witness firsthand both the progress we're making in securing the world's most dangerous weapons, as well as the serious challenges that lie ahead.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama About America's Nuclear Non-Proliferation Policy May 26, 2005

Mr. President, throughout the last half of the 20th Century, one nation - more than any other on the face of the earth - defined and shaped the threats posed to the United States.

- Statement of Senator Barack Obama on the Nuclear Option April 13, 2005

Mr. President, I rise today to urge my colleagues to think about the implications the nuclear option would have on this chamber and this country. I urge you to think not just about winning every debate, but about protecting free and democratic debate.

- Remarks of Illinois State Sen. Barack Obama Against Going to War with Iraq October 2, 2002

Good afternoon. Let me begin by saying that although this has been billed as an anti-war rally, I stand before you as someone who is not opposed to war in all circumstances. The Civil War was one of the bloodiest in history, and yet it was only through the crucible of the sword, the sacrifice of multitudes, that we could begin to perfect this union, and drive the scourge of slavery from our soil. I don't oppose all wars.

Obama Speeches to Labor Unions

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama: United Auto Workers Conference November 13, 2007

We meet at a difficult time for organized labor. A while back, I went to a Maytag plant in Galesburg, Illinois that was moving to Mexico. And I met workers who were having to compete with their own children for jobs that pay seven bucks an hour.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama at Labor Day Rally September 3, 2007

The conventional thinking in Washington tells us that we're a country divided into Red States and Blue States; that we're doomed to fight the same tired partisan battles over and over again. They tell us we can't come together to take on big challenges like health care, or energy, or education; that we can't agree on what America should be, so we might as well settle for the way America is right now. But these crowds tell me something else. They tell me that when it comes to what's wrong with this country, the American people are not the problem. The American people are the answer.

- AFSCME National Convention August 7, 2006

In coffee shops and town meetings, in VFW halls and right here in this room, the questions are all the same. Will I be able to leave my children a better world than I was given? Will I be able to save enough to send them to college or plan for a secure retirement? Will my job even be there tomorrow? Who will stand up for me in this new world? In this time of change and uncertainty, these questions are expected - but I want you to know today they are by no means unique. Throughout our history, they have been asked and then answered by Americans who have stood in your shoes and shared your concerns.

- Take Back America Conference Remarks June 14, 2006

It's a time where you can go to any town hall or street corner or coffee shop and hear people express the same anxiety about the future; hear them convey the same uncertainty about the direction we're headed as a country. Whether it's the war or Katrina or their health care or their jobs, you hear people say that we've finally arrived at a moment where something must change.

- AFL-CIO National Convention July 25, 2005

It would be naive of me to start without acknowledging what's been on everyone's mind during this convention. As America tries to find its way in a global economy, we meet here at a challenging time for the labor movement. There are questions of strategy and tactics, leadership and power. And I can imagine that many of you are anxious not only about labor's future, but yours. You're wondering, will I be able to leave my children a better world than I was given? Will I be able to save enough to send them to college or plan for a secure retirement? Will my job even be there tomorrow? Who will stand up for me in this new world?

Obama Speeches on Education

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama: Our Kids, Our Future November 20, 2007

I've visited many schools and spoken to many teachers and students throughout my two decades of public service, but one I'll always remember is my visit to Dodge Elementary School in Chicago just a few years ago.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama to the National Education Association Annual Meeting July 5, 2007

Over the last few years, I've been traveling to different schools and meeting with all kinds of educators to hear about what's working, what's not, what makes the difference when it comes to educating children today.

- Teaching Our Kids in a 21st Century Economy October 25, 2005

The other day, I was reading through Jonathan Kozol's new book, Shame of a Nation. In it, he talks about his recent travels to schools across America, and how fifty years after Brown v. Board of Education, we have an education system in this country that is still visibly separate and painfully unequal.

Obama Speeches on Healthcare

- Cutting Costs and Covering America: A 21st Century Health Care System May 29, 2007

A few hours north of here, Amy and Lane run a small business that offers internet service to their community. They were the very first company to provide broadband access in their remote corner of northeastern Iowa, and every day, hundreds of people count on the services they provide to do their jobs and live their lives.

- Statement of U.S. Senator Barack Obama on the Avian Flu October 18, 2005

We are continuing to witness the relentless spread of avian flu, carried slowly but predictably by wild, migratory birds from countries in Southeast Asia to Western China, to Mongolia, and then over the Ural Mountains into Russia and Ukraine. From there, avian flu has spread over the past week to Romania and Turkey, and we have just learned, possibly into Greece.

- Remarks of U.S. Senator Barack Obama on the Foreign Operations Appropriations Bill and the Avian Flu July 19, 2005

Mr. President, I rise today in support of H.R. 2057, the Foreign Operations Appropriation Bill. I'd also like to highlight one aspect of the bill. Since coming to the Senate six months ago, one of the foreign policy and health issues I have focused on relates to the avian flu. I am pleased that this bill includes $10 million to combat the spread of this potential pandemic, adding to the $25 million that the Senate provided in the supplemental appropriations bill in April.

- CURE Keynote Address March 11, 2005

Since I first learned about this organization from David and Susan, I've often thought about the simple act of hope that began its journey. I've thought about three mothers, sitting around a kitchen table, sharing the pain and the helplessness that go along with watching the child you love, the child whose happiness you live for, struggle with a disease that mom and dad can't fix. A disease that doesn't necessarily go away with the doctor's medicine, that isn't talked about most nights on the news, that isn't funded and recognized like a lot of the other diseases.

Miscellaneous Obama Speeches

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama: Democratic National Committee Fall Meeting November 30, 2007

Less than a year from now, you will go into the voting booth and you will select the President of the United States of America.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama: Iowa Jefferson-Jackson Dinner November 10, 2007

Thank you so much. To the great Governor of Iowa and Lieutenant. Governor of Iowa. To my dear friend Tom Harkin for the outstanding work that he does. To the congressional delegation of Iowa that is doing outstanding work and to Nancy Pelosi, Madam Speaker, thank you all for the wonderful welcome and the wonderful hospitality.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama: Reclaiming the American Dream November 7, 2007

It's wonderful to be here today. I feel right at home in Bettendorf, which is just a stone's throw from my home state of Illinois. But the truth is, we share more than the banks of a great river. If you spend time in Washington, you hear a lot about the divisions in our country. About how we're becoming more separated by geography and ideology; race and religion; wealth and opportunity. And we've had plenty of politicians who try to take advantage of these divisions - pitting Americans against one another, or targeting different messages to different audiences.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama: A Change We Can Believe In November 3, 2007

One year from now, you will have the chance to walk into a voting booth, pull back the curtain, and choose the next President of the United States. Here's the good news - for the first time in a long time, the name George Bush will not appear on the ballot. The name Dick Cheney will not appear on the ballot. The era of Scooter Libby justice, and Brownie incompetence, and the Karl Rove politics of fear and cynicism will be over. But the question you will have to ask yourselves when you pick up your ballot a year from today is, "What next?" How do we repair the enormous damage of these dismal years and recapture that sense of common purpose that has seen America through our toughest times?

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama: A Challenge for Our Times November 2, 2007

It's a special honor to be here in Clarendon County. Because Clarendon County is the place that showed me and showed America that when ordinary people come together, they can do extraordinary things.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama: A New Beginning October 2, 2007

Thank you, Ted. Ted Sorensen has been counselor to a President in some of our toughest moments, and he has helped define our national purpose at pivotal turning points.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama: Howard University Convocation September 28, 2007

It's a privilege to be a part of today's convocation and an honor to receive this degree from Howard. There are few other universities that have played so central a role in breaking down yesterday's barriers and inching this country closer to the ideals we see inscribed on the monuments throughout this city.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama: Tax Fairness for the Middle Class September 18, 2007

Yesterday I spoke about the future of the American economy at the NASDAQ. And in many ways, NASDAQ is a symbol of the new economy that's taking hold - the wealth created; the booms and bubbles; the technology that's helping to drive growth, and the interconnectedness that now spans the globe.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama: Our Common Stake in America's Prosperity September 17, 2007

Seventy-five years ago this week, Governor Franklin Delano Roosevelt took his campaign for the presidency to the Commonwealth Club in San Francisco.

- Remarks of Senator Obama: A Sacred Trust August 21, 2007

In an address to the 108th National Convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, U.S. Senator Barack Obama today articulated his plan to keep America's sacred trust with our active duty servicemen and women and our veterans, rebuild our overstretched military, and develop the capabilities we need to face the challenges of the 21st century.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama to the National Council of La Raza July 22, 2007

I have been running for President now for a little over five months. And in that time, I have been inspired by crowds tens of thousands of people strong - many who have come out for the very first political event of their lifetime. We have seen more Americans sign up and contribute so far than any other campaign in history. They are young and old, Republican and Democrat, white, and Black, and Latino.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama: Changing the Odds for Urban America July 18, 2007

It's been four decades since Bobby Kennedy crouched in a shack along the Mississippi Delta and looked into the wide, listless eyes of a hungry child. Again and again he tried to talk to this child, but each time his efforts were met with only a blank stare of desperation. And when Kennedy turned to the reporters traveling with him, with tears in his eyes he asked a single question about poverty in America.

- A Politics of Conscience June 23, 2007

It's great to be here. I've been speaking to a lot of churches recently, so it's nice to be speaking to one that's so familiar. I understand you switched venues at considerable expense and inconvenience because of unfair labor practices at the place you were going to be having this synod. Clearly, the past 50 years have not weakened your resolve as faithful witnesses of the gospel. And I'm glad to see that.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama: Taking Our Government Back June 22, 2007

We cannot settle for a second Gilded Age in America. And yet we find ourselves once more in the midst of a new economy where more wealth is in danger of falling into fewer hands; where the average CEO now earns more in one day than an average worker earns in an entire year; where Americans are struggling like never before to pay their medical bills, or their kids' tuition, or high gas prices, all while the profits of the drug and insurance and oil industries have never been higher.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama: Take Back America 2007 June 19, 2007
It has now been a little over four months since we began this campaign. And everywhere we've been - whether it's Oakland or Cleveland, Atlanta or Austin - we've been getting these inspiring, humbling crowds of thousands. For a lot of people, it's the first political event of their lifetime.
- Strengthening Families in a New Economy June 15, 2007
Each year at this time we honor and think about the fathers who've been a part of our lives - the examples they've set, the sacrifices they've made, their successes and their struggles.
- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama to the Hampton University Annual Ministers' Conference June 5, 2007
A few weeks ago, I attended a service at First A.M.E. Church in Los Angeles to commemorate the 15th anniversary of the LA Riots. After a jury acquitted 4 police officers of beating Rodney King - a beating that was filmed and flashed around the world - Los Angeles erupted. I remember the sense of despair and powerlessness in watching one of America's greatest cities engulfed in flames.
- Remarks at Southern New Hampshire University Commencement May 19, 2007
Good morning, President LeBlanc, the Board of Trustees, faculty, parents, family, friends, and the Class of 2007. Congratulations on your graduation, and thank you for allowing me the honor to be a part of it.
- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama to the Detroit Economic Club May 7, 2007
America is a country that hasn't come easily. In our brief history, we have been tested by revolution and slavery, war and depression, and great movements for social, civil, and equal rights.
- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama to the National Conference of Black Mayors May 5, 2007
It is an honor to be here at Southern University. It is a privilege to stand with so many of our leading mayors from across this country. Whether it's a small town or a big city, the government that's closest to the people is the one the people count on the most.
- Remarks of Senator Obama to the California State Democratic Convention May 2, 2007
It has now been a little over two months since we began this campaign. In that time we have traveled all across this country. And before every event we do, I usually have a minute to sit quietly and collect my thoughts. And recently, I've found myself reflecting on what it was that led me to public service in the first place.
- The American Moment: Remarks to the Chicago Council on Global Affairs April 23, 2007
We all know that these are not the best of times for America's reputation in the world. We know what the war in Iraq has cost us in lives and treasure, in influence and respect. We have seen the consequences of a foreign policy based on a flawed ideology, and a belief that tough talk can replace real strength and vision.
- Selma Voting Rights March Commemoration March 4, 2007
Here today, I must begin because at the Unity breakfast this morning I was saving for last and the list was so long I left him out after that introduction. So I'm going to start by saying how much I appreciate the friendship and the support and the outstanding work that he does each and every day, not just in Capitol Hill but also back here in the district. Please give a warm round of applause for your Congressman Artur Davis.
- Full Text of Senator Barack Obama's Announcement for President February 10, 2007
We all made this journey for a reason. It's humbling, but in my heart I know you didn't come here just for me, you came here because you believe in what this country can be. In the face of war, you believe there can be peace. In the face of despair, you believe there can be hope. In the face of a politics that's shut you out, that's told you to settle, that's divided us for too long, you believe we can be one people, reaching for what's possible, building that more perfect union.

- World AIDS Day Speech: Race Against Time December 1, 2006

You know, AIDS is a story often told by numbers. 40 million infected with HIV. Nearly 4.5 million this year alone. 12 million orphans in Africa. 8,000 deaths and 6,000 new infections every single day. In some places, 90 % of those with HIV do not know they have it. And we just learned that AIDS is set to become the 3rd leading cause of death worldwide in the coming years. They are staggering, these numbers, and they help us understand the magnitude of this pandemic. But when repeated by themselves, statistics can also numb - they can hide the individual stories and tragedies and hopes of the Leos who live the daily drama of this disease.

- An Honest Government, A Hopeful Future August 28, 2006

The first time I came to Kenya was in 1987. I had just finished three years of work as a community organizer in low-income neighborhoods of Chicago, and was about to enroll in law school. My sister, Auma, was teaching that year at this university, and so I came to stay with her for a month. My experience then was very different than it has been on this trip. Instead of a motorcade, we traveled in my sister's old VW Beetle, which even then was already ten years old. When it broke down in front of Uhuru Park, we had to push until some joakalis came to fix it by the side of the road. I slept on the couch of my sister's apartment, not a fancy hotel, and often took my meals at a small tea-house in downtown Nairobi. When we went upcountry, we traveled by train and matatu, with chickens and collard greens and sometimes babies placed in my lap.

- Xavier University Commencement Address August 11, 2006

I have to say that I'm pretty humbled to be here. Each year there are hundreds of commencements in this country. All are hopeful, some are inspiring, and most of you probably won't even remember who your speaker was ten years from now. As a rule, they usually involve an old guy like me giving young folks like you advice about what to expect in the real world - advice about the challenges you'll face and the obstacles you'll have to overcome.

- Campus Progress Annual Conference July 12, 2006

When I told people that after college, I planned on being a community organizer and working in low-income neighborhoods, they thought I was crazy. My mother and grandparents thought I should go to law school. My friends had applied for jobs on Wall Street. But I went ahead and wrote letters to every organization in the country that I could think of. And finally, this small group of churches on the south side of Chicago wrote back and gave me a job organizing neighborhoods devastated by steel-plant closings in the early 80s.

- Call to Renewal Keynote Address June 28, 2006

But today I'd like to talk about the connection between religion and politics and perhaps offer some thoughts about how we can sort through some of the often bitter arguments that we've been seeing over the last several years. I do so because, as you all know, we can affirm the importance of poverty in the Bible; and we can raise up and pass out this Covenant for a New America. We can talk to the press, and we can discuss the religious call to address poverty and environmental stewardship all we want, but it won't have an impact unless we tackle head-on the mutual suspicion that sometimes exists between religious America and secular America.

- Northwestern University Commencement Address June 16, 2006

...As you go on in life, cultivating this quality of empathy will become harder, not easier. There's no community service requirement in the real world; no one forcing you to care. You'll be free to live in neighborhoods with people who are exactly like yourself, and send your kids to the same schools, and narrow your concerns to what's going in your own little circle. Not only that - we live in a culture that discourages empathy. A culture that too often tells us our principle goal in life is to be rich, thin, young, famous, safe, and entertained. A culture where those in power too often encourage these selfish impulses.

- University of Massachusetts at Boston Commencement Address June 2, 2006

And let me tell you - the easiest thing in the world is to do nothing at all. To turn off the TV, put down the paper, and walk away from the stories about Iraq or Darfur or poverty or violence or joblessness or hopelessness. To go about your busy lives, wishing these problems away but expecting someone else to do it. To remain detached; to remain indifferent; to remain safe. But I hope you don't do what's easy. I hope you do what's hard.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama at Emily's List Annual Luncheon May 11, 2006

We meet here today at a time where we find ourselves at a crossroads in America's history. It's a time where you can go to any town hall or street corner or coffee shop and hear people express the same anxiety about the future; hear them convey the same uncertainty about the direction we're headed as a country. Whether it's the war or Katrina or their health care or their jobs, you hear people say that we've finally arrived at a moment where something must change.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama at the Lobbying Reform Summit January 26, 2006

Now, I've been asked by my caucus to take a role in lobbying reform - a role I'm proud to have. As many of you know I'm from Chicago - a city that hasn't always had the cleanest reputation when it comes to politics in this country. But during my first year in the Illinois State Senate, I helped lead the fight to pass Illinois' first ethics reform bill in twenty-five years. I hope we can do something like that here.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama at the Robert F. Kennedy Human Rights Award Ceremony November 16, 2005

I come to this with tremendous humility. I was only seven when Bobby Kennedy died. Many of the people in this room knew him as brother, as husband, as father, as friend. I knew him only as an icon. In that sense, it is a distance I share with most of the people who now work in this Capitol - many of whom were not even born when Bobby Kennedy died. But what's interesting is that if you go throughout the offices in the Capitol, everywhere you'll find photographs of Kennedy, or collections of his speeches, or some other memento of his life.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama at the National Womens Law Center November 10, 2005

As I was thinking about tonight's dinner and all the progress the women's movement has made in the last century, the first thing that came to mind wasn't all the legal cases won or the legislation passed; it wasn't the issues debated or even the individual rights secured. I thought about my daughters.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama on the Confirmation of Judge John Roberts September 22, 2005

First of all, let me congratulate Senator Specter and Senator Leahy for moving the process of confirming the nomination of Judge Roberts along with such civility, a civility that I believe speaks well of the Senate. Let me also say that I remain distressed that the White House during this confirmation process, which overall went smoothly, failed to provide critical documents as part of the record that could have provided us with a better basis to make our judgment with respect to the nomination. This White House continues to stymie efforts on the part of the Senate to do its job.

- American Legion Conference July 15, 2005

Over the last few months and throughout the campaign, I've been able to travel the state and meet veterans from all across Illinois. And no matter how many stories of heroism I hear, I constantly find myself in awe of your service and inspired by your sacrifice. Oliver Wendell Holmes once said that "To fight out a war, you must believe something and want something with all your might."

- U.S. Senator Barack Obama addresses the American Library Association June 27, 2005

Thank you. It's an honor to be here with the hundreds of dedicated librarians who make up the American Library Association. Before we begin, I'd like to say a special hello to ALA member Nancy Gibbs, who is the mother of my communications director, Robert Gibbs. Believe me, I have no idea how the biggest mouth in our office came from a family of two librarians, but we're proud to have him on board and I'm sure you are too.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama at the Pritzker School of Medicine Commencement June 13, 2005

Congratulations! After four long years of endless studying, sleepless nights, and constant stress, who's ready to kick back, relax, and jump head first into their residency?

- Remarks of U.S. Senator Barack Obama on the nomination of Justice Janice Rogers Brown June 8, 2005

I rise today to speak on the nomination of California Justice Janice Rogers Brown to the DC Circuit Court of Appeals. Now, let me begin by saying that the last thing I would like to be spending my time on right now is talking about judges.

- Remarks of U.S. Senator Barack Obama at the Knox College Commencement June 4, 2005

Good morning President Taylor, the Board of Trustees, faculty, parents, family, friends, and the Class of 2005. Congratulations on your graduation, and thank you for allowing me the honor to be a part of it.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama at the Abraham Lincoln National Cemetery May 30, 2005

This is my first time visiting the Abraham Lincoln National Cemetery, and as I was driving through I thought to myself that the staff and the volunteers who have made this possible should feel very proud of the work they're doing - this is a beautiful place for our veterans to come home to.

- Remarks by Senator Barack Obama at the Rockford Register Star Young American Awards May 7, 2005

Thank you, and congratulations to all of this year's Young Americans. Now that you've each received your award, I have one question for all of you: What are you going to do with it?

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama NAACP Fight for Freedom Fund Dinner May 2, 2005

Thank you. Half a century after the first few hundred people sat for justice and equality at these tables, I am honored to be here with this crowd of thousands at the 50th NAACP Fight for Freedom Fund Dinner.

- "A Hope To Fulfill" April 26, 2005

Thank you. It's great to be here at the National Press Club - I want to thank the club as well as the FDR Institute for arranging this luncheon together. I'd also like to thank Anne Roosevelt and Jim Roosevelt, who inspire us all by carrying on the proud legacy of their grandfather.

- SIUC College of Agriculture's 50th Anniversary April 23, 2005

Thank you. It's always great to be here in Carbondale, and a real honor to speak here at SIUC's first Agriculture Industry Day. Now, I'll be honest - I haven't done all that much farming living on the South Side of Chicago. But I have to say, my fondest farming memory is when I once offered to help out a friend with his harvest. Knowing the full range of my agricultural experience and expertise, he took one look at me and said..."no thanks."

- Remarks by Senator Barack Obama at the Opening of the Abraham Lincoln Presidential Library and Museum April 20, 2005

Let me congratulate all of those who have helped to make this wonderful vision a reality. But we gather here today not to celebrate a building. We gather to celebrate a man.

- Statement of Senator Barack Obama About His Amendment to Provide Meals and Phone Service to Wounded Veterans April 14, 2005

Statement of Senator Barack Obama Amendment to Provide Meals and Phone Service to Wounded Veterans Wednesday, April 14, 2005 M. President, today I am offering an amendment to the fiscal year 2005 Emergency Supplemental, which I am pleased to announce...

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama at the Herblock Foundation Annual Lecture April 6, 2005

Thank you for inviting me here tonight. It's been a pretty busy week, but I figured I'd better do my best to show up here since I can't think of an easier target for political cartoonists than a tall, skinny guy with big ears and a funny name.

- Remarks of Senator Barack Obama at TechNet March 8, 2005

We're here today because when it comes to the global economy, the rules of the game have changed. This is a fact not only understood by a roomful of Silicon Valley CEOs, but by families I met all across Illinois during the campaign. They know that when it comes to their jobs and their wages, they're not only competing with workers in Naperville and Carbondale, but in New Delhi and Calcutta.

- Obama Remarks to the American Legion Legislative Rally March 1, 2005

Remarks by Senator Barack Obama American Legion Legislative Rally Tuesday, March 1st, 2005

- John Lewis's 65th Birthday Gala February 21, 2005

Thank you. It's an honor to be here tonight to celebrate one of the most courageous and compassionate Americans of our time. Happy Birthday John. When I was first asked to speak here, I thought to myself, never in a million years would I have guessed that I'd be serving in Congress with John Lewis.

- Keynote Address at the 2004 Democratic National Convention July 27, 2004

"...Yet even as we speak, there are those who are preparing to divide us, the spin masters and negative ad peddlers who embrace the politics of anything goes. Well, I say to them tonight, there's not a liberal America and a conservative America - there's the United States of America...."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Des Moines Mayor Endorses Obama (2007-12-02 15:39)

Des Moines Mayor Frank Cownie endorsed Senator Barack Obama today.

Cownie said at a press conference announcing the endorsement.

"The real promise of Senator Obama's presidency isn't just the plans he'll bring with him into the White House, it's the visionary leadership he'll demonstrate once he gets there. Barack Obama will put an end to the bitter partisanship that's stopped us from making progress on the urgent challenge of global warming. He'll tell the American people what they need to hear, not just what they want to hear. As President, he'll restore America's standing in the world and lead a global effort to meet this challenge once and for all."

Obama Rapid Response Website (2007-12-03 09:07)

With Barack Obama looking strong in Iowa and New Hampshire, the Hillary Clinton campaign has launched a series of attacks against the Illinois senator as early state voting draws near.

Many voters are starting to look at the candidates more closely and are analyzing how their presidencies might impact themselves, their families and communities. So, Hillary's name recognition and natural appeal to women may be starting to erode as people study her history and issues.

Both campaigns have to be careful in not going too far especially with irrelevant attacks not based on the candidate's public careers. Surveys indicate that voters are not looking for that kind of leadership.

Here is a message from campaign manager David Plouffe announcing a new rapid response center in response to the attacks:

Saturday night, the Des Moines Register came out with a poll that shows Barack Obama has pulled ahead of the Democratic frontrunner and is now leading in Iowa.

The poll also showed that by a wide margin, Iowans believe that Senator Clinton is running the most negative campaign in this race.

Yesterday we found out why.

Less than twelve hours after that poll came out, the Clinton campaign launched a series of baseless attacks against Senator Obama. Panicked by the poll numbers, they even attacked Barack for telling his kindergarten teacher what he wanted to be when he grew up.

I wish I were joking.

The American people find these kinds of attacks tiring and unproductive, but today Senator Clinton promised that this was just the beginning, saying that attacking other Democrats is "the fun part" of campaigning for the presidency.

We disagree. Barack Obama believes that this presidential campaign isn't about attacking people for fun, it's about solving people's problems, like ending this war and creating a universal health care system. Washington insiders might think throwing mud is fun, but the American people are looking for a President who can unite this country around a common purpose, and that's the kind of leadership Barack will continue to offer in this campaign.

But we need your help.

Today we're launching a website that will keep track of all the attacks Senator Clinton has launched since she said she wasn't interested in attacking other Democrats at the Jefferson-Jackson Dinner on November 10th. We're asking all of you to be vigilant and notify us immediately of any attacks from Senator Clinton or her supporters as soon as you see them so that we can respond with the truth swiftly and forcefully.

These attacks could be phone calls, literature drops, blog posts, mail pieces as well as radio and TV ads. Some could even be anonymous or designed to be. Please email us at hillaryattacks@barackobama.com the moment you see something that concerns you.

Senator Clinton has said her idea of fun is to attack Barack each day from here on out, and that's why we need you to help us stop those attacks and make sure that Barack can continue to talk with voters and caucus-goers about the struggles they face and their hope for America.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama News on Monday (2007-12-03 13:33)

The Obama campaign has decided to capitalize on the reaction of supporters to today's attacks on Sen. Obama by the Hillary Clinton campaign:

Robert Reich , Bill Clinton's Secretary of Labor, also had some comments to make on the Clinton assault:

I'm becoming increasingly concerned about the stridency and inaccuracy of charges in Iowa – especially coming from my old friend. While I'm as hard-boiled as they come about what's said in campaigns, I just don't think Dems should stoop to this. First, HRC attacked O's plan for keep Social Security solvent. Social Security doesn't need a whole lot to keep it going – it's in far better shape than Medicare – but everyone who's looked at it agrees it will need bolstering (I was a trustee of the Social Security Trust Fund ten years ago, and I can vouch for this). Obama wants to do it by lifting the cap on the percent of income subject to Social Security payroll taxes, which strikes me as sensible. That cap is now close to $98,000 (it's indexed), and the result is highly regressive. (Bill Gates satisfies his yearly Social Security obligations a few minutes past midnight on January 1 every year.) The cap doesn't have to be lifted all that much to keep Social Security solvent – maybe to $115,00. That's a progressive solution to the problem. HRC wants to refer Social Security to a commission. That's avoiding the issue, and it's irresponsible: A commission will likely call either for raising the retirement age (that's what Greenspan's Social Security commission came up with in the 1980s) or increasing the payroll tax on all Americans. So when HRC charges that Obama's plan would "raise taxes" and her plan wouldn't, she's simply not telling the truth.

I'm equally concerned about her attack on his health care plan. She says his would insure fewer people than hers. I've compared the two plans in detail. Both of them are big advances over what we have now. But in my view Obama's would insure more people, not fewer, than HRC's.

Obama received an endorsement today from John Adams, Brigadier General, US Army (retired), former Deputy United States Military Representative to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

Barack Obama's ability to listen and inspire will allow him to shape a new domestic strategy of working together as Americans to safeguard our constitutional liberties and secure the blessings of prosperity for all our citizens. His sound judgment and ability to make tough choices under pressure will help him to shape a new international strategy of cooperating with our friends abroad to enhance global peace and security. We need his vision and integrity to address America's domestic and international challenges," Adams said in a statement released by the campaign.

Other high-ranking military retirees who have endorsed Obama are Richard Danzig, 71st Secretary of the Navy; Major General Scott Graton, U.S. Air Force (Ret) and General Merrill "Tony" McPeak; Chief of Staff of the U.S. Air Force (1990-1994).

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack O'Bollywood (2007-12-03 18:53)

Unwilling to cede the Indo-American vote to Hillary, some apparent Obama supporters have created a video featuring the candidate singing in Hindi in a classic Bollywood song and dance routine.

Barack O'Bollywood [EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama News on Tuesday (2007-12-04 12:53)

The NPR presidential debate is going on live right now. You can listen at npr.org.

Civil rights leader on Barack Obama

Here's a video from Reverend Joseph Lowery, a cofounder of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC) and The Coalition for the People's Agenda, and a close friend of Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr speaking at the Corinthian Baptist Church in Des Moines. He's telling the crowd about his support for Barack Obama.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

130 South Carolina Ministers endorse Barack Obama (2007-12-04 13:04)

Senator Barack Obama picked up the endorsement of 130 black ministers today in the early state of South Carolina. "We believe Barack Obama will not use his religion as a crutch or a hammer, but will draw on the moral imperatives of our faith and apply them to the political, social and economic problems of our country," said Rev. Joseph Lowery, founder of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

Barack was characterized as a person who will combine political with spiritual leadership. "Here we have a man who brings together the political and the spiritual in a very active way," said Rev. C. T. Vivian, a close adviser of Martin Luther King Jr.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama Video List (2007-12-04 16:00)

Here are my choices for the top ten Barack Obama videos.

[EMBED]

Meet Barack Obama

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=WGGIHqloP2k>

[EMBED]

Meet Michelle Obama

A brief biography, and some insight into the life of Barack Obama's wife, Michelle.

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=6qTD7geUCyM>

[EMBED]

Senator Barack Obama tells a crowd in Manning, South Carolina, why its important that they can't give up in the fight for equality.

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=iz8C3X7tyHg>

[EMBED]

How Can We Make this Country Better?

We want to hear your ideas - visit www.barackobama.com/youtube

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Tk3hpVt8Nfk>

[EMBED]

Obama Fired Up and Ready to Go at the JJ Dinner

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=tydfsfsQiyC>

[EMBED]

High and Dry Barack Obama talks about saving pension funds in Iowa.

<http://link.brightcove.com/services/link/bcpid1287023241/bclid1297294660/bct id1295342438>

[EMBED]

Chances I Had

Barack discusses the need to provide education and opportunities for young people.

<http://link.brightcove.com/services/link/bcpid1305025442/bctid1304990236>

[EMBED]

Barack Obama discusses his healthcare plan, and tells the personal story of a supporter in Iowa City on May 29, 2007.

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Eo07GYxYNSQ>

[EMBED]

Barack Obama opposed this war before it even began. Watch clips of his opposition it the Iraq War before and after the war as well as his plan for moving forward.

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=EhpKmQCCwB8>

[EMBED]

As a guest on The Ellen Degeneres Show, Barack shows off his dancing skills.

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=RsWpvkLCvu4>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

jlgirl (2008-02-05 16:16:00)

Really great website, thanks so much for all the work you did to put this up. Michelle's words brought tears down my cheeks.

First Iowa Daily endorses Barack Obama (2007-12-05 11:57)

The Iowa State Daily newspaper has endorsed Sen. Barack Obama today in their editorial column. Here is the text of the article:

EDITORIAL: Daily endorsement: Obama for Democrats

The Iowa State Daily | December 05, 2007

By Iowa State Daily Editorial

We endorse Sen. Barack Obama for the 2008 presidential Democratic Party nomination.

In Obama, we have a candidate who has more to offer than a strategic plan or policy that will change America for the better. What Obama brings above all else is a renewed sense of hope. The past seven years have caused our hope for a better world, a better America, to waver. We have lost a national direction, and Obama can restore that.

But his campaign isn't based on hope alone. Obama has a realistic plan to get the troops out of Iraq, instead of some poorly thought out cut-and-run debacle; he has a commitment to making the U.S. energy independent, which would solve several of our Iraq problems anyway; he takes the changes occurring in our environment seriously and would put measures in place to reduce our impact; and his universal health insurance plan is as realistic as anyone else's.

And unlike some of his counterparts, Obama isn't anchoring himself on a one-issue platform. What needs addressed in America isn't just the war in Iraq; it isn't just health care; and it isn't just that - in the Democrats' view - Bush and his cronies need to be removed from power. Obama grasps the bigger picture.

Perhaps what Obama offers most of all is a change of family. Two families have run the country for the past 20 years, and an election for Hillary would make that 24 at a minimum - longer than most college students have been alive. Political power shouldn't follow through family lines. That in itself is unhealthy for our country's image to the rest of the world as a democracy, and is an example of a political system that seems rooted in its old ways that aren't working.

One of the biggest question marks we have is Obama's level of experience, which pales in comparison to some of the other Democratic candidates. Nevertheless we wonder if that is really such a bad thing. True, he has only served on the U.S. Senate since 2004, but unlike the other candidates, he doesn't seem to be entrenched in a system that only offers pessimism - he still has the drive to offer an optimistic view.

Obama has not been afraid to throw a lot of his time and resources into trying to invigorate the younger crowd. This strategy has failed other candidates in the past, but we appreciate Obama's commitment to the generation who will inherit the country. His message to those of all ages - even those who don't vote in droves - is genuine and inspiring.

He may be raw. He may be too optimistic. But he has ignited a passion for a change in the direction this country is headed. Jump on board, because just like Obama, we're fired up and ready to support him in his quest for the Democratic Party's presidential nomination.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama News on Wednesday (2007-12-05 12:00)

There's been more buzz about whether Oprah Winfrey's endorsement will help Barack Obama , some suggesting it might even hurt the candidate.

I have a hard time believing that the endorsement will hurt Obama. If Frank Sinatra, with his rumored mob connections, didn't hurt John F. Kennedy, I can't see what harm Oprah could do. Of course, the Kennedy's did eventually distance themselves from Sinatra to the benefit of the Republicans who used the star's support to help get Ronald Reagan elected.

Maybe some fans will get perturbed that she is delving into politics, but how many would actually change their vote on that basis? On the other hand, I think at least some percentage of her supporters would consider her endorsement as important. Non-Oprah fans will probably just ignore the whole thing.

Jessica Biel and other celebrities to rock for Barack

Jessica Biel, Ryan Reynolds, Scarlett Johansson, Kate Walsh and Taye Diggs will be talking up Barack Obama at a big Hollywood concert set for Dec. 11.

The combination rally-fundraiser is called "Los Angeles Generation

Obama

Concert" and will be held at the Gibson Amphitheater. Tickets are available at barackobama.com.

Obama calls youth to service

Today, Barack issued a call on young people to serve their reminiscent of John F. Kennedy's plea decades ago. Here are some details of the plan:

- Expand AmeriCorps from its current 75,000 slots to 250,000 slots, enabling the program to establish five new Corps that address some of America's most pressing challenges: Classroom Corps, Health Corps, Clean Energy Corps, Veterans Corps, and Homeland Security Corps.
- Engage retiring Americans in service on a large scale by expanding and improving Senior Corps, VISTA and other programs that connect individuals over the age of 55 to volunteer opportunities.
- Double the size of the Peace Corps from 7,800 volunteers to 16,000 by its 50th anniversary in 2011 and work to partner volunteers with people from other nations.
- Establish an America's Voice Initiative to recruit and train Americans that are fluent speakers of local languages to bolster our public diplomacy efforts abroad
- Create a national online network, modeled on Craigslist, to connect volunteers to service and donation opportunities
- Establish a goal of having middle and high-schoolers contribute at least 50 hours a week to community service, and reach that goal through national guidelines for service-learning and additional resources for schools to develop successful programs.

- Connect disadvantaged youth to service opportunities and a pathway to success through the creation of Green Job Corps and the expansion of YouthBuild from 8,000 slots today to 50,000 slots over the next eight years.
- Create a new American Opportunity Tax Credit to ensure that the first $4,000 of a college education is completely free for Americans willing to complete 100 hours of public service a year.
- Promote College Serve-Study by immediately increasing the percentage of Federal Work-Study Program funding that goes to community service jobs from 7 percent to 25 percent, and helping colleges and universities reach a goal of 50 percent of serve-study over time.
- Expand the capacity of the nonprofit sector by establishing a Social Investment Fund Network to provide R &D capital to encourage innovation, find out what works, and expand successful programs to scale across the country.
- Create a Social Entrepreneurship Agency to enable nonprofits to build capacity through improved collaborations with government.

Click here for full details of the plan.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Oprah-Obama event moved to Williams-Brice Stadium (2007-12-05 15:59)

The Oprah-Obama event in South Carolina has gotten so big that the venue is now 80,000 capacity Williams-Brice Stadium. The enthusiasm in South Carolina is part of an early states surge for the Obama campaign with momentum gaining in Iowa, New Hampshire, Nevada and South Carolina. From the official Obama blog:

Change of Venue for Oprah-Obama Event

By Katharine Q. Seelye

How big is Oprah in South Carolina?

Williams-Brice Stadium (Photo: gamecocksonline.cstv.com)

Barack Obama's campaign has just moved its Oprah event on Sunday from an arena in Columbia seating 18,000 to a football stadium with a capacity of more than 80,000.

Tickets, which are free, went quickly on Monday, when they were first available, and the campaign had to shut down its distribution system. Now, the campaign says, tickets aren't even necessary, although it hopes people will RSVP through its Web site.

The new venue is Williams-Brice Stadium at the University of South Carolina. Doors open at 12:30 p.m., Eastern and the event starts at 2:30 p.m.

Click the image below to RSVP:

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

New Obama videos (2007-12-06 12:28)

Here are a couple of new Obama videos released today.

The first is the new television ad airing in Iowa today.

[EMBED]

Here is video made by volunteers of Tampa Bay for Obama reaching out to supporters in Iowa.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

????? Service (2007-12-06 15:04)

<http://obamabarack.blogspot.com/2007/12/barack-obama-video-list.html>

Obama News for Thursday (2007-12-06 16:08)

U.S. Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, who knows Iowa politics probably as well as anybody, predicted in the New York Times that Barack Obama and Mitt Romney would win the Iowa caucuses.

In California, Linda Darling Hammond, a Stanford professor of education, has been named a campaign adviser to the Obama campaign.

"Barack Obama realizes that education in today's knowledge age is critical to the survival and success of both individuals and society," Darling-Hammond said. "His education plan is comprehensive – making essential, strategic investments at each stage of education, from early childhood through higher education."

[EMBED]

Michelle Obama speaks in New Hampshire about the notion of public service.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama News on Friday (2007-12-07 11:53)

Check out the pictures from Barack Obama's Iowa college tour this week. The Illinois senator is counting on young people to turn out for the Iowa caucuses and in other early states.

The Clinton campaign has complained that Obama is encouraging out-of-state students in Iowa to register locally and participate in the caucuses, but in fact it is considered normal and proper to register in the location where one resides.

Here's a shot from UNI (more pics here):

And University of Iowa, where at least 2500 people came out in the freezing rain (more pics here):

South Carolina Senator Reese switches from Biden to Obama

State Sen. Glenn Reese of South Carolina said Friday that he was switching his support from Sen. Joe Biden to Sen. Barack Obama because he believed Barack could better unify the country.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama first on TV in Nevada (2007-12-07 16:33)

Barack Obama will be the first candidate to air television ads in the early state of Nevada. His first ad will start statewide on Tuesday and last until the caucus.

The Obama campaign already has two TV ads each in Iowa and New Hampshire and one ad airing in South Carolina.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama 2008 (2007-12-08 11:05)

There are 28 days left counting down to the early states for Barack Obama in 2008 . Here is the schedule:

Iowa – Jan 3, 2008

New Hampshire – Jan 8, 2008

Nevada – Jan 19, 2008

South Carolina – Jan 26, 2008

Although the Obama campaign is definitely gaining momentum, I still think it is too early to get overly excited.

With a lot of the important ground campaign scheduled over the holidays, many people might still tune out political-type messages. Still, we can see by the big crowds for the Oprah-Obama events, it's still possible to get people excited with a little celebrity action!

The Obama camp does not want people going to the caucus or ballot box without doing their homework. That would likely benefit the candidate with the most name ID i.e., Hillary Clinton. I would not be surprised if many people don't start really tuning in until after New Year's Day.

That means the last few days will be very important, as they usually are, in reaching those barely-concerned voters, which unfortunately still make up a substantial portion of the electorate.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

18,500 Iowans battle cold to see Oprah-Obama (2007-12-08 16:04)

A massive crowd braved frigid temperatures to see Sen. Barack Obama, his wife Michelle and media star Oprah Winfrey in Iowa today with the crowd estimated at 18,500.

Here are some video clips that include a great introduction of the candidate by Oprah.

[EMBED]

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=FvgKHiEKVe0>

[EMBED]

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=YO-JdvD9qig>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Anonymous (2007-12-09 17:30:00)

Who cares about Oprah, Never could understand what was so great about her, I don't think she'll have any impact of this election, she's just another star who's going to get better treatment than the average American will ever get from another president...

(2007-12-09 08:51)

\

Live video feed from South Carolina Oprah-Obama (2007-12-09 08:54)

Check out the live streaming video from the Oprah-Obama event in South Carolina. The Pre-Show starts in about two hours, but they will be broadcasting preparations from the Williams-Brice Stadium until then.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack and Oprah rock SC, off to New Hampshire (2007-12-09 15:52)

A crowd of 36,426 set a new Guinness world record when they phone banked at Williams-Brice Stadium in South Carolina prior to the main event featuring Barack Obama and Oprah Winfrey. Many of the people in the audience had never been contacted previously by the campaign. Oprah brought them in, and Obama's strong, forceful speech surely won at least some of these new faces over to his side. Barack, Michelle and Oprah are off to Manchester, New Hampshire for tonight's rally at the 11,000 capacity Verizon Center.

Volunteers are briefed for tonight's even in Manchester, New Hampshire.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

theproprietor (2007-12-09 16:13:00)

Democrat Barack Obama hopes to capitalize on the so-called "Oprah Effect" which, according to a Bloomberg writer, is known to "transform books, beauty products and foods into sales blockbusters." Unfortunately, I predict it may have the opposite effect and result in the Illinois senator's presidential aspirations being left in A Million Little Pieces.

Forgive me for the reference to James Frey's famously fabricated memoir. But with polls showing Hillary Clinton at her lowest point since announcing her candidacy and the Iowa Caucuses less than 30 days out, I predict the Clinton political machine is on the verge of striking Obama. And striking hard.

Just days before families across the nation – especially in Iowa and New Hampshire – begin gathering for Christmas, I expect the machine to kick into high gear, serving up a buffet of dirty little secrets to its lapdogs in the mainstream news media.

By the time the Iowa Caucuses are held Jan. 3, those dirty little secrets unearthed by Hillary's folks – whatever they turn out to be and regardless of whether or not they bear a shred of truth – will have raised "reasonable doubt" in the minds of the jury (a.k.a., "Iowa voters"). As a result, Hillary will win Iowa.

That victory will, of course, be heralded by the likes of CNN, the Daily Kos and the Washington Post as a precursor of things to come in the Democratic primaries. Six months and several dirty little secrets later, Hillary will have the nomination wrapped up.

And that's where the 'A Million Little Pieces' reference returns to the picture.

Remember the media frenzy that surrounded Frey's return appearance on Oprah's couch. She sat him down and, in front of millions of viewers and a studio audience full of scowling faces, chewed him out for failing to live up to her expectations. After all, Frey's book was an Oprah's Book Club selection.

The same thing is going to happen to Obama.

The man Oprah had anointed as the first black president of the United States even before the first vote was cast will be verbally flogged for having lost the Democratic Party nomination and, as a result, brought much shame and humiliation to the O.

All hail Oprah!

Anonymous (2007-12-10 13:03:00)

Enterprising Obama supporters have created Campaign Ads in support of his candidacy.

Check them out and vote for your favorite at:

<http://www.geniusrocket.com/primary>

See the Obama teaser:

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=UQGIIKpzbn4>

Barbara Lee endorses Barack Obama (2007-12-10 11:33)

Sen. Barack Obama today got a big endorsement from Rep. Barbara Lee of Oakland.

Lee is a major force in progressive politics and an important leader in the African American community of California.

"He does represent that bridge to the future; he represents hope, new direction which our country desperate needs," Lee told the San Francisco Chronicle this morning. "This is a very powerful and defining moment for our country, and my conscience is my guide. I can't sit on the sidelines when we have an opportunity to move forward."

Lee was one of the leaders of the anti-war movement in Congress. She is a member of the Congressional Black Caucus, co-chair of the Congressional Progressive Caucus.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Carol Shea-Porter endorses Obama in New Hampshire (2007-12-10 15:02)

U.S. Rep. Carol Shea-Porter will endorse Barack Obama according to the UnionLeader.com website.

New Hampshire's other congressional representative, Paul Hodes, has already endorsed Obama. The expected endorsement could further help Obama among women voters in the state.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Carol Shea-Porter endorses Obama in New Hampshire (2007-12-10 15:02)

U.S. Rep. Carol Shea-Porter will endorse Barack Obama according the UnionLeader.com website. New Hampshire's other congressional representative, Paul Hodes, has already endorsed Obama. expected endorsement could further help Obama among women voters.

The endorsements keep pouring in (2007-12-10 18:30)

State Rep. Paul Shomshor of Council Bluffs, Iowa joined the list of Obama supporters today. I can't help but think that the Oprah-Obama events over the weekend helped many people decide on Barack. It was an impressive show bringing that many people out during the dead of winter and the height of holiday shopping season, especially to outdoor arenas in Iowa and South Carolina. And this is a crucial point in the campaign where you want to show momentum building.

Shomshor is the 19th Iowa state legislator to endorse Senator Obama - placing him at a tie with Hillary Clinton. "Barack Obama spent his two decades in public service fighting for families trying to achieve the American dream, and he'll continue that fight as President," said Rep. Shomshor. "It only proves that he'll be a President that will change politics as usual, unite America and make progress on the issues our families care about the most. " obama mama (2007-12-11 08:23:00)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Show your support with these amazing Obama wears.

<http://www.cafepress.com/omama>

Nevada TV campaign launched (2007-12-11 18:24)

The Obama campaign released its first television ad in Nevada using footage from Barack's announcement speech in Springfield, Illinois.

[EMBED]

Here is the text of the speech:

"I know that I haven't spent a lot of time learning the ways of Washington. But, I've been there long enough to know that the ways of Washington must change."

In the Senate, Barack Obama challenged both parties to pass tough new ethics rules and rein in the power of lobbyists.

And he's leading by example, refusing contributions from PACs and Washington lobbyists who have too much power today.

"They think they own this government. But we're here today to take it back."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✖

Anonymous (2007-12-11 20:23:00)

Hi All. I did a reverse domain look-up of the folks who run: obamatruth.org, a website dedicated to smearing Mr. Obama. This is his personal information (I just called it and it works, he cussed me out actually):

Joseph J & Rebecca J Novak

532 Circle Ave

Forest Park, IL 60130-1931

(708) 366-0764

While I support free speech, I support the community's right not to tolerate offensive defamatory material that is repugnant to one's conscious. If he's wants to publish, God bless him, but we should at least let him know what we think of his trash.

FYI: I did a reverse IP look-up (using: <http://www.networksolutions.com/whois/index.jsp>) to get the address with whom www.obamatruth.org is registered. I then took that personal address and used whitepages.com to reverse locate his home phone number. I then called it to make sure it was the right guy. If you don't believe me, repeat these steps and you will land at the exact same place I did. I told him his webpage was disgusting and that he should be ashamed of himself, at which point he cussed me out and hung up. I think if enough people give him a call, he might rethink his disgusting and shameful tirade. Best of luck!

Letters for Iowa (2007-12-11 22:36)

Paul Tewes, Obama's Iowa campaign manager sent out this letter to Sam Graham-Felsen on the official barack-obama.com blog asking supporters to encourage the volunteers in Iowa.

Dear Sam, ✖ I have an unusual request for you.

I've written a few times before – my name is Paul Tewes, and I'm the state director for the Obama campaign in Iowa. I'm sure you've already heard about what's happening here, from the tightening poll numbers to the growing energy on the ground.

Our campaign has tremendous momentum, but there's a lot to do before the January 3rd caucuses.

Here's the challenge...

Our ground operation is in full swing, and we're well on our way to recruiting Precinct Captains in all of Iowa's 1,781 precincts.

Each Precinct Captain is a volunteer who has taken on a serious responsibility in their local community .

They are the backbone of our campaign in Iowa. Barack could not do this without them. ✖

Our success depends on the motivation and dedication of these everyday people. They have their own families, their own jobs, and all the other responsibilities of their lives, but they have volunteered to take on this important role in our campaign because, like you, they believe in Barack Obama.

Please take the time to share with them a word of encouragement. Share with them the common bond that binds us – belief in each other, belief in this campaign, and belief in this country.

There are two ways you can get in touch – send an online note or send an old fashioned letter in the mail, care of one of our 37 offices here in Iowa.

Write to an Iowa Precinct Captain or a volunteer now. Let them know you appreciate the effort and sacrifice they are making to win Iowa for Barack:

Send an Online Note:

<http://my.barackobama.com/emailiowavolunteers>

Send a Letter in the Mail:

<http://my.barackobama.com/writeiowavolunteers>

These Precinct Captains and volunteers are the lifeblood of our operation.

By sharing your words of encouragement and your personal reasons for supporting Barack, you could motivate someone to make that extra phone call, knock on a few more doors, or dedicate a few more hours to the cause in this crucial first-in-the-nation caucus state.

Send your message, tell your story, and make an impact now.

Thank you,

Paul

Paul Tewes

Iowa State Director

Obama for America

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2007-12-12 09:42)

U.S. Rep. Betty McCollum (D-MN) became the third Congresswoman to endorse Barack Obama in the last three days. Barbara Lee of California and Carol Shea-Porter of New Hampshire endorsed the Illinois senator earlier in the week. The endorsements are giving Obama the appearance of momentum among women and could cut into Hillary Clinton's lead among women voters.

Rep. Betty McCollum

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack's plan for Americans with disabilities (2007-12-12 15:03)

Barack Obama unveiled his plan to empower Americans with disabilities.

In a speech titled "Reclaiming the American Dream," Barack says:

"I don't accept an America where we let someone go over a cliff just because they get sick. That is not who we are. If you can demonstrate that you went bankrupt because of medical expenses, then there must be a process that relieves that debt and lets you get back on your feet."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

What's going on in the early states (2007-12-12 18:33)

Barack Obama will be on the campaign trail in Iowa until Dec. 14. Here is his schedule:

Town Hall Meeting with Special Guest Gayle King in Dubuque
Thursday, December 13, 2007 @ 5:00pm
Dubuque, IA
Town Hall Meeting With Barack Obama in Maquoketa
Thursday, December 13, 2007 @ 7:45pm
Maquoketa, IA
Meet the Candidate With Barack Obama in Monticello
Friday, December 14, 2007 @ 08:45am
Monticello, IA
Meet the Candidate With Barack Obama in Manchester
Friday, December 14, 2007 @ 2:00pm
Manchester, IA
Meet the Candidate With Barack Obama in Guttenberg
Friday, December 14, 2007 @ 5:00pm
Guttenberg, IA

Former Sen. Tom Daschle was campaigning in Iowa for Obama today and will make further stops in the northwest part of the state tomorrow.

Hillary Clinton has an event scheduled for Shenandoah, Iowa on Dec. 13. John Edwards has a number of events listed lasting through Dec. 16.

Hillary will be Nashua, New Hampshire on Dec. 15. LA Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa will campaign for Hillary in Las Vegas, Nevada on Dec. 16.

Congressman David Bonior will campaign for John Edwards in New Hampshire on Dec. 15 and 16.

Foreign policy expert Samantha Power is campaigning for Obama in South Carolina on Dec. 13, and Michelle Obama will be in Coral Gables, Florida on Dec. 14.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama News on Thursday (2007-12-13 08:46)

Hillary Clinton's campaign, apparently responding to their own sliding poll numbers, have gone personal bringing up Barack Obama's drug use as a teenager that the Illinois senator mentions in his own writings.

It's a risky approach by the Clinton group especially in Iowa, where negative campaigning is often ooked down at. Mutual attacks by Howard Dean and Richard Gephardt during the last Iowa caucus in 2004 are believed to have helped John Kerry slip by the frontrunners to a surprise victory.

Four Dem. County Chairs endorse Obama

Four leaders of the Democratic Party at the county level in Iowa have endorsed Barack Obama today.

The county chairs of Appanoose, Benton, Lucas, and Monroe counties have promised to campaign for Obama in their respective counties.

Yesterday, former South Carolina Democratic Party Chairman, Joe Erwin, who stepped down earlier this year, announced his support for the senator.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Black Enterprise: 'Why Barack Obama Should Be President' (2007-12-13 12:08)

The January issue of Black Enterprise magazine will feature a cover story entitled "Why Barack Obama Should be President."

Here's a copy of the Black Enterprise press release:

In January's BLACK ENTERPRISE: Why Barack Obama Should Be President. Plus: The Next Generation of Young Entrepreneurs, Bargain Stocks for 2008 and Developing Your Estate Plan. (PRNewsFoto/BLACK ENTERPRISE)

NEW YORK, NY UNITED STATES

Publication's January Issue Identifies The Key Factors Behind The Obama Surge And Why He Will Win This November

NEW YORK, Dec. 13 /PRNewswire/ – Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama says "the same old Washington textbook campaigns just won't do, this election," and "telling the American people what we think they want to hear – instead of telling the American people what they need to hear – will no longer be acceptable."

(Photo: <http://www.newscom.com/cgi-bin/prnh/20071213/NYTH071>)

So goes the surging message of Barack Obama, the man who has presented America with the real possibility of an elected black president. With the primary season quickly approaching, BLACK ENTERPRISE (BE) hit the campaign trail with the electrifying contender, gaining exclusive insight into his platform and strategy. In the January issue cover feature, "Why Barack Obama Should Be President," BE builds a compelling case for Obama becoming president of the United States by identifying six key reasons he has risen in the polls – and how he will win the Oval Office this November.

Barack Obama first appeared on the cover of BE in October 2004 next to the headline The Next Big Thing in Politics. Today he makes good on that prophecy as audiences in Iowa, New Hampshire, and other key battleground states greet him with thunderous applause. "I don't want to spend the next four years re-fighting the same fights we had in the 1990s. I don't want to pit red America against blue America. I want to be president of the United States of America," says Obama.

With his galvanizing message of hope and change, Obama's campaign has created an excitement unmatched by any other, and it brings together diverse sectors of the electorate – black, white, Latino, young, old, blue-collar, and white-collar.

In researching January's cover feature, BE spent months talking to political analysts, and party activists and supporters to identify why Obama has the right stuff to win:

- A Message for All People. Obama has hit on universal themes that resonate with voters across racial, gender, and demographic lines, an approach necessary for a black candidate looking to be elected. He's also been successful in garnering support from divergent constituencies, including Hollywood, the Bible Belt, and corporate America. In addition to the war, domestic issues, such as education and employment, resonate without the usual Beltway rhetoric.
- A Winning Team. Obama has assembled a multi-ethnic lineup of political strategists and an all-star team of more than 200 policy advisers, including heavy-hitters from the Clinton administration. His top-notch team is making sure his campaign speeches, debate appearances, and policy statements set him apart from the other Democratic contenders, especially presidential hopeful Hillary Clinton.
- The Funds to Compete. Running for president takes loads of money and Obama has demonstrated a keen ability to raise cash. Through the third quarter of 2007 he raised $80.3 million. In addition, his campaign has witnessed a surge in online contributions – more than $20 million from small donors, those contributing $200 or less. "We have more small donors than all of the Democratic candidates combined," says Obama. "These are people who will definitely show up to vote."
- The Black Vote. Obama's major challenge for the black vote lies with chief opponent, Hillary Clinton. She's garnered enormous loyalty and name recognition within the black community largely due to the popularity of her husband. But history may be on Obama's side. African Americans tend to embrace black candidates – particularly democratic ones – who speak to the general electorate and closely represent their agenda.
- Support from White America. Much has changed in America with the emergence of several black mayors, governors, secretaries of state, and CEOs – suggesting that voters have become more comfortable with African Americans as leaders. Traveling with his campaign in Iowa, BE reporters witnessed first-hand how Obama's universal themes connect with crowds. At events, Obama packs them in like a rock star: he drew 10,000 in Iowa City, 7,000 in Ames, and 4,500 in Davenport.
- America is Ready for a Change. Obama offers the change in leadership that many are seeking: youth and vitality, an unyielding hope for the future, and a rejection of the Washington-inside mind-set. His independence also sets him apart as he is the only candidate who has taken less than 1 % of his donations from political action committees and none from lobbyists. He is also pushing for a transparent presidency, one in which voters are more involved with and informed about government activities via the Internet and town hall meetings. "It will no longer be business as usual in the White House," says Obama. "There will be a new openness in Washington."

The January 2008 issue of BLACK ENTERPRISE hits newsstands on December 25, 2007.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack strong in last Iowa debate (2007-12-13 16:45)

The last Iowa debate took place today with Barack Obama getting probably the best one-liner when said he would seek Hillary Clinton's advice when he became president.

It was a rather sedate affair, with Barack looking cool and presidential. Hillary Clinton looked tired and more stressed out than in the last few debates.

Check out this YouTube video on focus group interviews conducted after the debate:

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama a step forward on Education (2007-12-13 17:59)

The OpenEducation.net blog explains why Barack Obama is the choice for better education in America:

At OpenEducation, we believe this innovative concept is analogous to a research and development type of approach to education. It is time that education join the world of business where research and development become a critical component of the educational landscape. The fact that Obama seeks to have home districts develop proposals in consultation with their local teachers' unions demonstrates that he understands the importance of engaging the teacher's union in this process.

Clinton Is Status Quo, Obama Is A Step Forward Based on what we see, Ms. Clinton is the candidate for the status quo, one who might tweak the system yet has little to offer that would truly set a new path. Obama on the other hand, as he has campaigned, would indeed be the candidate of change, one who would seek to foster a new direction for education in America.

Obama our choice for President in 2008

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2007-12-14 16:09:00)

Mor O,

Please win, I can't listen to her evil laugh one more time or I will barf!!!!!!

dk (2007-12-14 17:27:00)

Listening to Senator Obama leaves me with a sense that he is someone new on the political scene. Having worked in politics since 1968, and as a former Legislative Representative, I have grave fears that the mud slinging Republicans will eat Barak for breakfast. Just remember Max Cleland, who gave up three limbs in Vietnam being called a terrorist; his picture flanked in the middle of Osama Bin Ladin and Saddam Hussein. I believe that the time is now for Barak to release his middle name of Hussein, the very man that we deposed and are fighting a war in Iraq. Please, define yourself before these creatures define you. Recall, McCain in South Carolina, smeared by the Bush campaign. Do it now before they do it to you!

Anonymous (2009-12-12 18:28:25)
i'm gonna make my own site about it

Africa and Darfur Forum in Las Vegas with Samantha Power (2007-12-14 10:25)

The Obama campaign has opened three new offices in Nevada to capitalize on recent momentum in the early states. They've also organized a global issues forum in Las Vegas focused on Darfur and African issues featuring Samantha Power:

What:

Issues Forum on Darfur and Africa

When:

This Saturday, December 15th at 1:30 PM

Where:

University of Nevada, Las Vegas Student Union room 208A

Address: (click for Map)

4505 Maryland Parkway

Las Vegas, NV 89154

Moyer Student Union-208 A

Invite your undecided friends, get your questions answered, and have a good time on the University of Nevada, Las Vegas campus.

Power is the Pulitzer Prize-winning author of "A Problem from Hell: America and the Age of Genocide" and a professor of Global Leadership and Public Policy at Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government. Power will discuss the crisis in Darfur, the current geopolitical situation in Africa, and Senator Obama's plan to fight global poverty and disease as part of his larger foreign policy platform.

Check out these great video's with Samantha Power discussing Barack and his approach to Foreign Policy.

Samantha Power on Charlie Rose

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2007-12-14 12:33)

Barack Obama received a newspaper endorsement in New Hampshire today from the Littleton Courier:

...Obama's personality comes across as calm, intellectual and diplomatic, yet firm, decisive and valued. These are all important qualities for our next president. The Illinois senator, at times, seems to project the image of an outsider seeking to reform foreign policy, health care and the economy.

Obama comes across as a man willing to listen to the ideas of others, but unwilling to compromise America's values to appease enemy leaders or achieve a false peace....

Although it is an overused phrase, America has reached a critical point. Threats from within, as well as without, threaten our values; and it will take an educated, steadfast and reasonable personality to overcome these obstacles. Barack Obama should be the Democratic nomination for president.

Read the full article at the Littleton Courier. Idaho endorsements

(2007-12-14 12:39)

Barack Obama received a newspaper endorsement in New Hampshire today from the Littleton Courier:

...Obama's personality comes across as calm, intellectual and diplomatic, yet firm, decisive and valued. These are all important qualities for our next president. The Illinois senator, at times, seems to project the image of an outsider seeking to reform foreign policy, health care and the economy.

Obama comes across as a man willing to listen to the ideas of others, but unwilling to compromise America's values to appease enemy leaders or achieve a false peace....

Although it is an overused phrase, America has reached a critical point. Threats from within, as well as without, threaten our values; and it will take an educated, steadfast and reasonable personality to overcome these obstacles. Barack Obama should be the Democratic nomination for president.

Read the full article at the Littleton Courier.

Idaho endorsements

Obama also picked up a pair of endorsements in the state of Idaho today:

Ada County Commissioner Paul Woods is serving his first term as Ada County Commissioner (elected in 2006). He has worked hard to sustain Ada County's quality of life, restore cooperative governance, fight & treat substance abuse, and monitor and assist planned community efforts in Boise and surrounding areas. Commissioner Woods supports Barack Obama for President.

State Senator Mike Burkett has served proudly as the District 19 Senator in Boise, ID, since 2002. In prior years, Sen. Burkett has acted as the Assistant Minority Leader and also served several terms in the Idaho State Legislature between 1988-1992. For many years, he has worked hard to represent the citizens of District 19 and the State of Idaho by improving access and affordability to education and improve our quality way of life. Sen. Burkett supports Barack Obama for President.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Zogby: The Obama Phenomenon (2007-12-14 14:46)

James Zogby analyzes the movement created by Barack Obama and his supporters today in The Huffington Post. First, he poses a question:

Over the past few weeks, as interest has grown in the 2008 U.S. presidential contest, I've been asked by friends from overseas for my opinion on Barack Obama. Could I explain the phenomenon they are seeing on television? Can he win?

He gives as an example of Barack's appeal the testimony of his daughter Sarah, a working mother:

She had heard Barack Obama speak and was moved by what she described as his authenticity and clarity. He did not appear to her to be typical. His call for a new approach to politics appealed to her. Quite simply, she said, "He gives me hope."

"Your generation," she continued, "had many such figures," mentioning the Kennedys and Dr. King. "We have not. I want to believe he can make a difference."

In conclusion, Zogby writes:

Can he win? His polling numbers are improving daily. In the end, however, the voters in Iowa, New Hampshire, South Carolina and Nevada will answer that question in January. But is he real, and does the movement he has inspired matter? The answer to that is self-evidently yes.

Read the whole article.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama's New Plan for the Arts (2007-12-14 17:39)

After announcing the endorsement of New Hampshire Department of Cultural Resources Commissioner Van McLeod of Concord, the Barack Obama campaign outlined the candidate's plan to promote the arts:

- Invest in arts education to reinvigorate the kind of creativity and innovation that has made America great and that it will take to compete in a global economy
- Support increased funding for the National Endowment for the Arts
- Promote cultural diplomacy to encourage American artists, performers, and thinkers to represent our best values and ideals throughout the world
- Ensure that artists have access to health insurance and are treated fairly under the tax code

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Iowa Obama Videos (2007-12-14 19:37)

Check out the crowd of supporters that gathered for the Des Moines Register debate yesterday in Iowa.

[EMBED]

Susan Klopfer of Iowa was once a fervent volunteer for Hillary Clinton but she came to the conclusion that Barack Obama was the best hope for change. Listen to her tell why:

[EMBED]

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=VXPnMfIGkvl>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama: Dahil Sa Iyo (2007-12-15 08:59)

Here is a video I made for Filipino Americans for Barack Obama. It features the late Nat King Cole singing the Filipino classic song "Dahil Sa Iyo."

Barack is a cosponsor and advocate of the Filipino Veterans Equity Act of 2007 (HR-760, and S.1315).

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Boston Globe endorses Barack Obama (2007-12-15 22:11)

The influential Boston Globe newspaper endorsed Barack Obama today offsetting an endorsement by the Des Moines Register of Hillary Clinton.

Influential throughout New England, including the early state of New Hampshire, where voting occurs on Jan. 8.

"It is true that all the other Democratic contenders have more conventional resumes, and have spent more time in Washington," the Globe's editorial board wrote.

"But that exposure has tended to give them a sense of government's constraints. Obama is more open to its possibilities."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Boston Globe endorsement (full text) (2007-12-16 10:13)

Here is the full text of the Boston Globe's endorsement of Barack Obama .

The Boston Globe

For the Democrats: Barack Obama

December 15, 2007

THE FIRST American president of the 21st century has not appreciated the intricate realities of our age. The next president must. The most sobering challenges that face this country - terrorism, climate change, disease pandemics - are global. America needs a president with an intuitive sense of the wider world, with all its perils and opportunities. Senator Barack Obama of Illinois has this understanding at his core. The Globe endorses his candidacy in New Hampshire's Democratic presidential primary Jan. 8.

Many have remarked on Obama's extraordinary biography: that he is the biracial son of a father from Kenya and a mother who had him at 18; that he was raised in the dynamic, multi-ethnic cultures of Hawaii and Indonesia; that he went from being president of the Harvard Law Review to the gritty and often thankless work of community organizing in Chicago; that, at 46, he would be the first post-baby-boom president.

What is more extraordinary is how Obama seals each of these experiences to his politics. One of the lessons he took from organizing poor families in Chicago, he says, was "how much people felt locked out of their government," even at the local level. That experience anchors his commitment to transparency and accountability in Washington.

Similarly, his exposure to foreign lands as a child and his own complex racial identity have made him at ease with diversity - of point of view as well as race or religion. "I've had to negotiate through different cultures my whole life," he says. He speaks with clarity and directness, and he is also a listener, a lost art in our politics.

In what looks like prescience today, Obama was against the Iraq war from the start. But his is not the stereotypical 1960s antiwar reflex. "I don't oppose all wars," he said in the fall of 2002. "I'm opposed to rash wars."

When it comes to waging peace, Obama has the leadership skills to reset the country's reputation in the world. He notes, for example, that the United States would be in a stronger position with Iran if it took more seriously its own commitment to the nuclear nonproliferation treaty. His bill, cosponsored with Senator Richard Lugar, to add conventional weapons to the nation's threat reduction initiative, became law this year.

On domestic issues, the major Democratic candidates are reduced to parsing slivers of difference. But Obama has been more forthright in declaring his slightly heterodox positions to traditional Democratic constituencies. His support for merit pay for teachers, or a cap on carbon emissions, suggests a healthy independence from the established order.

The first major bill to Obama's name in the Illinois Legislature was on campaign ethics reform. In Washington, he coauthored this year's sweeping congressional lobbying reform law. When he describes his approach to healthcare negotiations, he says, "The insurance and drug companies will get a seat at the table, but they won't get to buy every chair."

Obama's critics, and even many who want to support him, worry about his relative lack of experience. It is true that other Democratic contenders have more conventional resumes and have spent more time in Washington. But that exposure has tended to give them a sense of government's constraints. Obama is more animated by its possibilities.

In our view, the choice on the Democratic side is between Obama and Hillary Clinton. Clinton has run a diligent, serious campaign, and her command of the issues is deep and reassuring. But her approach is needlessly defensive, a backward glance at the bruising political battles of the 1990s. Obama's candidacy looks forward.

Obama's memoir, "Dreams From My Father," is divided into three main sections. The first is a reflection on his youthful search for identity. The second recounts his days in Chicago, which include the first stirrings of a religious life. The third is a roots pilgrimage to Kenya, to better understand his often absent father. It is hard to read this book without longing for a president with this level of introspection, honesty, and maturity - and Obama published it when he was only 33. "I genuinely believe that our security and prosperity are going to depend on how we manage our continued integration into the rest of the world," he says. Obama's story is the American story, a deeply affecting tale of possibility. People who vote for him vote their hopes. Even after seven desolating years, this country has not forgotten how to hope.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama on Health Care (2007-12-16 10:43)

THE HEALTH CARE PROBLEM

The U.S. spends $2 trillion on health care every year, and offers the best medical technology and scientific research in the world. Yet, the benefits of the American health care system come at a price that an increasing number of individuals and families, employers and employees, and public and private providers cannot afford.

Barack Obama discusses healthcare, and the personal story of one of his supporters in Iowa City on May 29, 2007.; Barack; Healthcare; Obama; iowa; <http://link.brightcove.com/services/link/bcpid960399001http://www.brightcove.com/channel.jsp?channel=353512430>

[EMBED]

47 million Americans - including nearly 9 million children - lack health insurance.

Health care costs are skyrocketing.

Too little is spent on prevention and public health.

Health Care Overview

Lowering health care costs and ensuring affordable, high-quality health care for all

The Obama plan will save a typical American family up to $2,500 every year on premiums by:

1. Providing affordable, comprehensive and flexible health coverage for every American;
2. Modernizing the U.S. health care system to contain escalating health care costs and improve patient care; and
3. Promoting prevention and strengthening public health to prevent disease and protect against disasters.

Quality, Affordable & Portable Health Care Coverage for All

The Obama plan both builds upon and improves our current insurance system, upon which most Americans continue to rely, and leaves Medicare intact for older and disabled Americans.

1. Obama's Plan to Cover the Uninsured.

- Guaranteed eligibility.
- Comprehensive benefits.
- Affordable premiums, co-pays and deductibles.
- Subsidies.
- Simplifying paperwork and reining in health costs.
- Easy enrollment.
- Portability and choice.
- Quality and efficiency.

2. National Health Care Insurance Exchange.

3. Employer Health Care Contribution.

4. Mandatory Health Care Coverage of Children.

5. Expansion of Medicaid and SCHIP.

6. Flexibility for State Plans.

Modernizing the U.S. Health Care System to Lower Costs and Improve Quality

1. Reducing Health Care Costs of Catastrophic Illnesses for Employers and their Employees.

2. Lowering Costs by Ensuring Patients Receive and Providers Deliver Quality Health Care .

Helping Patients

- Supporting disease management programs.
- Coordinate and integrate health care .
- Require full transparency about health care quality and costs and promote patient safety.
- Align incentives for excellence.
- Support comparative health care effectiveness research.
- Tackle disparities in health care .
- Reform medical malpractice.

3. Lowering Costs through Investment in Electronic Health Care Information Technology Systems.

4. Lowering Health Care Costs by Increasing Competition in the Insurance and Drug Markets.

- Increasing competition in health care industry.
- Lowering prescription drug costs.

Promoting Illness Prevention and Strengthening Public Health

1. Employers. Obama believes that worksite interventions hold tremendous potential to influence public health and will expand and reward these efforts.
2. School Systems. Obama will work with schools to create more healthy environments for children.
3. Workforce. Obama will expand funding - including loan repayment, adequate reimbursement, grants for training curricula, and infrastructure support to improve working conditions - to ensure a strong workforce that will champion prevention and public health activities.
4. Individuals and Families. The Obama health plan will require coverage of essential clinical preventive services such as cancer screenings and smoking cessation programs in all federally supported health plans including Medicare, Medicaid, SCHIP and the new public plan. In addition, Obama will increase funding to expand community based preventive interventions to help Americans make better choices that can help ward off chronic and preventable diseases and improve their health.
5. Federal, State and Local Governments. . The federal government and state and local governments play critical roles in disease prevention and health promotion activities.

As president, Barack Obama will prioritize these activities to improve prevention and public health, as well as advocate for the following initiatives:

- Advance the Biomedical Research Field.
- Fight AIDS Worldwide.
- Support Americans with Disabilities.
- Improve Mental Health Care .
- Protect Our Children from Lead Poisoning.
- Reduce Risks of Mercury Pollution.
- Support Americans with Autism.

Increase Transparency in the Health Care Industry

As President, Obama will work to implement important proposals that empower individuals in dealing with the health care industry, including:

- Providing easy-to-understand comparisons of the medicare prescription drug plans
- Requiring full transparency about health care quality and costs.
- Promoting patient safety through full disclosure.
- Figuring out what works in health care .

Barack Obama on Health Care

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Truth Be Told : A Time for Change (2007-12-16 19:01)

Check out this grassroots poem written in support of Barack Obama by Olatunji Talabi

Truth Be Told : A Time for Change Who Pays the Price, When Our Leader Lies
Who Sheds the Tears, When a Hero Dies
Who Wipes the Tears, from his Mother's eyes.
Who Lends a Hand When a Hero Tries
To Pick Up the Pieces of His Own Life
Who Risked his Life for You and I
Who Fed us Lies and Who Was Right
Who'll Lead Us Now, You Decide
What We Need Is An Agent of Change
If We Really Want to See a Change
Some People Think We Need More of the Same
We Know the End Result Will be the Same
Because We Know There Is a Better Way
So We Know There is a Brighter Day
How Can We Spend a Trillion Dollars On War
When It Wasn't One Worth Fighting For
What Good Is Wealth, Without Good Health
What Good is Health, When You Have No Wealth
Who Lifts Our Spirit Enough to Hope
Who Gives Us Hope When We Need It Most Is What Some Say, Really What They Mean
Is What They Mean, Really What It Seems
Who Seems The Same, Who Leads A Change
The Choice Is Yours, It's Time For Change

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2007-12-17 09:19)

Democratic Congressman Dave Loebsack of Iowa endorsed Sen. Barack Obama today. Rep. Loebsack made the following statement of support:

In a field of strong candidates, Barack is the strongest. What impresses me about Barack is his commitment to changing the way business is done in Washington. He understands that to pass universal health care, make energy independence a reality, and meet the other challenges we face, we need leadership that can bring all Americans together around a shared purpose.

Obama is energizing, organizing, and mobilizing ordinary Americans to get involved in their democracy in a way I haven't seen in a long time. And he's building the kind of grassroots movement that will not just make him the most electable Democrat in a general election, but will help him enter the White House with a mandate for change that Washington can't ignore.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama Muslim? (2007-12-18 09:44)

Democracy should be about liberty, equality and fraternity, and whether one is a Muslim or has the middle name "Hussein" should be irrelevant. Unfortunately, that is not the case in post-9-11 America and in the climate of fear created by the neo-conservatives.

However, when you really think about it the idea that Barack Obama is a hidden Muslim doesn't make much sense. It would entail a 10-year-old kid keeping his supposed Muslim faith secret from his grandparents who raised him, from classmates, teachers and friends through elementary, middle and high school in Honolulu, Hawai'i, that bastion of Talibanism.

Then continuing to hide his religion as an adult, not praying publicly or going to mosque, throughout college and even hiding the fact from his wife of 15 years and from his kids while all the time attending a Christian church.

Supposedly Barack kept the secret since age 10 because he had ambitions at that young age to become president!

Any kid who could keep a secret like that for that long must be the al-Mahdi, the Muslim messiah.

Or else, perhaps Barack is not really a Muslim?

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Michelle Obama Biography (2007-12-18 10:53)

Michelle Obama was born on January 17, 1964, to Marian and Fraser Robinson on Chicago's South Side. She has a 16 month older brother, Craig. She is 5'11" tall.

Craig is a Brown University men's basketball team coach.

Michelle's schooling

Michelle and Craig both skipped the second grade. She graduated from Whitney M. Young Magnet High School in Chicago's West Loop in 1981. After high school Michelle went on to Princeton University where in 1985 she graduated cum laude with a B.A. in sociology and a minor in African American studies. After college, Michelle continued her education at Harvard Law School, where she earned her Juris Doctor degree in 1988.

Michelle Obama's Career

Meet Michelle; Barack; Barack TV; Obama; meet; Michelle; This appears on the "Meet Michelle Page" <http://link.brightcove.com/services/link/bcpid474445759http://www.brightcove.com/channel.jsp?channel=353512430>

[EMBED]

For three years after law school, Michelle worked as an associate in the area of marketing and intellectual property at Chicago law firm Sidley and Austin, where she met Barack Obama. She left the corporate law world in 1991 to work as assistant to the mayor and then as assistant commissioner of planning and development for the City of Chicago.

In 1993, Michelle became founding executive director of Public Allies - Chicago, a leadership training program that received AmeriCorps National Service funding. Obama served as the Associate Dean of Student Services at the University of Chicago since 1999 developing the University's Community Service Center.

She worked for the University of Chicago Hospitals beginning in 2002, first as executive director for community affairs and, beginning May, 2005, as Vice President for Community and External Affairs at the University of Chicago Hospitals. She also managed the business diversity program.

In May 2006, Essence magazine listed her among "25 of the World's Most Inspiring Women." In July 2007, Vanity Fair magazine listed her among "10 of the World's Best Dressed People". Barack, Michelle and their two daughters Malia, 9, and Sasha, 6, live on the south side of Chicago, where they attend Trinity United Church of Christ.

Michelle Obama is currently taking a time-out from her career to help with her husband's presidential campaign. She has been described as Obama's "secret weapon" and the "closer" in the campaign.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-05-20 12:24:00)

Does anyone know what types (and names) of the scholarships Michelle Obama received to both Princeton and Harvard?

Robert (2008-07-14 22:24:00)

I really admire them both and they have helped me to make changes and reach out.

Robert Burnside Los Angeles

Barack Obama on Iraq War (2007-12-18 11:45)

Let's compare the history of Barack Obama's stance on the Iraq War to the other two front runners, Hillary Clinton and John Edwards.

Notice that Barack is the only that has been right from the start.

Hillary Clinton

1. Voted YES on authorizing use of military force against Iraq. (Oct 2002)

" The facts that have brought us to this fateful vote are not in doubt ."

2. Agrees with Newt Gingrich that Iraq policy is a mess. (Dec 2003)

3. Phased redeployment out of Iraq, beginning immediately. Refuses to admit authorization vote was a mistake. (Oct 2006)

" If the most important thing to any of you is choosing someone who did not cast that vote or has said his vote was a mistake, then there are others to choose from. "

John Edwards

1. Voted YES on authorizing use of military force against Iraq. (Oct 2002)

" I mean, we have three different countries that, while they all present serious problems for the United States – they're dictatorships, they're involved in the development and proliferation of weapons of mass destruction – you know, the most imminent, clear and present threat to our country is not the same from those three countries. I think Iraq is the most serious and imminent threat to our country ."

2. Supporting Iraq war OK, but how war was conducted not OK. (Feb 2004)
3. Accepts responsibility for Iraq War vote, admits mistake and calls for troop draw down. (Feb 2007)

Barack Obama

1. Publicly opposed Iraq War on eve of invasion. (2002)

" But I also know that Saddam poses no imminent and direct threat to the United States, or to his neighbors, that the Iraqi economy is in shambles, that the Iraqi military a fraction of its former strength, and that in concert with the international community he can be contained until, in the way of all petty dictators, he falls away into the dustbin of history ."

2. He said he did not oppose all wars, but opposes Iraq during U.S. Senate campaign. (2004)

" I don't oppose all wars. What I am opposed to is a dumb war. What I am opposed to is a rash war ."

3. Proposes plan to withdraw starting May 1 2007; finish by March 31 2008. (Apr 2007)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Md. Anisur Rahman (2008-01-31 08:59:00)

What would an American President claiming moral leadership of the world say and do on IRAQ beyond just withdrawing from there?

To start with, a sincere apology to the Iraqi people, to start the process of healing?

Can Obama show this greatness, or is his opposition to the Iraq war merely from narrow US interest?

Anisur Rahman

Anonymous (2008-02-23 00:23:00)

I have a son in the army. and I was against the war from the start and didn't vote for it, so can I run for President. I know about as much as Obama when it comes to running this country. Bet you won't show this comment.

Buddy (2008-03-01 15:51:00)

Mar 1, 2008

This is to help clear up the war vote for the young people in America.

Obama condemns Clinton for her war vote, which just shows his inexperience.

I am in a union and we have a strike vote every 3 years. Our union president needs to have the power to negotiate with the company. Our plant has only struck once in the history of our plant, which is about 50 years.

It would be silly for our union president to negotiate face to face with the company without the backing of people and the threat of a strike backing him up. Without the backing the people the president has lost before he even opens the door.

So our strike vote is the same vote as the senate vote. It shows that the president has the backing of the people to enter into negotiations with the threat of strike or war.

No one in our union as in the senate wanted the president to strike or as Bush to go war. But it was the president's judgment to go to war, not the senate.

Now don't get me wrong, I was against the war also, but, I can't undo the past as well as the senate. We can only hope our sacrifice doesn't go in vain.

It is easy for Obama to condemn when he was sitting on the side lines. Obama said he was right on the war vote, and looking back now he was, and President Bush shouldn't have taken the US of America to war. Obama still is too green behind the ears to run the country, and he is too liberal to negotiate for the foreign dangers around the world.

Hell, Obama said he would bomb Pakistan without even telling Pakistan it was coming and they have the bomb in an insane part of the Middle East.

How is Obama any different than President Bush when it comes to answering the PHONE at 3 am to bomb Pakistan?

fifilaroach (2008-03-26 13:33:00)

Mr Obama needs to continue to tell us in a straightforward manner exactly what he intends to do regarding the war... and that should take the Iraqi people into account as well.

<http://www.cafepress.com/sugarbelleshop/4226338>

'It's beginning to look a lot like...' (2007-12-18 15:55)

A little bit of holiday cheer for Obama supporters.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama News in the Early States (2007-12-18 19:13)

Michelle Obama will be stumping in Iowa this week:

Mitchell County Event with Michelle Obama
Wednesday, December 19, 2007 @ 11:15am
Osage, IA

Winnishiek County Event with Michelle Obama
Wednesday, December 19, 2007 @ 2:20pm
Decorah, IA

Fayette County Event with Michelle Obama
Wednesday, December 19, 2007 @ 4:20pm
600 N Pine St, IA

Keokuk County Event with Michelle Obama
Thursday, December 20, 2007 @ 12:45pm
Sigourney, IA

Nevada

In Nevada, actor Kal Penn is canvassing and phone-banking with Obama volunteers.

Penn starred in several films including "Harold and Kumar Go to White Castle" and "The Namesake" and currently stars in the television series House.

New Hampshire

Barack Obama will be appearing personally at four locations this week:

South Carolina

Former Mississippi Gov. Ray Mabus (center) and former Oklahoma Congressman Brad Carson joined former South Carolina Democratic Party Chairman Joe Erwin are helping Obama out in South Carolina.

Barack's sister Maya Soetoro-Ng will at an educational forum in South Carolina:

Education Town Hall Meeting w/ Maya Soetoro-Ng
Wednesday, December 19, 2007 @ 6:00pm
Dillion, SC

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Holiday Greetings and News (2007-12-19 09:45)

The Obama campaign is releasing a holiday ad in Iowa:

[EMBED]

Iowa Press-Citizen endorses Obama

After seven years of being lost in the wilderness of oppositional presidential politics, Democrats now seem well positioned to do in 2008 what they failed to do in 2004: Replace a rogue cowboy president with a new president capable of uniting the country and resetting the nation's foreign policy and global reputation. The Press-Citizen Editorial Board thinks Illinois Sen. Barack Obama is the best candidate in a well qualified field of Democrats to make those long overdue changes. We endorse his candidacy enthusiastically.

In the past few months, Iowa City area voters have had multiple opportunities to learn about the strengths of each of Obama's Democratic rivals:

- Delaware Sen. Joe Biden brings an impressive domestic legislative record that is outshone only by his expertise as a foreign policy adviser.
- Connecticut Sen. Chris Dodd provides a familial perspective on how the U.S.'s moral authority in the world has sunk from its highpoint (when Dodd's father was a prosecutor in the Nuremberg Trials) to its nadir (when the Bush Administration refused to abide by the Geneva Conventions and decided to house "enemy combatants" in Guantanamo Bay).
- New York Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton draws from her experience as a key adviser during her husband's presidency and her seven years on Capitol Hill representing the interests of New York's various population groups.
- New Mexico Gov. Bill Richardson draws upon experience even wider and deeper than Clinton's and offers real world examples from the state he has governed since 2003.
- And former North Carolina Sen. John Edwards brings a needed attention to the social, economic and cultural factors that are widening the divide between the "Two Americas."

But the more Biden, Dodd and Clinton draw upon their experience in the internecine personal battles within Washington or between world leaders, the more voters identify them with the broken political system in which they have gained their experience. And the more Richardson and Edwards lay claim to an outsider status, the more they risk having their call for change get lost in their rhetoric – which is what seems to have happened especially to Edwards in this campaign.

Obama stands tall among this already strong group as both the candidate of hope and the candidate of change we can believe in.

U.S. image abroad

We respect the experience that Clinton, Dodd, Biden and Richardson bring to the table in terms of their past meetings with world leaders. But we have to agree with Obama that foreign policy and diplomacy is more than the personal interactions of a few diplomats and leaders projected across a geo-political screen. As Obama told the editorial board, "structuring the actual conversation ... (and) convening the leaders is the easy part."

The hard part is knowing the people – whether it's those Americans living the relatively average life that he and his wife lived until just a few years ago, whether it's the people who live in the south side Chicago neighborhoods in which Obama was an organizer, or whether it's the people who live in the same isolated Kenyan village as Obama's grandmother.

Although Obama's fellow candidates scoff that living in Indonesia for four years as a child doesn't prepare him for the complexities of foreign affairs, many people throughout the globe will take comfort knowing that the U.S. president has lived in and knows well the most populous Muslim country in the world. It will help Obama successfully convene a meeting of Muslim leaders within his first year in office.

Of course, winning over the hearts and minds of billions of skeptical Muslims will be much easier after President Obama closes Guantanamo Bay and begins a phased withdrawal of U.S. troops in Iraq.

U.S. image at home

Obama is also right that resetting the world's view of the U.S. begins with making our government more transparent. As a senator, he's worked to visibly link members of Congress to their roads to nowhere and to their lowland rain forests. As president, he will hold large-scale, open discussions on the issues facing Americans in the 21st century: health care, climate change, comprehensive immigration reform, border security, tax policy, education and economic development.

Unlike the health care overhaul attempted during Bill Clinton's administration, for example, Obama has pledged to hold open meetings and conferences for all the nation to see. Bringing together doctors, nurses, patients and hospital administrators – as well as representatives of the drug and insurance companies – Obama will produce a plan that moves beyond the limits of backroom politics.

It's true that a single-payer health care system would make the most sense if the U.S. were establishing a system from scratch. But Obama understands that, given more than half-century history of employer-provided health care and its supporting industry, the nation can't easily make a 180-degree turn. Nor can citizens wait around for some ideologically pure system to be developed. Because people need help now, Obama's plan provides the best alternative: Establishing a government system that covers those ineligible for private care and making it effective enough that others might eventually look to join it.

He will use the bully pulpit of the presidency to likewise address climate change, education and economic opportunity.

Politics of hope, unity

During the recent Des Moines Register debate, Obama joked that he is looking forward to Clinton serving as his presidential adviser. But we hope he is serious about drawing upon the wealth of experience and talent represented in his presidential rivals.

Indeed, the first test of Obama's role as a true uniter will be to bring together his party into a winning coalition in November 2008. In that process, we urge him to infuse his campaign with a little more of Edwards' public focus on poverty – while avoiding the flights of populist rhetoric that has made Edwards' good analysis sometimes too easy for critics to dismiss.

Obama has the right vision for a new national politics and a new global reputation. He now needs voters and supporters who will help him transform that vision into reality. It's a transformation that should have started three years ago. Neither the nation nor the world can wait any longer.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2010-02-13 12:15:52)

Amiable dispatch and this mail helped me alot in my college assignement. Say thank you you as your information.

Europeans favor Barack Obama among candidates (2007-12-19 13:33)

Two polls from Europe, one on the progressive blog of Social Europe Journal, and the other from conservative blogger Iain Dale, suggest Barack Obama is the most popular among U.S. presidential candidates across the Atlantic.

On Social Europe Blog poll, 41.3 % of the readers favored Barack Obama, followed by Hillary Clinton with 35.8 %. John Edwards came in third with 12.1 %.

On Iain Dale's poll, surprisingly more than 50 percent liked Obama compared to only 23 percent for Clinton.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

TEDO (2007-12-19 14:46:00)

hey paul! i'm a filipino journalist based in chicago. are you part of the obama campaign? – ted

Paul Kekai Manansala (2007-12-19 16:57:00)

Hi Ted, not officially, but I'm a member of the local Sacramento for Obama group.

You're right there at Obama headquarters.

'I support Barack Obama' (2007-12-19 15:29)

A number of prominent journalists, column writers and bloggers, have endorsed Barack Obama today.

The Des Moines Register may have chosen Hillary Clinton, but one of their more prominent columnists is supporting Obama:

Basu: Obama can heal divisions, win hearts and minds

I remember wishing Hillary Clinton would run. Not last January, when she announced, but before the 2004 election, when someone with her intellectual heft and stature was needed to stand up to the Bush/Rove/ Rumsfeld cabal and dismantle its agenda.

But Clinton didn't run then, and when she jumped into this year's race, days after Barack Obama, it was a different field and a different moment.

This moment belongs to Obama.

The White House is virtually imploding after four more years of bungling the war, the economy and domestic crises such as Hurricane Katrina. With the president's poll numbers in the 20s and Rove, Rumsfeld and Ashcroft on the run, this is the moment for a fresh start.

This newspaper has endorsed Clinton on the Democratic side. I respect its decision. But after sitting through most of the same candidate meetings, watching, reading, listening and searching my conscience, I've concluded Obama is the one who can best pull off what needs to happen.

Clinton is smart, hard-working, gutsy and tough enough to absorb all the muck that's come her way. But Obama is simply a better candidate. He's that rarest of leaders, combining roots in white Midwestern America with black Africa, and experience both organizing in barrios and editing the Harvard Law Review. He's got idealism, compassion and intellect. And he lacks the baggage Clinton comes with, including all the controversies that swirled around her husband's White House. Nor is he compromised, as she has been, by the Senate vote that got us into this quagmire in Iraq.

Clinton is likable - and polarizing. But Obama is a uniter whose very life experience promises a new chapter for America.

On major policy issues, there's more uniting this year's Democratic field than separating them. So the choice comes down to who can win, not just in electoral college votes, but in hearts and minds. Who can unite a divided public and excite people's sense of possibilities? That's where Obama leaves the rest of the pack behind.

Momentum is a hard thing to quantify. It almost has to be understood viscerally. I witnessed it in Hy-Vee Hall a couple of weeks ago, sandwiched between an unprecedented 18,000 people, all sharing a palpable sense of enthusiasm and hope. They were black, white, Latino, Asian, old, young, middle-aged and disabled.

Many had probably come to see Oprah. But when it was Obama's turn, he had them mesmerized. Some cheered and waved signs in the air. Some hugged one another, and some even got teary. It was as if no one could quite believe this youthful but commanding man, who spoke their language and echoed their dreams, might actually run America.

It was a long way from last February, when I first heard him speak and complained he was too cerebral. Between then and now, his manner has grown commanding, and presidential.

Some will say he's not seasoned enough, but one person's experience is another's baggage. Others in the field, notably Joe Biden and Chris Dodd, bring long Senate records. But the country isn't hungry for Beltway insiders.

Obama has been in politics long enough to know how it works but not so long as to be compromised or cynical. He can relate to ordinary Americans. After all, as he told us, he and his wife are just four years out of credit-card debt, and she still shops at Target.

Bill Richardson, though endearing and correct on some issues, is vague on others.

John Edwards is compelling with his passionate anti-corporate rhetoric. Unchecked corporate influence is responsible for blocking everything from truly democratic elections to health-care reform. But Edwards' hard-hitting words are hard to square with his voting record, which has been wrong on so many issues, including the Iraq war, the Patriot Act, No Child Left Behind, and Permanent Normal Trade Relations with China. How could he be trusted to make the right judgments when doing so is politically risky?

I've chastized Obama for his mistakes. But he is self-reflective and able to own up to them. He not only agrees to hear opposing viewpoints in making decisions but demands to.

While I long to see a woman or a person of color be president, neither gender nor race is criteria enough. The candidate has to be viable and stand for the right things.

With its harsh ideological agenda and unapologetic cronyism, this administration has torn through our surplus, our civil liberties and our international goodwill. Democrats four years ago squandered the opportunity to take back the White House by nominating someone who represented the same old stuff. What's needed is a candidate who represents this new America, and inspires pride in it as it grows more multicultural by the day, and as our fate becomes more linked to the rest of the world's, whether through trade, terrorism, immigration or global warming. We can either embrace it or wrap ourselves in the fear and xenophobia some in the GOP are preaching.

Now is also the time to signal the world that America is not a monolithic dinosaur but dynamic and evolving, harnessing its diversity to enhance its strength. Obama could do that.

Bob Cesca of The Huffington Post and Bob Cesca's Goddamn Awesome Blog! GO! is also endorsing Obama.

I see in Senator Obama an historic character who fits within my persnickety and idealistic template for the presidency – and this time around, it happens that my idealistic choice has a realistic chance to win. So this isn't necessarily an endorsement based on ideology, but an endorsement based on that which is required from an historical perspective.

The alternatives on either side of this campaign are ultimately redundant to what we have now.

On the Republican side, each frontrunner represents a rage-inducing aspect of the present Bush regime. The Romney Unit represents the Paris Hilton fiscal policy of Bush administration; Giuliani is the unstable, crazy-ass hubristic gunslinger; and Mike Huckabee is the cross-bearing fundamentalist who floats in the same fantasy world as Kirk Cameron and Ray Comfort.

On the Democratic side, John Edwards is a tough call because he has the right idea. But there was a thing with Edwards from 2004 that I can't seem to shake. And I've really, really tried. During one of the primary debates, Howard Dean stood up to answer a question. As was the campaign fashion at the time, Dean rolled up his sleeves. Then, behind him, I spotted John Edwards whose eyes suddenly widened at Dean's sleeve-rolling as if to say, Oh crap, I should roll up my sleeves now or else I won't be awesome like Howard. Then he quickly rolled up his sleeves. It was an awkwardly candid moment which revealed a lack of originality and, for my admittedly nitpicky tastes, a little too much of the staged illusion of it all. But more importantly, I imagined him doing the same thing when voting with the president on Iraq.

Senator Clinton, meanwhile, is certainly more intelligent and centrist than President Bush, but there's a secretive, calculating DLC side to the senator which drifts too dangerously close to the universe of Dick Cheney than the fresh approach her husband, President Clinton, offered in 1992.

Speaking of which, President Clinton said this week that Senator Clinton would dispatch the first President Bush on a world tour in order to repair America's reputation abroad. First, 'the hell you say?! Second, wouldn't that be just like a Cheney – to use a Bush as a political tool. Seriously, we can't have this. Not even as a speculative talking point. Not any more.

This is what we're desperately trying to escape, goddamn it. This is why it's imperative that Senator Obama win the nomination and ultimately the White House itself.

Bob Neer of the Blue Mass Group is also liking the Illinois senator:

Barack Obama is the best choice for President.

He speaks with reason and wisdom and walks with the energy of youth. He has succeeded in some of our most testing crucibles: our top universities, our poorest neighborhoods, and the rough politics of one of our largest states. His background, from nature to nurture, is living proof of the power of diversity.

...

Because Obama approaches problems, first, with reason, second, with practicality, and third, with empathy, he is able to find common ground where his rivals too often deepen differences. His positions on the war in Iraq, education, health care, energy, the environment, marriage, and a host of other issues offer enormous improvements on the status quo. More significantly for present purposes, they stand in sharp contrast, particularly on the subject of Iraq, to the deceptively nuanced positions of his chief rival Hillary Clinton (compare, for example, his actual plan for withdrawal from Iraq, with her, promise to make a plan for withdrawal.)

...

Finally, Obama has the decisive courage required to seize the day. From his decision to forsake the riches of corporate law to teach at the University of Chicago and organize in Chicago's poor communities, to his later rebound from an election defeat in 2000 to win the 2004 Illinois Democratic Senate primary by 29 %, and the general election 70-29 (the largest electoral victory in Illinois history), to his present well-organized, well-funded headline-grabbing national campaign, Obama has displayed a remarkable ability to weave the warp and weft of his fortune with the bright colors of victory.

Reason, pragmatism, empathy, ability and decisive courage: Barack Obama is the best candidate for President.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

artemis (2007-12-20 06:16:00)

Barack Obama would be this countries next Jimmy Carter. He is a good man, but he is not ready for the presidency.

'I support Barack Obama' (2007-12-19 15:29)

A number of prominent journalists, column writers and bloggers, have endorsed Barack Obama today. The Des Moines Register may have chosen Hillary Clinton, but one of their more prominent columnists is supporting Obama:

Basu: Obama can heal divisions, win hearts and minds

I remember wishing Hillary Clinton would run. Not last January, when she announced, but before the 2004 election, when someone with her intellectual heft and stature was needed to stand up to the Bush/Rove/ Rumsfeld cabal and dismantle its agenda.

But Clinton didn't run then, and when she jumped into this year's race, days after Barack Obama, it was a different field and a different moment.

This moment belongs to Obama.

The White House is virtually imploding after four more years of bungling the war, the economy and domestic crises such as Hurricane Katrina. With the president's poll numbers in the 20s and Rove, Rumsfeld and Ashcroft on the run, this is the moment for a fresh start. [EMBED]

This newspaper has endorsed Clinton on the Democratic side. I respect its decision. But after sitting through most of the same candidate meetings, watching, reading, listening and searching my conscience, I've concluded Obama is the one who can best pull off what needs to happen.

Clinton is smart, hard-working, gutsy and tough enough to absorb all the muck that's come her way. But Obama is simply a better candidate. He's that rarest of leaders, combining roots in white Midwestern America with black Africa, and experience both organizing in barrios and editing the Harvard Law Review. He's got idealism, compassion and intellect. And he lacks the baggage Clinton comes with, including all the controversies that swirled around her husband's White House. Nor is he compromised, as she has been, by the Senate vote that got us into this quagmire in Iraq.

Clinton is likable - and polarizing. But Obama is a uniter whose very life experience promises a new chapter for America.

On major policy issues, there's more uniting this year's Democratic field than separating them. So the choice comes down to who can win, not just in electoral college votes, but in hearts and minds. Who can unite a divided public and excite people's sense of possibilities? That's where Obama leaves the rest of the pack behind.

Momentum is a hard thing to quantify. It almost has to be understood viscerally. I witnessed it in Hy-Vee Hall a couple of weeks ago, sandwiched between an unprecedented 18,000 people, all sharing a palpable sense of enthusiasm and hope. They were black, white, Latino, Asian, old, young, middle-aged and disabled.

Many had probably come to see Oprah. But when it was Obama's turn, he had them mesmerized. Some cheered and waved signs in the air. Some hugged one another, and some even got teary. It was as if no one could quite believe this youthful but commanding man, who spoke their language and echoed their dreams, might actually run America.

It was a long way from last February, when I first heard him speak and complained he was too cerebral. Between then and now, his manner has grown commanding, and presidential.

Some will say he's not seasoned enough, but one person's experience is another's baggage. Others in the field, notably Joe Biden and Chris Dodd, bring long Senate records. But the country isn't hungry for Beltway insiders.

Obama has been in politics long enough to know how it works but not so long as to be compromised or cynical. He can relate to ordinary Americans. After all, as he told us, he and his wife are just four years out of credit-card debt, and she still shops at Target.

Bill Richardson, though endearing and correct on some issues, is vague on others.

John Edwards is compelling with his passionate anti-corporate rhetoric. Unchecked corporate influence is responsible for blocking everything from truly democratic elections to health-care reform. But Edwards' hard-hitting words are hard to square with his voting record, which has been wrong on so many issues, including the Iraq war, the Patriot Act, No Child Left Behind, and Permanent Normal Trade Relations with China. How could he be trusted to make the right judgments when doing so is politically risky?

I've chastized Obama for his mistakes. But he is self-reflective and able to own up to them. He not only agrees to hear opposing viewpoints in making decisions but demands to.

While I long to see a woman or a person of color be president, neither gender nor race is criteria enough. The candidate has to be viable and stand for the right things.

With its harsh ideological agenda and unabashed cronyism, this administration has torn through our surplus, our civil liberties and our international goodwill. Democrats four years ago squandered the opportunity to take back the White House by nominating someone who represented the same old stuff. What's needed is a candidate who represents this new America, and inspires pride in it as it grows more multicultural by the day, and as our fate becomes more linked to the rest of the world's, whether through trade, terrorism, immigration or global warming. We can either embrace it or wrap ourselves in the fear and xenophobia some in the GOP are preaching.

Now is also the time to signal the world that America is not a monolithic dinosaur but dynamic and evolving, harnessing its diversity to enhance its strength. Obama could do that.

Bob Cesca of The Huffington Post and Bob Cesca's Goddamn Awesome Blog! GO! is also endorsing Obama.

I see in Senator Obama an historic character who fits within my persnickety and idealistic template for the presidency – and this time around, it happens that my idealistic choice has a realistic chance to win. So this isn't necessarily an endorsement based on ideology, but an endorsement based on that which is required from an historical perspective.

The alternatives on either side of this campaign are ultimately redundant to what we have now.

On the Republican side, each frontrunner represents a rage-inducing aspect of the present Bush regime. The Romney Unit represents the Paris Hilton fiscal policy of Bush administration; Giuliani is the unstable, crazy-ass hubristic gunslinger; and Mike Huckabee is the cross-bearing fundamentalist who floats in the same fantasy world as Kirk Cameron and Ray Comfort.

On the Democratic side, John Edwards is a tough call because he has the right idea. But there was a thing with Edwards from 2004 that I can't seem to shake. And I've really, really tried. During one of the primary debates, Howard Dean stood up to answer a question. As was the campaign fashion at the time, Dean rolled up his sleeves. Then, behind him, I spotted John Edwards whose eyes suddenly widened at Dean's sleeve-rolling as if to say, Oh crap, I should roll up my sleeves now or else I won't be awesome like Howard. Then he quickly rolled up his sleeves. It was an awkwardly candid moment which revealed a lack of originality and, for my admittedly nitpicky tastes, a little too much of the staged illusion of it all. But more importantly, I imagined him doing the same thing when voting with the president on Iraq.

Senator Clinton, meanwhile, is certainly more intelligent and centrist than President Bush, but there's a secretive, calculating DLC side to the senator which drifts too dangerously close to the universe of Dick Cheney than the fresh approach her husband, President Clinton, offered in 1992.

Speaking of which, President Clinton said this week that Senator Clinton would dispatch the first President Bush on a world tour in order to repair America's reputation abroad. First, 'the hell you say?! Second, wouldn't that be just like a Cheney – to use a Bush as a political tool. Seriously, we can't have this. Not even as a speculative talking point. Not any more.

This is what we're desperately trying to escape, goddamn it. This is why it's imperative that Senator Obama win the nomination and ultimately the White House itself.

Iowa Caucus: Step-by-Step (2007-12-19 19:15)

BarackObama.com has an easy step-by-step guide for the caucus process in Iowa. Click "Next" on the graphic below to view the tutorial.

[EMBED]

You can also get more info in the Caucus Center webpage.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More Obama endorsements roll in (2007-12-20 08:14)

Today, two major New Hampshire newspapers endorsed Barack Obama for President.

Portsmouth Herald: Vote for Obama in Democratic primary Jan. 8

More than any of the other Democrats in the race, we believe Obama has made the most compelling and persuasive case for his candidacy. He has talked throughout this campaign about the "urgency of the now" but has shown patience to develop both his campaign and his proposals...What separates Obama is a positive vision combined with a unique temperament for leadership. He combines the best attributes of natural competence and political inspiration. He inspires trust that he will make sound judgments.

Valley News: The Case For Obama

Ultimately, though, the case for Obama is not just what he proposes to do but how he proposes to do it. Voters who doubt Obama's leadership skills need only look at his well-run primary campaign, which has taken on the Hillary Clinton juggernaut. Clinton is a formidable candidate – knowledgeable on the issues, a sharp debater, tenacious. She is more polished and more practiced than Obama. But she is less candid and less likely to create the working majority needed to govern effectively. She describes herself as battle-hardened, the candidate most able to beat back the Republicans. But that's precisely the problem: She is an armored warrior in a country weary of partisan and cultural warfare; Obama wears no armor. He seeks reconciliation – at home and abroad — and steps forward, ready to speak a language of common understanding.

Rep. Bobby Scott of Virginia joined Gov. Tim Kaine in supporting Obama. In Iowa, six more Democratic County Chairs, the leaders of the party in Audubon, Greene, Guthrie, Iowa, Sioux and Van Buren counties, endorsed Barack.

Yesterday, more than 60 foreign policy experts voiced their support for Obama's candidacy. Further details on Obama's foreign policy agenda can be found here: <http://barackobama.com/foreignpolicy>.

National Security Experts Endorsing Obama

Clifford Alexander, former Secretary of the Army

Ambassador Jeffrey Bader, Former Assistant US Trade Representative for Asia; Ambassador to Namibia

Professor Henri Barkey, Lehigh University, former member, State Dept. Policy Planning

Mr. Tom Bernstein, Human Rights Expert

Ambassador David Birenbaum, former U.S. Ambassador to the U.N. for Management and Reform

Dr. Esther Brimmer, former staff member State Department Policy Planning

Mr. Art Brown, former National Intelligence Officer for East Asia and Chief of CIA's East Asian Operations Division

Dr. Mark Brzezinski, former Director, European Affairs, National Security Council

Dr. Zbigniew Brzezinski, former National Security Adviser under President Carter

Rep. Brad Carson, former Member of Congress; Special Assistant to the Secretary of Defense

Dr. Joseph Cirincione, Author and Nonproliferation Expert

Ms. Bonnie Cohen, former Undersecretary of State for Management

Mr. Greg Craig, former Assistant to the President and Director of Policy Planning, State Department

Dr. Ivo Daalder, former Director, European Affairs, National Security Council

General (ret.) Tom Daniels, Texas Air National Guard

Mr. Richard Danzig, former Secretary of the Navy

Senator Tom Daschle, former U.S. Senate Majority Leader

Ambassador Alice Dear, former U.S. Executive Director, African Development Bank

Mr. Michael Froman, Chief of Staff, Department of Treasury; Deputy Assistant Secretary, Dept. of Treasury; National Security Council Staff Member

Mr. Tony Gambino, former Mission Director, USAID, Democratic Republic of the Congo

Dr. Tobi Gati, former Assistant Secretary of State for Intelligence and Research; Senior Director for Russia, Ukraine and Eurasian Affairs, National Security Council

Ambassador Robert Gelbard, former Presidential Envoy for the Balkans; Assistant Secretary of State for International Narcotics and Law Enforcement; Ambassador to Indonesia; Ambassador to Bolivia

Dr. Matthew Goodman, Former Director for Asian Affairs, National Security Council

Dr. Philip Gordon, former Director, European Affairs, National Security Council

Dr. Scott Gould, former Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Management

General (ret.) Scott Gration, former Director for Strategy, Policy and Planning, U.S. European Command

Adm. Don Guter, former Judge Advocate General of the Navy

General (ret.) Richard Hearney, Assistant Commandant of the Marine Corps

Mr. Eric Holder, former Deputy Attorney General

Mr. John Holum, Former Director of ACDA and Undersecretary State for Arms Control and International Security

Ambassador Vicki Huddleston, former Deputy Assistant Secretary of State and Ambassador to Mali and Madagascar, Chief of Mission to Cuba and Ethiopia

Admiral (ret.) John Hutson, former Judge Advocate General of the Navy

Mr. Jeh Johnson, former General Counsel, U.S. Air Force

Mr. Brian Katulis, Author and Middle East expert

Mr. Noel Koch, former Special Assistant to President Nixon; former Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs

Mr. Larry Korb, Assistant Secretary of Defense

Mr. Anthony Lake, former National Security Adviser to President Bill Clinton

Mr. David Lipton, former Under Secretary of Treasury for International Affairs

Mr. Robert Litt, former Principal Associate Deputy Attorney General; US Attorney

Mr. Jan Lodal, former Deputy Undersecretary of Defense

Mr. Frank Loy, former Undersecretary of State for Global Affairs

General (ret.) Lester L. Lyles, former Vice Chief of Staff USAF 1999-2000

Governor Raymond Mabus, former Ambassador to Saudi Arabia; Governor of Mississippi

Dr. Michael McFaul, Professor, Political Science, Stanford University

General Tony McPeak, former Chief of Staff of the Air Force

The Honorable Abner Mikva, former White House Counsel under President Clinton; Chief Judge, DC Court of Appeals, Member of Congress (D-III)

Ambassador Donald McHenry, former US Permanent Representative to the United Nations

Ambassador Al Moses, former Ambassador to Romania

Professor Michael Nacht, Dean, School of Public Policy, University of California at Berkeley

Admiral (ret.) John Nathman, former Director of Navy Operations and Plans

Prof. Michael Oppenheimer, Albert G. Milbank Professor of Geosciences and International Affairs, Department of Geosciences and Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs

F. Whitten Peters, former Secretary of the Air Force

Professor Samantha Power, Professor, Harvard University - Pulitzer Prize Winner

Ambassador Nick Rey, former Ambassador to Poland

Dr. Susan Rice, former Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs; former Senior Director for African Affairs, National Security Council

Prof. Riordan Roett, Director of Western Hemisphere Studies and the Latin American Studies Program, SAIS, Johns Hopkins University

Dr. Barnett Rubin, Director of Studies and Senior Fellow, Center on International Cooperation, NY University

Ambassador David Scheffer, former Ambassador at Large for War Crimes

Dr. Witney Schneidman, former Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs

Ms. Sarah Sewell, former Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense

Mr. Dan Shapiro, former Director, National Security Council

Representative Adam Smith, House Armed Services Committee, Chairman, Terrorism, Unconventional Threats, and Capabilities Subcommittee

Ms. Gayle Smith, Special Assistant to the President, National Security Council

General (ret.) James Smith, former Deputy Commander, Joint Warfare Center, US Joint Forces Command

Ms. Tara Sonenshine, former Special Assistant to the President, National Security Council

Mr. Theodore "Ted" Sorensen, former Special Counsel to President John F. Kennedy

Ms. Mona Sutphen, former Special Assistant to the National Security Advisor

Dr. Jim Vermillion, former Mission Director, USAID, Nicaragua

Professor David Victor, Stanford Law School

The Honorable Pat Wald, Chief Judge, DC Circuit, US Court of Appeals, Assistant Attorney General for Legislative Affairs, International Criminal Tribunal for Yugoslavia, Iraq Intelligence Commission

Professor Celeste Wallender, Georgetown University

Senator Harris Wofford, former CEO Corporation for National Service (AmeriCorps), United States Senator

Representative/Dr. Howard Wolpe, Former Member of Congress and Presidential Special Envoy for the Great Lakes Region of Central Africa

Source: Barack Obama campaign

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More Obama endorsements roll in (2007-12-20 08:14)

Today, two major New Hampshire newspapers endorsed Barack Obama for President.

Portsmouth Herald: Vote for Obama in Democratic primary Jan. 8

More than any of the other Democrats in the race, we believe Obama has made the most compelling and persuasive case for his candidacy. He has talked throughout this campaign about the "urgency of the now" but has shown patience to develop both his campaign and his proposals...What separates Obama is a positive vision combined with a unique temperament for leadership. He combines the best attributes of natural competence and political inspiration. He inspires trust that he will make sound judgments.

Valley News: The Case For Obama

Ultimately, though, the case for Obama is not just what he proposes to do but how he proposes to do it. Voters who doubt Obama's leadership skills need only look at his well-run primary campaign, which has taken on the Hillary Clinton juggernaut. Clinton is a formidable candidate – knowledgeable on the issues, a sharp debater, tenacious. She is more polished and more practiced than Obama. But she is less candid and less likely to create the working majority needed to govern effectively. She describes herself as battle-hardened, the candidate most able to beat back the Republicans. But that's precisely the problem: She is an armored warrior in a country weary of partisan and cultural warfare; Obama wears no armor. He seeks reconciliation – at home and abroad — and steps forward, ready to speak a language of common understanding.

Hillary preparing Barack attack websites? (2007-12-20 10:44)

According to ABC News, certainly a reputable enough news source, the Hillary Clinton campaign is preparing two websites with the express purpose of attacking her opponent, Barack Obama.

ABC News has learned that the campaign of Sen. Hillary Clinton, D-N.Y., has registered the names of two Web sites with the express goal of attacking her chief rival, Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill.

It's the first time this election cycle a presidential campaign has launched a Web site with the express purpose of launching serious criticisms on a rival.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Some grassroots Obama videos on YouTube (2007-12-20 13:44)

Check out these grassroots Obama videos from YouTube:

Musical tribute to Obama to tune of Little Drummer Boy

[EMBED]

Clinton '92 Versus Clinton '08

[EMBED]

A Tribute to our 44th President

[EMBED]

Obama Christmas

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama News for Friday (2007-12-21 10:08)

According to NBC/NJ's Erin McPike, who is following the candidate around in New Hampshire, Obama said: "I talk to Al Gore about every three weeks," in a remark to global warming Santa activists last night.

Wonder if he is courting a Gore endorsement?

University of Iowa newspaper endorses Obama

The Daily Iowan, campus newspaper of the University of Iowa, announced its endorsement of Barack Obama today:

"From the start, Obama was viewed as charismatic but lacking in substance. Now, fewer than two weeks from our state caucuses, this is no longer the case," the paper wrote in its final edition before caucus night Jan. 3. "Obama's commanding oratorical abilities should not distract voters from his policy proposals, objectives that outline a return of 'united' to the United States. We believe his judgment and ideas are the best fit, not just for a party but for a people."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Wonderful World for the Holidays (2007-12-21 12:13)

Check out this holiday video I amde combining Barack Obama 's theme of hope and change with Louis Armstrong's signature song "What a Wonderful World."

[EMBED]

Creative Common Credits:

Handshake, gaetan lee <http://flickr.com/photos/gaetanlee/>

Roses, sister72 <http://flickr.com/photos/sis/>

Baby 1, the dilly lama <http://flickr.com/photos/dylwalters/> baby 2, carbonnyc <http://flickr.com/photos/carbonnyc/> baby 3, sabrina's stash <http://flickr.com/photos/cloud10/> kittens, lazy lightning <http://flickr.com/photos/drienne/> puppy, noel lee <http://flickr.com/photos/noelzialee/> rainbow, thelizardqueen http://flickr.com/photos/lizard_queen/rainbow 2, hyak82 <http://flickr.com/photos/hyak82/>

"What a Wonderful Life" sung by Louis Armstrong and the Madrigal Singers

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Grand Opening of Sacramento Obama Field Office (2007-12-21 19:02)

Check out the video I made during the grand opening of Sacramento field office on Thursday, Dec. 20, 2007.

Location: 2015 Q St., Sacramento

Phone: (916) 400-3252

There will be phone-banking from the office until Feb. 5, and canvassing every Saturday.

[EMBED]

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=trFZ1JWHZSA>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama News in Iowa and South Carolina (2007-12-21 19:15)

The Obama camp is very active in Iowa and South Carolina as part of its early states strategy that also covers Nevada and New Hampshire.

In Iowa, Barack Obama will be appearing at a number of locations through Dec. 23.

Meet the Candidate with Barack Obama in Oskaloosa

December 22 | Oskaloosa, IA

Town Hall Meeting with Barack Obama in Indianola

December 22 | Indianola, IA

Meet the Candidate with Barack Obama in Winterset

December 22 | Winterset, IA

Rally with Barack Obama in Waukee

December 22 | Waukee, IA

An Evening with Barack Obama in Urbandale

December 22 | Urbandale, IA

Meet the Candidate with Barack Obama in Greenfield

December 23 | Greenfield, IA

Meet the Candidate with Barack Obama in Harlan

December 23 | Harlan, IA

Season of Change Rally with Barack Obama in Council Bluffs

December 23 | Council Bluffs, IA

Barack also received today the endorsement of a rural newspaper, the Woodbine Twiner:

Obama has not forgotten that we must all work together to get things accomplished. Sure, Republicans and Democrats will forever bicker. But Obama gives us some sort of hope that the two parties can work as Americans – not divide as partisans...As we repair our image around the world and begin to focus on issues back home, Obama gives us the hope both can happen.

South Carolina

Congressman Jesse Jackson Jr. and Virginia Gov. Tim Kaine will be stumping for Obama in the Palmetto State on Saturday:

9:00 AM - Gov. Tim Kaine at the Richland/Lexington County Democratic Party Annual Joint Breakfast (Columbia, SC)
12:00 PM - Canvassing with Jesse Jackson Jr. in Sumter
1:30 PM - Press Conference with Gov. Tim Kaine and Congressman Jesse Jackson Jr. (Columbia, SC)
4:00 PM - Camden Town Hall with Gov. Tim Kaine
5:45 PM - Lancaster Community Meeting with Gov. Tim Kaine
6:00 PM - Darlington Town Hall Meeting with Jesse Jackson Jr.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Iowa's El Latino newspaper endorses Barack Obama (2007-12-21 21:52)

El Latino, Iowa's largest Spanish language newspaper endorsed Barack Obama today. Here is translation of part of the El Latino editorial as provided by california.barackobama.com:

"Although we are living in difficult times, we are also living in a time of much opportunity and hope. We believe that Obama is the candidate of hope and the future. We make the decision to endorse with conviction, bravery, and the confidence that he best represents a better future for our families and community. We ask with all our heart that all members of the Latino community in Iowa attend that caucus to vote for Barack Obama, January 3 at 6:30pm."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Targeting swing voters (2007-12-22 09:22)

As the campaign enters high gear with a few weeks before the first contest in Iowa and about six weeks until Super Tuesday, the Obama team is looking to garner more donations and implement its get-out-the-vote (GOTV) drive. The campaign will also target swing voters, those who are deemed susceptible to persuasion, with their candidate's message.

Generally, one doesn't waste time trying to persuade hardcore supporters of one's opponents. It would not make sense, for example, for Obama supporters to spend days calling and attempting to win over dedicated volunteers from the Hillary Clinton campaign.

Instead, the Obama camp will attempt to identify those voters who haven't made up their minds yet and convince them that Barack is the best candidate. With limited time and resources the campaign must focus its grassroots efforts.

In addition to identifying persuadable voters, Obama's strategists must ascertain what issues are most important to those voters and then craft a message showing the voter why they should choose Obama.

Those swing voters who agree that Obama is the best choice are added to a list of supporters and then targeted for GOTV efforts in the last days before the election.

Election Dates Iowa Caucus – Jan. 3, 2008 New Hampshire Primary – Jan. 8, 2008 Nevada Caucus – Jan. 19, 2008 South Carolina Primary – Jan. 26, 2008 Super Tuesday – Feb. 5, 2008

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Sioux City Journal endorses Barack Obama (2007-12-22 13:59)

Barack Obama picked up another key newspaper endorsement in Iowa today, when the Sioux City Journal chose the Illinois senator over the other Democratic candidates.

See the endorsement video here.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More Obama endorsements (2007-12-23 08:58)

A lot of endorsements poured in for Sen. Barack Obama today. From New Hampshire, the Nashua Telegraph writes:

As we look at the current state of the nation – our foreign policy, our health-care system, our schools and the very tenor of our national discourse – it's hard for us to conclude that experience is the issue.

There's plenty of experience in Washington. What's lacking is inspired leadership that can speak directly to the people over the heads of the partisan politicians and craft a national consensus not seen in decades.

What's lacking is authenticity, transparency and courtesy. What's lacking are leaders who, rather than seeking high ground from which they can dispatch their opponents, will seek common ground and common-sense solutions.

Obama can provide that leadership, and deserves the support of New Hampshire Democrats.

Richard Fabrizio , managing editor for Seacoast Media Group's N.H. weeklies, writes in the Portsmouth Herald (New Hampshire):

With nine others looking at me, I said I thought Sen. Obama could lead us based upon my belief that I could trust him and because I respect him. I was surprised, as were almost everyone else in the room, that we were in near consensus again. [...]

And from all of that I look to Sen. Obama and I hope he will stand against wasteful spending and political chicanery just as much as he will stand against an endless war and prescription drug price gouging. I hope to welcome him into my living room and listen to what he has to say and I don't feel that way about many others in this race.

The Dallas Morning News threw its support behind Obama this morning:

Mr. Obama is our choice because of his consistently solid judgment, poise under pressure and ability to campaign effectively without resorting to the divisive politics of the past.

[...]

There's been lots of noise about his lack of experience. It is a legitimate concern, considering he's a 46-year-old first-term senator. But Mr. Obama's experience in elective office matches that of Abraham Lincoln before he became president. And he has served more time on Capitol Hill than four of the past five White House occupants.

If youthful inexperience were such a liability, it has failed to resonate despite his opponents' best efforts. Mrs. Clinton, by contrast, flip-flopped over a plan to give driver's licenses to illegal immigrants. Her campaign accepted donations from questionable sources. When Mr. Obama's support recently surged in early primary states, her campaign tried to smear him over drug use in his youth.

Two Blue Hampshire bloggers also endorsed Obama today giving his camp a lot of reason for holiday cheer in the Granite State:

Edwards for Obama

by: Andy Edwards

I am endorsing Sen. Barack Obama for President. He is the only one who presents a real departure from conventional thinking inside the beltway and who will act as a catalyst for change both within the American political system and with our image abroad.

...

He doesn't talk about problems in terms of demagogic or sensational rhetoric. He approaches problems objectively, open-minded but with a thought process derived from steadfast democratic principles. He believes that we should never sacrifice our principles, and that includes when they are challenged from our side as well. He is always going to listen to what each person has to say, and will consider the different perspectives before making the best decision - a search for truth, in complete transparency.

...

When Barack Obama tells you what he wants to do as President, he lets you get inside his head.

Mike Hoefer is a resident of Richmond, NH in Cheshire county.

Hoefer for Obama

by: Mike Hoefer

...

Obama's Technology plan is impressive and shows he understands the power of good technology in Government. He "gets it" because the plan is not just technology (routers, wireless spectrum and like) but about communication and making government more open and transparent. If they can find the right CTO, and it will not be easy, it could really "flip the funnel" on information regarding how Government is run. Sunlight is the best disinfectant they say.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Wayne Ford endorsement gives Obama Iowa Lead (2007-12-23 09:32)

Source: <http://www.iowaindependent.com/showDiary.do?diaryId=1711>

Rep. Wayne Ford of Des Moines endorsed Barack Obama Sunday giving him the lead in endorsements from Iowa Legislators with 20 to Hillary Clinton's 19 according to the Iowa Independent.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack in Iowa (2007-12-23 15:35)

Barack Obama has a very busy schedule in Iowa with just a short break for Christmas.

Meet the Candidate with Barack Obama in Greenfield

December 23 | Greenfield, IA

Meet the Candidate with Barack Obama in Harlan

December 23 | Harlan, IA

Season of Change Rally with Barack Obama in Council Bluffs

December 23 | Council Bluffs, IA

Town Hall Meeting with Barack Obama in Mason City

December 26 | Mason City, IA

Meet the Candidate with Barack Obama in Webster City

December 26 | Webster City, IA

Rally with Barack Obama in Fort Dodge

December 26 | Fort Dodge, IA

Rally with Barack Obama in Carroll

December 26 | Carroll, IA

Meet the Candidate with Barack Obama in Nevada

December 27 | Nevada, IA

Meet the Candidate with Barack Obama in Marshalltown

December 27 | Marshalltown, IA

Meet the Candidate with Barack Obama in Toledo

December 27 | Toledo, IA

Meet the Candidate with Barack Obama in Vinton

December 27 | Vinton, IA

Meet the Candidate with Barack Obama in Williamsburg

December 28 | Williamsburg, IA

Town Hall Meeting with Barack Obama in Coralville (Johnson County)

December 28 | Coralville, IA
Rally with Barack Obama in Clinton
December 28 | Clinton, IA
Rally with Barack Obama in Davenport
December 28 | Davenport, IA
Rally with Barack Obama in Muscatine
December 28 | Muscatine, IA
Rally with Barack Obama in Burlington
December 29 | Burlington, IA
Rally with Barack Obama in Fort Madison
December 29 | Fort Madison, IA
Rally with Barack Obama in Keokuk
December 29 | Keokuk, IA
Rally with Barack Obama in Mount Pleasant
December 29 | Mount Pleasant, IA
Rally with Barack Obama in Ottumwa
December 29 | Ottumwa, IA

Barack in Indianola Saturday [EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: Rep. Jesse Jackson Jr and Gov. Tim Kaine (2007-12-23 18:55)

Watch highlights from the speeches of Congressman Jesse Jackson Jr. (D-IL) and Gov. Tim Kaine (D - Virginia) supporting Barack Obama yesterday in Columbia, South Carolina .

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Christmas Videos (2007-12-24 12:50)

Some grassroots YouTube videos supporting Barack Obama this holiday season.

Obama for Change Holiday Video

[EMBED]

Happy Obama Christmas

[EMBED]

Obama Christmas 2

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Fired Up? (2007-12-26 11:24)

[EMBED]

http://youtube.com/watch?v=ycPWiu_KIHO

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Gov. Deval Patrick to visit early states for Obama (2007-12-26 12:06)

According to a report from the Boston Herald, Massachusetts Gov. Deval Patrick will stump for presidential candidate Barack Obama in the early states of Iowa, New Hampshire and South Carolina. The exact dates of his visits are unknown.

Early States Election Schedule Iowa Caucus – Jan. 3 New Hampshire Primary – Jan. 8 Nevada Caucus – Jan. 19 South Carolina Primary – Jan. 26 Super Tuesday – Feb. 5

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

More bloggers endorse Obama (2007-12-26 13:54)

Michael Medavoy, studio chief/producer at Phoenix Pictures and a Huffington Post blogger, has endorsed the candidacy of Barack Obama for president:

In my view, the Obama Candidacy is about more than just an end to the war abroad. I'm not suggesting an immediate withdrawal of our troops from foreign soil. It is about an end to the war in America – a cultural and religious war that eats at our nation's soul. Repairing America's image to the world is going to be one of the major challenges that this country will be facing. We are all immigrants, or the children of immigrants, who have come to this land looking for the American Dream. I believe that as the next President of the United States, Barack Obama can make this dream a reality.

Ken Reich, a writer and editor for the Los Angeles Times for 39 years has also given the nod to Obama:

Barack Obama is an inspiring example of young idealism, intelligence and commitment to principle. All of these attributes make him an outstanding candidate. Growing up from a biracial background, spending time as a youth abroad and in multiracial Hawaii, an extremely talented student at the Harvard Law School, where he headed the Law Review, serving as a legislator in Illinois and then the state's U.S. Senator, he has never ceased to be distinguished and to develop his abilities. His equitable temperament, wonderful family and tremendous speaking ability have made him already a hero to countless Americans. [...]

It is sometimes said that Obama is inexperienced. But he has had a lot of experience in pursuits that count, and he is four years older than John Kennedy or Theodore Roosevelt when they assumed the presidency. I am certain he would name an able cabinet, and presume he too would be careful in his selection of a running mate.

Take Back the Times: This Blog Endorses McCain, Obama As Nominees

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Ottumwa Courier endorses Obama (2007-12-26 21:27)

The Ottumwa Courier of Iowa gave its endorsement today to Barack Obama:

But Iowa Democrats have a real choice next month and there is one politician who we believe will not only create change, he'll inspire others to do the same.

Barack Obama has earned our support in the Iowa caucuses.

Americans clamor for change. And every election cycle, a candidate or several candidates will offer his/her ideas on how they would change the course of American governance.

"I think this is a 'change' election," he told the Courier editorial board. "Change is more than just changing political parties. The culture of politics in Washington has to change. And to change it, you've got to get the American people involved."

On domestic issues, Obama insists that government has to be transparent, whether it's environmental issues, the economy or education. Open the books, he said, and let the Americans see firsthand the steps that have to be taken in order to make life better for all its citizens.

He said Washington has a responsibility to create programs that have the necessary funding so that local and state governments are not swimming in a sea of red.

"When the federal government is not fulfilling its requirements ... that is putting a burden on local governments and state governments to raise property taxes or sewer rates or what have you. That disproportionately impacts people on fixed incomes," he said.

On the war in Iraq, Obama has been consistent about his opposition to the war and his desire to move troops out as soon as possible.

Iraq is just one issue, of course, that will be part of the next president's foreign policy agenda.

Arguments, however, have been made that Obama is inexperienced and does not have the foreign policy credentials to sit in the Oval Office. But the senator is clear that experience need not be "Washington experience."

He points to his work as a community and civil rights activist and his time in the Illinois State Senate.

Obama suggests that there is a tendency not to count state and local work as real-world experience. However, much of his time doing that work has meant working across the aisle and getting things done.

Obama knows he must surround himself with people who will help him move the country down a prosperous path.

"I trust my judgment but I don't presume to know everything," he said, adding he will surround himself with qualified people.

And he promises his cabinet members will always know that "your job is not to protect me. Your job is to protect the Constitution and to be an advocate for the American people."

Read more »

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Will Benazir Bhutto assassination impact U.S. elections? (2007-12-27 09:17)

Shortly after the assassination of Benazir Bhutto, the first woman leader in a modern Islamic country, even before an official statement from the Bush administration, presidential candidate Rudy Giuliani released a statement before any other candidate bringing up the specter of the war on terrorism.

There obviously was some politicking going on here, and one wonders what impact the tragic events in Pakistan today will have on the elections, both the general election and the primary election.

Will the terrorist act reinforce the "climate of fear" that has prevailed since 9-11 and play into the hands of hawks both in the primary and general?

Those interested in moving toward peace and a stabilization of world relations will have to work extra hard in the coming days and months to insure that sound judgment prevails over raw emotion.

Barack Obama released this statement today after learning of the fateful events:

I am shocked and saddened by the death of Benazir Bhutto in this terrorist atrocity. She was a respected and resilient advocate for the democratic aspirations of the Pakistani people. We join with them in mourning her loss, and stand with them in their quest for democracy and against the terrorists who threaten the common security of the world.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Rep. William Delahunt endorses Barack Obama (2007-12-27 09:39)

According to the Boston Globe, Rep. William Delahunt of Massachusetts will endorse Barack Obama today:

"If Barack Obama is elected president, I daresay America will present a new face to the world, will restore, simply by his election, hope - not just within the United States, but from all corners of the world, that America's claim to moral authority is back on track and that our leadership in world affairs will see a renaissance," Delahunt told the Globe.

Delahunt's endorsement - Obama's first from the Massachusetts congressional delegation - will be made as Obama and Senator Hillary Clinton of New York spar about their respective foreign policy credentials. Clinton has argued that her experiences during her husband's presidency, including extensive international travel, make her the better candidate to deal with foreign leaders and potential terrorist threats. But Delahunt, declining to criticize Clinton by name, dismissed that notion. "Please do not equate experience with judgment. That's what this is about," Delahunt said. Voters should not "confuse experience with time in Washington," he said, noting that John F. Kennedy, Ronald Reagan, and Bill Clinton all had limited direct foreign policy experience before taking office.

Obama opposed the Iraq war from the start, Delahunt noted, while veteran lawmakers voted to authorize force. Delahunt said he was also influenced by Obama's stated willingness - criticized by the Clinton campaign - to meet with rogue world leaders. Delahunt has met with President Hugo Chávez of Venezuela, negotiating a deal for home heating oil for his constituents from a Latin American leader who once referred to President Bush as "the devil."

Delahunt's backing has elevated significance for Obama, who is seeking to convince voters he would be able to deal with myriad foreign policy challenges after just three years in the Senate. The Massachusetts lawmaker is a prominent member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee and was selected to represent the Congress at the UN General Assembly in September.

Early States Election Schedule Iowa Caucus - Jan. 3 New Hampshire Primary - Jan. 8 Nevada Caucus - Jan. 19 South Carolina Primary - Jan. 26 Super Tuesday - Feb. 5

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Asian American org denounces Obama, calls for defeat (2007-12-27 10:12)

S. B. Woo, leader of the 80-20 Initiative, a nationwide Asian American organization, sent out the letter appended below calling on Asian Americans to denounce Barack Obama.

80-20 actually is overwhelmingly a Chinese American organization that speaks out for Asian American causes. They condemned Obama for refusing to answer six questions that are listed below.

Call To Action – Defeat Obama

Save this newsletter for forwarding to friends today & later

In response to Sen. Obama's steadfast refusal to address the grievance faced by Asian Ams, and given that the presidential primary season will begin in 7 days, the Board of 80-20 has voted unanimously to defeat Sen. Obama's candidacy in the Democratic primary unless he replies to OUR questionnaire with all yeses. This resolution has been formally transmitted to Sen. Obama .

Until further notice, please vote in the Dem. Primary for Senators Biden or Clinton or Dodd or Edwards or Gravels who have readily replied to OUR questionnaire with all yeses. They even emphasized that remedying such inequities was one reason they wanted to be the President. Regrettably, none of the Republican candidates have replied with a single yes yet, so they have not earned our support.

In addition, please forward this newsletter to your friends and relatives in Iowa , New Hampshire , California and the other states. Ask them to in turn forward it to their friends & relatives.

U.S. politics functions on carrots and sticks. Asian Ams need to get with it. Obama ignores our legitimate grievance, so we must defeat his candidacy. Counting on you. Use your address book to do your absolute best in spread this message NOW!

Respectfully yours,

S.B. Woo

Member of the Exec. Comm, Founding President of the 80-20 Initiative.

Why Asian Ams Need to Defeat Sen. Obama's Candidacy

Sen. Obama gave almost farcical reasons why he would not reply to OUR questionnaire. The reasons given are

- 1) "He is black." Hence he has to be extra careful in matters dealing with the minorities to avoid the suspicion of the majority. So is Sen. Obama hoping to build his presidency on the backs of Asian Ams suffering unequal opportunity in workplaces?! How arrogant!
- 2) "When he is the president, an Asian American will have a better chance to be the president." Is it logical to talk about Asian Ams' chance to be the President when he is not even willing to assure us of equal opportunity in workplaces? How blind ambition deprives an inexperienced politician of logic?!
- 3) His staff is fond of saying that "Obama has a brother-in-law in Conrad Ng, and it'll be such a honor for Asian Americans if Obama gets into the White House ." Really? Did Obama select his brother-in-law or does

Sen. Obama think Asian Americans live in ancient feudal China?

Sen. Obama often intones the "fierce urgency of now," a quote from

Martin Luther King . However, he got it all wrong. Dr. King used the phrase to emphasize the urgency of equal opportunity for all Americans. Obama uses it to advance his candidacy while giving benign neglect to equal opportunity for Asian Ams and perhaps even African Americans.

Sen. Obama too inexperienced to be our presidency. He is not ready. He has yet to develop the character and courage to stand up for America's core value – equal opportunity.

Sen. Obama trivializes his "inexperience" by pointing to our youngest President, John F. Kennedy . How wrong Obama is. Kennedy served in the House and Senate for 14 years, from 1946 to 1960, before being elected the President. Obama has only 3 years' experience in national politics – one quarter the national experience of our youngest President – JFK .

The 6 questions that Sen. Obama refused to answer

(1) If elected, will you direct the Labor Secretary to hold public hearings regarding the validity of the huge amount of statistical data strongly suggesting discriminatory practices against Asian Americans in workplaces today? (Yes/No)

(2) If the data were shown valid, will you issue a directive to the Labor Department asking it to focus on enforcing Executive Order 11246 on behalf of Asian Americans, since in the past similar efforts have already been made on behalf of women and other minorities? (Yes/No)

(3) Two years after you have issued the directive described in item 2, will you meet with a group of Asian American national organizations, put together by 80-20 and the Labor Department, to review the progress in extending equal opportunity to Asian Americans? (Yes/No)

(4) If elected, will you within your first term of office, seek to increase the nomination of qualified Asian Americans to serve as Article III life-tenured federal judges, whenever such vacancies are available until the current dismal situation is significantly remedied? [To put things in perspective, not meaning to imply quota, presently there are 0.6 % Asian Am. Federal judges, while the Asian Am. population is 4.5 % and the % of Asian Am legal professionals in laws firms of 100 or large is at least 5.3 %.] (Yes/No)

(5) If elected, will you seek to nominate, within your first term of office, qualified Asian Americans to serve as Article III Circuit Judges, whenever there are vacancies in those positions, until the current dismal situation is significantly remedied? [To put things in perspective, none of the 179 Article III Circuit judges is an Asian American.] (Yes/No)

(6) If elected, will you consider nominating a qualified Asian America to the Supreme Court , when a vacancy occurs? Two years upon your taking the office, will you meet with a group of Asian American leaders, put together jointly by 80-20 and other Asian American national organizations to review the progress in adding Asian American Federal judges? (Yes/No)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Assemb. Linda Greenstein supports Barack (2007-12-27 12:11)

Assemblywoman Linda Greenstein (D-Monroe) of New Jersey announced her support for Barack Obama today.

"As a member of the Assembly and of the former New Jersey Citizens' Clean Elections Commission (2004-2006), I am particularly proud to work with Barack Obama. He has vowed to change politics as we know it, and I will stand with him to make that a reality."

Sen. Obama responded saying:

It is an honor to have Assemblywoman Greenstein on our team. She is a dedicated public servant who has proven she can reach across party lines and bring people together to get things done. She has worked hard to promote integrity in the election system and I am proud she will join us to transform our politics and bring change we can believe in. I look forward to working with Assemblywoman Greenstein to continue to build support for our campaign in New Jersey.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More on 80-20 anti-Obama campaign (2007-12-27 16:51)

In response to the email sent out by the 80-20 Initiative today, an Asian American woman blogger at reappropriate.com, who also happens to volunteer for the Obama campaign, writes:

<http://www.reappropriate.com/?p=895>

Frankly, this email rubbed me the wrong way. The email is representative of the tone of the emails out of the 80/20 Initiative, that were deeply critical of Obama long before Obama had decided to (or not to) respond to 80/20's questionnaire.

Although earlier emails should have been objective towards Obama, they nonetheless emphasized the myth of Obama's inexperience and touted textbook Clinton attacks against Obama's candidacy. Moreover, 80/20 does not cite or provide a full text of the Obama campaign's response — and yet attacks those supposed responses with inflammatory rhetoric that might as well have been written by Clinton herself.

While I understand 80/20 choosing not to endorse Obama for not responding to their questionnaire, is it unnecessary and disingenuous to spread malicious rumours such as the ones quoted above, suggesting Obama is actively working against civil rights "for Asian Ams and perhaps even African Americans".

As I have said before, I think the mission statement of 80/20 is commendable, but their tactics have been questionable in the past, and have hit the point of downright despicable, now. Less than half of the Asian American community came out to vote in 2004: the last thing we need is a movement that disrespects the political process with slander and discourages Asian Americans from making an educated vote.

Finally, as an Obama volunteer, I was surprised to hear 80/20's cited responses out of the Obama for America campaign regarding their lack of response. Knowing Obama's campaign fairly well, it was disconcerting to think that the Obama campaign would actually respond to 80/20 with statements that Obama need not respond because “he is black”. So, I requested a copy of the official response from 80/20, from which these quotes are being taken. After all, if Asian Americans are being expected to actually band together and try and defeat Obama, we deserve the full response.

However, my instinct is that these “quotes” are simply yet another instance of 80/20 hedging the facts to attack Obama’s candidacy: either paraphrases disguised as actual quotes or statements taken out of context.

I wrote to the Obama campaign last week with a request for further information regarding their decision not to respond to the 80/20 questionnaire (the comments of this post contain the text of my letter). Within a week, I received this response, which I am reproducing in full:

Dear Friend,

Thank you for contacting Obama for America regarding the 80-20 Educational Foundation questionnaire and Barack Obama’s commitment to Asian Americans.

Barack Obama has worked to advance the interests of Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders (AAPIs) his entire life. Born in Hawaii, a majority AAPI state, spending part of his childhood in Indonesia, having Asian Americans in his multi-racial and multi-ethnic family, and working with the vibrant AAPI communities of Chicago, Obama understands the aspirations and needs of AAPIs. As president, Obama will work closely with AAPI leaders and advocate for the top priorities for AAPIs across the nation.

Barack Obama is committed to appointing qualified AAPIs to high-level positions in his administration, and he will strengthen the White House Initiative on Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders. Barack Obama will also build upon his work as a civil rights lawyer and community organizer to end racial discrimination and advance equal opportunity in the workplace and the federal government. Finally, as a former constitutional law lecturer, Obama understands the importance of a diverse judiciary and he is committed to increasing the representation of qualified minorities and women, including qualified Asian Americans, when there are vacancies in the federal judiciary, including the Supreme Court.

We regret that our staff was unable to reach agreement with leadership of the 80-20 Educational Foundation over concerns with the wording of the questionnaire, despite the fact that modifications to the questionnaire were made for other campaigns.

The Obama campaign is proud of its efforts to reach out and engage the Asian American community by providing an official statement to the Asian American Action Fund (AAA Fund) (<http://www.aaa-fund.org/campaigns/president08/index.asp> #obama), participating in the Iowa Heartland Presidential Forum, creating an Asian American and Pacific Islander (AAPI) National Leadership Council of key AAPI activists around the country to advise the campaign on AAPI outreach, and sending top campaign surrogates to appear at candidate forums sponsored by Asian Pacific Americans for Progress (APAP) and the AAA Fund. The Obama campaign is also the only major campaign to have a campaign-sponsored Asian Americans outreach webpage linked off of its main website. The Obama campaign is also proud of its endorsement by the AAA Fund of Greater Chicago.

Senator Obama looks forward to continuing his long record of advocacy for Asian Americans as president.

Sincerely,

Obama for America

First of all, I was very happy to see how rapidly I received a sincere, detailed letter from the campaign in response to my query. Despite the fact that the headquarters must be receiving thousands of letters like mine every day, I am happy to see that staff were still able to give me a response that addressed my concerns in such a timely fashion.

Secondly, I was extremely delighted to have Obama's campaign commit to the meat of 80/20's questionnaire: the appointment of qualified Asian Americans (and women!) to the cabinet and judgeships, when possible, as well as maintaining an open line of communication to key Asian American political leadership.

From the letter, it's clear that the problem was in the wording of the questionnaire. And if it's true that 80/20 was unwilling to make changes to the questionnaire for the Obama campaign, but was for other campaigns, than it suggests that 80/20 might have been looking to back a different candidate to begin with and was just seeking an excuse to go on the offensive.

In either case, comparing the correspondence I've got from both 80/20 and the Obama campaign, I think I'm going to have to continue my personal support for Senator Obama's candidacy. I think it's clear from the letter that an Obama presidency would be extremely friendly towards APIA issues, and that Obama maintains a high commitment towards our sociopolitical causes, even when his campaign is unwilling to be bullied into pandering.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Stand for Change Tour on Fri. & Sat. (2007-12-27 20:45)

I'm posting events for the "Stand for Change" tour over the next few days featuring both Barack and Michelle Obama in Iowa.

Mills County Event with Michelle Obama (Official Event)

Friday, December 28 at 9:15 AM

Mills County YMCA New Gym (Glenwood, IA)

Please join Michelle Obama at a campaign event in Glenwood where she'll talk about Barack's vision for bringing to Washington, DC the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Barack Obama's 'Stand for Change' Tour Stops in Williamsburg (Official Event)

Friday, December 28 at 9:45 AM

Mary Welsh Elementary School Gymnasium (Williamsburg, IA)

Please join Barack Obama for a 'Stand for Change' Tour stop in Williamsburg where he'll talk about his vision for bringing the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Harrison County Event with Michelle Obama (Official Event with Barack Obama)

Friday, December 28 at 11:15 AM

Rand Senior Center (Missouri Valley, IA)

Please join Michelle Obama at a campaign event in Missouri Valley where she'll talk about Barack's vision for bringing to Washington, DC the kind of...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Barack Obama's 'Stand for Change' Tour Stops in Coralville (Johnson County)
(Official Event)

Friday, December 28 at 12:00 PM

Northwest Junior High School (Coralville, IA)

Please join Barack Obama for a 'Stand for Change' Tour stop in Coralville (Johnson County) where he'll talk about his vision for bringing the kind...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Pottawattamie County Event with Michelle Obama (Official Event)

Friday, December 28 at 1:15 PM

A.H.S.T High School (Avoca, IA)

Please join Michelle Obama at a campaign event in Avoca where she'll talk about Barack's vision for bringing the kind of change we can believe...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Cass County Event with Michelle Obama (Official Event)

Friday, December 28 at 3:15 PM

Cass County Community Center (Atlantic, IA)

Please join Michelle Obama at a campaign event in Atlantic where she'll talk about Barack's vision for bringing to Washington, DC the kind of change...

- View Event Details

- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Barack Obama's 'Stand for Change' Tour Stops in Clinton (Official Event)

Friday, December 28 at 4:00 PM

Washington Middle School (Clinton, IA)

Please join Barack Obama for a 'Stand for Change' Tour stop in Clinton where he'll talk about his vision for bringing the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Barack Obama's 'Stand for Change' Tour Stops in Davenport (Official Event)

Friday, December 28 at 6:30 PM

RiverCenter (Davenport, IA)

Please join Barack Obama for a 'Stand for Change' Tour stop in Davenport where he'll talk about his vision for bringing the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Precinct Team Training (Organizing)

Friday, December 28 at 7:00 PM

Panera Bread (Cedar Rapids, IA)

Please join us for our final precinct team training at Panera on Edgewood Road. We will go over each team position on caucus night,...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Barack Obama's 'Stand for Change' Tour Stops in Muscatine (Official Event)

Friday, December 28 at 9:00 PM

Central Middle School Gymnasium (Muscatine, IA)

Please join Barack Obama for a 'Stand for Change' Tour stop in Muscatine where he'll talk about his vision for bringing the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Barack Obama's 'Stand for Change' Tour Stops in Burlington (Official Event)

Saturday, December 29 at 9:45 AM

Pzazz Convention Center and Event Center (Burlington, IA)

Please join Barack Obama for a 'Stand for Change' Tour stop in Burlington where he'll talk about his vision for bringing the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Barack Obama's 'Stand for Change' Tour Stops in Fort Madison (Official Event)

Saturday, December 29 at 11:45 AM

Fort Madison High School Cafeteria (Fort Madison, IA)

Please join Barack Obama for a 'Stand for Change' Tour stop in Fort Madison where he'll talk about his vision for bringing the kind of...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Barack Obama's 'Stand for Change' Tour Stops in Keokuk (Official Event)

Saturday, December 29 at 2:45 PM

Hawthorne Elementary School Gymnasium (Keokuk, IA)

Please join Barack Obama for a 'Stand for Change' Tour stop in Keokuk where he'll talk about his vision for bringing the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Meet actors Brandon Routh and Kal Penn in Norwalk! (Meeting)

Saturday, December 29 at 4:00 PM

Cal's II (Norwalk, IA)

Come meet Kal Penn from Harold and Kumar, The Namesake, and House and Norwalk native Brandon Routh from Superman Returns at Cal's II in Norwalk! We'll...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Our Moment Is Now: Meet Congressman Jesse Jackson Jr. in Des Moines (Meeting)

Saturday, December 29 at 5:00 PM

Something Good Restaurant (Des Moines, IA)

Come meet Congressman Jesse Jackson Jr. as he talks about why Barack Obama is the right person to lead the country right now.

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Barack Obama's 'Stand for Change' Tour Stops in Mount Pleasant (Official Event)

Saturday, December 29 at 5:15 PM

Mount Pleasant Community High School Commons (Mount Pleasant, IA)

Please join Barack Obama for a 'Stand for Change' Tour stop in Mount Pleasant where he'll talk about his vision for bringing the kind of...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Our Moment Is Now: Meet Dr. C.T. Vivian in Waterloo (Meeting)

Saturday, December 29 at 7:00 PM

Ambassadors for Christ Church (Waterloo, IA)

Come meet Civil Rights Legend Dr. C.T. Vivian this Saturday at Ambassadors for Christ Church in Waterloo. Dr. Vivian will talk about why Senator Obama is...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

CHANGE ROCKS! (Organizing)

Saturday, December 29 at 8:00 PM

VAL AIR BALLROOM (West Des Moines, IA)

Obama for America Presents CHANGE ROCKS India Arie Performing With Special Guests Kal Penn & Brandon Roth Free and open to the public Ages 17 and up - no tickets...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Barack Obama's 'Stand for Change' Tour Stops in Ottumwa (Official Event)

Saturday, December 29 at 8:15 PM

Ottumwa High School Old Gymnasium (Ottumwa, IA)

Please join Barack Obama for a 'Stand for Change' Tour stop in Ottumwa where he'll talk about his vision for bringing the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Early States Election Schedule Iowa Caucus – Jan. 3 New Hampshire Primary – Jan. 8 Nevada Caucus – Jan. 19 South Carolina Primary – Jan. 26 Super Tuesday – Feb. 5

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Marshalltown UAW endorses Barack Obama (2007-12-28 09:29)

Local #893 announced its support of Barack Obama for president following the recommendations of Region 4 conference in Dubuque last month.

"The Washington lobbyists and special interest PACs have been in charge for too long. This week, here in Iowa, their desperate attempt to control the political process is all over our televisions," Dennis Stewart, president of UAW Local #893 said. "Now more than ever before, working families know Barack Obama is the only candidate in this race who's not getting any help in Iowa from Washington lobbyists, special interest PACs, or the shadowy outside organizations known as 527s. That's why working families can trust Barack to change Washington, tell the truth and win in 2008."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama: Real Leadership for Seniors (2007-12-28 10:06)

Check out this great video from the Obama campaign on senior issues such as Social Security and health care. [EMBED]

Early States Election Schedule Iowa Caucus – Jan. 3 New Hampshire Primary – Jan. 8 Nevada Caucus – Jan. 19 South Carolina Primary – Jan. 26 Super Tuesday – Feb. 5

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Getting People to Caucus (2007-12-28 10:35)

Forget the polls, the big thing on Jan. 3 will be the candidate able to get supporters out to their caucus meetings. A lot of different factors come into play here including the weather and the demographic breakdown of the candidate's supporters in terms of age, voting frequency, etc.

For someone like Barack Obama with many young people as supporters, the last days of the campaign are very important. A young college student often wonders how to fill up their gas tank if they have a car at all. Someone who has had a hard day at work might think that their single vote doesn't matter than much anyway and decide to skip the meeting and go straight home.

There are some creative ways to get people out to caucus. They include student carpools, free volunteer taxi services, after-parties for young voters , etc.

College students are always looking for free munchies and the chance to meet other young people so parties are a good strategy in college towns.

Many people, especially first-time and infrequent voters, may simply forget the date or time of the caucus. This is where the campaign ground effort comes in, especially the phone banks. They need to remind supporters to show up at the caucus meeting on time.

In the end, it is often the campaign with the best ground organization that ends up winning the Iowa caucus.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

New TV ads (2007-12-28 16:10)

The Obama campaign has released two new television ads, one for Iowa called "Listening," and the other, "Unity" for New Hampshire.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

North Dakota Sen. Kent Conrad backs Obama (2007-12-29 09:41)

Sen. Kent Conrad of North Dakota endorsed Barack Obama today.

"I've worked with all of the presidential candidates, both those who have served in the Senate and those who are in other positions, including Gov. (Bill) Richardson, whom I have enormous respect for," Conrad said. "What draws me to Sen Obama and his candidacy is the ability he has shown to bring people together, to unite people around a common cause. And I think that's so needed right now. He also has the ability to lift people, to inspire them."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

barackobama.com has new look (2007-12-29 09:45)

The campaign has completely redone the front page and modified other parts of the barackobama.com website particularly to make it easier to find information fast. Here's a peek at the new site:

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Nathan Gonzalez: 'Why I'm supporting Barack Obama' (2007-12-29 12:52)

Nathan Gonzalez, founder of NationandState.org and author of Engaging Iran: The Rise of a Middle East Powerhouse and America's Strategic Choice tells why he is supporting Barack Obama over at The Huffington Post.

Marcus Tullius Cicero, the great Roman politician and fearless opponent of dictatorship, warned us against leaders who, in "their admiration for shrewd and clever men, take craftiness for wisdom." In his ultimate how-to manual for governing, called On Duties, Cicero told us what we should already know: That morality and judgment are not an impediment to success, but a key to it. That is why I am supporting Barack

Obama for president.

In the last seven years, we have seen our constitution torn to shreds before our eyes. The writ of habeas corpus, once the cornerstone of our legal system, has been suspended on behalf of a war effort with no focus or end in sight. We have reached the limits of Orwellian speech, with a president speaking of a "war on terror," "victory in Iraq," and "you are either with us or you are with the terrorists."

[...]

Cicero told us that morals need not be separated from expediency and success. In Barack Obama, we have a candidate who will not only bring about a needed change of course, but in the process will show respect toward the vast and diverse political fabric of America. He will take on the task of governing with the kind of dignity we should expect of our elected leaders. Obama can win next November, and as Cicero would say, he can do so with honor. That is why I'm voting for Barack Obama.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Events in Iowa on Sun. & Mon. (2007-12-29 19:58)

Carroll County Event with Michelle Obama (Official Event)

Sunday, December 30 at 9:45 AM

Coffee World (Carroll, IA)

Please join Michelle Obama at a campaign event in Carroll where she'll talk about Barack's vision for bringing to Washington, DC the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Barack Obama's 'Stand for Change' Tour Stops in Knoxville (Official Event)

Sunday, December 30 at 11:15 AM

Knoxville Middle School Auditorium (Knoxville, IA)

Please join Barack Obama for a 'Stand for Change' Tour stop in Knoxville where he'll talk about his vision for bringing the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Crawford County Event with Michelle Obama (Official Event)

Sunday, December 30 at 11:30 AM

Donna Reed Center for the Performing Arts (Denison, IA)

Please join Michelle Obama at a campaign event in Denison where she'll talk about Barack's vision for bringing to Washington, DC the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Monona County Event with Michelle Obama (Official Event)

Sunday, December 30 at 1:45 PM

Mapleton Community Center (Mapleton, IA)

Please join Michelle Obama at a campaign event in Mapleton where she'll talk about Barack's vision for bringing to Washington, DC the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Barack Obama's 'Stand for Change' Tour Stops in Newton (Official Event)

Sunday, December 30 at 2:30 PM

Newton Senior High School (Newton, IA)

Please join Barack Obama for a 'Stand for Change' Tour stop in Newton where he'll talk about his vision for bringing the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Barack Obama's 'Stand for Change' Tour Stops in Indianola with Brandon Routh (Official Event)

Sunday, December 30 at 5:15 PM

United Methodist Church (Indianola, IA)

Please join Barack Obama for a 'Stand for Change' Tour stop in Indianola where he'll talk about his vision for bringing the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Des Moines Women's Event with Michelle Obama (Official Event)

Sunday, December 30 at 5:15 PM

Grounds for Celebration (Des Moines, IA)

Please join Michelle Obama at a campaign event in Des Moines where she'll talk about Barack's vision for bringing to Washington, DC the kind of...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Barack Obama's 'Stand for Change' Tour Stops in the South Side of Des Moines (Official Event)

Sunday, December 30 at 7:30 PM

Nathan Weeks Middle School Gymnasium (Des Moines, IA)

Please join Barack Obama for a 'Stand for Change' Tour stop in the South Side of Des Moines where he'll talk about his vision for...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Barack Obama's 'Stand for Change' Tour Stops in Perry (Official Event)

Monday, December 31 at 9:30 AM

McCreary Community Building (Perry, IA)

Please join Barack Obama for a 'Stand for Change' Tour stop in Perry where he'll talk about his vision for bringing the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Barack Obama's 'Stand for Change' Tour Stops in Jefferson (Official Event)

Monday, December 31 at 12:00 PM

Jefferson High School Gymnasium (Jefferson, IA)

Please join Barack Obama for a 'Stand for Change' Tour stop in Jefferson where he'll talk about his vision for bringing the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Marshall County Event with Michelle Obama (Official Event)

Monday, December 31 at 12:30 PM

Iowa Veterans Home (Marshalltown, IA)

Please join Michelle Obama at a campaign event in Marshalltown where she'll talk about Barack's vision for bringing to Washington, DC the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Meet and Greet with Michelle Obama (Meeting)

Monday, December 31 at 3:00 PM

Carman Center (Grinnell, IA)

Meet Sen. Obama's wife, Michelle Obama. She will speak about Barack's plans to bring change we can believe in to the White House, and...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Barack Obama's 'Stand for Change' Tour Stops in Boone (Official Event)

Monday, December 31 at 3:00 PM

Boone County Fairgrounds Community Room (Boone, IA)

Please join Barack Obama for a 'Stand for Change' Tour stop in Boone where he'll talk about his vision for bringing the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Poweshiek County Event with Michelle Obama (Official Event)

Monday, December 31 at 3:00 PM

The Mayflower (Grinnell, IA)

Please join Michelle Obama at a campaign event in Grinnell where she'll talk about Barack's vision for bringing to Washington, DC the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Meet Michelle Obama In Bedford (Meeting)

Monday, December 31 at 4:00 PM

Bedford Country Club (Bedford, IA)

Come meet Senator Obama's wife, Michelle! Doors open early at 3:30.

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Marion County Event with Michelle Obama (Official Event)

Monday, December 31 at 5:15 PM

Home of Theresa and Timothy Crumley (Pella, IA)

Please join Michelle Obama at a campaign event in Pella where she'll talk about Barack's vision for bringing to Washington, DC the kind of change...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Barack Obama's 'Stand for Change' Tour Stops in Iowa Falls (Official Event)

Monday, December 31 at 6:00 PM

Iowa Falls Alden High School - Student Center (Iowa Falls, IA)

Please join Barack Obama for a 'Stand for Change' Tour stop in Iowa Falls where he'll talk about his vision for bringing the kind of...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Caucus: Jackson Township: Jackson Township Fire Department (Iowa Caucus)

Monday, December 31 at 6:30 PM

Jackson Township Fire Department (Keokuk, IA)

This is the official RSVP to let us know that you plan on attending your neighborhood Caucus on January 3rd. We need to Caucus...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Kal Penn and Acoustic Music by Conor Oberst (Organizing)

Monday, December 31 at 6:30 PM

Carroll Bowl (East Carroll, IA)

Join Kal Penn for an event with acoustic music by Conor Oberst.

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

New Year's Eve Event with Barack Obama in Ames (Official Event)

Monday, December 31 at 8:30 PM

Iowa State University Memorial Union (Ames, IA)

Please join Barack Obama for a campaign event in Ames where he'll discuss his vision for bringing the kind of change we can believe in...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Early States Election Schedule Iowa Caucus – Jan. 3 New Hampshire Primary – Jan. 8 Nevada Caucus – Jan. 19 South Carolina Primary – Jan. 26 Super Tuesday – Feb. 5

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Rep. Danny Davis: Why I'm Supporting Barack Obama (2007-12-30 08:31)

Illinois Dem. Rep. Danny Davis wrote a posting on the The Hill's Congress Blog on why he's supporting Barack Obama. Here's the full text of the article:

The experts who study such things tell us that endorsements really don't make much difference when citizens make up their minds on who to vote for. So why am I working so hard for Barack Obama?

Two reasons. First, in my judgement, our country has suffered so much during the Presidency of George W. Bush. We embarked on a war and subsequent occupation of Iraq based on mistaken or falsified intelligence. The war has been horribly planned and mismanaged and the cost in lives lost, in resources squandered, in reducing our national security, in compromise of our principles and our constitution rights and liberties, in loss of our standing in the world, has been unacceptable. While our economy has grown the vast majority of American have not participated in the benefits, with wages stagnating, fewer Americans with health insurance, more children in poverty. The bursting of the housing bubble (a failure of our regulatory system) and high gas prices have placed our communities in real crisis and families in real hardship.

Our government has taken to eavesdropping on us, censoring the work of our scientists on climate change, failing to protect our children against dangerous imported products. The 2000 and the 2004 elections have raised serious questions about the integrity of our election systems which remain unanswered. Because the issues are so large, and the consequences so great, I have been moved to try and involve the maximum number of voters in this primary season because I believe that is the only way we can achieve real change.

Second, because I have had the opportunity to know and work with Barack since he moved to Chicago, I feel I have some special experiences to share with voters. Barack comes to politics with a background and a deep commitment to empowering people through organization. It was as a community organizer, pulling people together for their common interests, that Barack first found his voice as a leader. I know Barack has carried that commitment to the way he practices politics. I know that commitment was reflected in the legislation that he got passed in the state legislature and more recently in the United States Senate. I have seen that same commitment in the campaign he has run for President.

I won't try and summarize Barack's platform here. He has a great website where those ideas are laid out in detail. What I can say is how excited and pleased I have been about caliber of young people his campaign has attracted. I believe his campaign is renewing politics, renewing hope, renewing dialog and renewing participation in this great democracy. I hope you will have an opportunity to visit an Obama volunteer headquarters and see for yourself. If you like what you see I hope you will join me in trying to maximize participation in the 2008 elections . . . and making a real change in our politics and policies by supporting Barack Obama.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Times-Republican: Obama brings message of hope, change (2007-12-30 11:32)

Obama brings message of hope, change

Open the doors and let the American people in.

With a philosophy of openness - from education to the economy, government to military actions - Barack Obama has based his message of hope and change on the belief that Americans want to be involved in their government.

We couldn't agree more.

In an age where closed doors, secret military posts and middle-of-the-night pork barrel votes are all too common, Obama believes we can still come together as a country, we can work together to build a better America.

It's true, his experience in running a country may not be as lengthy as that of his opponents, but perhaps that is a good thing.

Too many of the candidates already have too much "experience" in our eyes - too much "experience" manipulating the system, too much "experience" bowing to special interests and too much "exp-erience" during a previous White House stint.

Obama has what we would call more "down to earth" experience: helping in his community working as a civil rights activist, and, of course, his time in the Illinois State Senate.

The argument has also been made that Obama lacks experience dealing with foreign policy and foreign leaders. Perhaps that "lack of experience" will translate into some bold, decisive actions that actually deal with foreign issues, rather than the typical "nod and smile" philosophy.

And while many Democratic candidates have called for an immediate troop withdrawal in Iraq, Obama understands that such action would be detrimental to foreign relations, the people of Iraq and our own troops. Instead, he proposes a controlled and responsible withdrawal from Iraq that would take a couple of years to properly complete. Obama also understands that a universal healthcare plan must be practical and achievable, not a pipe dream used only to gain momentum on the campaign trail. His plan doesn't ram a national health insurance program down our throats, rather it merely guarantees access to health insurance for all Americans.

His common sense approach carries through to other issues as well: a sensible energy plan that helps reduce environmental impacts without shutting off everyone's electricity and a teacher pay program that rewards those who work hard to teach our children and doesn't reward those who don't.

Obama offers a new path, one filled with hope and change. We think it's a path worth traveling down.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

'You've Got the Power' (2007-12-30 14:36)

Check out this new YouTube video I made called "You've got the Power," meaning to bring about change by taking action.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Game Time (2007-12-31 08:14)

I've said all along that elections often come down to the last four days including election day.

We're at that point now. While there's still room to persuade undecided last-minute voters especially those for whom the Iraq War is the major issue, much of the effort now shifts to get out the vote, or rather get out the caucus. The Obama campaign has to concentrate on reminding and organizing those people who already support their candidate to arrive at their caucus locations on time at 6:30 pm, Thursday, Jan. 3. If they get there late, they will not be able to participate.

Obviously with a lot of young, first-timers supporting Obama this can be a challenge, but the big crowds showing up at Barack's events are a good sign. Indeed many Iowa veterans consider the size of crowds at stumping stops during this phase of the campaign more reliable than opinion polls.

Last night, about 1,000 people showed up at Obama's Stand for Change stop in Des Moines.

[EMBED]

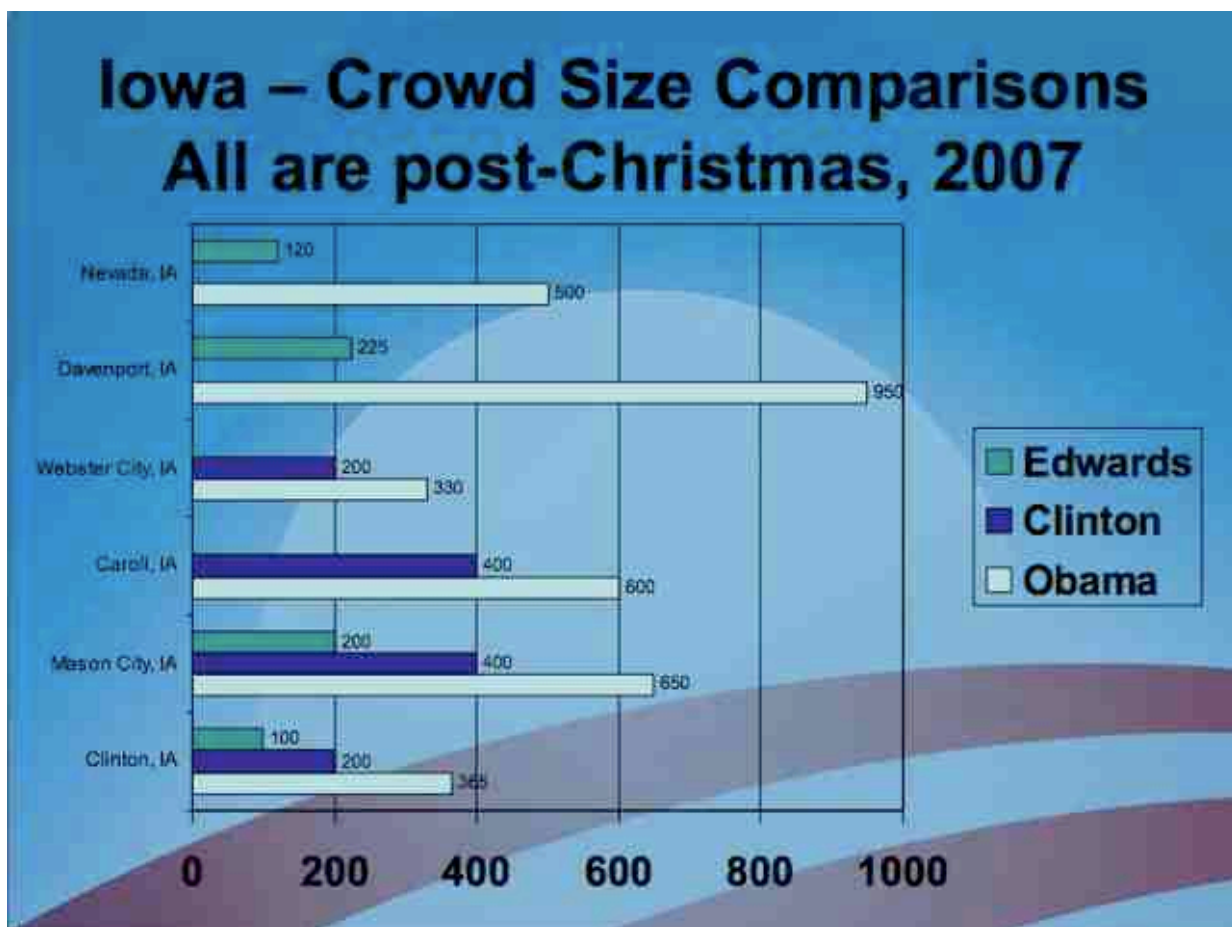

Early States Election Schedule Iowa Caucus – Jan. 3 New Hampshire Primary – Jan. 8 Nevada Caucus – Jan. 19 South Carolina Primary – Jan. 26 Super Tuesday – Feb. 5

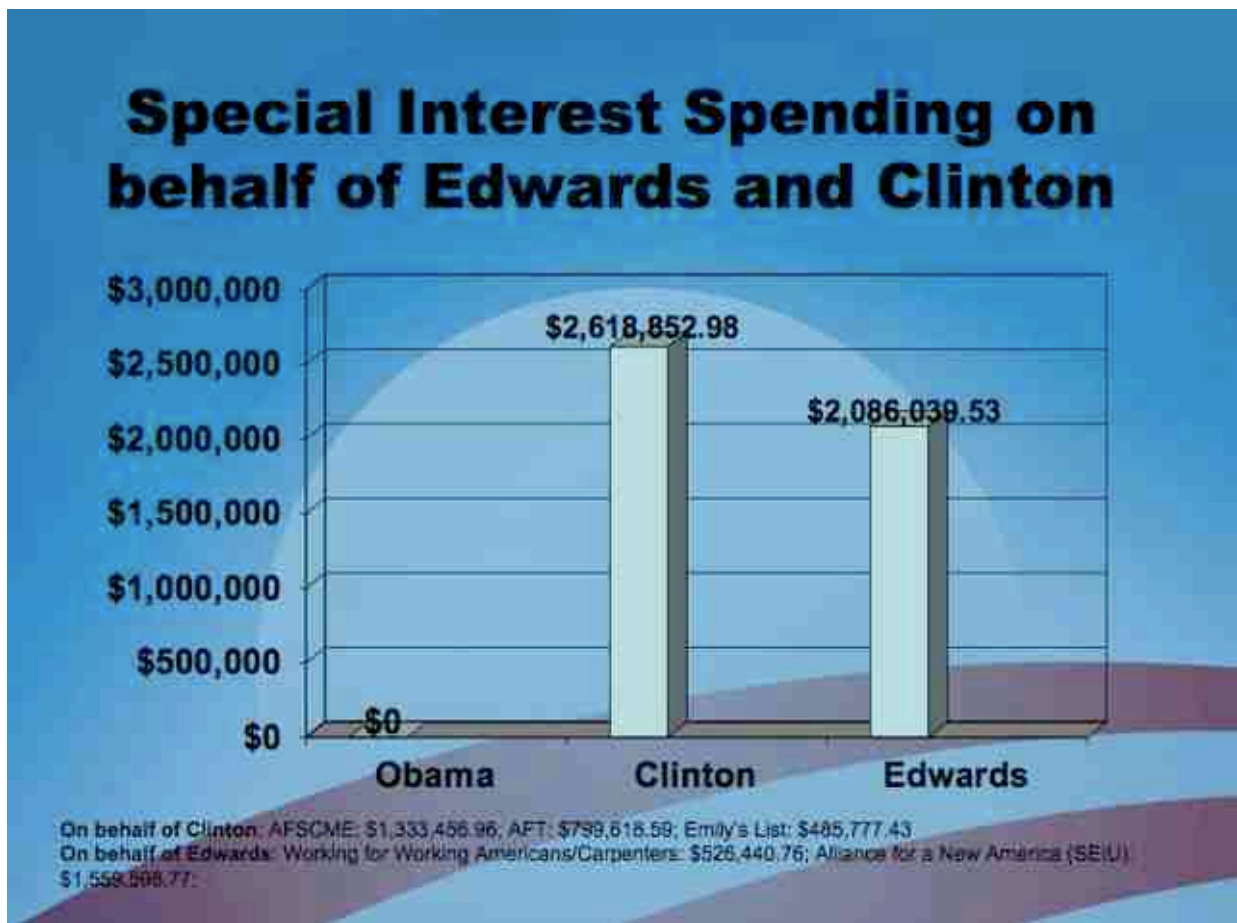

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Crowd size vs. Special Interest cash (2007-12-31 10:15)

Sam Graham-Felsen published some graphs produced by David Plouffe on barackobama.com showing that despite massive influx of outside money into Iowa for Hillary Clinton and John Edwards, the largest crowds still gather for Barack Obama. Check out all the special interest money coming in from outside to influence the Iowa caucuses.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack on Ending the War in Iraq (2007-12-31 11:25)

From barackobama.com:

Ending the War in Iraq

- Judgment You Can Trust: As a candidate for the United States Senate in 2002, Obama put his political career on the line to oppose going to war in Iraq, and warned of “an occupation of undetermined length, with undetermined costs, and undetermined consequences.” Obama has been a consistent, principled and vocal opponent of the war in Iraq:
 1. In 2003 and 2004, he spoke out against the war on the campaign trail;
 2. In 2005, he called for a phased withdrawal of our troops;
 3. In 2006, he called for a timetable to remove our troops, a political solution within Iraq, and aggressive diplomacy with all of Iraqi neighbors;
 4. In January 2007, he introduced legislation in the Senate to remove all of our combat troops from Iraq by March 2008.

5. In September 2007, he laid out a detailed plan for how he will end the war as president.

- Bring Our Troops Home: Obama will immediately begin to remove our troops from Iraq. He will remove one to two combat brigades each month, and have all of our combat brigades out of Iraq within 16 months. Obama will make it clear that we will not build any permanent bases in Iraq. He will keep some troops in Iraq to protect our embassy and diplomats; if al Qaeda attempts to build a base within Iraq, he will keep troops in Iraq or elsewhere in the region to carry out targeted strikes on al Qaeda.
- Press Iraqi leaders to reconcile: The best way to press Iraqi leaders to take responsibility for their future is to make it clear that we are leaving. As we remove our troops, Obama will engage representatives from all levels of Iraqi society – in and out of government – to seek a new accord on Iraqi Constitution and governance. The United Nations will play a central role in this convention, which should not adjourn until a new national accord is reached addressing tough questions like federalism and oil revenue-sharing.
- Regional Diplomacy: Obama will launch the most aggressive diplomatic effort in recent American history to reach a new compact on the stability of Iraq and the Middle East. This effort will include all of Iraqi neighbors – including Iran and Syria. This compact will aim to secure Iraqi borders; keep neighboring countries from meddling inside Iraq; isolate al Qaeda; support reconciliation among Iraqi sectarian groups; and provide financial support for Iraqi reconstruction.
- Humanitarian Initiative: Obama believes that America has a moral and security responsibility to confront Iraqi humanitarian crisis – two million Iraqis are refugees; two million more are displaced inside their own country. Obama will form an international working group to address this crisis. He will provide at least $2 billion to expand services to Iraqi refugees in neighboring countries, and ensure that Iraqis inside their own country can find a safe-haven.

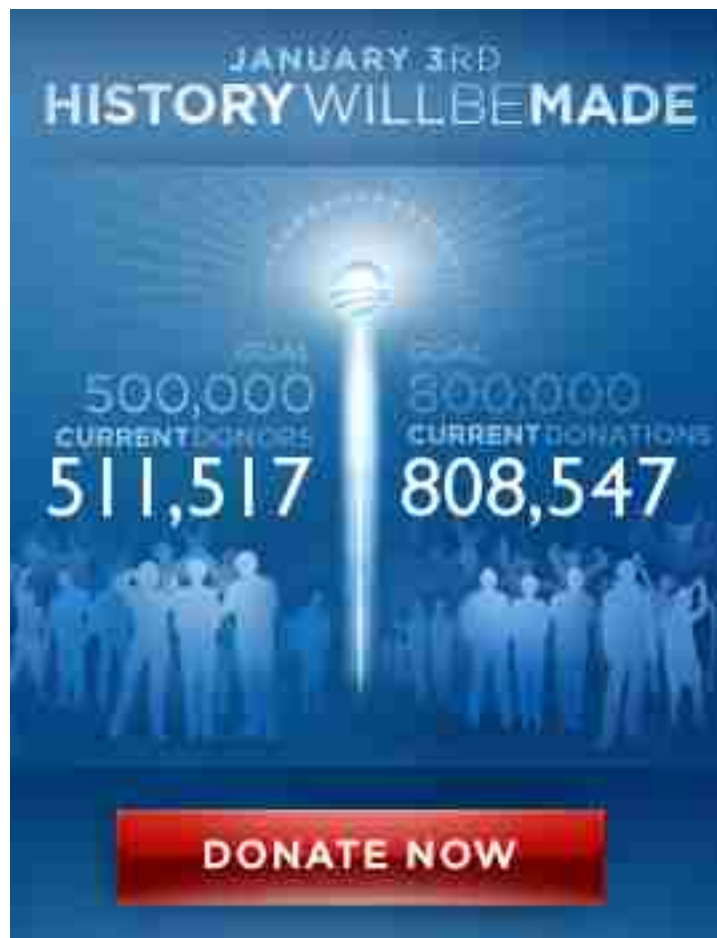

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Michelle Obama: 'Let's do this Right' (2007-12-31 16:32)

Michelle Obama sent out this email request today.

Paul –

I'm here on the ground in Iowa with Barack, our daughters, his sisters, and thousands of supporters and volunteers.

The energy is contagious, and we all have the sense that we're on the verge of something incredible.

We're seeing crowds two or three times the size our opponents are attracting. We're bringing new people into the process and bringing back some of those who are fed up with politics-as-usual.

And no matter where you are, you can make a dramatic statement that could shake this race up over the next few days before the caucuses on January 3rd.

At midnight tonight, the staff will shut the books on the 4th quarter and report just how much financial support we've received from people across the country.

The news will shape this race heading into the Iowa caucuses on Thursday.

Each one of these financial reporting periods has been an important moment for our movement – each report has shown in black and white that this is a different kind of campaign, funded by an unprecedented number of people.

Thank you for your support. We would not be in the position we are today if it were not for you. I know you have already done so much, but I need to ask you to do more.

If you make a donation today, it will be matched by a first-time donor. You'll double your impact by encouraging someone else to own a piece of this campaign. And that's what this is all about, bringing people together, recognizing that there's so much more that unites us than divides.

Make a matched donation of $25 and help a new supporter be a part of this historic moment:
<https://donate.barackobama.com/promise>

We started this campaign back in February, which seems like a lifetime ago.

But the Iowa caucuses this Thursday are just the beginning.

Unfortunately, our opponents are still playing the same old Washington games and benefiting from millions of dollars pouring into Iowa from outside groups. These "independent" organizations are running attack ads and sending mailings that distort Barack's record.

From the beginning, we have refused to play this game.

We're determined to win by doing this the right way.

Our campaign is built on the support of ordinary people giving only what they can afford. We've never taken money from Washington lobbyists or PACs. Instead, we've put our faith in you, and you've built a grassroots movement of nearly 500,000 individual donors.

That's the equivalent of 1 out of every 300 registered voters in the country giving $5 or more to our campaign.

You can be part of this historic effort and set the stage for Iowa by making a donation before midnight tonight. We need your help to create the momentum that will carry our movement through these crucial early contests and to the nomination.

Donate $25 today and it will be matched by another supporter: <https://donate.barackobama.com/promise>

When Iowans walk into their local precincts this Thursday, they'll be representing you and every other supporter across the country.

Let them know just how many of us are behind them – show them they are far from alone.

Thank you, and Happy New Year from our family to yours,

Michelle

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack tops last Des Moines Register poll (2007-12-31 20:09)

Barack Obama topped the Des Moines Register's last poll of the season considered one of the most accurate election surveys.

Barack was the choice of 32 percent of those surveyed compared to 25 percent for Hillary Clinton and 24 percent for John Edwards.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack tops last Des Moines Register poll (2007-12-31 20:09)

Barack Obama topped the Des Moines Register's last poll of the season considered one of the most accurate election surveys.

Barack was the choice of 32 percent of those surveyed compared to 25 percent for Hillary Clinton and

2. 2008

2.1 January

A New Year and a day closer (2008-01-01 09:34)

Supporters of Barack Obama have good reason to be happy this new year's day, two days before the Iowa caucus. Although it's not over till the butter cow lady sings, Obama drew a big crowd of 1,000 in Ames last night, and topped the important Des Moines Register poll. He is again the candidate with the all-important momentum. What's left now is execution, getting his young first-time supporters to the caucus on time.

Ames Rally attracts 1,000

[EMBED]

Early States Election Schedule Iowa Caucus – Jan. 3 New Hampshire Primary – Jan. 8 Nevada Caucus – Jan. 19 South Carolina Primary – Jan. 26 Super Tuesday – Feb. 5

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Dennis Kucinich: Pick Obama as second choice (2008-01-01 14:25)

Marc Ambinder from theatlantic.com reports that Dennis Kucinich asked his supporters last night to select Barack Obama as their second choice in the Iowa caucus.

Here is a copy of the Kucinich campaign press release:

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Tuesday, January 01, 2008

DES MOINES, IA – Democratic Presidential candidate and Ohio Congressman Dennis Kucinich opened the New Year by publicly asking his Iowa supporters to vote for him in the caucuses this Thursday, and suggesting that if he did not make the 15 % threshold, their second ballot should be for Senator Barack Obama. "This is obviously an 'Iowa-only' recommendation, as Sen. Obama and I are competing in the New Hampshire primary next Tuesday where I want to be the first choice of New Hampshire voters.

"I hope Iowans will caucus for me as their first choice this Thursday, because of my singular positions on the war, on health care, and trade. This is an opportunity for people to stand up for themselves. But in those caucus locations where my support doesn't reach the necessary threshold, I strongly encourage all of my supporters to make Barack Obama their second choice. Sen. Obama and I have one thing in common: Change."

Early States Election Schedule Iowa Caucus – Jan. 3 New Hampshire Primary – Jan. 8 Nevada Caucus – Jan. 19 South Carolina Primary – Jan. 26 Super Tuesday – Feb. 5

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Dennis Kucinich: Pick Obama as second choice (2008-01-01 14:25)

Marc Ambinder from atla

Two online polls (2008-01-01 20:48)

The Obama campaign is putting out a call for online supporters to vote in two polls, one at MySpace.com and the other at TechCrunch.com:

Vote Today in the MySpace New Year's Primary Poll at <http://impact.myspace.com> (Poll closes at 11:59pm January 2, 2008).

Vote for Barack in the MySpace Online Primary

OBAMA'08

Polls open at 3:01am EST
Tuesday, January 1
Polls close at 11:59 pm EST
Wednesday, January 2

Vote at MySpace Impact Channel
<http://impact.myspace.com>

You can also vote in TechCrunch's online Primary at Primaries.TechCrunch.com/democratic

Early States Election Schedule Iowa Caucus – Jan. 3 New Hampshire Primary – Jan. 8 Nevada Caucus – Jan. 19 South Carolina Primary – Jan. 26 Super Tuesday – Feb. 5

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack's email today (2008-01-02 09:53)

Barack Obama sent out an email today that highlights the campaign's infrastructure in the early states including the Super Tuesday states.

It's been an inspiring journey so far, but tomorrow night in Iowa the action really begins.

Our journey will continue through more than 20 other states in a little over a month.

But first, I wanted you to see this video showing where we've been:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/promise>

We're still just shy of our goal of 500,000 people owning a piece of this campaign. You've already given, but if you promise to match the donation of someone who hasn't given yet, you could bring in the person who puts us over the top.

Make a donation of $25 now and help us get there:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/promise>

The half a million people like you who've donated to this campaign have allowed us to build an unparalleled organization across the country.

Our campaign manager, David Plouffe, put together some numbers this week that show the strength of what this movement has created in the first four states and beyond:

- Iowa : January 3rd – We have more field offices (37), more field staffers (over 200), and more volunteers than any other campaign. According to the final Des Moines Register poll before the caucuses, the strength of our lead comes from "a dramatic influx of first-time caucusgoers, including a sizable bloc of political independents."
- New Hampshire : January 8th – The largest field operation in the state has made nearly 1.6 million phone calls and knocked on 330,000 doors. Our campaign has been endorsed by both Democratic US Representatives, Paul Hodes and Carol Shea-Porter , and the latest Boston Globe/University of New Hampshire poll puts us in the lead.
- Nevada : January 19th – We have the biggest organization with 11 field offices and more than 50 staff; we're gaining strength every day.
- South Carolina : January 26th – Former Democratic chairman Donald Fowler praised our 55 staff members in 11 offices for running "the most methodical voter-canvassing project I have ever seen in South Carolina ."

- 22 other states: February 5th – We have 32 offices open in 17 states, including states like Alaska , Utah , and Alabama where we're the only campaign up and running with a serious organization.

We're fired up here in Iowa , and nearly half a million people all across the country who own a piece of this campaign are ready to go.

Take a moment to watch this video about where we've been, and make a donation now to get us where we're going:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/promise>

Thank you,

Barack

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

"Major" South Carolina announcement expected soon (2008-01-02 10:18)

The Obama campaign is expected to make a 'major announcement' this afternoon at the University of South Carolina campus.

For days now, there have been rumors circulating that Obama had scored a major South Carolina endorsement. We should find out if that is indeed the announcement within a few hours.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Iowa Caucus Step by Step (2008-01-02 11:02)

BarackObama.com has an easy step-by-step guide for the caucus process in Iowa. Click "Next" on the graphic below to view the tutorial.

[EMBED]

You can also get more info in the Caucus Center webpage.

Early States Election Schedule Iowa Caucus – Jan. 3 New Hampshire Primary – Jan. 8 Nevada Caucus – Jan. 19 South Carolina Primary – Jan. 26 Super Tuesday – Feb. 5

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Obama wins Coffee Bean Caucus in Iowa City (2008-01-02 14:45)

Barack Obama won the Hamburg Inn's Coffee Bean Caucus in Iowa City.

The Coffee Bean Caucus was featured on TV's "The West Wing" in 2005. Results were announced this morning on a live CNN broadcast from the Hamburg Inn.

Obama had nearly a two to one lead over second place Democrat Hillary Clinton, who in turn held nearly a two to one lead over Edwards.

From the Iowa Independent:

John Deeth :: Obama, Paul win Coffee Bean Caucus

Democratic Republican

Barack Obama 1733 Ron Paul 132

Hillary Clinton 830 Mitt Romney 87

John Edwards 445 Rudy Guiliani 71

Dennis Kucinich 291 Mike Huckabee 70

Bill Richardson 276 John McCain 46

Joe Biden 176 Fred Thompson 46

Mike Gravel 0 Duncan Hunter 5

Green Party Cynthia McKinney 36 Undecided 215

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Final Iowa Ad: Leader (2008-01-02 17:18)

Check out Barack Obama's closing argument, "Leader," a television ad to air across Iowa tonight.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

The Time is Now (2008-01-03 09:13)

Our time is now. That's more than a slogan in Iowa today where caucuses begin at 6:30 pm this evening.

The Obama campaign has left no stone unturned. If they do not win, it will not be because they made the mistakes of Howard Dean. The campaign has 33 offices across the state and organized massive rallies, canvassing and phone-banking.

Obama's crowds have been bigger than those of his opponents. Last night, more than 2,000 people rallied with Barack in Des Moines.

[EMBED]

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=zbQNkWFUKfc>

Despite harsh weather big crowds have turned out since Christmas, and with the weather relatively mild today, there's no reason to think Obama supporters will not show up.

Of course, one can't count out the Illinois senator's seasoned opponents. The campaign still has to close the show with a final get out the vote effort.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Request from Michelle (2008-01-03 09:40)

Michelle Obama sent out an email appeal today with the campaign goal of 500,000 donors well with reach by caucus time tonight.

This morning in Iowa, your fellow supporters are calling their neighbors and asking them if they need someone to baby-sit while they caucus tonight.

They're asking if they need directions to their caucus locations, or even a ride.

This process has been a real human experience – there's a strong community and generosity of spirit that's emerged here among Barack's supporters. It's a feeling that's bigger than the excitement of a typical political campaign. It's the feeling of a movement.

And that movement isn't just here in Iowa. It's in the three other early-states, and in every state in the country, as shown by the record number of people getting involved.

We're just a few thousand donors shy of reaching 500,000 people owning a piece of this campaign. Make your first donation of $25 now and your gift will be matched by a previous donor. Be part of this historic moment:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/match>

That potential to revive that feeling of community and connection is why Barack and I decided to do this.

We knew there was an opportunity to change politics, to make it about hope and a shared passion for our common future. And we knew that other people who feel the same way would come back into the process or decide to participate for the first time.

We're closer to something historic than anyone ever imagined we could be.

It's the culmination of talking and listening and building the kind of organization that engages people. It's the product of a whole lot of hard work and consistent effort over the last year.

The Iowa caucuses begin at 6:30 tonight, and we only need a couple thousand more donors to reach our goal. Show your fellow supporters in Iowa just how many of us are with them tonight.

Make a $25 donation now:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/match>

Years ago, after we first met, Barack took me to an organizing meeting in a small church basement in Chicago.

I saw then that he had an extraordinary capacity to bring people together in pursuit of change – to make them believe against all odds in something bigger than themselves and inspire them to work to achieve it.

That's what's happening here in Iowa and all across the country.

I can't tell you how proud I am of him, and of you, for being a part of this.

Yours sincerely,

Michelle

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Documentary: Hope for Change (2008-01-03 10:46)

Curtis M. Faith and his independent film crew spent three months on the ground in New Hampshire, New York City, South Carolina and Iowa filming from August to October 2007 filming the Obama campaign.

They have produced a nine part, 68 minute documentary "Hope for Change." Check it out.

<http://thestatewerein.blip.tv/>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Richardson endorsing Obama? (2008-01-03 12:36)

Gov. Bill Richardson will instruct his followers to vote for Barack Obama as second choice according to Chase Martyn of the Iowa Independent.

Two sources familiar with the plan told Iowa Independent that the New Mexico Governor's organizers have been instructed to direct supporters to Obama in the places where they fail to reach the 15 % threshold for viability.

Richardson, whose poll numbers in Iowa have hovered near 10 % since June, may need a solid fourth-place finish in the caucuses to continue his campaign. And he is best served by directing support away from former Sen. John Edwards, who consistently polls between him and the two national front-runners, Obama and Sen. Hillary Clinton, in national and early state polls.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

It's about time... (2008-01-03 15:28)

For lowans to start mossaing down to their caucus locations to arrive before 6:30 pm.
I'll be at a caucus-watching party at the Obama headquarters in Sacramento, California.
Notice below that the campaign reached the 500,000 donation mark!

Early States Election Schedule Iowa Caucus – Jan. 3 New Hampshire Primary – Jan. 8 Nevada Caucus – Jan. 19 South Carolina Primary – Jan. 26 Super Tuesday – Feb. 5

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

The Impact of Iowa (2008-01-03 22:05)

If you haven't heard yet, Sen. Barack Obama scored a resounding victory in Iowa tonight. The win is like an endorsement from an entire state. Many undecided voters around the country may take a closer look at Obama now. Those who liked Obama but didn't think he could win, may now have their doubts dispelled. Things will start to fall in line for Obama because a lot of big players will want to be with whoever appears to be winning at the moment. With only five days until the New Hampshire primary, Obama's opponents will have to work hard to undercut the perception that Barack is the candidate to beat. For Obama supporters, it's time to relish a hard-won victory, but they don't have much time to relax. Barack and probably Michelle will be right back to stumping by tomorrow. Right now, the primary looks like a referendum on change with Barack as champion of the cause.

[EMBED]

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=dChb2t3zEGg>

[EMBED]

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=krN1thQlvJ4>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

chris wilcox (2008-01-03 22:41:00)

Woohoo! Great night in Iowa. Thanks for your help Obama Blog!

Anonymous (2008-01-04 12:07:00)

Obama city...

<http://sergica.miniville.fr/env/>

Barack Obama's Acceptance Speech (2008-01-04 01:02)

Check out Barack Obama's extraordinary acceptance speech.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

CresceNet (2008-01-04 05:08:00)

Gostei muito desse post e seu blog é muito interessante, vou passar por aqui sempre =) Depois dá uma passada lá no meu site, que é sobre o CresceNet, espero que goste. O endereço dele é <http://www.provedorcrescenet.com> . Um abraço.

Truth is my Country (2008-01-04 12:53:00)

Charisma is an important characteristic if someone is really going to bring about change in American politics; Obama is certainly a charismatic and persuasive speaker, the first politician I've seen in my lifetime who I feel could inspire a wide range of people to come together to solve the nation's problems.

Mayor and Former Gov. Wilder endorses Obama (2008-01-04 16:41)

Richmond Mayor and former Virginia Governor Doug Wilder endorsed Sen. Barack Obama today. Wilder said he would campaign for Obama in Nevada and South Carolina but will not make a trip to New Hampshire. He said he was contacting the campaign to arrange events in the early states.

Mayor Doug Wilder

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

dgeorge (2008-01-05 11:51:00)

Hey, just wanted to share a video I made in the wake of Obama's Iowa victory, take care,

Danny George

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=s2G2BzzBJXc>

Independence (2008-01-04 18:56)

The Obama campaign will begin airing a new television ad in New Hampshire called "Independence." It starts off with Obama's victory speech in Iowa and highlights his endorsements from New Hampshire newspapers.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Iowa Caucus Party @ Sacramento Obama Headquarters (2008-01-04 19:56)

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Major Wisconsin endorsement expected (2008-01-05 09:07)

According to Obama campaign manager David Plouffe there will be a major endorsement announced today in Wisconsin.

There is some speculation that it may be Gov. Jim Doyle, whose son Gus Doyle heads the UW-Madison chapter of Students for Barack Obama.

Early States Election Schedule

New Hampshire Primary – Jan. 8 Nevada Caucus – Jan. 19 South Carolina Primary – Jan. 26 Super Tuesday – Feb. 5

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

2,500 rally at Nashua, New Hampshire (2008-01-05 11:20)

A massive crowd estimated at between 2,500 and 3,000 people overflowed the Obama rally at the Nashua North High School today in New Hampshire. Check out the pictures.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama News on Sunday (2008-01-06 10:10)

Wisconsin Gov. Jim Doyle endorsed Sen. Barack Obama yesterday, and today, former senator Bill Bradley announced his support for Obama.

A group of nine prominent New Hampshire supporters of Joe Biden and Chris Dodd, who have withdrawn from the race, have also endorsed Obama. Here's the list of new endorsements:

Dan Calegari, Deerfield – Former NH Field Director for Gary Hart '84; Veteran of five NH Presidential Primaries; Small Business Owner; Member of Senator Dodd's Steering Committee

Pat Clark, Tilton – Democratic Activist

Jim Craig, Manchester – Former New Hampshire House Minority Leader

Representative Mike Farley, Manchester – Former John Kerry '04 NH Steering Committee Member, Secretary of Manchester City Democratic Party, Democratic Activist, Member of Dodd's Steering Committee

Joe Keefe, Manchester – NH Democratic Party Chairman and former Chairman of Senator Dodd's State Steering Committee

Quentin Keefe, Manchester – Owner of Commercial Street Fishery; President, Regency Mortgage Company

Chris Kennedy, Manchester – NH State Senate Legislative Aide, veteran of the 2006 NH Senate Democratic Caucus Field Operation for the Lakes Region

Joe Sullivan, Manchester – Manchester Ward 12 Democratic Committee, Retired Teacher

Anna Tilton, Marlborough – Co-Chair of Cheshire County for Dodd; Cheshire County Register of Probate; 2nd Vice Chair (and former Chair) of Cheshire County Democrats

An Associated Press article examines how the Obama campaign got the youth to vote in Iowa, a challenge they face again in New Hampshire.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Big crowd again in Manchester (2008-01-06 10:34)

Another big crowd gathered today for Barack Obama's rally in Manchester, New Hampshire. Watch this video showing the line outside the event.

[EMBED]

Here's the calendar of campaign events until primary day on Jan. 8.

EXETER MEET THE CANDIDATE WITH BARACK OBAMA (Official Event)

Sunday, January 6 at 11:15 AM

Exeter High School, Cafeteria (Exeter, NH)

If you are a member of the press, please click here. Barack Obama's experience is rooted in the lives of the men and women on the...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

DERRY RALLY WITH BARACK OBAMA (Official Event)

Sunday, January 6 at 2:15 PM

Pinkerton Academy (Derry, NH)

If you are a member of the press, please click here. Barack Obama's experience is rooted in the lives of the men and women on the...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

House Party with Governor Deval Patrick (Meeting)

Sunday, January 6 at 3:00 PM

Home of Laura and James Trowbridge (Peterborough, NH)

Please join Governor Deval Patrick (MA) as he talks with Granite Staters about Barack's campaign for change. Governor Patrick will be in Peterborough on Sunday,...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

SALEM MEET THE CANDIDATE WITH BARACK OBAMA (Official Event)

Sunday, January 6 at 3:45 PM

Salem High School, Auditorium (Salem, NH)

If you are a member of the press, please click here. Barack Obama's experience is rooted in the lives of the men and women on the...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Politics and the Arts (Meeting)

Sunday, January 6 at 5:00 PM

NH Theatre Project - West End Studio Theatre (Portsmouth, NH)

As we get closer to picking the next president of the United States join us for a conversation with Broadway Producer of "Hairspray", Margo Lion,...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Women for Obama House Party (Women for Obama House Party)

Sunday, January 6 at 6:00 PM

home (New Boston, NH)

dress formally

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

KEENE RALLY WITH BARACK OBAMA (Official Event)

Sunday, January 6 at 6:45 PM

Keene High School, Cafeteria (Keene, NH)

If you are a member of the press, please click here. Barack Obama's experience is rooted in the lives of the men and women on the...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

CLAREMONT RALLY WITH BARACK OBAMA (Official Event)

Monday, January 7 at 7:30 AM

Stevens High School, Gym (Claremont, NH)

If you are a member of the press, please click here. Barack Obama's experience is rooted in the lives of the men and women on the...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Vets Listening Roundtables (Meeting)

Monday, January 7 at 10:00 AM

Remember When (Rochester, NH)

Special Guest: Dick Klass, Colonel, USAF (retired) Veteran's Advisory Board, Obama for America 2008 220 combat missions in Viet Nam Recipient: Silver Star, Distinguished Flying Cross, Purple Heart White...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

LEBANON MEET THE CANDIDATE WITH BARACK OBAMA (Official Event)

Monday, January 7 at 10:30 AM

Lebanon Opera House (Lebanon, NH)

If you are a member of the press, please click here. Barack Obama's experience is rooted in the lives of the men and women on the...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Politics and the Arts (Meeting)

Monday, January 7 at 12:00 PM

NH Institute of Art (Manchester, NH)

As we get closer to picking the next president of the United States join us for a conversation with Broadway Producer of "Hairspray", Margo Lion,...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Vets Listening Roundtables (Meeting)

Monday, January 7 at 1:00 PM

Cafe on the Corner (Dover, NH)

Special Guest: Dick Klass, Colonel, USAF (retired) Veteran's Advisory Board, Obama for America 2008 220 combat missions in Viet Nam Recipient: Silver Star, Distinguished Flying Cross, Purple Heart White...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Vets Listening Roundtables (Meeting)

Monday, January 7 at 4:00 PM

The Loaf and Ladle (Exeter, NH)

Special Guest: Dick Klass, Colonel, USAF (retired) Veteran's Advisory Board, Obama for America 2008 220 combat missions in Viet Nam Recipient: Silver Star, Distinguished Flying Cross, Purple Heart White...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

ROCHESTER RALLY WITH BARACK OBAMA (Official Event)

Monday, January 7 at 5:30 PM

Rochester Opera House (Rochester, NH)

If you are a member of the press, please click here. Barack Obama's experience is rooted in the lives of the men and women on the...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Vets Listening Roundtables (Meeting)

Monday, January 7 at 7:00 PM

Breaking New Grounds (Portsmouth, NH)

Special Guest: Dick Klass, Colonel, USAF (retired) Veteran's Advisory Board, Obama for America 2008 220 combat missions in Viet Nam Recipient: Silver Star, Distinguished Flying Cross, Purple Heart White...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Be Counted Canvass (Community Service)

Tuesday, January 8 at 3:00 PM

Obama Portsmouth Office (Portsmouth, NH)

This shift is the most important canvass shift of the entire campaign. This is the final push on election day afternoon to get people to...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Be Counted Canvass (Organizing)

Tuesday, January 8 at 3:00 PM

Exeter for Obama Staging Location (Exeter, NH)

This shift is the most important canvass shift of the entire campaign. This is the final push on election day afternoon to get people to...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Be Counted Canvass (Organizing)

Tuesday, January 8 at 3:00 PM

Newmarket for Obama Staging Location (Newmarket, NH)

This shift is the most important canvass shift of the entire campaign. This is the final push on election day afternoon to get people to...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Primary After Party (Meeting)

Tuesday, January 8 at 7:00 PM

EBAs Restaurant (Everything But Anchovies) (Hanover, NH)

After you are done with your volunteer activities, meet up with other supporters at Everything But Anchovies (EBAs) in Hanover to watch the NH primary results...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

PRIMARY NIGHT RALLY WITH BARACK OBAMA (Official Event)

Tuesday, January 8 at 7:30 PM

Nashua South High School (Nashua, NH)

If you are a member of the media, please go here. PRIMARY NIGHT RALLY Nashua South High School 36 Riverside St. Nashua, NH Doors Open: 7:30 PM An RSVP is strongly...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event
- Report Objectionable Content

Early States Election Schedule

New Hampshire Primary – Jan. 8 Nevada Caucus – Jan. 19 South Carolina Primary – Jan. 26 Super Tuesday – Feb. 5

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

ihavewrites (2008-01-06 10:55:00)

I am very pleased to have found this blog. I live and work in the Republic of Trinidad & Tobago and keep a very keen eye on world events.

Barack Obama has had my attention for a while now. I did use my blog of January 4, 2008 to honour The Audacity of Hope.

Lines, rallies, 100 Club Speech, Hawaiian music (2008-01-06 22:52)

The storm that plowed through here (Sacramento) and the pictures of people lined up in the snow in New Hampshire got me thinking of Barack's Hawaiian upbringing and the warm weather there!

Check out this YouTube video of clips of events from New Hampshire and the 100 Club speech from barackobama.com video with Hawaiian music in the background. Also included the cool animation from barackobama.com at the end.

Music:

Aloha Oe by Amy Hanaiali'i

Kawaipunahele by Keali'i Reichel

Wahine Ilikea by Makena

I'll Remember You by Kui Lee

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama gets more endorsements (2008-01-07 07:48)

The Gloucester Daily News, which publishes nine newspapers in Massachusetts, endorsed Barack Obama today.

Those who seek change in this presidential election will find it in Obama. He would lead the nation in a sharply different direction in foreign policy and on domestic matters.

Obama may be untested but he offers a huge upside potential. We encourage New Hampshire Democrats and like-minded independents to cast their votes for Barack Obama.

In Portland, Maine, the Sunday Telegram said "the possibilities of an Obama presidency, not the list of his accomplishments, is what makes him the most exciting figure on the Democratic scene."

"His abilities to compromise, inspire and speak to a broad spectrum of the electorate earns him our endorsement for the Democratic nomination in 2008."

The Air Travelers Association, a group that "advocates for airline passengers on airline safety, security, savings, and service" also endorsed Obama today. In a press release, the group's president David Stempler wrote:

We believe that Barack Obama is the best candidate for President, and as a forward-thinking President, will get NextGen passed in Congress, and then quickly implemented and deployed throughout the United States. We give our complete trust and support to Senator Barack Obama who can use his charisma, inspiration, and can-do attitude to solve many of the problems facing this country, including those involving our aviation system.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

kitty (2008-01-07 15:34:00)

I am very impressed with what I have learned about Obama. I hope he does well in New Hampshire. Good luck!

MSNBC's Brian Williams interviews Barack Obama (2008-01-07 18:26)

Check out the first part of Brian Williams' interview with Barack Obama on the NBC Nightly News.

IFRAME: <http://www.msnbc.msn.com/id/22425001/vp/22544361#22544361>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-01-07 22:00:00)

I don't know how to get a message to Obama but here goes. This war has been awful for the men and women who have died in the war. What better was to say we care than this government pay for the college education of the children of our lost soldiers grades permitting. What a way to give back to these families. And what a great campaign point.

Culinary Workers Union to endorse Obama? (2008-01-08 08:14)

Various sources including NBC's Tim Russert are reporting that Culinary Workers Union 226 in Nevada will endorse Barack Obama today as New Hampshire holds the nation's first primary.

The union's endorsement is seen by many as a ticket to victory in Nevada where culinary workers in casinos outnumber members of any other union and have traditionally delivered a bloc vote.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama vote (2008-01-08 12:41:00)

It's good to see Obama getting more endorsements; the more support the better! We should all continue to show our support online too. One way to do this is to give him good ratings on www.fittobepres.com. He is already in the lead with the most support out of the Democrats AND Republicans, but like I said before, the more support the better!

Obama Update (2008-01-08 14:36)

Reports of high turnout in the New Hampshire primary today should be good news for Sen. Barack Obama whose base consists of many young, first-time voters.

In addition to the possible Culinary Workers Union endorsement, the word is out that Unite Here, a broader labor coalition that includes Nevada's culinary workers may give Obama his first national union support.

In South Carolina, former Lt. Governor and State Rep. Robert Barber announced his endorsement of the Illinois senator today.

Hillary making Super Tuesday last stand?

According to some reports, if Hillary Clinton loses tonight she may for all practical purposes pull out of Nevada and South Carolina for a last stand in the two dozen Feb. 5 states.

Reportedly she's running out of money and doesn't want to waste resources on small states like Nevada and South Carolina where momentum is building for Obama.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama finishes strong second in New Hampshire (2008-01-08 21:18)

Sen. Barack Obama came in second tonight but not far behind Hillary Clinton.

The primary illustrates how wrong polls, even late ones can be. Barack had double digit leads in a number of polls and was way ahead in the Reuters-Zogby poll on election day, but came up short.

It may not have made any difference as there was only five days of campaigning between Iowa and New Hampshire.

The focus now turns to Nevada where caucuses will be held on Jan. 19 giving the candidates 11 days to campaign including election day get out the vote.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

HectorB (2008-01-09 06:48:00)

It is VERY common knowledge that it is easy to ILLEGALLY vote in New Hampshire. Hillary has been flooding the state with bussed in help.Google, Russett Massachusetts license plates, if you don't believe me.

http://www.newsmax.com/insidecover/hillary_busing/2008/01/07/62291.html

What may have happened in New Hampshire (2008-01-08 21:43)

While I'm still watching the election stats as they are analyzed on television coverage, I get the feeling that independents may have opted more for the Republican primary costing Barack the vote.

Watching the pre-election polls, some people may have thought Barack had it wrapped up and decided that they would be better off influencing the Republican results.

The Obama campaign was hoping that independents would make up more than 60 percent of the Democratic vote but they only pulled above 50 percent.

Despite setback, many endorsements expected today (2008-01-09 08:01)

While some of the expected endorsements may back out at the last second, Sen. Barack Obama likely will receive many important endorsements today.

The Nevada chapter of the Service Employees International Union (SEIU) has already announced their support for Obama today.

Many endorsements expected today for Obama (2008-01-09 08:07)

Although some potential supporters may back out at the last second, Sen. Barack Obama should get many key endorsements today.

The Service Employees International Union (SEIU) already announced their support for Obama this morning.

According to the New York Times, both Nevada's Culinary Workers Union and the national labor coalition to which the latter belongs, known as Unite Here, will endorse the Illinois senator simultaneously at 11 am EST.

Here in California, state senators Alan Lowenthal of Los Angeles and Dean Florez of the Central Valley endorsed Obama yesterday. Today it is expected that among others, Ted Lieu and Nicole Parra from the state assembly and State Sen. Elaine Alquist will announce their support.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama camp to regroup (2008-01-09 08:23)

Almost certainly Barack Obama and his handlers and regrouping and reconsidering their options after the setback yesterday.

If I were an adviser, the strategy would be to treat Nevada and South Carolina as if they happened on the same day, just as you would for the Feb. 5 states.

There just isn't enough time to focus on Nevada and then shift gears in a week to South Carolina.

They will need to use many of the same campaign strategy and techniques that were applied in Iowa. If possible, Michelle Obama needs to get back on the stump.

It's difficult for Barack alone to handle both Bill and Hillary. I realize here it's much easier for the Clintons who do not have small children. Maybe a reasonable schedule could be worked out.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More endorsement news (2008-01-09 09:37)

I learned yesterday that there is a lot of very important support waiting in the wings for Barack Obama if one of the present candidates drops out. There are a lot these supporters for this candidate already working behind the scenes to support the Illinois senator. Unfortunately there is no reason yet to think this candidate will drop out before

Nevada.

In the meantime, the United Association, an international labor union, just endorsed Obama. Here is there press release:

United Association (UA) Becomes First International Union to Endorse Barack Obama for President

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9 /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ – The United Association (UA) of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipe Fitting Industry of the United States and Canada today became the first International Union to announce its endorsement of U.S. Senator Barack Obama for President of the United States.

"Barack Obama is the UA's choice because he has always fought for working people throughout his career and will do the best job of bringing badly-needed change to Washington," said UA International President William P. Hite.

"Senator Obama will help us keep existing jobs and work to develop new higher-paying jobs here in America, reform our health care system, fix our ailing schools and make sure that the pensions of our retirees are safe."

"Throughout my career as a community organizer, Illinois State Senator and U.S. Senator, I've fought to help working Americans get better health care, higher wages and a more secure retirement," Obama said. "I'm honored to receive the endorsement of the United Association, and look forward to working with them to bring big changes to Washington that will help working people meet the challenges we face in this changing economy."

The UA is a multi-craft union whose members are engaged in the fabrication, installation and servicing of piping systems. There are approximately 340,000 highly-skilled United Association members who belong to over 300 individual local unions across North America.

Founded in 1889, the United Association is one of the most respected and influential building trades unions in the U.S. and Canada today. It serves as a collective voice for workers through negotiation and collective bargaining with employing contractor groups, such as the Mechanical Contractors Association of America and the National Association of Plumbing-Heating-Cooling Contractors. The UA is also a key member of the Building and Construction Trades Department, the AFL-CIO, and the Canadian Federation of Labour.

SOURCE United Association

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Culinary Workers Union endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-09 09:46)

ABC News reported that Culinary Workers Union 226 has officially endorsed Sen. Barack Obama .

The 60,000 member union, the largest in Nevada, has traditionally been a potent force in the state with a well-oiled and energetic political organization.

Across the nation in Georgia, Atlanta Mayor Shirley Franklin also announced her support for the Illinois senator.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More on Culinary Workers endorsement (2008-01-09 10:14)

Here's the ABC News article:

Obama Endorsed by Culinary Workers Union

Email

Share

January 09, 2008 9:11 AM

ABC News' Teddy Davis and Sunlen Miller Report: Despite losing Tuesday's New Hampshire primary, Sen. Barack Obama secured the endorsement of the Culinary Workers union.

The endorsement of the 60,000-member Culinary Workers union is seen as the biggest get in Nevada, a state which votes Jan. 19.

At 11 p.m. E.T. on Tuesday, a 12-member panel which controls the 60,000-member Culinary Workers union held a conference call to decide which '08 candidate to endorse.

The panel making the decision is the executive committee of UNITE-HERE, Culinary's parent union.

"We believe that Obama is the candidate who can bring the country together and we are proud to support his candidacy," Shauna Hamel, Executive Vice President of the union says.

The backing of the 60,000-member union is seen as important because the state's Democratic Party is only expecting 40,000 Democrats to participate in the caucuses.

Culinary's members work in casinos up and down the Las Vegas Strip.

Obama will travel to Las Vegas on Friday to formally accept the endorsement.

<http://blogs.abcnews.com/politicalradar/2008/01/obama-endorsed.html>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Events in Nevada and South Carolina (2008-01-09 13:37)

Barack Obama will visit Charleston, South Carolina on Thursday, and his campaign will hold a forum to discuss foreign policy issues in Reno, Nevada.

The Obama campaign will be holding a Foreign Policy Summit with top advisors General Tony McPeak and Samantha Power in Reno on Friday, January 11.

General McPeak, a retired four-star general and former member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Samantha Power, the Pulitzer Prize-winning author of "A Problem from Hell: America and the Age of Genocide" and a professor of Global Leadership and Public Policy at Harvard, will discuss Barack Obama's judgment to lead and his vision for a strong and principled new direction for American foreign policy.

WHO: Obama's Top Foreign Policy Advisors General Tony McPeak and Samantha Power

WHAT: Foreign Policy Summit

WHERE: University of Nevada, Reno

Joe Crowley Student Union Theater

1664 North Virginia Street

Reno, NV 89557

WHEN: Friday, January 11th

10:00 AM – 12:00 PM

<http://my.barackobama.com/page/event/detail/officialevent/4vdwv>

Rally with Barack Obama in Charleston (Official Event)

Thursday, January 10 at 11:00 AM

The Cistern, College of Charleston (Charleston, SC)

Rally for Change with Barack Obama at the College of Charleston Cistern

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama News on Wednesday (2008-01-09 14:51)

Here in California, we have just started receiving election materials including our sample ballots.

Many people here are just starting to study the candidates and that would also be the case in other Super Tuesday states along with South Carolina and even Nevada.

Right after Nevada, South Carolina and the Feb. 5 states probably should be treated as one big election.

Some more important Obama endorsements have come in today. South Dakota Senator Tim Johnson endorsed his colleague today.

Northern California House Rep. George Miller also threw his support to the Illinois senator. Contra Costa Supervisor

Susan Bonilla and San Francisco Supervisor Bevan Dufty also endorsed Obama; CSF supervisor Chris Daly announced his endorsement yesterday.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Gov. Bill Richardson pulls out, impact on Obama campaign (2008-01-09 19:19)

Several sources have confirmed that Gov. Bill Richardson has withdrawn from the presidential primary. Now, I can't say what the governor will do, after all he was a Clinton appointee, but I do know that there are many of his supporters who are ready to shift over to Barack Obama .

These include Latinos with considerable pull in California and beyond, and other prominent non-Latino Californians. Quite a lot of Richardson's support outside of New Mexico is found in Southern California and Nevada.

My information comes from some very senior elected officials in the state senate here in Sacramento. However, since I do not know when or even if they will make the final decision now to shift to Barack, they can make their own announcements.

Six Los Angeles political leaders threw their support to Obama today even before the Richardson announcement.

They are: Rep. Adam Schiff, D-Pasadena; former Rep. Mel Levine; Assemblyman Ted Lieu, D-El Segundo; Los Angeles City Councilman Bernard Parks; West Hollywood Mayor John Duran and Los Angeles County Supervisor Yvonne B. Burke.

One of the reasons Latinos like Obama is that he was the only front-runner to openly state when a high pressure questions was posed during a debate that he supports driver's licenses for undocumented immigrants.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Town Hall Meeting with Barack Obama in Las Vegas (2008-01-09 20:17)

From nevada.barackobama.com:

Stand for Change Town Hall Meeting with Barack in Las Vegas

by Michael Pipe

Wednesday, January 09, 2008 at 05:45 PM

Senator Barack Obama will attend a rally with members of Culinary Workers Union before hosting a Stand for Change town hall meeting at Del Sol High School in Las Vegas this Friday, January 11th. He will be meeting with Nevadans from across Las Vegas to fire up supporters and undecided caucus-goers ahead of the January 19th caucuses. This will be Barack Obama's 11th visit to Nevada since announcing his plans to run for president.

Town Hall Meeting with Barack Obama in Las Vegas

Del Sol High School Gymnasium

3100 East Patrick Lane

Las Vegas, NV 89120

Friday, January 11, 2008

Doors Open: 5:00 pm

Click the link below for more info or to print out your free tickets:

<http://nevada.barackobama.com/LasVegasTH>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

John Kerry to endorse Barack Obama in South Carolina (2008-01-10 08:27)

The Politico reports that Massachusetts Sen. John Kerry, the 2004 presidential nominee, will endorse Sen. Barack Obama today.

According to CNN, Kerry will announce his support at a rally today in South Carolina.

Kerry's endorsement could help Obama pick up more superdelegate support who hold votes at the Democratic Convention were the nominee is chosen. These superdelegates are not bound by the voting during the primary election. Kerry's endorsement could also help significantly in the state of Massachusetts where Gov. Deval Patrick is also supporting Obama.

Campaign manager David Plouffe said yesterday that a number of superdelegates are expected to announce their support for Obama in the coming days.

Plouffe also mentioned that in the eight days since the start of the new year, the Obama campaign has raised $8 million, or an average of $1 million a day. And money has been flooding in, much of it from online grassroots supporters, since the New Hampshire primary.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

New Nevada TV ad (2008-01-10 13:31)

Check out the new television ad to air in Nevada:
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: John Kerry Endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-10 13:40)

Check out the YouTube video of Sen. John Kerry endorsing Sen. Barack Obama in South Carolina.
[EMBED]
<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=BlcmrTzoPXc>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: John Kerry Endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-10 13:40)

Check out the YouTube video of Sen. John Kerry endorsing Sen. Barack Obama in South Carolina.
[EMBED]

Ned Lamont supports Barack Obama (2008-01-10 18:34)

Ned Lamont, who made headlines when he beat Job Lieberman for the latter's senate seat during the primary only to lose when Lieberman ran as an independent, has endorsed Barack Obama today.

Lamont's endorsement is about as close to a Howard Dean nod as we'll get for the primary since Dean as DNC chief is not supposed to take sides.

As an aside, Lieberman has crossed over to the other side and endorsed John McCain as president.

Here is the text of Lamont's endorsement:

When I decided to run for Senate, I did so because I deeply believed that the citizens of Connecticut were yearning to see fundamental changes in our politics - changes that would make government work for them again.

Today, with our Presidential primary in Connecticut less than a month away, I am announcing my support of Barack Obama for President because I am convinced that his forward-looking, progressive vision provides the best chance to enact meaningful reforms in the way Washington works.

Sen. Obama has the tone and temperament to bring out the best in our people and our nation, and to bring new coalitions together in support of the progressive policies we all want to see enacted. His campaign has already reflected this, not only by bringing hundreds of thousands of new voters of all ages to the polls, but by inspiring so many who are new to politics to become activists as well.

Ned Lamont's diary

Making healthcare affordable for all Americans, rebuilding our aging infrastructure, and ending our dependence on foreign oil are all problems that require more than a tax credit here or an earmark there. Barack is the candidate best able to enact these big changes necessary to getting our country moving again.

We have seen that Sen. Obama has the wisdom and judgment to get the big decisions right - as he did on Iraq more than five years ago. And when President Obama steps out of Air Force One in countries around the world, he will represent a fresh start with friends and allies. He will end the war in Iraq, work for a comprehensive peace in the Middle East, and start investing in America again - and we will be safer and stronger for it.

We Democrats are fortunate to have had many strong candidates running for President. As you may know, I was proud to work hard for Chris Dodd during his campaign. I have the deepest respect and admiration for Sen. Dodd - especially for his powerful calls to defend our constitutional freedoms by restoring habeas corpus, closing Guantanamo, and living up to the spirit of the Geneva Conventions. I know that Sen. Obama, a former professor of Constitutional Law, has been and will continue to be Chris' ally in fighting to protect our Constitution.

As Barack often says on the campaign trail these days, "with the challenges we face at this moment, the real gamble in this election is playing the same Washington game with the same Washington players and expecting a different result."

It's time to change the game.

(Cross-posted at NedLamont.com.)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Buzz: Arizona Gov. Janet Napolitano to endorse Obama? (2008-01-10 23:57)

Some sources are reporting that Arizona Gov. Janet Napolitano may announce her endorsement as early as tomorrow and that it looks more likely she will endorse Sen. Barack Obama according to the political blogs. That would be yet another superdelegate for the Illinois senator.

"And right now that buzz, from Tucson to Phoenix, is pointing heavily toward Obama rather than his archrival Hillary Clinton."

StarNet Politics Blog (Arizona Daily Star)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Gov. Napolitano to endorse Obama in Las Vegas (2008-01-11 09:08)

Many sources are now confirming that Arizona Gov. Janet Napolitano will travel to Las Vegas today to announce her support of Sen. Barack Obama together with the candidate.

For those who wonder about the importance of endorsements, they can sometimes act as one of many factors in voter's decisions to support a candidate.

Maybe just as important, endorsements can help with fundraising, getting new volunteers and additional endorsements and in boosting the morale of a candidate's troops. They help create the appearance and/or reality of momentum at least for a brief period of time.

An endorsement from a governor is generally a good thing as it acts as a vote of confidence in one's leadership ability from the chief executive of a state.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama on Immigration (2008-01-11 10:29)

Obama on Immigration Issues

- Wants better patrolling of borders
- Supports welfare and Medicaid for immigrants.
- Wants undocumented immigrants to have opportunity to earn citizenship.
- Supports a guest worker program.
- Supports drivers licenses for undocumented immigrants.

Floor Statement of Senator Barack Obama on Immigration Reform

Monday, April 3, 2006

 Printable Format

Mr. President, I come to the floor today to enter the debate on comprehensive immigration reform. It is a debate that will touch on the basic questions of morality, the law, and what it means to be an American.

I know that this debate evokes strong passions on all sides. The recent peaceful but passionate protests that we saw all across the country—500,000 in Los Angeles and 100,000 in my hometown of Chicago—are a testament to this fact, as are the concerns of millions of Americans about the security of our borders.

But I believe we can work together to pass immigration reform in a way that unites the people in this country, not in a way that divides us by playing on our worst instincts and fears.

Like millions of Americans, the immigrant story is also my story. My father came here from Kenya, and I represent a State where vibrant immigrant communities ranging from Mexican to Polish to Irish enrich our cities and neighborhoods. So I understand the allure of freedom and opportunity that fuels the dream of a life in the United States. But I also understand the need to fix a broken system.

When Congress last addressed this issue comprehensively in 1986, there were approximately 4 million illegal immigrants living in the United States. That number had grown substantially when Congress again addressed the issue in 1996. Today, it is estimated that there are more than 11 million undocumented aliens living in our country.

The American people are a welcoming and generous people. But those who enter our country illegally, and those who employ them, disrespect the rule of law. And because we live in an age where terrorists are challenging our borders, we simply cannot allow people to pour into the United States undetected, undocumented, and unchecked. Americans are right to demand better border security and better enforcement of the immigration laws.

The bill the Judiciary Committee has passed would clearly strengthen enforcement. I will repeat that, because those arguing against the Judiciary Committee bill contrast that bill with a strong enforcement bill. The bill the Judiciary Committee passed clearly strengthens enforcement.

To begin with, the agencies charged with border security would receive new technology, new facilities, and more people to stop, process, and deport illegal immigrants.

But while security might start at our borders, it doesn't end there. Millions of undocumented immigrants live and work here without our knowing their identity or their background. We need to strike a workable bargain with them. They have to acknowledge that breaking our immigration laws was wrong. They must pay a penalty, and abide by all of our laws going forward. They must earn the right to stay over a 6-year period, and then they must wait another 5 years as legal permanent residents before they become citizens.

But in exchange for accepting those penalties, we must allow undocumented immigrants to come out of the shadows and step on a path toward full participation in our society. In fact, I will not support any bill that does not provide this earned path to citizenship for the undocumented population—not just for humanitarian reasons; not just because these people, having broken the law, did so for the best of motives, to try and provide a better life for their children and their grandchildren; but also because this is the only practical way we can get a handle on the population that is within our borders right now.

To keep from having to go through this difficult process again in the future, we must also replace the flow of undocumented immigrants coming to work here with a new flow of guestworkers. Illegal immigration is bad for illegal immigrants and bad for the workers against whom they compete.

Replacing the flood of illegals with a regulated stream of legal immigrants who enter the United States after background checks and who are provided labor rights would enhance our security, raise wages, and improve working conditions for all Americans.

But I fully appreciate that we cannot create a new guestworker program without making it as close to impossible as we can for illegal workers to find employment. We do not need new guestworkers plus future undocumented immigrants. We need guestworkers instead of undocumented immigrants.

Toward that end, American employers need to take responsibility. Too often illegal immigrants are lured here with a promise of a job, only to receive unconscionably low wages. In the interest of cheap labor, unscrupulous employers look the other way when employees provide fraudulent U.S. citizenship documents. Some actually call and place orders for undocumented workers because they don't want to pay minimum wages to American workers in surrounding communities. These acts hurt both American workers and immigrants whose sole aim is to work hard and get ahead. That is why we need a simple, foolproof, and mandatory mechanism for all employers to check the legal status of new hires. Such a mechanism is in the Judiciary Committee bill.

And before any guestworker is hired, the job must be made available to Americans at a decent wage with benefits. Employers then need to show that there are no Americans to take these jobs. I am not willing to take it on faith that there are jobs that Americans will not take. There has to be a showing. If this guestworker program is to succeed, it must be properly calibrated to make certain that these are jobs that cannot be filled by Americans, or that the guestworkers provide particular skills we can't find in this country.

I know that dealing with the undocumented population is difficult, for practical and political reasons. But we simply cannot claim to have dealt with the problems of illegal immigration if we ignore the illegal resident population or pretend they will leave voluntarily. Some of the proposed ideas in Congress provide a temporary legal status and call for deportation, but fail to answer how the government would deport 11 million people. I don't know how it would be done. I don't know how we would line up all the buses and trains and airplanes and send 11 million people back to their countries of origin. I don't know why it is that we expect they would voluntarily leave after having taken the risk of coming to this country without proper documentation.

I don't know many police officers across the country who would go along with the bill that came out of the House, a bill that would, if enacted, charge undocumented immigrants with felonies, and arrest priests who are providing meals to hungry immigrants, or people who are running shelters for women who have been subject to domestic abuse. I cannot imagine that we would be serious about making illegal immigrants into felons, and going after those who would aid such persons.

That approach is not serious. That is symbolism, that is demagoguery. It is important that if we are going to deal with this problem, we deal with it in a practical, commonsense way. If temporary legal status is granted but the policy says these immigrants are never good enough to become Americans, then the policy that makes little sense.

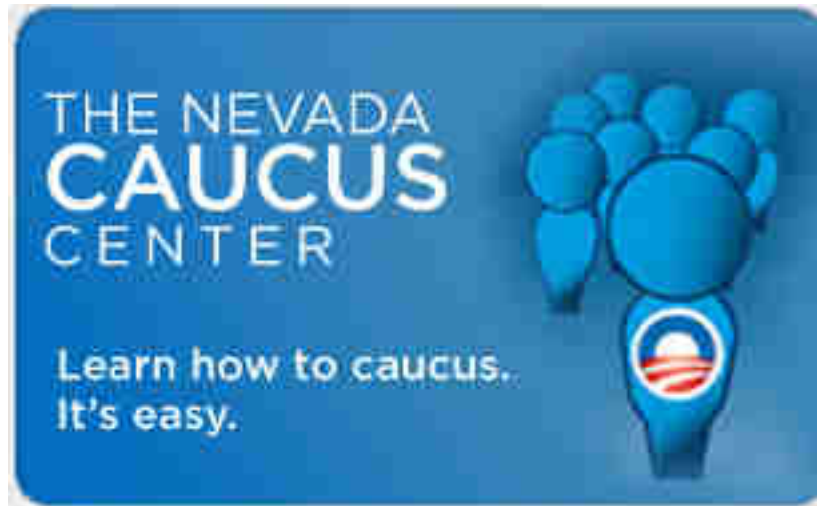

I believe successful, comprehensive immigration reform can be achieved by building on the work of the Judiciary Committee. The Judiciary Committee bill combines some of the strongest elements of Senator Hagel's border security proposals with the realistic workplace and earned-citizenship program proposed by Senators McCain and Kennedy.

Mr. President, I will come to the floor over the next week to offer some amendments of my own, and to support amendments my colleagues will offer. I will also come to the floor to argue against amendments that contradict our tradition as a nation of immigrants and as a nation of laws.

As FDR reminded the Nation at the 50th anniversary of the dedication of the Statue of Liberty, those who landed at Ellis Island "were the men and women who had the supreme courage to strike out for themselves, to abandon language and relatives, to start at the bottom without influence, without money, and without knowledge of life in a very young civilization."

It behooves us to remember that not every single immigrant who came into the United States through Ellis Island had proper documentation. Not every one of our grandparents or great-grandparents would have necessarily qualified for legal immigration. But they came here in search of a dream, in search of hope. Americans understand that, and they are willing to give an opportunity to those who are already here, as long as we get serious about making sure that our borders actually mean something.

Today's immigrants seek to follow in the same tradition of immigration that has built this country. We do ourselves and them a disservice if we do not recognize the contributions of these individuals. And we fail to protect our Nation if we do not regain control over our immigration system immediately.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama on Civil Rights (2008-01-11 10:39)

Obama on Civil Rights Issues

- Supports affirmative action.
- Opposes gay marriage; supports civil unions with full rights. Opposed constitutional ban on gay marriage.
- Wants to close Guantanamo and restore right of habeus corpus.
- Voted no on Patriot Act wiretapping.
- Voted yes on reauthorizing Patriot Act.
- Supports Feingold's amendments to the Patriot Act.
- Opposes 'don't ask, don't tell' in military.
- Supports better enforcement of Equal Pay Act for women.
- Supports strengthening Disabilities Act.
- Supports affirmative action in government and colleges.
- Voted no on banning flag-burning.
- Strengthen Civil Rights Enforcement

- Combat Employment Discrimination
- Expand Hate Crimes Statutes
- End Deceptive Voting Practices
- End Racial Profiling
- Reduce Crime Recidivism by Providing Ex-Offender Support
- Eliminate Sentencing Disparities
- Expand Use of Drug Courts

From barackobama.com:

Plan to Strengthen Civil Rights

“The teenagers and college students who left their homes to march in the streets of Birmingham and Montgomery; the mothers who walked instead of taking the bus after a long day of doing somebody else’s laundry and cleaning somebody else’s kitchen — they didn’t brave fire hoses and Billy clubs so that their grandchildren and their great-grandchildren would still wonder at the beginning of the 21st century whether their vote would be counted; whether their civil rights would be protected by their government; whether justice would be equal and opportunity would be theirs. . . . We have more work to do.”

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Gary Hart endorses Obama (2008-01-11 12:24)

Former U.S. Senator and presidential candidate Gary Hart announced his support for Sen. Barack Obama today. Hart, who still holds clout among certain sections of the Democratic establishment, described Obama as “the embodiment of what is best about our nation.” The endorsement comes after the Obama campaign opened six offices in Colorado, Hart’s home state.

There are also rumors that Rep. James E. Clyburn of South Carolina may be considering an Obama endorsement. Clyburn, whose nod is considered highly influential in the state, is angry about remarks made by the Clintons dismissing the influence of Martin Luther King.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama on Jobs and the Economy (2008-01-11 17:33)

Obama on Job Issues

- Wants to end tax breaks for companies that outsource.
- Make minimum wage a living wage.
- Supports unions and organized labor.
- Does not believe tax cuts for rich create jobs.
- Has detailed plan for improving urban and rural development.
- Obama voted FOR raising the minimum wage to $7.25 (2005 & 2007) and FOR restricting employer interference in union organizing (2007). The AFL-CIO has given him a rating of 100 %.

Barack Obama on the Economy

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama ads to air in Arizona and California (2008-01-12 10:06)

The Obama campaign is launching its first ads in Feb. 5 states it was revealed today by the Associated Press and CNN. In Arizona, the television ad "Mother" will begin airing apparently focused on the state's large retirement population. The ad tells of the problems Obama's mother faced in paying for health care when battling cancer:

"My mother died of cancer at 53. In those last painful months, she was more worried about paying her medical bills than getting well. I hear stories like hers everyday," says the Illinois senator in the 30-second spot, titled "Mother."

"For 20 years, Washington has talked about health care reform and reformed nothing. I've got a plan to cut costs and cover everyone. But unless we stop the bickering and the lobbyists we will be in the same place twenty years from now. I'm Barack Obama and I approve this message because to fix health care we have to fix Washington."

In California, the campaign will air "Quiet," where the candidate identifies oil as both an environmental and a national security issue:

"I don't accept that we should be still sending eight hundred million dollars a day, part to hostile nations because of our addiction to foreign oil. And in the bargain we're melting the polar ice caps."

"I went to Detroit to insist that we have to increase fuel efficiency standards. Now, I have to admit, the room got kind of quiet. We can't just tell people what they want to hear. We need to tell them what they need to hear. We need to tell them the truth."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Stand for Change Tour in Nevada (2008-01-12 10:52)

Barack Obama will be stumping in Reno, Fallon and Carson City on Jan. 14 as part of the his Stand for Change tour. To sign up for the rallies, click on the image below.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama News on Sunday (2008-01-12 11:03)

Sen. Barack Obama today received the endorsement of The Republican, the daily newspaper of Springfield, Massachusetts.

Obama's ability to create coalitions of Democrats, Republicans and independents makes him the best candidate in his party to end the partisan gridlock in Washington. His success at winning broad bipartisan support last year for a landmark ethics bill is one example of his ability to unite people.

It's true that Obama has not spent as much time in Washington as others, but those who have spent a lot of time in the city are not as likely to be agents of change.

Obama believes in a less traditional approach to government. Instead of complicated government programs, he favors programs that are simpler to operate and understand. We don't know if it's possible for government to take a simple approach and keep it that way, but it's better than starting out with a complicated one and having elected officials make it even more complicated.

The presidency is the one job in America for which there really is no preparation. George W. Bush was a novice in many aspects of the job, so he put together a team regarded by many as the most experienced of any in the modern history of the presidency. Experience proved to be no substitute for good judgment and transparency, as we've seen over and over again in the Bush administration.

In any case, we don't believe Sen. Hillary Clinton's experience outweighs Obama's experience.

The problems in Washington - the number of Americans without health insurance, rising energy costs, the uncertain future of Social Security and a looming recession, to name just a few - demand someone who will not be an agent of the status quo.

More important, Obama also is the best candidate in his party to repair the damage done to the Constitution and restore the nation's reputation.

He's our choice.

Sen. Ben Nelson of Nebraska also endorsed Barack today saying the Illinois senator has "the greatest potential to ending the bitterness and poisonous atmosphere in Washington." And in North Carolina, U.S. Rep. G.K. Butterfield has switched his endorsement from John Edwards to Barack Obama.

So Obama has two more delegates toward the 2,025 needed to secure the nomination.

California Mail-in Ballots

Barack Obama's television ad campaign in California is well timed as absentee ballots for mail voters are arriving throughout the state. A certain segment of this group is usually undecided at this point although much smaller in comparison to those who will go to the polls on Feb. 5.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Video: Culinary Workers Union Rally with Barack (2008-01-12 14:16)

Watch this video of Barack Obama at the the Culinary Workers Union rally in Las Vegas. Si se puede! (Yes we can!)
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama on Education (2008-01-12 15:34)

"I don't want to send another generation of American children to failing schools. I don't want that future for my daughters. I don't want that future for your sons. I do not want that future for America."

— Barack Obama, Jefferson-Jackson Dinner, Des Moines, Iowa, November 10, 2007

Barack Obama's Plan

Early Childhood Education

- Zero to Five Plan: Obama's comprehensive "Zero to Five" plan will provide critical support to young children and their parents.
- Expand Early Head Start and Head Start: Obama will quadruple Early Head Start, increase Head Start funding and improve quality for both.

- Affordable, High-Quality Child Care: Obama will also provide affordable and high-quality child care to ease the burden on working families.

K-12

- Reform No Child Left Behind: Obama will reform NCLB, which starts by funding the law.
- Make Math and Science Education a National Priority.
- Address the Dropout Crisis: Obama will address the dropout crisis by passing his legislation to provide funding to school districts to invest in intervention strategies in middle school strategies such as personal academic plans, teaching teams, parent involvement, mentoring, intensive reading and math instruction, and extended learning time.
- Expand High-Quality Afterschool Opportunities: Obama will double funding for the main federal support for afterschool programs, the 21st Century Learning Centers program, to serve one million more children.
- Expand Summer Learning Opportunities: Obama's "STEP UP" plan addresses the achievement gap by supporting summer learning opportunities for disadvantaged children through partnerships between local schools and community organizations.
- Support College Outreach Programs: Obama supports outreach programs like GEAR UP, TRIO and Upward Bound to encourage more young people from low-income families to consider and prepare for college.
- Support English Language Learners: Obama supports transitional bilingual education and will help Limited English Proficient students get ahead by holding schools accountable for making sure these students complete school.

Recruit, Prepare, Retain, and Reward America's Teachers

- Recruit Teachers: Obama will create new Teacher Service Scholarships that will cover four years of undergraduate or two years of graduate teacher education, including high-quality alternative programs for mid-career recruits in exchange for teaching for at least four years in a high-need field or location.
- Prepare Teachers: Obama will require all schools of education to be accredited. He will also create a voluntary national performance assessment so we can be sure that every new educator is trained and ready to walk into the classroom and start teaching effectively. Obama will also create Teacher Residency Programs that will supply 30,000 exceptionally well-prepared recruits to high-need schools.
- Retain Teachers: To support our teachers, Obama's plan will expand mentoring programs that pair experienced teachers with new recruits. He will also provide incentives to give teachers paid common planning time so they can collaborate to share best practices.
- Reward Teachers: Obama will promote new and innovative ways to increase teacher pay that are developed with teachers, not imposed on them.

Higher Education

- Create the American Opportunity Tax Credit: Obama will make college affordable for all Americans by creating a new American Opportunity Tax Credit. This universal and fully refundable credit will ensure that the first $4,000 of a college education is completely free for most Americans, and will cover two-thirds the cost of tuition at the average public college or university and make community college tuition completely free for most students.

- Simplify the Application Process for Financial Aid.

For complete info on Obama's education plan visit his education issues page.

Barack Obama's Record

Record of Advocacy: Obama has been a leader on educational issues throughout his career. In the Illinois State Senate, Obama was a leader on early childhood education, helping create the state's Early Learning Council. In the U.S. Senate, Obama has been a leader in working to make college more affordable. His very first bill sought to increase the maximum Pell Grant award to $5,100. As a member of the Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions committee, Obama helped pass legislation to achieve that goal in the recent improvements to the Higher Education Act. Obama has also introduced legislation to create Teacher Residency Programs and to increase federal support for summer learning opportunities.

For More Information about Barack's Plan

- ✕ Read the Pre-K to 12 Plan
- ✕ Read the College Affordability Plan

Speech on Pre-K to 12 Education

Speech on College Affordability

Click on image to donate.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Obama News on Sunday (2008-01-13 09:30)

Sen. Barack Obama has added a stop in Pahrump to his Nevada tour.

✕

In South Carolina, expert Samantha Power will be holding community gatherings to talk about Obama's foreign policy platform.

Clemson Community Gathering with Samantha Power
Monday, January 14, 2008 @ 1:45pm
Clemson, SC
Wofford College Community Gathering with Samantha Power
Monday, January 14, 2008 @ 4:15pm
Spartanburg, SC

Young people are really involved in the Obama campaign, and one sign of this is the report in the Washington Post that Missouri Sen. Claire McCaskill was finally convinced to support Barack Obama, after praising him for months, at the urging of her 18-year-old daughter.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama California opens four new offices (2008-01-13 12:15)

The California Obama campaign is having the grand opening of four new official campaign offices in San Jose, Palo Alto, Santa Ana, and San Bernadino today, January 13th, at 1pm to 3pm PST at each location. There is a total now of nine California field offices. Here is a list of the new office addresses:

- 410 East Santa Clara Satreet, San Jose, CA 95113
- 3892 El Camino Real, Palo Alto, CA 94306
- 214 N. Broadway, Ste. 210, Santa Ana, CA 92701
- 374 W. Court St., Ste. E207, San Bernardino, CA 92401

barackobama.com easily leads web race

According to alexa.com, the official Obama campaign website has jumped far ahead of the Hillary Clinton and John Edwards sites starting a week or so before the beginning of the Iowa Caucus.

At one point in Jan., Obama's site reached more than three times the percentage of internet users and page views as the second place Clinton site.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

State Sen. Gil Cedillo to endorse Barack Obama (2008-01-13 16:01)

California State Sen. Gil Cedillo will endorse Sen. Barack Obama today according to a spokesperson for Cedillo. Expect a large of number of California legislators to announce their support for Obama soon.

In Nevada, Obama spoke out against efforts to shut down at-large caucus sites designed to help out casino workers.

"Ever since I got the support of Local 226, the lawyers decided to get involved. The rules were OK when the other campaigns thought they would win the Culinary endorsement," Obama said.

"As soon as you decided to support the outsider, the working people instead of the big shots, all the sudden they decided they wanted to change the rules."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-01-15 17:16:00)

Too bad. Obama is an inexperience person with a very small platform. I thought you would be a better judge to support another candidate where the Latin vote will actually have more of an affect.

Michelle Obama returns to stump in South Carolina (2008-01-13 18:17)

Michelle Obama will be meeting with the community in Florence and Georgetown in South Carolina on Jan. 14.

Florence Community Gathering with Michelle Obama (Official Event)

Monday, January 14 at 10:00 AM

Francis Marion University - Smith Center Gym (Florence, SC)

Meet Michelle Obama, wife of Barack Obama, and discuss why her husband is the one candidate who can bring Democrats, Independents and Republicans together to...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event

Georgetown Community Gathering with Michelle Obama (Official Event)

Monday, January 14 at 3:00 PM

Bethel AME Church (Georgetown, SC)

Meet Michelle Obama, wife of Barack Obama, and discuss why her husband is the one candidate who can bring Democrats, Independents and Republicans together to...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Nevada Ground Campaign (2008-01-14 09:27)

Barack Obama met with precinct captains in Las Vegas' Doolittle Center on Sunday.

He also went door to door canvassing with the culinary workers of Local 226.

[EMBED] Nelson and Leslie canvass for Barack Obama.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Where Obama Stands: On Iraq (2008-01-14 13:59)

From the official blog :

Where Obama Stands: On Iraq

by Sam Graham-Felsen

Sunday, January 13, 2008 at 03:15 PM

"Where Obama Stands" is a series of posts highlighting Obama's innovative approaches to challenge the status quo and get results on the issues that matter most to Americans. For a full list of Senator Obama's detailed policy positions, check out BarackObama.com/issues and/or download Obama's complete booklet of policy positions, "The Blueprint for Change." We are also looking for your feedback and suggestions on the issues; if you want to share your ideas, please submit your thoughts through our MyPolicy page.

Plan for Ending the War in Iraq

“But conventional thinking in Washington lined up for war. The pundits judged the political winds to be blowing in the direction of the President. Despite - or perhaps because of how much experience they had in Washington, too many politicians feared looking weak and failed to ask hard questions. Too many took the President at his word instead of reading the intelligence for themselves. Congress gave the President the authority to go to war. Our only opportunity to stop the war was lost.

I made a different judgment. I thought our priority had to be finishing the fight in Afghanistan. I spoke out against what I called “a rash war” in Iraq. I worried about, ‘an occupation of undetermined length, with undetermined costs, and undetermined consequences.’ The full accounting of those costs and consequences will only be known to history. But the picture is beginning to come into focus.”

—Barack Obama, Clinton, Iowa, September 12, 2007

The Problem

The Surge: The goal of the surge was to create space for Iraq’s political leaders to reach an agreement to end Iraq’s civil war. At great cost, our troops have helped reduce violence in some areas of Iraq, but even those reductions do not get us below the unsustainable levels of violence of mid-2006. Moreover, Iraq’s political leaders have made no progress in resolving the political differences at the heart of their civil war.

Military Strain: The military is being severely strained by repeated and lengthy deployments. The Army and Marine Corps are facing a crisis as 40 percent of their equipment is either in Iraq or being repaired. This crisis has led many of our generals to conclude that current demands make our forces unable to rapidly respond to the contingencies we may face in the future.

Barack Obama’s Plan

Judgment You Can Trust

As a candidate for the United States Senate in 2002, Obama put his political career on the line to oppose going to war in Iraq, and warned of “an occupation of undetermined length, with undetermined costs, and undetermined consequences.” Obama has been a consistent, principled and vocal opponent of the war in Iraq.

- In 2003 and 2004, he spoke out against the war on the campaign trail;
- In 2005, he called for a phased withdrawal of our troops;
- In 2006, he called for a timetable to remove our troops, a political solution within Iraq, and aggressive diplomacy with all of Iraq’s neighbors;
- In January 2007, he introduced legislation in the Senate to remove all of our combat troops from Iraq by March 2008.
- In September 2007, he laid out a detailed plan for how he will end the war as president.

Bringing Our Troops Home

Obama will immediately begin to remove our troops from Iraq. He will remove one to two combat brigades each month, and have all of our combat brigades out of Iraq within 16 months. Obama will make it clear that we will not build any permanent bases in Iraq. He will keep some troops in Iraq to protect our embassy and diplomats; if al Qaeda attempts to build a base within Iraq, he will keep troops in Iraq or elsewhere in the region to carry out targeted strikes on al Qaeda. Press Iraq’s Leaders to Reconcile

The best way to press Iraq’s leaders to take responsibility for their future is to make it clear that we are leaving. As we remove our troops, Obama will engage representatives from all levels of Iraqi society – in and out of government – to seek a new accord on Iraq's Constitution and governance. The United Nations will play a central role in this convention, which should not adjourn until a new national accord is reached addressing tough questions like federalism and oil revenue-sharing. Regional Diplomacy

Obama will launch the most aggressive diplomatic effort in recent American history to reach a new compact on the stability of Iraq and the Middle East. This effort will include all of Iraq's neighbors — including Iran and Syria. This compact will aim to secure Iraq's borders; keep neighboring countries from meddling inside Iraq; isolate al Qaeda; support reconciliation among Iraq's sectarian groups; and provide financial support for Iraq's reconstruction. Humanitarian Initiative

Obama believes that America has a moral and security responsibility to confront Iraq's humanitarian crisis — two million Iraqis are refugees; two million more are displaced inside their own country. Obama will form an international working group to address this crisis. He will provide at least $2 billion to expand services to Iraqi refugees in neighboring countries, and ensure that Iraqis inside their own country can find a safe-haven. Barack Obama's Record

- Barack Obama opposed the war in Iraq from the beginning. In 2002, as the conventional thinking in Washington lined up for war, Obama had the judgment and courage to speak out against the war. He said the war would lead to "an occupation of undetermined length, with undetermined costs and undetermined consequences." In January 2007, Obama introduced legislation to responsibly end the war in Iraq, with a phased withdrawal of troops engaged in combat operations.
- Obama has a plan to immediately begin withdrawing our troops engaged in combat operations at a pace of one or two brigades every month, to be completed by the end of next year. He would call for a new constitutional convention in Iraq, convened with the United Nations, which would not adjourn until Iraq's leaders reach a new accord on reconciliation. He would use presidential leadership to surge our diplomacy with all of the nations of the region on behalf of a new regional security compact. And he would take immediate steps to confront the ongoing humanitarian disaster in Iraq.

For More Information about Barack's Plan

 Read the Plan

Read the Speech

[EMBED]

Obama vs. Clinton and Edwards on Iraq

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Rep. Zoe Lofgren endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-14 14:09)

U.S. Rep. Zoe Lofgren from the Silicon Valley in California is throwing her support to Sen. Barack Obama. In 2004, Lofgren was a strong supporter of Howard Dean.

"Just as John F. Kennedy brought a new generation of leadership to America with his election, and just as Bobby Kennedy inspired a generation into public service, Barack Obama has excited the imagination of disillusioned Americans. Hope is the essential first ingredient to action today," Lofgren said in an endorsement statement.

A number of California legislators are expected to endorse Obama soon including State Sen. Darrell Steinberg from here in Sacramento.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

2,500 greet Barack Obama in Reno (2008-01-14 18:45)

Obama on the Environment (2008-01-15 09:46)

Check out Barack's plan on energy and the environment from barackobama.com .

Plan for a Clean Energy Future

"Well, I don't believe that climate change is just an issue that's convenient to bring up during a campaign. I believe it's one of the greatest moral challenges of our generation. That's why I've fought successfully in the Senate to increase our investment in renewable fuels. That's why I reached across the aisle to come up with a plan to raise our fuel standards... And I didn't just give a speech about it in front of some environmental audience in California. I went to Detroit, I stood in front of a group of automakers, and I told them that when I am president, there will be no more excuses — we will help them retool their factories, but they will have to make cars that use less oil."

— Barack Obama, Speech in Des Moines, IA, October 14, 2007

At a Glance

- Reduce Carbon Emissions 80 Percent by 2050
- Invest in a Clean Energy Future
- Support Next Generation Biofuels
- Set America on Path to Oil Independence
- Improve Energy Efficiency 50 Percent by 2030
- Restore U.S. Leadership on Climate Change

Speak your mind and help set the policies that will guide this campaign and change the country.

- Present your ideas

The Problem

Foreign Oil: America's 20-million-barrel-a-day oil habit costs our economy $1.4 billion a day, and $500 billion in 2006 alone. Every single hour, we spend $41 million on foreign oil.

Climate Change: As a result of climate change, glaciers are melting faster; the polar ice caps are shrinking; trees are blooming earlier; more people are dying in heat waves; species are migrating, and eventually many will become extinct.

Barack Obama's Plan

Reduce Carbon Emissions 80 Percent by 2050

- Cap and Trade: Obama supports implementation of a market-based cap-and-trade system to reduce carbon emissions by the amount scientists say is necessary: 80 percent below 1990 levels by 2050. Obama's cap-and-trade system will require all pollution credits to be auctioned. A 100 percent auction ensures that all polluters pay for every ton of emissions they release, rather than giving these emission rights away to coal and oil companies. Some of the revenue generated by auctioning allowances will be used to support the development of clean energy, to invest in energy efficiency improvements, and to address transition costs, including helping American workers affected by this economic transition.
- Confront Deforestation and Promote Carbon Sequestration: Obama will develop domestic incentives that reward forest owners, farmers, and ranchers when they plant trees, restore grasslands, or undertake farming practices that capture carbon dioxide from the atmosphere.

Invest in a Clean Energy Future

- Invest $150 Billion over 10 Years in Clean Energy: Obama will invest $150 billion over 10 years to advance the next generation of biofuels and fuel infrastructure, accelerate the commercialization of plug-in hybrids, promote development of commercial-scale renewable energy, invest in low-emissions coal plants, and begin the transition to a new digital electricity grid. A principal focus of this fund will be devoted to ensuring that technologies that are developed in the U.S. are rapidly commercialized in the U.S. and deployed around the globe.
- Double Energy Research and Development Funding: Obama will double science and research funding for clean energy projects including those that make use of our biomass, solar and wind resources.
- Invest in a Skilled Clean Technologies Workforce: Obama will use proceeds from the cap-and-trade auction program to invest in job training and transition programs to help workers and industries adapt to clean technology development and production. Obama will also create an energy-focused Green Jobs Corps to connect disconnected and disadvantaged youth with job skills for a high-growth industry.
- Convert our Manufacturing Centers into Clean Technology Leaders: Obama will establish a federal investment program to help manufacturing centers modernize and Americans learn the new skills they need to produce green products.
- Clean Technologies Deployment Venture Capital Fund: Obama will create a Clean Technologies Venture Capital Fund to fill a critical gap in U.S. technology development. Obama will invest $10 billion per year into this fund for five years. The fund will partner with existing investment funds and our National Laboratories to ensure that promising technologies move beyond the lab and are commercialized in the U.S.
- Require 25 Percent of Renewable Electricity by 2025: Obama will establish a 25 percent federal Renewable Portfolio Standard (RPS) to require that 25 percent of electricity consumed in the U.S. is derived from clean, sustainable energy sources, like solar, wind and geothermal by 2025.
- Develop and Deploy Clean Coal Technology: Obama will significantly increase the resources devoted to the commercialization and deployment of low-carbon coal technologies. Obama will consider whatever policy tools are necessary, including standards that ban new traditional coal facilities, to ensure that we move quickly to commercialize and deploy low carbon coal technology.

Support Next Generation Biofuels

- Deploy Cellulosic Ethanol: Obama will invest federal resources, including tax incentives, cash prizes and government contracts into developing the most promising technologies with the goal of getting the first two billion gallons of cellulosic ethanol into the system by 2013.

- Expand Locally-Owned Biofuel Refineries: Less than 10 percent of new ethanol production today is from farmer-owned refineries. New ethanol refineries help jumpstart rural economies. Obama will create a number of incentives for local communities to invest in their biofuels refineries.
- Establish a National Low Carbon Fuel Standard: Barack Obama will establish a National Low Carbon Fuel Standard to speed the introduction of low-carbon non-petroleum fuels. The standard requires fuels suppliers to reduce the carbon their fuel emits by ten percent by 2020.
- Increase Renewable Fuel Standard: Obama will require 36 billion gallons of renewable fuels to be included in the fuel supply by 2022 and will increase that to at least 60 billion gallons of advanced biofuels like cellulosic ethanol by 2030.

Set America on Path to Oil Independence

Obama's plan will reduce oil consumption by at least 35 percent, or 10 million barrels per day, by 2030. This will more than offset the equivalent of the oil we would import from OPEC nations in 2030.

- Increase Fuel Economy Standards: Obama will double fuel economy standards within 18 years. His plan will provide retooling tax credits and loan guarantees for domestic auto plants and parts manufacturers, so that they can build new fuel-efficient cars rather than overseas companies. Obama will also invest in advanced vehicle technology such as advanced lightweight materials and new engines.

Improve Energy Efficiency 50 Percent by 2030

- Set National Building Efficiency Goals: Barack Obama will establish a goal of making all new buildings carbon neutral, or produce zero emissions, by 2030. He'll also establish a national goal of improving new building efficiency by 50 percent and existing building efficiency by 25 percent over the next decade to help us meet the 2030 goal.
- Establish a Grant Program for Early Adopters: Obama will create a competitive grant program to award those states and localities that take the first steps to implement new building codes that prioritize energy efficiency.
- Invest in a Digital Smart Grid: Obama will pursue a major investment in our utility grid to enable a tremendous increase in renewable generation and accommodate modern energy requirements, such as reliability, smart metering, and distributed storage

Restore U.S. Leadership on Climate Change

- Create New Forum of Largest Greenhouse Gas Emitters: Obama will create a Global Energy Forum — that includes all G-8 members plus Brazil, China, India, Mexico and South Africa — the largest energy consuming nations from both the developed and developing world. The forum would focus exclusively on global energy and environmental issues.
- Re-Engage with the U.N. Framework Convention on Climate Change: The UNFCCC process is the main international forum dedicated to addressing the climate problem and an Obama administration will work constructively within it.

Barack Obama's Record

- Renewable Fuels: Obama has worked on numerous efforts in the Senate to increase access to and use of renewable fuels. Obama passed legislation with Senator Jim Talent (R-MO) to give gas stations a tax credit for installing E85 ethanol refueling pumps. The tax credit covers 30 percent of the costs of switching one or more traditional petroleum pumps to E85, which is an 85 percent ethanol/15 percent gasoline blend. Obama also sponsored an amendment that became law providing $40 million for commercialization of a combined flexible fuel vehicle/hybrid car within five years.
- CAFE: Obama introduced a bold new plan that brought Republicans and Democrats, CAFE supporters and long-time opponents together in support of legislation that will gradually increase fuel economy standards and offer what the New York Times editorial page called "real as opposed to hypothetical results."

For More Information about Barack's Plan

 Read the Energy Plan
Read the Speech

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama News on Tuesday (2008-01-15 10:05)

Barack Obama prepares for the MSNBC debate tonight. On Wednesday, Barack will appear in Henderson, Nevada.

Click image to attend.

[EMBED]

Las Vegas town hall meeting attendees pledge to caucus for Obama.

Music stars back Obama

Win Butler of the indie rock band Arcade Fire announced on his blog that he was supporting Barack Obama over Hillary Clinton.

Pete Wentz of Fall Out Boy also endorsed Obama and is hosting a fundraiser for the Illinois senator in Chicago next week.

"After watching the New Hampshire primary, I couldn't just be an observer anymore – I had to act," Wentz said.

"Barack is the first politician who's ever made me feel like our voices actually matter."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: Latino legislators endorse Obama in Los Angeles (2008-01-15 12:13)

[EMBED]

California Latino leaders endorse Barack Obama

A coalition of Latino leaders gathered Monday to endorse Obama at the Los Angeles campaign headquarters.

Those in attendance included Gloria Romero, Martha Escutia, Gil Cedillo and Dean Florez of the state senate and Pomona mayor Norma Torres. Romero is the Senate majority leader and the highest ranking female in the California legislature; Escutia is chair of the Latino Legislative Caucus.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama in Nevada (2008-01-15 17:30)

[EMBED]

2,400 rally with Barack Obama in Carson City, Nevada

Two televisions directed at the Latino community began airing today in Nevada.

[EMBED]

Hope

[EMBED]

Something is Happening

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2008-01-15 17:30)

[EMBED]

Barack picks up more key support (2008-01-15 18:06)

The Top of the Ticket blog of the Los Angeles Times is reporting that Maria Elena Durazo, executive secretary-treasurer of the powerful Los Angeles County Federation of Labor will endorse Barack Obama's candidacy for president.

Mo Denis, one of three Latino state legislators in Nevada, endorsed Obama this morning after meeting with and questioning the Illinois senator. Denis had formerly supported Gov. Bill Richardson.

The Statesman Journal reports two important endorsements from Oregon, Randall Edwards and Susan Castillo:

Barack Obama is the right person to heal this country and restore America's standing in the world," said Edwards, who is completing a second four-year term as treasurer this year. He is barred from running for a third term.

Castillo, the first Hispanic woman in statewide office, said she is endorsing Obama for his commitment to education. She has been a state schools chief, a nonpartisan office, for five years; she was a Democratic state senator for six years before that.

Of Oregon's top Democrats, Gov. Ted Kulongoski and U.S. Rep. Darlene Hooley have endorsed New York Sen. Hillary Clinton, and Oregon House Speaker Jeff Merkley and Oregon Senate President pro tem Margaret Carter have endorsed former North Carolina Sen. John Edwards. Others have made no public endorsements.

In Ohio, Mayor Jay Williams of Youngstown endorsed Obama saying "I admire his ability to inspire; he's seen as an agent of change."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Las Vegas Review-Journal and other endorsements (2008-01-16 00:24)

Nevada's largest newspaper, the Las Vegas Review-Herald left a note on its website that it would endorse Sen. Barack Obama on Wednesday.

The Obama campaign released a list of other prominent Nevada endorsements on Tuesday.

Key Leaders in Nevada Endorse Barack Obama

Former Senate Candidate Jack Carter Cites Obama's Ability to Unify and Inspire Hope

LAS VEGAS, NV - Obama for America today announced the support of several key Democratic leaders in Nevada, including former candidate for the U.S. Senate, Jack Carter. Citing Barack Obama's integrity and unique ability to bring people together, these leaders know Obama is the one candidate who puts aside partisan politics and offers change we can believe in.

"Senator Obama has impressed me over the last year with the consistency and quality of his message," Obama supporter Jack Carter said. "But I am even more impressed by his constant refrain to join together to fight the divisiveness in Washington and turn our energy to solving the problems which confront us all. I believe Senator Obama has the message, the desire, and the enthusiasm to bring our country together in a smashing victory in November," continued Carter.

"I'm proud to have the support of these leaders who have encouraged the movement for change in Nevada and across the nation," said Senator Barack Obama. "Their efforts during the week leading up to the caucuses will ensure our grassroots movement succeeds on Caucus Day."

These Democratic leaders join Nevadans across the state who have endorsed Barack Obama.

Jack Carter, Las Vegas - 2006 Democratic Nominee for the U.S. Senate and vocal opponent of the Iraq War; successful investment consultant and businessman; honorably served in the Navy during the Vietnam War.

Assemblyman Mo Denis, Las Vegas - Nevada State Assemblyman, District No. 28

Evelyn Mount, Reno - Community Activist

Steve Platt, Carson City - Chairman, Carson City Democratic Central Committee

State Senator Mike Schneider, Las Vegas - Nevada State Senator, District No. 11

Jessica Sferrazza, Reno - Reno City Councilwoman, Ward 3

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Maria Elena Durazo on Barack Obama (2008-01-16 07:41)

Los Angeles labor leader Maria Elena Durazo had this to say about her support for Sen. Barack Obama:

"My passion is the labor movement, and I believe very strongly that Sen. Obama is very clear about his support for workers who want to organize, workers who want to lift themselves out of poverty, and also protect good middle-class jobs."

"On a personal level, he really embodies the slogan we use a lot, Cesar Chavez's 'Sí, se puede.' (Yes, we can.)" He has proved it by the way he inspires voters, the way he mobilizes."

Fernando Guerra, director of the Center for the Study of Los Angeles at Loyola Marymount University says Durazo "symbolizes the new power in Los Angeles and in California – the marriage of Latinos and labor."

"And when you have those numbers, that organization and those volunteers, it makes an impact. There is no person in all of California who could get more people out to the street to go do something, either to march or get the vote out."

Durazo's son, a senior in high school, played a role in her final decision. "He said, 'In the end, Mom, it's the chance of a lifetime.' For him to say that means a lot. It's true."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

New Nevada ads (2008-01-16 14:39)

Check out the new television ads airing in Nevada. The first is called "President" and the second "Would."

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Mobilizing Voters (2008-01-16 15:13)

Not a task to be taken lightly especially in lower income neighborhoods and college communities.

Problems can range from long lines to lack of transportation. One good thing is that the Nevada caucuses and South Carolina primary are both taking place on Saturday, so most voters shouldn't have work conflicts. Note though that casinos are 24/7 operations. Feb. 5 polls fall on the normal voting day of Tuesday with all the associated problems.

The traditional methods of getting out the vote include phone-banking, canvassing, rallies, providing transportation, waving signs, etc. It's important to let supporters not excuse themselves from voting specifically for Barack Obama thinking that just a single vote won't matter anyway.

For those who can't go to Nevada and don't have free long distance for phone-banking, there are some ways to help online.

First of all you can join barackobama.com, if you haven't already.

Obviously if you know anyone in a voting state, you can send them an email or text message letting them know about your support of Barack.

For some ideas on online or netroots campaigning, try some of these links:

Action Center

Obama Mobile

X

X X

X X

X X

X X

X

Rate up good Obama news (works on YouTube also)

baracktivor

Publicizing your events with online calendars

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack stumps through Nevada (2008-01-16 18:02)

'Stand for Change' Town Hall with Barack Obama in Las Vegas

Rancho High School

1900 Searles Avenue

Las Vegas, NV

Thursday, January 17th, 2008

Doors open: 4:00 p.m.

'Stand for Change' Town Hall with Barack Obama in Reno

University of Nevada, Reno

Virginia Street Gymnasium

1664 N. Virginia Street Reno, NV

Friday, January 18

Doors open: 8:15 a.m.

'Stand for Change' Town Hall with Barack Obama in Elko

Elko High School

987 College Ave.

Elko, NV

Friday, January 18

Doors open: 2:30 p.m.

For security reasons, bags are not allowed inside the event. Please limit personal items. No signs or banners are permitted.

The event is free and open to the public. Michelle Obama will be appearing with John Kerry on Jan. 17 but the RSVP is closed for that event.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama on Poverty (2008-01-16 22:32)

Plan to combat urban poverty

“I’m in this race for the same reason that I fought for jobs for the jobless and hope for the hopeless on the streets of Chicago; for the same reason I fought for justice and equality as a civil rights lawyer; for the same reason that I fought for Illinois families for over a decade... That’s why I’m running, Democrats — to keep the American Dream alive for those who still hunger for opportunity, who still thirst for equality.”

— Barack Obama, Speech in Des Moines, IA, November 10, 2007

At a Glance

- Expand Access to Jobs
- Make Work Pay for All Americans
- Strengthen Families
- Increase the Supply of Affordable Housing
- Tackle Concentrated Poverty

Speak your mind and help set the policies that will guide this campaign and change the country.

- Present your ideas

Watch the Video

The Problem

Poverty Rising: There are nearly 37 million poor Americans. Most Americans living in poverty work, but still cannot afford to make ends meet.

Minimum Wage is Not Enough: Even when a parent works full-time earning minimum wage and EITC and food stamps are factored into their income, families are still $1,550 below the federal poverty line because of the flat-lined minimum wage.

Barack Obama’s Plan

Expand Access to Jobs

- Help Americans Grab a Hold of and Climb the Job Ladder: Obama will invest $1 billion over five years in transitional jobs and career pathway programs that implement proven methods of helping low-income Americans succeed in the workforce.
- Create a Green Jobs Corps: Obama will create a program to directly engage disadvantaged youth in energy efficiency opportunities to strengthen their communities, while also providing them with practical skills in this important high-growth career field.
- Improve Transportation Access to Jobs: As president, Obama will work to ensure that low-income Americans have transportation access to jobs. Obama will double the federal Jobs Access and Reverse Commute program to ensure that additional federal public transportation dollars flow to the highest-need communities and that urban planning initiatives take this aspect of transportation policy into account.
- Reduce Crime Recidivism by Providing Ex-Offender Supports: Obama will work to ensure that ex-offenders have access to job training, substance abuse and mental health counseling, and employment opportunities. Obama will also create a prison-to-work incentive program and reduce barriers to employment.

Make Work Pay for All Americans

- Expand the Earned Income Tax Credit: Obama will increase the number of working parents eligible for EITC benefits, increase the benefits available to parents who support their children through child support payments, increase benefits for families with three or more children, and reduce the EITC marriage penalty, which hurts low-income families.
- Create a Living Wage: Obama will raise the minimum wage and index it to inflation to make sure that full-time workers can earn a living wage that allows them to raise their families and pay for basic needs such as food, transportation, and housing.
- Provide Tax Relief: Obama will provide all low and middle-income workers a $500 Making Work Pay tax credit to offset the payroll tax those workers pay in every paycheck. Obama will also eliminate taxes for seniors making under $50,000 per year.

Strengthen Families

- Promote Responsible Fatherhood: Obama will sign into law his Responsible Fatherhood and Healthy Families Act to remove some of the government penalties on married families, crack down on men avoiding child support payments, and ensure that payments go to families instead of state bureaucracies.
- Support Parents with Young Children: Obama will expand the highly-successful Nurse-Family Partnership to all 570,000 low-income, first-time mothers each year. The Nurse-Family Partnership provides home visits by trained registered nurses to low-income expectant mothers and their families.
- Expand Paid Sick Days: Today, three-out-of-four low-wage workers have no paid sick days. Obama supports guaranteeing workers seven paid sick days per year.

Increase the Supply of Affordable Housing

- Create an Affordable Housing Trust Fund: Obama will create an Affordable Housing Trust Fund to develop affordable housing in mixed-income neighborhoods.

- Fully Fund the Community Development Block Grant: Obama will fully fund the Community Development Block Grant program and engage with urban leaders across the country to increase resources to the highest-need Americans.

Tackle Concentrated Poverty

- Establish 20 Promise Neighborhoods: Obama will create 20 Promise Neighborhoods in areas that have high levels of poverty and crime and low levels of student academic achievement in cities across the nation. The Promise Neighborhoods will be modeled after the Harlem Children's Zone, which provides a full network of services, including early childhood education, youth violence prevention efforts and after-school activities, to an entire neighborhood from birth to college.
- Ensure Community-Based Investment Resources in Every Urban Community: Obama will work with community and business leaders to identify and address the unique economic development barriers of every major metropolitan area. Obama will provide additional resources to the federal Community Development Financial Institution Fund, the Small Business Administration and other federal agencies, especially to their local branch offices, to address community needs.
- Invest in Rural Areas: Obama will invest in rural small businesses and fight to expand high-speed Internet access. He will improve rural schools and attract more doctors to rural areas.

Barack Obama's Record

- Tax Relief for Low-Income Working Families: Obama created the Illinois Earned Income Tax Credit for low-income working families in 2000 and successfully sponsored a measure to make the credit permanent in 2003. The law offered about $105 million in tax relief over three years.
- Housing: In the Illinois State Senate, Obama championed multiple pieces of legislation to help low-income families find adequate affordable housing.

For More Information about Barack's Plan

 Read the Plan

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Events in South Carolina today (2008-01-17 06:59)

Kal Penn & Tatyana Ali College Tour

Columbia, SC; Aiken, SC; Greenwood, SC

Check Events for Times

A Conversation with Shelia Johnson

Orangeburg, SC

11:00am

Community Gathering with U.S. Senator Dick Durbin

Union, SC

5:30pm

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Santa Barbara Independent endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-17 08:55)

The Santa Barbara Independent a weekly newspaper with a circulation of 40,000 in Santa Barbara, California has endorsed Barack Obama for president.

For President: Barack Obama

Thursday, January 17, 2008

By Marianne Partridge, Editor in Chief

Our country is in serious trouble. We all know the problems. Bugged down in a senseless war of our own making, America is reviled around the world as an impotent bully. Our economy is unraveling, our dollar is in the basement, and our jobs are disappearing. Our medical system is in the hands of corporate giants. Our environment is getting trashed. The list goes on and on. But the worst thing that has happened to us is that as a nation we have lost our way. We have lost faith that Americans can still be the good guys, that we can control greed, forbid torture, help the poor, and protect the Earth. Eight years of the incompetent, ideologically blinded George W. Bush and his dreadful administration have caused incalculable harm. But the time for railing against President Bush is over. Now we must change—not just our president, but ourselves.

The primary on February 5 is the first chance Californians will have to help set the nation on the right path. The Independent rarely endorses in party primaries, but this year we endorse with confidence one candidate who is uniquely qualified to be president: Barack Obama.

Photo: Paul Wellman

What impresses us most about Obama is his ability to inspire hope in those who've learned to dismiss the political process as a cynical joke. And his gift goes beyond speechifying, which he does with uncommon grace. Senator Hillary Rodham Clinton has charged that he is short on experience. We disagree. He has had more years of legislative experience than Clinton, with three years in the U.S. Senate and eight years in that rough-and-tumble body known as the Illinois Legislature. During those 11 years, he successfully brought together Democrats and Republicans to pass legislation benefitting ordinary people—from tax credits for children to ethics reform in Congress.

And what good did Clinton's experience serve us when she voted to give President Bush a blank check to wage war on Iraq? Few decisions in history have proved so predictably wrong-headed. As the most engaged First Lady in history and as a U.S. Senator, she should have known better. Yet Clinton never even read the National Intelligence Estimates that assessed Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein as odious but not an imminent threat to the United States. Our own congressman, Lois Capps, knew better when she voted against the war authorization act.

At that time, Obama, who had not yet assumed his U.S. Senate seat—and could not vote—spoke out extensively against the war and predicted many of the horrors that have since come to pass: thousands of American dead, hundreds of thousands of Iraqi dead. Escalating terrorism. A staggering drain on the economy. Untold dreams forever deferred.

Hillary Clinton

While Clinton is certainly a strong candidate for president, she remains fundamentally a tragic figure in American politics. The victim of one of the most relentlessly vicious and sexist smear campaigns unleashed in recent memory, Clinton retreated into her own interior fortress. We sympathize with her plight, but that's no reason to give her our vote on February 5. In the next four years, we need to tear down the fortress walls and begin the hard work of rediscovering what it really means to be American. As a nation, we long to regain the courage of our convictions, to renew our faith in American ideals.

The groundswell of support for Barack Obama is based on the belief that he has the ability to inspire hope and define our aspirations as a nation in a way that reaches not only Americans, but the world. We believe this as well, and urge you to vote for Barack Obama in the Democratic primary on February 5.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Nevada SEIU airs TV ad (2008-01-17 09:05)

Here's a new television ad from Nevada SEIU highlighting Obama's union endorsements.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Sen. Patrick Leahy endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-17 09:16)

Sen. Patrick Leahy announced today he will support Sen. Barack Obama for president.

"I think we can restore that respect but we need a president who can reintroduce America to the world and reintroduce America to itself," Leahy, chairman of the Senate judiciary committee, said.

"My endorsement in opposition to either Sen. Clinton or Sen. Edwards, both of whom I know and admire."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius to endorse Obama? (2008-01-17 10:13)

A press conference is scheduled for 2 pm at the statehouse in Topeka, Kansas to announce some prominent Democratic endorsements for Barack Obama.

Could one of these include Gov. Kathleen Sebelius, seen by some as a possible VP pick?

In 2004, Sebelius supported John Kerry's candidacy.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: Barack Obama on Seniors (2008-01-17 14:06)

[EMBED]

South Carolina Primary

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Kansas Dems endorse Barack Obama (2008-01-17 17:20)

Well, it turns out that Gov. Sebelius did not in fact endorse a candidate today. However, a number of Kansas state legislators including the Senate Minority Leader did announce their support for Barack Obama.

Senate Minority Leader Anthony Hensley of Topeka led a group of Democratic legislators today in endorsing U.S. Sen. Barack Obama of Illinois for president.

"My endorsement of Senator Barack Obama is a response to the voters whose voices at the grassroots level have spoken loud and clear as to whom they want their state's legislators to support," Hensley said.

A group of about 20 House and Senate members threw support to Obama during a news conference at the Statehouse in advance of the Feb. 5 presidential caucus for Kansas Democrats.

Senator David Haley, D-Kansas City, said the nation was ready for the kind of leadership demonstrated by Obama.

"Poll after poll, Kansans have shown they are ready for change," Haley said. "As president, Barack Obama will shift our country into a new gear and make the United States a respected leader on the world stage once again."

Obama, U.S. Sen. Hillary Clinton of New York and former U.S. Sen. John Edwards are leading contenders for the party's nomination.

In Kansas, Democrats will hold presidential caucuses in each Senate district across the state. The operation is part of the national process of nominating a Democrat for president, culminating with the Democratic National Convention during August.

OBAMA 08

NEVADA CAUCUS DATE
SATURDAY, JANUARY 19, 11:00 AM

These Nevadans
are going to make history this Saturday by caucusing for
Barack Obama.

Will you join them?

Watch Their Stories and Find Your Caucus Location

The poster features a grid of nine small video thumbnails showing various people and scenes related to the caucus, including a man in a blue shirt, a person on a rooftop, a couple, and a woman speaking.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Reno Gazette-Journal chooses Obama (2008-01-17 19:05)

RENO GAZETTE-JOURNAL

Obama embodies party's vision

Nevada Democrats should caucus for Barack Obama, the freshman U.S. senator from Illinois, to represent them as the party's nominee to run for president of the United States. He has the personal characteristics and political instincts expected of the person who leads this nation.

The Democratic front-runners seeking the favor of Nevadans make strong presidential candidates. New York U.S. Sen. Hillary Clinton has worked to be an excellent public servant and has aimed toward this end for the past 35 years; former North Carolina U.S. Sen. John Edwards' climb up the economic ladder has placed him in a position where he can understand and also aid the middle class.

Clinton, however, continues to struggle under the cloud of her husband, the former President Bill Clinton.

She is challenged to escape the perception that she represents the status quo and that the advisers, the bureaucracy and the baggage from the former president's administration would follow her into the White House — if she were to make it through the November election.

And, although well-meaning and concerned about the welfare of the grass-roots, Edwards does not seem to connect with the Democratic base, and he has not demonstrated the kind of bipartisanship that gets things done.

Obama embodies the political and ideological perspectives that the party projects.

He represents the platform of political unity and workable populist economics that he and party members believe will reinvigorate the economy and solve many of the other problems the nation is facing, such as questions regarding health care, immigration, war, energy independence, the tax structure and particularly the mortgage crisis. Fixing the housing market is critical to restoring our economic health.

One can fairly describe Obama's philosophical optimism and charismatic manner as too idealistic, even a tad dreamy. But he also demonstrates the courage to stand his ground where necessary, willing, for instance, to salute both President John Kennedy and President Ronald Reagan as agents of change in times when the country needed change.

Meanwhile, his background and experience have given him the insight needed to deal with the world in a different way. He knows how to listen and to respond appropriately to questions, propositions and opinions, regardless of whether he agrees.

The Democratic caucus is about looking at the candidates through a lens that is focused on the party and its goals. It also is about looking past the primary season and choosing the individual who can win in November. It must be someone who can unify the nation on domestic issues, successfully uphold its democratic ideals and restore its reputation as a global force.

Obama should be the party's choice.

Nevada Campaign Stops

Town Hall with Barack Obama in Las Vegas

Thursday, January 17, 2008 @ 4:00pm

Las Vegas, NV

Town Hall with Barack Obama in Reno

Friday, January 18, 2008 @ 08:15am

Reno, NV

Town Hall with Barack Obama in Elko

Friday, January 18, 2008 @ 2:30pm

Elko, NV

Rally with Barack Obama in Las Vegas

Friday, January 18, 2008 @ 5:30pm

Las Vegas, NV

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

PromoteYourVote (2008-01-18 06:36:00)

Great news! Congrats to Obama. Another step forward in the campaign.

California Rep. Linda Sanchez endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-18 08:45)

Here is the blog from barackobama.com:

California Congresswoman Linda Sanchez Endorses Barack Obama

by Sam Graham-Felsen

Friday, January 18, 2008 at 06:56 AM

Los Angeles, CA – Congresswoman Linda Sanchez today endorsed Barack Obama for President and released the following statement:

"After much consideration, I am excited to endorse Barack Obama for the Democratic nomination for President. In a talented field, Barack Obama stands out as the best candidate to deliver the change that America desperately needs."

"Since I began serving in Congress five years ago, I have seen the difficulty in bringing fresh ideas to Washington, DC, and to our country. Sadly, great talent and ideas are too often dismissed because those who possessed them were seen as too idealistic, too young, or too unwilling to submit to the same old Washington way of doing things. Senator Obama is the candidate who can change that culture by mobilizing a new generation to get involved in the civic life of our country. He is reinvigorating America by showing us that we all have a stake – and a say – in our democracy and our country's future."

"America faces economic and foreign policy challenges so great that no single person or group of political insiders can solve them. We need to change that. Barack Obama has already shown he can deliver by bringing people together."

"Throughout my career, both before, and in, Congress, I have fought for working families like my own. Families who are working hard, yet still struggling to make ends meet, need a president who knows their struggle. I believe that with Barack Obama, they will have a president that doesn't just understand the difficulties they face, but will stand up and fight for them."

"In the coming days and weeks, I will be talking with my fellow Californians about why I think it's important we vote for Barack Obama on February 5. Beyond that, I look forward to a future of working with President Obama to deliver the change America needs."

Congresswoman Sanchez is serving in her third term representing California's 39th Congressional District which includes parts of Los Angeles, Long Beach, and other communities in Los Angeles County. Sanchez is the co-founder of the House Labor and Working Families Caucus, and she serves on both the Education and Labor Committee as well as the Foreign Affairs Committee. She is the first Latina to serve on the House Judiciary Committee. Prior to coming to Congress, Sanchez served as the Executive Secretary-Treasurer for the Orange County Central Labor Council, AFL-CIO.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

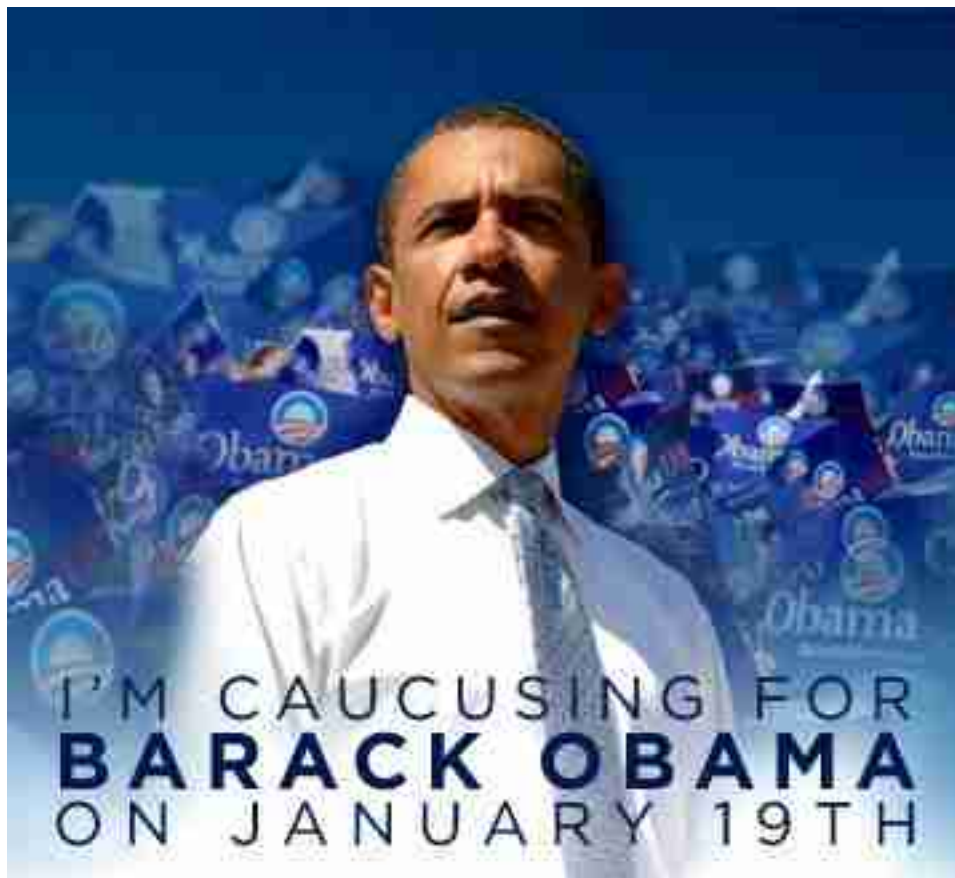

Videos: Campaigning in Nevada (2008-01-18 09:25)

[EMBED]

Michelle Obama and John Kerry in Las Vegas

[EMBED]

Young voters energize campaign

South Carolina Primary

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Michelle Obama: Who's out there (2008-01-18 10:58)

Paul,

turn in this process.

In 24 hours, folks here in Nevada will head into their caucuses for their

But right now, all across the country, thousands of Americans are taking their seat at the table and shaping the outcome of this election.

One of the more than 100,000 donors who have given in 2008 is promising to give again if you make a donation today. We are building up our organization to compete in all fifty states, and your gift will help us reach our goal of 125,000 donors for the year by tomorrow.

Your generosity over the past year was essential in getting us this far. Make a matching donation now and double your impact:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/promise2008>

When you make a matching donation, you'll get to meet the person who is doubling your impact. You'll be matched with a real person, and be able to exchange notes as part of the process.

The stories of real people I've met across the country keep me inspired and energized throughout this process. I had a great day yesterday, traveling across the state with Senator John Kerry and talking to folks in community centers and church basements about the issues that are important to them.

It's those personal stories that motivate Barack and all of us to work as hard as we can to bring about change. We got into this race to bring people back into the process, to help reconnect politics with people's real lives, and it's inspiring to feel that happening.

Here are some of the stories people shared when they had their donations doubled by supporters like you:

Welcome to Barack Obama's network of enthusiastic supporters throughout this country! This is my 4th time donating to Obama's primary election campaign, and each time I've done so, I've gone through the process of reaffirming my conviction that he is our best option to lead this country because of the way that he is able to get people from so many different backgrounds to get behind him and stand together for common causes that affect us all. ... This is the first time that I've been excited about and involved in a presidential campaign, and I'm very happy that you have decided to become involved, too.

- Aja in Illinois

I have not been active in politics since the '60s, when I was very involved as a college student in Senator Robert Kennedy's campaign. I am particularly moved by Barack Obama's ability to bridge the gaps between my generation, now in our own 60's, and the current generation of young voters who have not demonstrated a passion for political activity during the past several presidential elections. Your support is both an acknowledgment of the achievements of the Obama campaign in inspiring this new interest among America's young people, and an investment to assure that their hopes and dreams for the future have an opportunity to be fulfilled through their continuing participation in the work of our democracy during and after an Obama presidency.

- Warren in California

Maybe you're like me. I'm far from an idealist and I'm known as the Practical One amongst my friends and relatives, but I'm ready for a change - and not a little one. I'm supporting Barack Obama because I want not just America, but the world to change. He's convinced me that he can do that better than any other candidate. ... I had been holding back on contributing, but felt I had to make a commitment now at this critical time. I hope you do the same and contribute today.

- Tiffany F.

They're writing to people like you.

Right now, you could give for the first time in 2008 and help us reach 125,000 donors for the year by tomorrow. Make your matching donation now:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/promise2008>

Our future is in our own hands, so we need to do some dreaming.

Together we can send a message to our children about who they are, who they can become, and who we want to be as a nation. And that message will be heard around the world.

The stakes couldn't be higher – for our party, for our country, and for the hopes and dreams of all our families.

We are ready for a better, stronger day. Please act now.

Michelle

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Michelle Obama delights in starring role (2008-01-18 12:15)

Michelle Obama delights in starring role

Suzanne Goldenberg in Las Vegas

Friday January 18, 2008

Guardian Unlimited

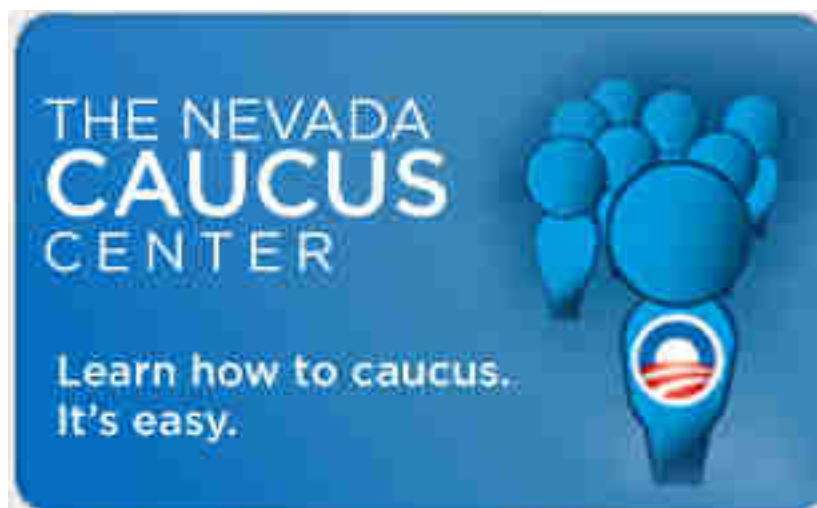

Michelle Obama signs autographs after a town hall meeting in Las Vegas. Photograph: Charles Rex Arbogast/AP

The woman who is introducing Michelle Obama is so excited and nervous she can barely get through the first few sentences. Star power it seems is something Michelle Obama enjoys in her own right.

The gathering was supposed to be an intimate affair - 50 or 60 people, mostly women, gathered in the club house of a condominium complex to celebrate Michelle Obama's 44th birthday yesterday. There was a cake baked in the shape of a map of Nevada and small cupcakes dotted with candy confetti. Annie Moore, a campaign volunteer, who shares a birthday with Obama, was given the honour of introducing her.

Article continues ➡

South Carolina Primary

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Fairy tale? (2008-01-18 12:59)

[EMBED]

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=ICDU6S-qi7A>

This video was made in response to Bill Clinton's assertion that the Obama campaign is a "fairy tale."

Music:

Dream On by Aerosmith

Nevada Campaign Stops

Town Hall with Barack Obama in Elko

Friday, January 18, 2008 @ 2:30pm

Elko, NV

Rally with Barack Obama in Las Vegas

Friday, January 18, 2008 @ 5:30pm

Las Vegas, NV

Action Center

Obama Mobile

OBAMA 08

NEVADA CAUCUS DATE
SATURDAY, JANUARY 19, 11:00 AM

These Nevadans
are going to make history this Saturday by caucusing for
Barack Obama.

Will you join them?

Watch Their Stories and Find Your Caucus Location

The advertisement features a grid of nine small video thumbnails showing various people and scenes related to the campaign, including a man in a suit, a person on a stage, a man at a desk, a man in a vest, a couple, a computer screen, and a woman.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama on Veterans (2008-01-18 14:03)

Plan to keep our Sacred Trust with Veterans

"Keeping faith with those who serve must always be a core American value and a cornerstone of American patriotism. Because America's commitment to its servicemen and women begins at enlistment, and it must never end."

— Barack Obama, Speech in Kansas City, MO, August 21, 2007

At a Glance

- A Sacred Trust
- Help for Returning Service Members
- Improved Mental Health Treatment

Speak your mind and help set the policies that will guide this campaign and change the country.

- Present your ideas

The Problem

Wounded Troops Suffer: The Walter Reed scandal showed that we don't always provide returning service members with the care they deserve.

Veterans Budget Shortfalls: In 2005, a multi-billion dollar VA funding shortfall required Congress to step in and bail out the system.

Benefits Bureaucracy is Broken: There are currently more than 400,000 claims pending with the Veterans Benefits Administration. VA error rates have grown to more than 100,000 cases a year.

There is Shortage of Care for PTSD: Veterans are coming home with record levels of combat stress, but we are not adequately providing for them.

Barack Obama's Plan

A Sacred Trust

Barack Obama believes America has a sacred trust with our veterans. He is committed to creating a 21st Century Department of Veterans' Affairs that provides the care and benefits our nation's veterans deserve.

- Allow All Veterans Back into the VA: One of Obama's first acts will be reversing the 2003 ban on enrolling modest-income veterans, which has denied care to a million veterans.
- Strengthen VA Care: Obama will make the VA a leader of national health care reform so that veterans get the best care possible. He will improve care for polytrauma vision impairment, prosthetics, spinal cord injury, aging, and women's health.

- Combat Homelessness among Our Nation's Veterans: Obama will establish a national "zero tolerance" policy for veterans falling into homelessness by expanding proven programs and launching innovative services to prevent veterans from falling into homelessness.
- Fight Veterans Employment Discrimination: Obama will crack down on employers who commit job discrimination against guardsmen and reservists.

Help for Returning Service Members

Obama will improve the quality of health care for veterans, rebuild the VA's broken benefits system, and combat homelessness among veterans.

- Ensure a Seamless Transition: Obama will demand that the military and the VA coordinate to provide a seamless transition from active duty to civilian life.
- Fully Fund VA Medical Care: Barack Obama will fully fund the VA so it has all the resources it needs to serve the veterans who need it, when they need it. Obama will establish a world-class VA Planning Division to avoid future budget shortfalls.
- Fix the Benefits Bureaucracy: Obama will hire additional claims workers, and improve training and accountability so that VA benefit decisions are rated fairly and consistently. He also will transform the paper benefit claims process to an electronic one to reduce errors and improve timeliness.

Improved Mental Health Treatment

Obama will improve mental health treatment for troops and veterans suffering from combat-related psychological injuries.

- Improve Mental Health Treatment: Obama will improve mental health care at every stage of military service. He will recruit more health professionals, improve screening, offer more support to families and make PTSD benefits claims fairer.
- Improve Care for Traumatic Brain Injury: Obama will establish standards of care for Traumatic Brain Injury, the signature injury of the Iraq war.
- Expand Vet Centers: Obama will expand and strengthen Vet Centers to provide more counseling for vets and their families.

Barack Obama's Record

Record of Advocacy: As a member of the U.S. Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs, Obama passed legislation to improve care and slash red tape for our wounded warriors recovering at places like Walter Reed. He passed laws to help homeless veterans and offered an innovative solution to prevent at-risk veterans from falling into homelessness. Obama led a bipartisan effort in the Senate to try to halt the military's unfair practice of discharging service members for having a service-connected psychological injury. He fought for fair treatment of Illinois veterans' claims and forced the VA to conduct an unprecedented outreach campaign to disabled veterans with lower than-average benefits. Obama passed legislation to stop a VA review of closed PTSD cases that could have led to a reduction in veterans' benefits. He passed an amendment to ensure that all service members returning from Iraq are properly screened for traumatic brain injuries. He introduced legislation to direct the VA and Pentagon to fix disjointed records systems and improve outreach to members of the National Guard and Reserves.

Read the Speech

Read the Speech

 Read the Plan

Join Veterans for Obama:

Action Center

Obama Mobile

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Harvard Crimsom picks Barack Obama (2008-01-18 14:44)

The Harvard Crimsom, the daily campus newspaper of Harvard University, endorsed Barack Obama's nomination yesterday.

Obama for Democratic Nominee

Barack Obama will bring intelligence, sound policy, and change to the White House

Published On Thursday, January 17, 2008 11:44 PM

By THE CRIMSON STAFF

On Tuesday, Feb. 5, Democrats in 22 states, including Massachusetts, will go to the polls to select the Democratic Party's nominee for President of the United States. We hope they select Sen. Barack H. Obama. He has won our unmitigated support because he has the experience, policy proposals, and vision required not only to be president, but to fundamentally alter the way our broken political system functions.

Obama has committed his life to furthering the public good. From starting as a community organizer, to working as a constitutional lawyer and law professor, to serving as a Ill. State Senator, and, finally, as an United States Senator, Obama has achieved before the age of fifty what many would aspire to do in a lifetime. The judgment and perspective he has acquired in these roles are qualities that are necessary in a leader, particularly at the highest levels of government, where elected officials are inundated with questions with profound and lasting repercussions.

On issues of substance, Obama has assembled an impressive array of policies that demonstrate careful thought about the immediate problems facing our country today and those that we will encounter in the long term. Although we do not agree with all of Obama's proposals, every one of his plans is informed, carefully crafted, and thoughtfully considered.

Obama's healthcare program, for instance, guarantees universal healthcare for minors but allows adults to choose whether they are covered. Although we believe that complete universal healthcare is an important policy for our country to aspire to, Obama's plan reaches towards that goal. Its significant efforts to subsidize and provide and universal access to all Americans is unparalleled in the Democratic field, and, perhaps, represents the most pragmatic solution.

While all the major Democratic candidates propose changes in the tax code that will work to rollback tax cuts instituted by President George W. Bush, Obama's proposals stand out because they are targeted to varied and specific populations that need relief the most. These include tax reform for the middle class, tax relief for the poor, universal mortgage credits, tax credits up to $4,000 for college students, and the elimination of income tax for senior citizens earning less than $50,000 per year. This type of targeted, creative relief is exactly what America needs.

Obama also has a practical approach to dealing with immigration. His proposals adhere to the basic formula we believe is best: reducing shoring up borders and reducing the incentives to immigrate illegally while bringing undocumented workers already in the country out of the shadows with a demanding path to citizenship. While Obama is in favor of increasing border enforcement beyond what we feel is necessary—for instance he voted for a border fence—we recognize that limiting the flow of illegal immigrants is a political prerequisite to immigration reform. Finally, we support Obama's commitment to expanding the number of high-skill immigrants to our country through to the H-1B visa program.

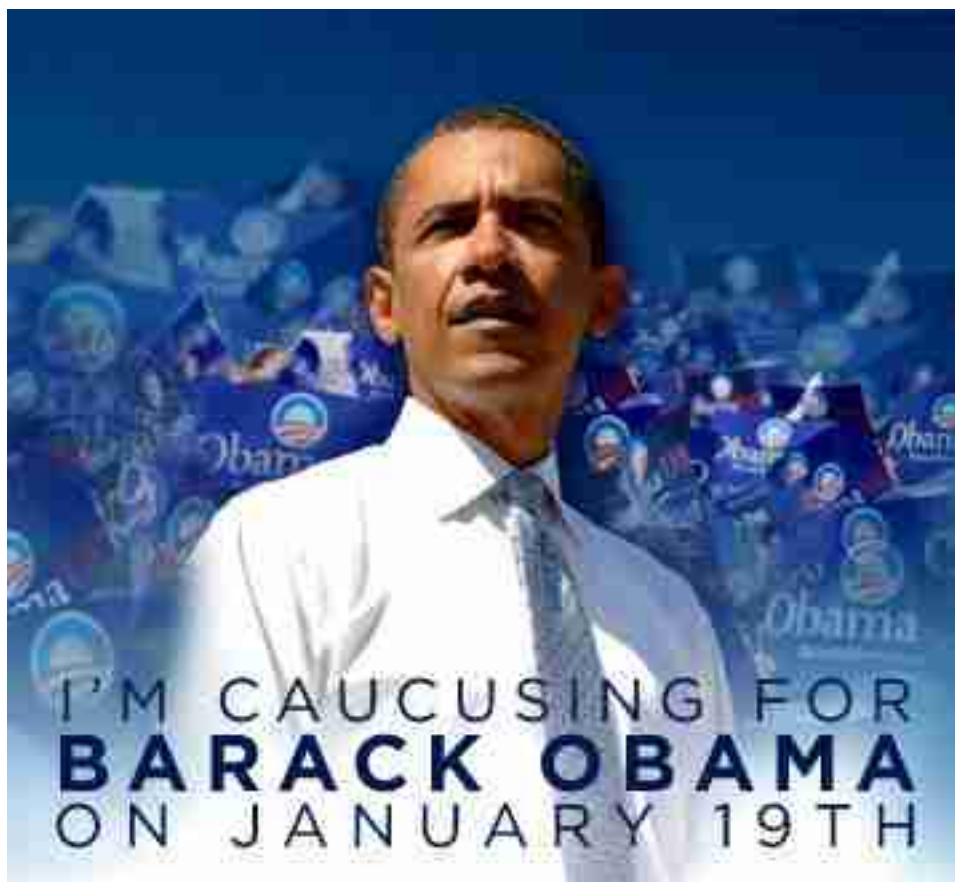

To help reduce carbon emissions and help fight climate change, Obama proposes a cap-and-trade system and the corresponding reduction of emissions to 80 percent below the 1990 levels by 2050. Vaulting the U.S. into a leadership position on climate change is a goal that should figure prominently in any presidential candidate's decision-making. Obama has shown that he cares about the issue and will take it to the White House as a high priority if elected.

Obama cares deeply about education, and he has a holistic plan to reform the entire system, from infant healthcare through higher education. Highlights of his plan include reforming No Child Left Behind, addressing the high rate of dropouts, and quadrupling funding for Early Head Start programs that form the youngest generation of students. We believe Obama's emphasis on increased funding for public education and his tax credit for higher education are prime steps to take in addressing our nation's educational woes.

Finally, but perhaps most importantly, we wholeheartedly support Obama's opposition to the war in Iraq. Obama has consistently taken a stand against the war since its inception, and his commitment to bringing the troops home is commendable. Obama has the vision and know how to lead our nation out of the conflagration in Iraq as smoothly as possible and in a way that begins to restore our international standing and credibility.

Various critics have voiced concerns that Obama is too ambitious and inexperienced to be the next president of the United States. We disagree. Obama's candidacy reflects a lack of political maneuvering and instead is based on a desire to see dramatic change in the political system. And what Sen. Obama might lack in political experience, he makes up with sound judgment, intelligence, charisma, and a personable and bipartisan demeanor. Furthermore, in office he will surround himself with some of the smartest and most experienced advisors in the world.

Obama represents an opportunity for a Democratic nominee who represents the value of service, intelligence, and judgment, and, most of all, an opportunity for real change, unburdened by favors owed and ideals lost. He deserves your vote.

South Carolina Primary

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Roland Martin: Voters win as caucus challenge knocked down (2008-01-18 15:21)

(CNN) – This year's presidential contest already has sparked massive voter interest in Iowa and New Hampshire, and for those of us who are embarrassed by America's low voter turnout the last few election cycles, it is something wonderful to watch.

Roland S. Martin says that special interests trying to score political points shouldn't keep Americans from voting.

So thank goodness a federal judge in Nevada didn't do damage to this excitement by siding with the state's teachers union, which filed a shocking lawsuit eight days before Saturday's caucuses in a clear effort to dilute the voting strength of working-class people.

When Democratic officials in the Western state wanted to have their voice heard in the presidential primary season, they decided nearly a year ago to create nine at-large caucus sites so thousands of workers in the gambling hotels along the Las Vegas Strip could cast ballots.

Because they work 24 hours a day and Saturday is the busiest day of the week for the state's biggest economic engine, they would have no shot at going home to caucus and get back to work in time.

The Democratic National Committee approved the plan in May, and virtually nothing was said about the changes by anyone.

That is until the 60,000-strong Culinary Workers Union Local 226 endorsed Sen. Barack Obama for president.

The largest and most organized union in the state, the Culinary Workers Union could play a large role in determining who wins the state. All the Democratic candidates fought hard for its endorsement as well as the vast resources the union pours into campaigns. Its decision was seen as a huge boost to Obama and a major blow to Sen. Hillary Clinton.

Then, three days later, the 28,000-member Nevada State Education Association chose to get its lawyers involved, filing the suit on behalf of six state residents. The rationale? The at-large caucuses would give the casino employees an unfair advantage since other workers couldn't caucus at their jobs.

The teachers union hasn't officially endorsed anyone, but several of its high-ranking officers are backing Clinton, and the suit was seen as an effort to squash her opponent's biggest political "get."

The senator from New York and former President Clinton steadfastly argued they had nothing to do with the suit, that it was all up by the teachers, but in their talking points, they were siding with the teachers' suit.  Watch as ex-President Clinton lashes out at a reporter over the lawsuit »

In fact, after the ruling, the Clinton campaign said: "While we were not involved in this lawsuit and have always said that we would play by the rules that we're given, it has always been our hope that every Nevadan should have equal access and opportunity to participate in the caucus. Make no mistake – the current system that inhibits some shift workers from being able to participate, while allowing others to do so, would seem to benefit other campaigns. More importantly it is unfair."

Here's the rub, and it boils down to one thing – politics.

The teachers union and the Clinton campaign said nothing about these caucuses before the Obama endorsement. Clinton officials were holding out hope they would get it, and if so, those at-large caucuses would be like holding an ace up their sleeves on Election Day. Do you actually think their "fairness" argument would have been made with the endorsement? Yeah, right.

Let me be clear: This is not about Hillary Clinton, Obama or even John Edwards. It's about democracy, and wanting people to do what far too many Americans take for granted: vote.

I'm tired of these two-faced politicians and Democratic-leaning hacks run down Republicans with charges of voter suppression, and the Democrats and one of their biggest base of supporters – a teachers union – turn around and do the same.

Frankly, I don't care who the culinary union backed. If it had backed Clinton and the Obama or Edward camps encouraged this stunt, I would be all over them as well.

Remember, the Clintons joined a chorus of Democrats who yelled, kicked and screamed against Republicans about alleged massive voter fraud and voter suppression in 2000 and 2004. (That was a bit disingenuous considering Vice President Al Gore was trying to get military ballots thrown out to help his cause in Florida in 2000.)

These kinds of pathetic actions by so-called believers in democracy are why so many people are sick and tired of politics. We have witnessed both parties claim on one hand they want an open voting system that encourages, not discourages, people from voting.

Americans love to criticize elections in other nations that we don't think are done aboveboard. We tell Pakistan that there should be fair and free elections, and we denounce Robert Mugabe in Zimbabwe for his strong-armed tactics to keep the opposition party away from the polls.

Is my comparison too harsh? No. They do it with guns. We do it with lawyers.

It's time that we, the people, let unions, political parties or anyone else know that we will fight like the dickens for the right to vote and won't be obstructed by some special interest looking to score a cheap political point.

✕

✕

IFRAME: 826554

Roland S. Martin is a nationally award-winning journalist and CNN contributor. Martin is studying to receive his master's degree in Christian communications at Louisiana Baptist University, and he is the author of "Listening to the Spirit Within: 50 Perspectives on Faith." You can read more of his columns at <http://www.rolandmartin.com/>.

Action Center
Obama Mobile

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Sen. Barack Obama discusses the mortgage meltdown in Las Vegas and how government needs to stand more for ordinary citizens rather than Wall Street moguls. Barack is also shown at Stand for Change rallies firing up his supporters. He adopts a "Vegas" style in keeping with the audience cracking a few jokes at the expense of his opponents!

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Action Center
Obama Mobile

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama tackles housing crisis in Las Vegas (2008-01-18 16:39)

In 24 hours, folks here in Nevada will see Sen. Barack Obama discuss the mortgage meltdown in Las Vegas and how government needs to stand more for ordinary citizens rather than Wall Street moguls.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Action Center
Obama Mobile

X

Barack wins first-ever Nickelodeon Kids' Primary (2008-01-18 17:08)

Sen. Barack Obama received 46 % of the 80,000 votes in the "Kids Pick the President" primary held by Nickelodeon.

The votes are in and the kids of America have spoken. Senators John McCain and Barack Obama have won Nickelodeon's first-ever kids' presidential primary election. Nick News' award-winning journalist and host Linda Ellerbee will formally announce the results tonight, Friday, Jan. 18, at 8:00 p.m. (EST/PST) on Nickelodeon.

[...]

"What better way to explain to kids how the primary system works than to actually hold a primary for them?" said Ellerbee, Host and Executive Producer of Nick News. "This year we have given kids a voice early on and allowed them to become part of the election process from the very beginning. I am thrilled to see that so many kids have come out to exercise their right to vote.”

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Rep. George Miller: Why I support Senator Obama (2008-01-18 18:04)

From barackobama.com/blog:

Why I support Senator Obama

by Representative George Miller

, Friday, January 18, 2008 at 03:32 PM

Rep. George Miller (D-CA) has represented the 7th District of California in the East Bay of San Francisco since 1975 and serves as chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee.

 I have served in the Congress a long time and I have seen a lot of different people throw their hats into the presidential ring. I am really excited by what I see in Senator Barack Obama and I am proud to support him for president. The energy and enthusiasm he brings to the democratic process is exciting. But more than that – it is necessary to strengthen our country and move us beyond the very harmful and deeply cynical politics of George W. Bush.

Our country desperately needs to move in a new direction and I feel strongly that Barack Obama has the experience, the courage, and the passion to lead us there. Obama is the candidate who is most committed to making positive change for Americans today and the generations ahead. Californians concerned with health care and education, with ending the war, and with restoring our justice system have every reason to support Barack Obama. Californians who care about unifying our great nation have every reason to support Barack Obama. And Californians who want to continue to bring young people into our political process have every reason to support Barack Obama.

Obama is bringing the country together, tackling the issues that matter most to working people, women, youth, and to the future of the planet. He is bold and he has vision. He is ready to lead and ready to govern. The question for the rest of us is whether we are ready to do the work that is necessary to get Barack Obama elected president. I am ready. And I believe Californians are ready. I share his hope and his burning desire for change.

If you're from California, check out CA.BarackObama.com for info on how you can get involved locally and help Barack win in the Golden State.

Action Center
Obama Mobile

Nevada Caucus – 11 am , Saturday, Jan. 19

South Carolina Primary

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Barack Obama on the Family (2008-01-18 20:24)

From barackobama.com:

Strengthening Families and Communities

“U.S. Sen. Barack Obama (D-Ill.) preached with grace and gratitude about fatherhood to a crowd of 4,000 at Christ Universal Temple, an important church in Chicago’s African-American community. . . . Obama’s tone Sunday was respectful, his words colorblind. . . . Pressed on why he risked this sermon, with its potential for backlash from African-Americans, Obama said he knew his audience understood that many fathers make enormous sacrifices. . . . His words did, though, apply to many more people than those seated before him in church: fathers of all races, senators and laborers alike.”

— Chicago Tribune, Editorial, June 22, 2005

At a Glance

- Promote Responsible Fatherhood
- Help Low-Income Workers Climb the Job Market
- Support Low-Income Families
- Fight Mortgage Fraud

Speak your mind and help set the policies that will guide this campaign and change the country.

- Present your ideas

The Problem

Strong families raise successful children and keep communities together. While Senator Obama does not believe that we can simply legislate healthy families, good parenting skills or economic success, he does believe we can eliminate roadblocks that parents face and provide tools to help them succeed. A husband and father of two, Senator Obama has promoted strong families in the Senate.

Barack Obama’s Plan

Promote Responsible Fatherhood

Since 1960, the number of American children without fathers has quadrupled, from 6 million to more than 24 million. A healthy relationship between children and their fathers is important to good development. Children without fathers in their lives are five times more likely to live in poverty and commit crime, nine times more likely to drop out of school, and 20 times more likely to end up in prison. Senator Obama introduced the Responsible Fatherhood and Healthy Families Act with Senator Evan Bayh (D-IN) to remove some of the government penalties on married families and support fathers already trying to do the right thing, while also cracking down on men trying to avoid their parental responsibilities. The bill provides fathers with an expansion of the Earned Income Tax Credit. It also would increase child support enforcement and strengthen domestic violence prevention services.

Help Low-Income Workers Climb the Job Market

Transitional jobs are a promising way to help chronically unemployed people break into the workplace. This approach places participants into temporary, subsidized wage-paying jobs. It also offers mentoring and social services designed to address work-blocking problems like personal and family conflicts. Once they find entry-level work, low-income workers often are unable to break into middle-class jobs. Bridge programs can help by partnering the federal government with employers and community-based organizations to identify job opportunities, develop customized training programs, and place low-income employees in better jobs. Senator Obama introduced legislation to devote $50 million for transitional and bridge employment programs for hard-to-employ groups like homeless veterans, children aging out of foster care, and people returning to communities after a time in prison.

Support Low-Income Families

The Child Tax Credit allows parents to receive $1,000 per child and has been an important financial resource for working families. Unfortunately, the credit is skewed so that many families who need it the most cannot get it. Because of artificially high income limits that are indexed to inflation every year, parents that work full time at minimum wage are not eligible for the credit. As a result, nearly 17 million low-income children get less than the full credit. Senator Obama worked with Senator Olympia Snowe (R-ME) to introduce legislation lowering the income limit so that 600,000 more families can benefit. Senator Obama also introduced legislation to temporarily expand the Child Tax Credit for low-income parents affected by Hurricane Katrina. Senator Obama succeeded in passing legislation to extend tax credits for military families by allowing service members deployed to war zones to apply their non-taxable combat pay toward the Earned Income Tax Credit.

Fight Mortgage Fraud

The FBI is predicting that mortgage fraud may become a criminal epidemic. In these elaborate schemes, criminals use identity theft or face-to-face scams to gain control of victims' homes. The offenders then apply for hefty mortgage loans, take the cash, then disappear, robbing homeowners of their property and threatening the financial health of the most vulnerable members of society. Senator Obama introduced the first federal bill to combat mortgage fraud. The STOP FRAUD Act criminalizes mortgage fraud, authorizes $10 million more for anti-mortgage fraud programs and requires the FBI to update bankers on fraudulent activity in a formal, systematic way. The bill also would authorize increased federal funding for mortgage counseling.

Action Center
Obama Mobile

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

En espanol

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Atlanta Journal-Constitution endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-18 21:32)

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution, a daily newspaper out of Atlanta, Georgia, has endorsed Barack Obama as the Democratic nominee.

For Democrats, Obama the pick
The Atlanta Journal-Constitution
Published on: 01/20/08

According to a recent Gallup poll, almost three out of four Americans are dissatisfied with how things are going in our country, with just 24 percent believing we're headed in the right direction. The deep discontent reflected in those numbers have made Democrats optimistic about their party's chances of electing one of their own to the White House in November.

However, the situation represents more than a mere opportunity; it imposes an obligation on the Democratic Party to offer the country a candidate who can inspire the American people, a candidate capable of addressing the many critical challenges, foreign and domestic, that will confront our next president and commander in chief. COMING NEXT WEEK

The AJC editorial board will publish its endorsement in the Georgia Republican primary next Sunday.

At times of crisis, this country has always been blessed with strong, even visionary, leadership. But that has not been true for the last seven years. To the contrary, on almost every front we are suffering the consequences of slapdash, divisive leadership.

Economically, the country appears to be sliding into a recession; internationally, our reputation on the world stage has perhaps never been lower. Militarily, our men and women in uniform have been burdened with responsibilities that they lack the manpower to carry out over the long term, and with the aging of the Baby Boom generation and a soaring national debt, our financial obligations likewise threaten to overwhelm the resources we have committed to meet them.

In Hillary Clinton, John Edwards and Barack Obama, the Democrats offer Georgia voters three candidates with the experience, leadership and character to begin to turn this country around. However, only two of those candidates now harbor realistic hopes for the nomination.

Edwards, a former senator from neighboring North Carolina, has used his campaign to voice the growing anxiety and fear of many in America's working and middle classes. It's an important message, as recent days have confirmed, and with economic troubles ahead, the issues that Edwards has highlighted could prove central in determining the outcome of the general election.

However, judging from the reaction of primary voters, Edwards' impassioned, crusading style may be better suited to a House or Senate race than a race for the presidency. He remains a distant third in most polls, and his hopes for the nomination no longer seem realistic.

That leaves Sen. Hillary Clinton of New York and Sen. Barack Obama of Illinois. On questions of policy, not much separates the two. Their approaches toward health care, tax policy, foreign relations and the suppression of Islamic terrorism vary only at the margins.

(In fact, that similarity probably accounts for the dismaying pettiness of the disputes between the Obama and Clinton camps in recent days. Campaigns have to argue, and with little of real import separating them, they are now arguing over the little things and in some cases the imaginary things.)

The question, then, is which of the two candidates would be more able to implement the policies they agree upon.

Throughout the campaign, Clinton has argued that she has the better grasp of official Washington, which is probably true. Through hard work and intelligence, she has built an admirable record of success as a senator that has impressed even some Republican colleagues.

Unfortunately, the opposite is true as well — official Washington also has a better grasp on Clinton.

Perhaps burned by her experience in her husband's administration, she has too often chosen to play within the Washington system rather than dare to challenge its assumptions. And that's not the kind of leadership needed at the moment.

The prime example of that instinct was probably Clinton's vote last year in favor of naming Iran's Revolutionary Guard as a terrorist group. While that stance kept her in good standing in certain Washington circles, it also fed what at the time was a rising push toward military confrontation with Iran that was unnecessary and dangerous. Even voters willing to set aside Clinton's earlier vote giving President Bush authority to invade Iraq were taken aback when she seemed to have repeated that mistake.

For reasons largely outside her control, Clinton is also one of the more reviled figures in American politics. That sentiment is unfair and irrational, and she has done little to deserve it. But it exists nonetheless, and it would limit the amount of public support she would be able to rally as president.

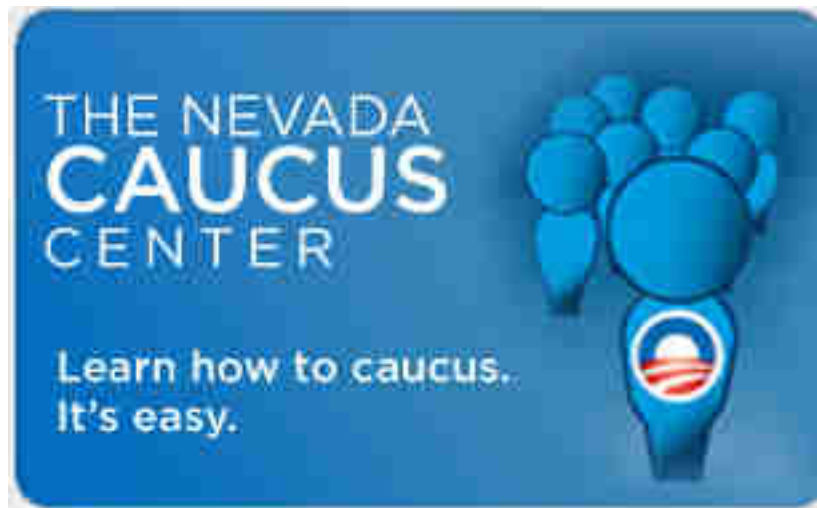

Obama, on the other hand, has demonstrated an appeal across many of the lines that have divided America. That is a critically important attribute, because the scale of changes that must be made to correct America's course cannot be accomplished with majorities of 50 percent plus one.

Different moments in history require different types of leaders, and part of the art of picking a president is matching the person to the challenge and to the time. So while both Clinton and Obama would make very good presidents, Obama is the person; this is his time.

— Jay Bookman and Cynthia Tucker for the editorial board

Action Center
Obama Mobile

South Carolina Primary

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

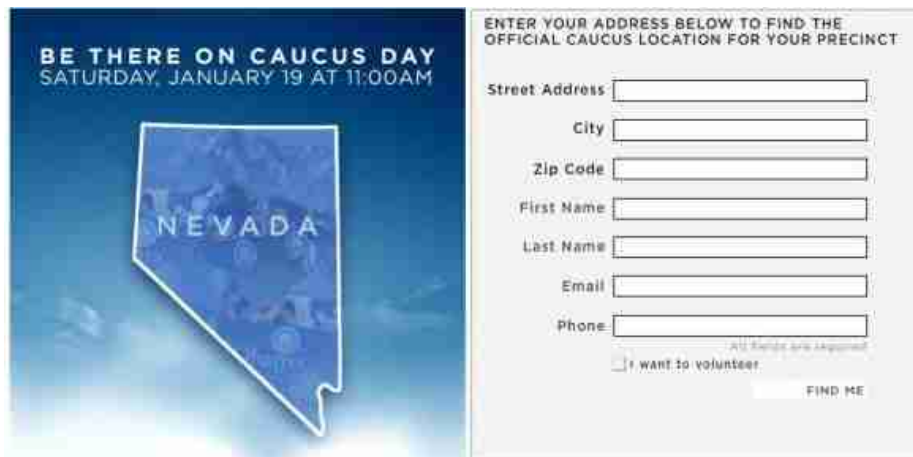

Nevadans: Find Your Caucus Location (2008-01-19 00:41)

From nevada.barackobama.com:

Nevadans: Find Your Caucus Location

by Zach Edwards

Friday, January 18, 2008 at 11:12 PM

BE THERE ON CAUCUS DAY
SATURDAY, JANUARY 19 AT 11:00AM

NEVADA

ENTER YOUR ADDRESS BELOW TO FIND THE OFFICIAL CAUCUS LOCATION FOR YOUR PRECINCT Street Address

City

Zip Code

First Name

Last Name

Email

Phone

All Fields are Required

☐ I WANT TO volunteer

FIND ME

Click to find your caucus location

Three Easy Things You Can Do to Make Change Happen

1. Caucus TODAY January 19th at 11:00 AM. You must be present and on time to participate!
2. Get directions to your local caucus location by calling 1-888-OBAMA-NV (1-888-622-6268)
3. Double your power. Bring a neighbor to caucus!

Important Caucus Information:

1. You can register to vote AT YOUR CAUCUS.
2. If you are currently registered non-partisan or Republican, you can change your registration AT YOUR CAUCUS and participate.
3. You may bring your child or call us for help with child care.
4. If you need a ride, call us at 1-888-OBAMA-NV (1-888-622-6268)
5. If you are 17 but will be 18 by November 4, 2008, you can caucus!
6. Nevada college students are welcome too!

Stand for Change Today!

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Varied endorsements for Barack Obama (2008-01-19 08:47)

Sen. Barack Obama is receiving support from across the diverse spectrum of the nation. Doreen Yellow Bird, a Native American columnist backs the Illinois senator's candidacy:

Finally, a woman or a black person may be president. I like them both; however, Barack Obama is my choice. Hillary Clinton does have her forces and will be hard to beat, however. And that will be a story for the year to come. Time to stoke the fire and start a new kettle of events for 2008.

LGBT advocate Dr. Jerry L. Cade, who is co-founder and co-medical director of Nevada AIDS Research supports Obama.

For many reasons, I believe that the best hope for the LGBT and HIV/AIDS communities is Senator Barack Obama. In fact, the best hope for this country and the planet is Senator Barack Obama.

[...]

Fighting HIV/AIDS needs forethought, leadership, and courage. We need a president who is willing to take the lead in AIDS prevention and treatment. We cannot wait for someone to come around to supporting an issue once everyone else is already there. We need a creative, visionary leader who will implement whatever changes are needed to prevent further HIV infection. We need Senator Obama.

Script writer, speech writer and Huffington Post columnist Matt Littman writes:

Ask yourself this:

Of the current candidates on both sides of the aisle, which candidate would make you proudest if they were to become President of the United States?

Which candidate would best help us turn the page on the political wars of the last 28 years?

Which candidate would best put the Bush years behind us and begin a new era?

Which candidate will have an open government, and not hold secret meetings with the energy titans, with the pharmaceutical companies, or with the health care lobbyists?

Which candidate has the confidence and the will to end the era of torture and spying on American citizens?

Which candidate will speak to our better nature?

When you consider these issues, and weigh the candidates remaining on both the Democratic and Republican sides, there really is no choice, is there? Barack Obama is the best candidate to bring about the changes that we need.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Sacramento Bee endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-19 09:26)

The Sacramento Bee announced its endorsement of Barack Obama today.

"The Bee Recommends Obama"

"He could bridge political divides"

It is beginning to look as if the Democratic Party will break historic barriers this year no matter how the party's contest for the presidential nomination concludes. If the nominee is Sen. Hillary Clinton of New York or Sen. Barack Obama of Illinois, as seems likely, either a woman or an African American will be a major party's nominee for the first time.

The two leading candidates give California Democrats and independents voting Feb. 5 an interesting choice. Both have been senators for a relatively short time, but both also have other attributes that give them unique perspectives on the country and on the job they seek.

As first lady for eight years, Clinton served as a serious policy adviser to the president, not only on health care, where she famously failed, but on other matters as well. On free trade and reforming welfare, she and Bill Clinton faced down their friends and allies to do what was right, and Hillary Clinton is still paying the price today with some in the left wing of her party.

The Clinton years were tainted by scandal, and Hillary Clinton took her share of hits for those problems. Some were deserved; some were not. Dealing with the constant accusations no doubt toughened her. That toughness is one thing we admire most about her.

But those battle scars are also evidence of a troubling trend in American politics that would likely only intensify if Clinton were to become president. Since her husband's first term, politics has become increasingly polarized, the partisan fights more brutal. The Clintons have been both aggressors and victims in those wars.

Barack Obama, in contrast, would be a fresh face with a new approach and no old scores to settle. His ascension would represent a clean break with the generation that has fought and re-fought the Vietnam War and the cultural upheavals that wracked the 1960s.

As a former community organizer, civil rights lawyer and state legislator, Obama is familiar with real issues people face, and he has worked to solve them on the ground. As president, he says, he would cross party lines to find solutions to the nation's most vexing problems, from health care to global warming. There is reason to believe he could do that. His inspiring personal story and his communications skills could nudge Americans of all ages, but especially the young, to give more of themselves to aid the less fortunate in their communities.

Unlike Clinton, Obama was an early opponent of the war in Iraq, because he thought it was a strategic blunder that would only hurt the United States. His credibility on that issue would position him well to end the occupation quickly while also giving him the flexibility to extend it if necessary to avoid shedding the blood of more innocent Iraqis.

Obama's lack of experience at the highest levels of government might lead to mistakes. But that risk is smaller, in our view, than the benefit of moving on from the Bushes and the Clintons, who have been in the White House for longer than some young voters have been alive. That is why Obama is the best choice for the Democratic nomination for president.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2008-01-19 09:51)

Nevada's Elko Daily Free Press picked Barack Obama for the Democratic nomination.

"Free Press Endorses Romney, Obama"

...We finally concluded former Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney and Illinois Sen. Barack Obama are the most likely to be successful at solving Nevada's major issues that have been festering under a dysfunctionally divided Congress.

...The Democratic candidates all plan to withdraw from Iraq as quickly as possible and dramatically increase spending on social programs...

...However, we believe the one most likely to accomplish his goals is Sen. Barack Obama.

...We urge all eligible voters to get involved in the caucuses and to stand up for their beliefs.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Nevada Caucus Today (2008-01-19 10:20)

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama finishes strong second in Nevada (2008-01-19 14:40)

Sen. Barack Obama beat expectations, unless you consider a single poll last week, and will probably come in about 5 percentage points behind Hillary Clinton in Nevada.

Hillary was strongly supported by the Democratic establishment. It is one of her strongest states next to New York. If Barack wins South Carolina, I think he will win the nomination. I've been saying since April 2007 that SC and the South is the key to an Obama victory and I still think this is the case:

The Importance of the African American Vote

Obama Campaign Strategy

Should Obama target the South?

South Carolina Primary

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Upcoming Obama Events in South Carolina (2008-01-19 16:19)

Rock Hill Town Hall Meeting with MA Gov. Deval Patrick, former MS Gov. Ray Mabus, and former Gov. Hodges

Sunday, January 20, 2008 @ 2:15pm

Rock Hill, SC

A Conversation with Michelle Obama

Sunday, January 20, 2008 @ 2:30pm

Columbia, SC

Stand Together for Change with Barack Obama

Sunday, January 20, 2008 @ 5:00pm

Columbia, SC

Action Center

Obama Mobile

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Hold the presses: Obama wins delegate vote in Nevada (2008-01-19 18:21)

Well, it looks like despite losing the popular vote, Barack Obama has won the delegate vote in Nevada with 13 to Clinton's 12.

Delegates are of course the votes that count at the Democratic Convention.

Campaign manager David Plouffe also reports some anomalies in the caucus process.

Statement from Obama campaign manager David Plouffe...

We currently have reports of over 200 separate incidents of trouble at caucus sites, including doors being closed up to thirty minutes early, registration forms running out so people were turned away, and ID being requested and checked in a non-uniform fashion. This is in addition to the Clinton campaign's efforts to confuse voters and call into question the at-large caucus sites which clearly had an affect on turnout at these locations. These kinds of Clinton campaign tactics were part of an entire week's worth of false, divisive, attacks designed to mislead caucus-goers and discredit the caucus itself.

We will investigate all of these thoroughly and would encourage anyone who had concern about actions at the caucus sites to call (866) 675-2008.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Annalist (2008-01-20 11:54:00)

Yesterday, while at her polling place in Las Vegas, my friend called me by cell phone just as she finished registering. She was told that she could go home. It didn't sound right to me, so I told her to stay to caucus. She did. I am going to email the telephone number to report suspicious incidents.

I must comment on another issue. I have commented on numerous blogs the fact that Like Geo. W. Bush, the Clintons' don't seem to realize the impact of their words. Bush in the casual use of the word, "Crusade." Bill Clinton, the "Fairytale-teller," himself, and Hillary's remarks about Dr. King. Now, after having won Nevada, she said, "I guess this is how the "West" was won. Having relied heavily on a large Hispanic turn-out for her, after she won, she insulted them. Doesn't she realize that Nevada is part of the "west?" The very word "Nevada" is a Spanish word which means, "snow capped." And by the way, the west was not won with votes, but by guns. If this remark is brought to her attention, I'll bet dollars to dough-nuts, she will blame someone else for her "loose use" of the language.

St. Petersburg Times endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-20 10:21)

Although the Democratic candidates are not campaigning in Florida, Sen. Barack Obama got the endorsement of the St. Petersburg Times along with the Pensacola News Journal, Daytona Beach News Journal, Bradenton Herald and Tampa Tribune.

Here is the St. Petersburg Times endorsement:

Obama for Democrats

A Times Editorial

Published January 20, 2008

After Florida's shabby treatment by the Democratic presidential candidates, you could not blame voters if they decided to sit out the state's Jan. 29 primary. However, this contest is too important to pass on. Florida Democrats face a historic choice, one they will tell their children and grandchildren about some day. Even though the national party has stripped the state of its delegates as punishment for moving up its primary, our votes cannot be denied. They will help determine whether the 2008 Democratic nominee will be an African-American or a woman. Either would be a first.

No wonder many voters are torn, wishing they didn't have to choose one over the other. It is a close call, but as much as we admire Hillary Clinton, we recommend Barack Obama for president in this primary vote. (John Edwards is still actively campaigning.)

Clinton, of course, is the safer choice, largely because she has been in the national eye for 16 years. If anything, we may know too much about her. She bills herself as the candidate of competence and experience who is "ready to lead from day one." However, like many voters who have cast ballots so far, we find Obama to be a more promising choice and a more inspiring voice in these troubled times. His message of hope and change has resonated with voters, including independents and young people. He speaks of the kind of change many Americans yearn for in their politics and their government - not just turning the page on George W. Bush's presidency but changing something more fundamental in Washington.

What separates these two candidates are not the issues, where their differences are minimal, but the values and vision they would bring to the presidency and the kind of political character they have displayed so far.

In Clinton, we see the past; in Obama, we see a fresh start. Clinton is a divisive political figure; Obama's appeal transcends racial and party lines. She exudes competence; he radiates optimism. She came to the campaign with a sense of entitlement; he came to it with a sense of possibilities. She can be evasive, even misleading; he can be refreshingly candid about his own shortcomings and his political mistakes. She represents business as usual in politics; he at least offers the hope of something better.

We should keep our feet on the ground and not get swept away by unrealistic expectations for Obama, either as a candidate or as a president. Could a senator with a down-the-line liberal voting record find common ground with conservative Republicans? Does he have the political courage to stand up to any of his party's key interest groups? We need to hear less rhetoric about change and more specifics on exactly what changes Obama has in mind and how he would bring them about.

Real change can be disruptive and painful. There is one change, however, that would be neither. After almost 20 years of having a Bush or a Clinton in the White House, it may be that many Americans are ready for a fresh face in the Oval Office. Does the country really want to extend the Bush-Clinton rotation to 28 years? That is not a throw-away question.

Contrary to what some say, tone does matter, sometimes as much as substance. Floridians have only to look to Tallahassee to see how one political leader can make a difference. Republican Gov. Charlie Crist has brought civility to the political debate in the state capital and is practicing the kind of postpartisan leadership that Obama talks about bringing to Washington.

The biggest question about Obama is whether he has the experience and toughness to lead the country in dangerous times. Clinton and her surrogates rarely miss an opportunity to raise doubts about his readiness to assume the enormous responsibilities of the presidency. Apparently, many leading Democrats including Senate colleagues who have endorsed his candidacy don't share those doubts.

They speak of Obama's intellect, instincts, temperament and judgment. While he spoke out against the Iraq war from the start, Clinton's "experience" did not keep her from voting for this disastrous misadventure, or from misrepresenting her position, something she continues to do.

Clinton, a former first lady now serving her second term as a U.S. senator from New York, would bring conventional political experience to the Oval Office. Obama offers a different kind of experience - his "life experience" as the son of a white woman from Kansas and a black father from Kenya, as a Harvard law graduate who passed up a U.S. Supreme Court clerkship to work as a community organizer in Chicago's poor neighborhoods, as a state senator and since 2005 as a U.S. senator from Illinois.

Another Illinois politician was elected president with even less experience than Obama. He was a former state legislator and one-term congressman named Abraham Lincoln. We don't suggest that Obama is a Lincoln, only that Washington experience should not be the only standard for measuring a candidate's qualifications to be president.

We don't appreciate the Obama campaign memo spinning the Florida primary, which the Democratic candidates are boycotting, as a non-event that will have "no bearing" on the nomination contest. However, we don't think pique should be the basis for our choice. The Times recommends Barack Obama in the Jan. 29 Democratic primary.

Source: St. Petersburg Times

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Get Out The Vote drive fires up in South Carolina (2008-01-20 12:24)

South Carolina supporters of Barack Obama are pushing with just a week left before the polls for a big turnout on Jan. 26.

Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick, former Mississippi Gov. Ray Mabus and former South Carolina Gov. Jim Hodges rally Obama supporters to get out the vote.

Former SC Dem. Party chief Dick Harpootlian, a Barack Obama supporter, talks about the South Carolina race. [EMBED]

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Tuscaloosa News picks Barack Obama (2008-01-20 14:27)

The Tuscaloosa News in the Feb. 5 state of Alabama has endorsed Barack Obama today as Democratic nominee.

"We endorse McCain, Obama as party nominees"

"On Tuesday, Feb. 5, Alabama voters have an opportunity to help change the course of history by selecting a candidate for president who will redirect the nation to an era of progress, peace and prosperity."

We believe Republican John McCain and Democrat Barack Obama offer the best hope among the candidates for effective, positive leadership.

We disagree with McCain on many issues of domestic policy and we were disappointed to see him strongly back President Bush on this country's tragic and failed course in Iraq.

Yet we feel that McCain stands head and shoulders above the rest of the Republican field in terms of stature, honesty and character. He speaks his mind and doesn't try to hide his positions behind a cloud of rhetoric. He actively engages critics, seeking real dialog on issues.

He is a thoughtful, experienced and intelligent public servant. A level-headed man, he would avoid involving our country in future debacles.

The looming recession will demand a president who is dedicated to fiscal responsibility. McCain has a strong record as a critic of earmarking and a champion of budgetary restraint.

He's tough, smart and shoots straight. He would never dishonor the high office that he seeks.

Obama, at the other end of the age spectrum - he will be 47 on election day, as opposed to McCain's 70 - is a breath of fresh air in American politics. He holds a special appeal to younger voters, who see him as an agent for change from the dreary politics-as-usual in Washington.

At the same time, he has leadership qualities beyond his years. He is a brilliant and persuasive speaker. He is a unifier who honestly hopes to break the capital's partisan gridlock. And while some of his rivals for the nomination have more years of experience, Obama has quickly learned the territory in his relatively short time in Washington.

As a member of the 109th Congress, he co-sponsored the enactment of conventional weapons control and transparency legislation. He made official trips to Eastern Europe, the Middle East, and Africa.

In the 110th Congress, he sponsored legislation on lobbying and electoral fraud, climate change, nuclear terrorism and care for returned military personnel.

As a candidate for president, he has advocated ending the Iraq War, increasing energy independence, and providing universal health care as major items on his agenda.

There is much to be said for (and against) his main challenger Hillary Clinton. But after four years of George H.W. Bush as president, followed by eight years of Bill Clinton, followed by eight years of George W. Bush, most Americans would prefer a fresh face in the White House, someone who can move away from the cycle of partisan warfare that these two families have furthered.

That person, we believe, is Barack Obama.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Lynn (2008-01-20 22:04:00)

I am glad to see this! I do a question/comment about CNN - how come there is so much Clinton coverage (esp on Blitzer's program) - I actually had to switch to FOX to see something about Obama ?! Is anyone else finding that CNN is overly heavy on Clinton coverage & light on Obama??

Lynn (2008-01-20 23:15:00)

Hello,

Is there a place where Obama supporters can talk? I am very disturbed by a post which indicates unfair campaign behavior by Clinton supporters. If true, this should be given some media coverage! I found it here - http://blog.washingtonpost.com/the-trail/2008/01/20/after_nevada_caucuses_charges_1.html

First issue was it took me several months of arguing and fighting to be the Temporary Chair for my precinct. The argument with the DEM party began in July and wasn't decided until late Nov. The party had placed two different Clinton supporters in the position on two different occasions, but I finally prevailed. The Party rules dictated no campaign signs inside our caucus sites and advised us to arrive around 10 or 10:30, noting the venue would be open at 9:30. I arrived at 9:30AM and found "Clinton Central" - signs, balloons, food, etc. had been placed just inside the doorway of the caucus site. Along with the "things" were several women wearing Clinton gear and acting very smug. They informed me they had been there since 7:30AM! I asked them to remove their signage and one of them responded, "I WILL REMOVE IT WHEN SOMEONE FROM THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY COMES HERE AND TELLS ME TO." Funny thing, my Alternate Chair was standing with this woman and said nothing. My caucus secretary, called Dem HQ and relayed their ruling that the signage must come down. The woman again responded, "I WILL REMOVE IT WHEN SOMEONE FROM THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY COMES HERE AND TELLS ME TO." I showed the woman my Temp Chair badge and told her this was not a Hillary Clinton event and that no candidate at this caucus was going to be permitted to display signage anywhere but that signage worn on one's body, per the rules of the Democratic Party. The woman dismissed me and stated for the third time, "I WILL REMOVE IT WHEN SOMEONE FROM THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY COMES HERE AND TELLS ME TO." Shortly thereafter an official stopped by with a police officer and ordered the woman to remove the signage. She complied. The police officer stayed for a few minutes and made sure the signage was taken down and stayed down so my volunteers and I could set up our registration tables. All of this occurred under the watchful eye of a my Clinton supporting Alternate Chair, who remained silent throughout the ordeal. The other puzzle is that the Dem Party provided me with 75 ballots for my entire precinct and refused to provide anymore. My Kucinich Volunteer tried on two occasions to obtain preference cards and was told no. I went down to DEM HQ two nights before the caucus, after a confirming phone call, to obtain more preference cards and was also told no. Now for the puzzle - the majority of the first 75 attendees to my caucus, all who arrived before 10:30AM were Clinton supporters! I was lucky enough to plan ahead and provided an extra 150 preference cards made at my own expense, much to the surprise and chagrin of those early arriving Clinton supporters. Fact is I was able to provide preference cards not only to all of the my caucus goers, but also provided preference cards to other precincts at my caucus, who ran out. I also provided plain paper to them as well to use as preference cards when the cards ran out. I knew from my dealings with the party between July and Nov that this caucus was geared toward one candidate which is why I made absolutely sure my caucus would be prepared. Last issue, after the caucus, ALL THE EXTRA PREFERENCE CARDS FROM MY CAUCUS WERE TAKEN BY A HILLARY SUPPORTER and supposedly delivered to another venue for their use - THE CLINTON SUPPORTER TOOK THE PREFERENCE CARDS AFTER THE CAUCUS WAS OVER, AFTER 12:40PM!!!! The innocence of me and of other caucus chairs who believed the caucus would be fair and impartial was what the Clinton Campaign and the DEM party were counting on January 19, 2008 and it appears they succeeded in using that innocence and belief to their advantage. I am pleased to report that my precinct was split and Hillary Clinton did not win!! My husband overheard the woman who caused all the signage trouble, ask another Clinton supporter after the caucus, "I thought this was a lock, what happened?"

Posted by: frillymail1017 | January 20, 2008 08:49 PM

Paul Kekai Manansala (2008-01-21 08:48:00)

Have you tried the official blog:

<http://barackobama.com/blog>

Video: Obama in Atlanta and South Carolina (2008-01-21 08:49)

[EMBED]

Barack Obama at the late Dr. Martin Luther King's church [EMBED]

Stand Together rally in Columbia, South Carolina

Action Center

Obama Mobile

X

X

X

X X X

X X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Baltimore Mayor Sheila Dixon endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-21 10:37)

Baltimore Mayor Sheila Dixon endorses Barack Obama

by Sam Graham-Felsen

, Monday, January 21, 2008 at 07:49 AM

BALTIMORE, MD X – Today, Baltimore Mayor Sheila Dixon endorsed Barack Obama for President, citing his commitment to bringing people together to create change that matters for all of America's families.

Mayor Dixon said, "I am proud to support Barack Obama because he is the candidate in this race who has proven he can bring people together to create change that matters for working families. As a community organizer he made life better for the poorest people in Chicago by improving housing and fighting job loss. In the Illinois state senate, he brought people together to pass universal health care for children. And in the United States Senate, he has reached across the aisle to fight the power of special interests on our government. He has a plan to make sure every child has a world-class education and every family has affordable health care, and those are the things that truly matter in people's lives. I am proud to support his campaign."

Senator Barack Obama said, "As the first woman to hold this office in Baltimore, Mayor Dixon is a trail-blazer, and she has spent a lifetime working to make life better for Baltimore's families. From her years as a Kindergarten teacher to serving as president of the Baltimore City Council to fighting poverty and homelessness as Baltimore's mayor, Mayor Dixon has worked to bring change that matters in people's lives. As a working mother herself, she knows firsthand the demands on working families in our country, and she is committed to making policies that work for the future of Baltimore. I look forward to working with her to bring change in the months and years to come."

Mayor Sheila Dixon became mayor in January 2007, and is Baltimore's first female mayor. Previously, she served as the first African American female to serve as the Baltimore City Council president. Dixon also sat on the Baltimore City State Central Committee, and spent years as a kindergarten teacher in Baltimore.

[EMBED]

New television ad airing nationally on MSNBC and CNN

Obama Campaign stops in South Carolina Greenville – Jan. 22

Greenwood – Jan. 22

Orangeburg – Jan. 22

Rock Hill – Jan. 23

Action Center

Obama Mobile

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

(2008-01-21 11:05)

I found this of all places on the Times of India website! Haven't seen any television coverage.

WASHINGTON: US Senator Barack Obama's presidential campaign on Sunday said that it had received reports of voting irregularities in Nevada's nominating caucuses, which were won by rival Hillary Clinton.

Spokesmen for Obama's campaign told reporters that a Clinton party handout urged registration lines for the caucuses Saturday to close at 11:30 am, whereas state party rules said anyone in line until 12:00 pm was to be allowed to participate.

"Despite clear rules and timelines laid out by the Nevada Democratic Party that caucus doors should remain open and voter registration should continue until noon, the Clinton campaign encouraged their operatives to close the caucus doors at 11:30 am, a half hour before that deadline," said spokesman Bill Burton.

"This caused confusion and led to people leaving the caucuses before having the chance to participate."

Clinton won the state's nominating contest with 51 percent of the vote, while Obama received 45 percent. The victory increased the former first lady's lead over Obama, after she also won the New Hampshire primary on January 8.

Obama won the Democrats' first nominating caucuses in Iowa at the beginning of the month. His campaign called for a full review of the Nevada vote but insisted it was not calling into question the results.

"We found an unusually high number of reports that the Clinton campaign was insisting that 11:30 was the deadline," said general counsel Bob Bauer, adding that at least 300 complaints had come in.

"We are not calling the results into question at all. We want to make sure this doesn't happen again," Bauer said.

"We are going to notify the Nevada Democratic party that we want a full review of this, and make sure we have in front of us a full picture to make sure this behavior is highlighted and discouraged in the future."

Asked by reporters why an early close would have particularly affected Obama supporters, Bauer said "a campaign that departs from the rules and disenfranchises voters has to be held accountable for that."

He added: "We care about all the voters who would have been affected by this rule."

According to the Nevada Democratic Party rules: "Caucus registration will remain open until viability is determined by 12:00 pm.”

Burton sent reporters an email containing what he described as the contents of the Clinton campaign precinct captain handbook, which said 11:30 am was the “deadline for registering (or standing in line to register) to participate in the caucus.”

It also said 11:30 am was the time when the “caucus chair closes doors and announces attendance.”

Contacted for comment, Clinton spokesman Phil Singer said the New York senator’s campaign planned to hold its own press conference at 6:15 pm.

Rep. Rick Boucher endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-21 12:05)

U.S. Rep. Rick Boucher of Virginia announced his support for Sen. Barack Obama today.

“He has the broadest appeal of any of the candidates,” Boucher said. “He clearly, in my mind, offers the best hope for the Democratic party to win the general election.”

“He can unite the country like no other, which is important after years of the most bitter partisanship in recent memory.”

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

djmws (2008-01-22 10:07:00)

blacks would be denying their race by not voting for Barack. The most important issue is to have a black president period. It will change the US and the world. No matter what blacks say in public when they vote it must be for Barack. We as Americans must send a message to Washington and the world. His election will send that message.

Video clips from CNN debate (2008-01-21 21:49)

Check out the YouTube video clips from tonight’s fiery debate on CNN in South Carolina co-sponsored by the Congressional Black Caucus.

[EMBED]

Barack responds to attacks.

[EMBED]

Obama on change.

[EMBED]

Obama comments on the legacy of Martin Luther King.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Rep. Bennie Thompson endorses Sen. Barack Obama (2008-01-22 09:32)

U.S. Rep. Bennie Thompson of Mississippi, chairman of the House Committee on Homeland Security, endorsed Sen. Barack Obama today for president.

[EMBED]

Obama Campaign stops in South Carolina Greenville – Jan. 22
Greenwood – Jan. 22
Orangeburg – Jan. 22
Rock Hill – Jan. 23

Action Center
Obama Mobile

✕

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Is Hillary Clinton bugging out of South Carolina? (2008-01-22 10:27)

An AFP article suggests that Hillary Clinton may be writing off South Carolina as she has left to campaign elsewhere until Thursday while opponents Barack Obama and John Edwards are actively stumping in the state.

The Importance of South Carolina (2008-01-22 11:18)

The most important move the Obama campaign can do now in preparation for Super Tuesday is to win South Carolina. A win in the Palmetto State guarantees nationwide media coverage far exceeding any televisions ads the campaign could afford. Barack will have the "big mo" going into Tsunami Tuesday when 22 states pick the Democratic nominee. If he loses there, people will say the Iowa win was a fluke. African Americans may see him as non-viable since he could not win a state in which they make up about half the Democratic electorate. There will be a lot of negative buzz about his electability.

The big task again, as with all other states except probably Illinois, will be to get out the vote, especially Obama's young supporters. The work requires voter contact, preferably person-to-person although robo-calls, radio ads and other mass media techniques can also help.

Action Center
Obama Mobile

✕

✕ ✕ ✕

✕ ✕ ✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

SC: 'The State' Endorses Barack Obama for President (2008-01-22 14:14)

Check out this big newspaper endorsement out of South Carolina:

'The State' Endorses Barack Obama for President

by Sam Graham-Felsen

, Tuesday, January 22, 2008 at 12:36 PM

The largest newspaper in South Carolina endorses Barack Obama for President of the United States...

Obama most likely Democrat to unify America

The State editorial board's Democratic presidential primary endorsement

THE DEMOCRATIC PRIMARY in South Carolina this year offers voters an unusual choice. Earlier votes have winnowed out the most experienced candidates, leaving a field with fewer accomplishments and differences on policy, but including two candidates who come with the promise to make history just because of who they are.

Looking at the remaining field: Rep. Dennis Kucinich offers a bold plan on health care, but his platform is unlikely to endear him to many in South Carolina. John Edwards has morphed away from the optimist who won South Carolina in 2004. The candidate who stayed mostly above the fray four years ago is angry now, and pushing hard to turn working-class angst into political opportunity. He also has tried to one-up the other top Democrats with the least prudent plan for withdrawing from Iraq.

On positions from Iraq to health care, the policy differences between Sen. Hillary Clinton and Sen. Barack Obama are minute. Much of the debate between them has involved making these molehills look mountainous or clashing over who-shifted-when.

The one most significant difference between them can be found in how they would approach the presidency - and how the nation might respond.

Hillary Clinton has been a policy wonk most of her life, a trait she has carried into the U.S. Senate. As her debate performances have shown, she has intelligence and a deep understanding of many issues. Her efforts in New York focused first on learning her adopted state's issues in detail, and pursuing legislation that would not necessarily grab headlines.

But we also have a good idea what a Clinton presidency would look like. The restoration of the Clintons to the White House would trigger a new wave of all-out political warfare. That is not all Bill and Hillary's fault - but it exists, whomever you blame, and cannot be ignored. Hillary Clinton doesn't pretend that it won't happen; she simply vows to persevere, in the hope that her side can win. Indeed, the Clintons' joint career in public life seems oriented toward securing victory and personal vindication.

Sen. Obama's campaign is an argument for a more unifying style of leadership. In a time of great partisanship, he is careful to talk about winning over independents and even Republicans. He is harsh on the failures of the current administration - and most of that critique well-deserved. But he doesn't use his considerable rhetorical gifts to demonize Republicans. He's not neglecting his core values; he defends his progressive vision with vigorous integrity. But for him, American unity - transcending party - is a core value in itself.

Can such unity be restored, in this poisonous political culture? Not unless that is a nominee's goal from the outset. It will be a difficult challenge for any candidate; but we wait in the hope that someone really will try. There is no other hope for rescuing our republic from the mire.

Sen. Obama would also have the best chance to repair the damage to America's global reputation. A leader with his biography - including his roots in Africa and his years spent growing up overseas - could transform the world's view of America. He would seize that opportunity.

He would close the prison camp at Guantanamo Bay, which has damaged America's moral standing, and strive to rebuild many diplomatic relationships.

Despite America's bitter partisan divide, all sides should agree on this: In such an environment, little gets done. Congress has been largely useless under both Republican and Democratic leadership. Setting aside the ideological conflict for conflict's sake to get anything worthwhile done has fallen severely out of fashion.

And America certainly has things to get done.

From terrorism and climate change to runaway federal entitlement spending, there are big challenges to be faced. Sen. Obama is the only Democrat who plausibly can say that he wants to work with Americans across the political spectrum to address such subjects - and he has the integrity and the skills of persuasion that make him the best-qualified among the remaining Democratic hopefuls to address these challenges.

He would be a groundbreaking nominee. More to the point, he makes a solid case that he is ready to lead the whole country. We see Sen. Barack Obama as the best choice in Saturday's Democratic primary.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

One on one: Kareem Abdul-Jabbar vs. Magic Johnson (2008-01-22 16:05)

Hillary Clinton may have Magic Johnson on her side, but the former NBA star's teammate on the Los Angeles Lakers, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, is rooting for Barack Obama.

"Mrs. Clinton is not a bad choice, I just think Mr. Obama is the best choice," Abdul-Jabbar told Nico Pitney of the Huffington Post.

"Unfortunately, Mrs. Clinton has been at many times a divisive figure, and I don't think that's intentional on her part, but I do think that's the case."

On the claim by Johnson in a South Carolina radio campaign ad that Obama is still a "rookie," Abdul-Jabbar says: "'I don't think he's a rookie. He's served as a senator very capably, and he is very skilled in terms of his ability to organize and lead people. And that's what we need right now.'"

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Sen. John Kerry asks supporters to fight swiftboating (2008-01-22 17:37)

Sen. John Kerry sent out an email today for the Obama campaign asking supporters to combat "swiftboating" email and other attacks using the official website's Fact Check Action Center.

Dear Paul,

✖ I support Barack Obama because he doesn't seek to perfect the politics of Swiftboating – he seeks to end it.

This is personal for me, and for a whole lot of Americans who lived through the 2004 election.

As a veteran, it disgusts me that the Swift Boats we loved while we were in uniform on the Mekong Delta have been rendered, in Karl Rove's twisted politics, an ugly verb meaning to lie about someone's character just to win an election. But as someone who cares about winning this election and changing the country I love, I know it's not enough to complain about a past we can't change when our challenge is to win the future – which is why we must stop the Swiftboating, stop the push-polling, stop the front groups, and stop the email chain smears.

The truth matters, but how you fight the lies matters even more. We must be determined never again to lose any election to a lie.

This year, the attacks are already starting. Some of you may have heard about the disgusting lies about Barack Obama that are being circulated by email. These attacks smear Barack's Christian faith and deep patriotism, and they distort his record of more than two decades of public service. They are nothing short of "Swiftboat" style anonymous attacks.

These are the same tactics the right has used again and again, and as we've learned, these attacks, no matter how bogus, can spread and take root if they go unchecked.

But not this time – we're fighting back.

And when I say "we," I mean that literally. I know Barack is committed to fighting every smear every time. He'll fight hard and stand up for the truth. But he can't do it alone.

We need you to email the truth to your address books. Print it out and post it at work. Talk to your neighbors. Call your local radio station. Write a letter to the editor. If lies can be spread virally, let's prove to the cynics that the truth can be every bit as persuasive as it is powerful.

The Obama campaign has created a place where you can find the truth you'll need to push back on these smears and a way to spread the truth to all of your address book.

Take action here:

<http://my.barackobama.com/factcheckaction>

So when your inbox fills up with trash and the emails of smear and fear, find the facts, and help defeat the lies.

Barack Obama is committed to bringing our country together to meet the challenges we face, but he knows that power gives up nothing without a struggle – and to win the chance to change America, we must first defeat the hateful tactics that have been used to tear us apart for too long.

With your help, we can turn the page on an era of small, divisive politics – but only if next time you hear these attacks on Barack, you take action immediately:

<http://my.barackobama.com/factcheckaction>

The fight is just heating up – we won't let them steal this election with lies and distortions.

Thank you,

John Kerry

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2008-01-22 17:43)

Obama Campaign Stops in South Carolina

Rock Hill – Jan. 23

Sumter – Jan. 23

Dillon – Jan. 23

New Mexico endorsement rally tomorrow (2008-01-22 20:37)

There will be a rally tomorrow in New Mexico as state legislators announce their endorsement of Sen. Barack Obama.
From barackobama.com:

Rally & Announcement of Endorsements for Obama (Meeting)

RALLY & ANNOUNCEMENT OF ENDORSEMENTS FOR BARACK OBAMA

You are invited THIS Wednesday, January 23

New Mexico State Capitol

Round House

WEST STEPS facing Don Gaspar

Please give yourself enough time to be parked and start gathering by 1:00 on the West-side steps of the State Capitol building downtown Santa Fe.

Event will start punctually @ 1:30 pm & end approximately 2:00 pm

Bring all your friends who support Barack and those who want to know more about him!

Be there to proudly wave Obama signs and cheer as important endorsements are announced by New Mexico State Legislators. Come out to show New Mexico and the entire country how well supported Barack Obama is in New Mexico.

WEAR YOUR OBAMA GEAR – Sweatshirts, t-shirts, buttons, caps – everything!

THIS WILL BE AN EXTREMELEY EXCITING EVENT.

Obama Campaign Stops in South Carolina Rock Hill – Jan 23

Sumter – Jan 23

Dillon – Jan 23

Action Center

Obama Mobile

X X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

New York Observer to endorse Barack Obama (2008-01-22 21:17)

According to the Huffington Post, the New York Observer will endorse Barack Obama tomorrow. Here is an excerpt of the endorsement provided by HP:

Obama for America:
We Back Barack in Democratic Primary

Yes, He's Transformative
And Restorative as Well

The New York Observer urges New York Democrats to support Mr. Obama in the state's presidential primary on Feb. 5.

New Yorkers might ask why they should not pull a lever for our junior senator, Hillary Rodham Clinton. While Mrs. Clinton is an extraordinary United States senator for New York, we believe that Mr. Obama can be a great president for the United States of America.

Most of the other candidates have absorbed, assimilated or appropriated Mr. Obama's issue of change.

But a great deal of the argument for Mr. Obama's candidacy is about one great issue in American life: Restoring American democracy.

It is difficult to remember the last national candidate who has charged and jazzed the democratic system as Mr. Obama has. Partly as a result of his candidacy, college campuses have remembered why they are proud of the United States, kids are going door to door, runners are handing out leaflets on weekends, racial lines have been culturally melted and the electoral approach to presidential campaigning has been reborn.

And, as more than one commentator has said, America is being reintroduced to the world.

Mr. Obama stands the best chance of restoring the essential relationship between power and the American people. He is not flanked and blocked by an existing, entrenched power structure; his words are not muddled by layers of handlers; he still says what he means.

Mr. Obama would also be the most formidable Democrat in the general election. He has demonstrated a capacity to energize young people and attract new voters, and is the only candidate in the Democratic Party who attracts independents, who are the fastest-growing part of the electorate. His refusal to demonize the Republican Party as a right-wing attack machine will appeal to those independents as well as moderate Republicans.

As far as experience goes, when George W. Bush was driving a bleary, shocked nation into war with bait-and-switch deceptions in 2003, where was our experienced leadership? Meanwhile, in the west, an Illinois state senator-who has since served two years in the Senate, the same Congressional period that a fellow Midwesterner, Abraham Lincoln, had served when he sought the presidency-rose to exhibit courage and public judgment on that deceptive adventure, stating, "I am not opposed to all wars. I'm opposed to dumb wars."

Now we have paid the price many times over, and there are no clear paths in Baghdad. But there may be one in Washington. Mr. Obama is the emblem of a new America.

He has risen too quickly for his opponents' taste; that fact is nothing less than a recommendation.

His relationship to truth and plain speaking and public transparency is the first step toward reviving democracy in the United States of America. Barack Obama of Illinois is the future. New York's Democrats should embrace him.

Action Center
Obama Mobile

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Three Ways to Get Involved (2008-01-23 08:02)

From barackobama.com:

Three Ways to Get Involved

by Sarah Ramey,

Tuesday, January 22, 2008 at 07:02 PM

The primary season is now in full swing! With only 4 days until South Carolina and two weeks until February 5th, when 22 states across the nation hold their primaries and caucuses, now is the time to take action.

Host a South Carolina Watch Party

This Saturday, January 26th, folks across the nation are coming together to support Barack and watch the primary results come in through the night. A South Carolina Watch Party is a great way to share Barack's message with friends, family and fellow supporters. Find a South Carolina Watch Party near you or create your own event today: click here.

Make calls to February 5th voters

Answer Barack's call to action by picking up the phone. You can make calls from the comfort of your home whenever works best for you with our online phone banking tool. Get started reaching out to February 5th voters: click here.

Organize your community

GET INVOLVED
IN YOUR COMMUNITY

From knocking on doors to get-out-the-vote efforts, we need your help to build the movement! Check out the Grassroots Action Guide for tips and resources on how to organize in your area: click here.

If we are ready for real change in our country, now is the time to make the difference. Get involved today!

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

The Desert Sun recommends Barack Obama (2008-01-23 08:39)

The Desert Sun, the daily newspaper of Palm Springs, California has endorsed Barack Obama for Democratic nominee today.

Among Democrats, Obama most likely to unify nation

Sen. Barack Obama is our choice for president in California's Democratic primary because he has a remarkable gift to inspire people and that is a hallmark of great leaders.

Our best presidents had that gift. Given the economic climate, the ability to inspire is critically important now.

Obama shows an ability to bring people together, not just with his passionate oratory. He wants to unify people. He says he doesn't see blue states and red states, but the United States. He is clearly registering with independents. He also has the ability to win over some Republicans. We need a president who can govern from the middle, rise above partisan politics and appeal to people across party lines.

He recognizes that change is necessary and he has the ability to deliver change. He is smart and well respected.

Obama is serving his first term in the U.S. Senate, so he does not have a long tenure in Washington from which to draw - or a long record on which to run. But none of the leading Democratic candidates have that, either. Certainly, New York Sen. Hillary Clinton has been in the public eye and knows well the scrutiny and pressures that come with the highest office in the land, but she does not have as much experience as she would lead you to believe. Yes, she was first lady. But that's not the same as being president. She did not have security clearance to receive intelligence briefings or discuss highly classified national security information. She's not served for very long in the Senate.

Baggage from her husband's presidency could carry over. Change is in the air and Clinton just isn't showing us she could unite a nation when some polls show that independents and some Republicans fed up with the Bush administration are more likely to support Obama.

Side-by-side, Obama and Clinton are nearly identical on the issues. The similarities are far more striking than the differences.

On Iran, both would engage in "direct diplomacy," use economic sanctions and meet with Mahmoud Ahmadinejad. Military action is not off the table, but would not be considered without congressional approval.

On illegal immigration, they both support a path to legalization for the estimated 12 million undocumented immigrants currently in the United States. Both want immigrants to learn English and pay fines. In the Senate, they voted to fence the Mexican border.

On climate change, they both support a mandatory cap and trade system to reduce carbon emissions, 80 percent below 1990 levels by 2050.

On abortion, they are both pro-choice.

Among other major issues, slight differences are on Iraq and health care. Obama opposed the invasion from the very beginning. He opposed troop increase. He would withdraw one or two brigades a month in an attempt to either end, or scale down U.S. involvement within 16 months.

Clinton voted to authorize the invasion in 2002. She now is opposed to the war and opposed troop increases. She would support a phased withdrawal within 60 days of taking office and hopes to have most troops out by the end of 2013.

As president, Clinton says she would require that everyone have health insurance, which would be subsidized by employers and the government. Obama would require all children to have health insurance. It would be paid for by rolling back President Bush's tax cuts for households earning more than $250,000.

At this point, it comes down to who is more likely to unite and inspire an already divided nation. Sen. Obama offers the best chance of doing that and Democrats should support him in California's primary on Feb. 5.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

A Vote for Obama is a Vote for Women (2008-01-23 09:11)

Tracey Fischman is a Huffington Post blogger and former Vice President of Public Policy for Planned Parenthood/Chicago Area (PP/CA).

A Vote for Obama is a Vote for Women

Yesterday – January 22, 2008 – marked the 35th anniversary of the historic Supreme Court Roe v. Wade decision that guarantees a woman's right to choose an abortion. It was on this day that I felt particularly compelled to speak out about my experiences with Senator Barack Obama – a man who should be honored, not condemned, for his consistent and unwavering support for reproductive freedom, women's health, gender equity and – more broadly – social justice.

I recognize that outsiders are attacking Senator Obama on the "chutzpah" factor – suggesting that he lacks courage or real commitment on the "hard" issues such as reproductive rights or other issues such as gun control and violence against women. My experiences could not be further from that depiction.

I formerly worked for Planned Parenthood in Illinois. I had the honor of working with Senator Barack Obama during his tenure in the Illinois Senate. He was – and remains – adamant about his support for women's health and access to reproductive healthcare services. His present votes on abortion-related bills were part of a broader pro-choice strategy designed to ultimately defeat bad and dangerous legislation that would have compromised the health and safety of Illinois women. As Planned Parenthood's lobbyist in Illinois has said, Senator Obama was asked to facilitate a strategy designed to help provide cover for other Democrats. Specifically, Planned Parenthood turned to Senator Obama because of his strong record on reproductive rights. At the time, Republicans were trying to force Democrats from conservative districts to register politically controversial no votes. Senator Obama initially resisted the strategy, as he wanted to vote against the anti-abortion measures, but decided to work with our strategy to help defeat these anti-choice bills. It is important to note that a present vote on a bad bill is essentially the same as a "no" vote, as the bill needs "yes" votes to pass. However, it is difficult for Republicans to use "present" votes in their campaign literature against Democrats from moderate and conservative districts (also see December 20, 2007 NY Times article: "It's Not Just 'Ayes' and 'Nays': Obama's Votes in Illinois Echo"). This strategy is now being used against Senator Obama in the same way we planned for it to work in our favor then.

It is confounding to me that Senator Obama is being demeaned and attacked so vociferously on this. I came into this campaign season feeling relieved and thankful that our two main candidates support women's health and reproductive freedom. I am now deeply disappointed that politics has led to deceitful misrepresentations of Senator Obama's commitment and work in this area.

Senator Obama was a leader in the Illinois legislature, and has continued to demonstrate leadership in the U.S. Senate. He understands reproductive rights within a broader context of health and prevention. He promotes, both in words and in action, a public health agenda that includes (but is not limited to): prevention of unintended pregnancy and sexually transmitted diseases; access to contraception; comprehensive sex education programs (which include information about abstinence as well as age-appropriate information about prevention and the availability of health services); and reducing disparities in health access for low income communities.

Again – based on my experience, I can personally say that Senator Obama comes to his positions and his work from very deep-seated principles about justice, opportunity, equality and freedom. He also is strategic about finding ways to accomplish goals. It is these principles combined with his strategic sensibilities, experiences and ability to bring people together that garnered my personal support for his candidacy.

We are at a juncture in our nation. Over the last eight years, we have faced unprecedented challenges to reproductive freedom, justice and equality. President Bush and his administration did more to turn back the clock on issues of concern to women and undeserved communities than we have seen in generations. These assaults came in many forms, including (but not limited to): the reinstatement of the Global Gag Rule prohibiting international family planning programs from receiving US funds if they even counseled on abortion (with their own private money); the appointment of two anti-choice fundamentalist Supreme Court justices and many more like-minded Federal judges; increased funding for dangerous abstinence-only until marriage sex education programs; censorship within administrative agencies and with grantees; dismantling of family planning programs; broad barriers to contraception and reproductive health care services; and a general environment in which politics has trumped effective public health and good science.

We must make a change and elect a president who believes in an America for us all. An America that values women and families, promotes both prevention and access to abortion, and fosters and implements programs to support the values that Senator Obama so deeply holds. Senator Obama is 100 % pro-choice and is a champion for women's health and equality. For these reasons – and many more – he is getting my vote this year.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Why Lorna Brett Howard switched from Clinton to Obama (2008-01-23 14:49)

Lorna Brett Howard, former president of Chicago NOW, was a solid supporter of Hillary Clinton until just a few weeks ago. Find out why she switched to Barack Obama by listening to the video below.

[EMBED]

Host a South Carolina Watch Party

Make calls to February 5th voters

Organize your community

GET INVOLVED
IN YOUR COMMUNITY

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-01-24 05:00:00)

you mean clinton to obama.

The Rock Hill Herald (SC) Endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-23 15:35)

The Rock Hill Herald (SC) Endorses Barack Obama

by Sam Graham-Felsen

Wednesday, January 23, 2008 at 01:56 PM

The Rock Hill Herald (SC) has endorsed Barack Obama for President of the United States...

X

OPINION: Obama for Democratic nomination

Barack Obama, at 46, could have waited four or even eight years to run for the presidency, but decided that this year's campaign was his moment.

We think he was right; his candidacy is ideally suited for this point in the nation's history. Obama, more than any other candidate in either party, has based his campaign on the promise of positive change in Washington and an effort to heal the caustic partisan rift that divides not only the nation's capital but also much of the nation.

The promise of change is nothing unique in the rhetoric of the stump. But we think Obama brings both a unique biography and an impressive set of skills to this campaign.

Obama, son of a black father from Kenya and a white mother from Kansas, is the first African-American to contend seriously for the presidency. As a child, he lived for four years in predominantly Muslim Indonesia before moving with his mother to Hawaii. And after graduating from Columbia University in 1983, he deferred the pursuit of a career to work as a community organizer for a church-based group in the poor neighborhoods of Chicago.

As he notes himself, he would bring a new face to the presidency, a new face representing the United States to the rest of the world. That, alone, is a significant recommendation for his candidacy.

But he also possesses considerable charisma and oratorical skills. He is coolly rational — perhaps to a fault. His deliberative responses to questions sometimes do not lend themselves to sound bites or serve him well in debates. But that thoughtfulness derives from an apparent depth of intelligence.

His experience has been questioned. But he claims foreign policy expertise — more, he says, than Ronald Reagan or Bill Clinton had when they first ran — as a member of the Senate foreign relations committee and as one who has traveled extensively and understands the world.

He also boasts political experience. In 1996, he won a seat in the Illinois Senate, where he served for eight years. In 2004, he was elected by a landslide to the U.S. Senate.

He concedes that he lacks administrative experience, but said that putting together a $100 million campaign says something about his organizational and leadership skills.

We trust that Obama's chief Democratic opponent, Sen. Hillary Clinton of New York, would bring a wealth of experience to the White House. As she claims, she would be ready for the job "on day one."

But we believe, because of her association with her husband's two administrations, that she also would bring the baggage of polarization and bitter rhetoric that has dominated the political landscape for at least two decades.

Former N.C. Sen. John Edwards, a South Carolina native, has plied a populist message and concern for the nation's downtrodden as the centerpiece of his campaign. But that message has failed to ignite the voters as Obama's call for hope and change has.

Ideologically, Obama differs little from Clinton or Edwards. He plans to extricate the United States from Iraq, but cautiously. His catch-phrase is: "We need to be as careful in leaving Iraq as we were careless going in."

While he stresses that the loss of life and the toll on the U.S. military have been the worst consequences of the war, he also believes the economic damage resulting from spending billions of dollars each month on the war is severe.

Obama has a comprehensive health-care reform plan whose goal is to make health insurance available and affordable to all.

He views global warming not only as an environmental threat but also a threat to the economy and, ultimately, U.S. security. He would offer incentives to promote efficiency, invest in research in clean technology and institute a system designed to reduce carbon emissions.

He would seek a tax cut for middle-class families, as well as a tax credit of up to $4,000 toward a college education. However, he would roll back President Bush's tax breaks for the wealthiest Americans and raise the capital gains tax rate on those making more than $250,000 a year.

But the principle reason we endorse Obama in Saturday's primary is because he appears to have the skills and the genuine desire to engender new hope, bring more people — especially younger voters — into the political process, bring the nation together and restore America's image around the globe.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

The Greenville News Endorses Barack Obama for Democrats (2008-01-23 16:13)

The Greenville News Endorses Barack Obama for President

by Sam Graham-Felsen

Wednesday, January 23, 2008 at 01:59 PM

Yet another South Carolina newspaper, The Greenville News, has endorsed Barack Obama...

The Greenville News

The Greenville News endorses Barack Obama in Democratic primary
Obama could help nation face its challenges

Democrats in South Carolina go to the polls Saturday to pick their candidate in this state's presidential primary, one that follows by a week the Republicans' selection of John McCain in that party's primary contest. The Iowa caucus and New Hampshire primary took their toll on some second-tier candidates, and the two viable candidates remaining on Saturday's ticket are Sen. Hillary Clinton of New York and Sen. Barack Obama of Illinois.

Former North Carolina Sen. John Edwards could do reasonably well in South Carolina Saturday given this is his home state. But Edwards' 2008 campaign lacks the vibrancy of his effort four years ago. He bitterly replays his 2004 theme of two Americas, one rich and one poor, and his campaign appears to be sputtering.

This Democratic race really boils down to a contest between the first woman with a real chance of capturing a major party's nomination for president and the first African-American with an opportunity to do the same. The Greenville News endorses Barack Obama in Saturday's primary.

In this race that's ultimately about giving the Democratic Party its strongest candidate for the November general election, Barack Obama has emerged as one of the most attractive candidates on the political scene in decades. He has a refreshing lack of political guile, and he inspires with his words and with his life's story. His father came from Kenya, his mother from Kansas, and Obama was born in Hawaii. He has moved easily between different cultures, and he has said before that his life built on diverse experiences has prepared him to be a political leader devoted to uniting people and seeking common solutions.

Obama brings characteristics to this primary that lift up many people and elevate their sense of hope. He is not a hardened ideologue. While he does not minimize his Democratic Party roots, he talks openly and encouragingly of wanting to get "Democrats, Republicans and independents to work constructively on problems instead of (trying) to score political points."

He could help Washington move past its stubborn and destructive partisan politics. As he said in an editorial board meeting at this newspaper, "The politics we have seen and grown accustomed to over the past 20 years have not been productive." That's so true.

In the area of experience, Hillary Clinton has a slight edge over Obama given a lengthier resume that includes advocating for children's issues, her proximity to power during her husband's two terms as president, and her Senate career that began in 2001. Clinton is an exceptionally sharp politician, by all accounts a hard worker, and is a strong advocate for issues dear to the hearts of many Democrats.

All but Clinton's harshest critics could see her ably fulfilling the duties of the president of the United States, and that includes her serving as the commander in chief during a national crisis. But despite whatever positive attributes Clinton could bring to the White House, she would undeniably continue this country's politics of division. A most telling point has emerged over the past week, when Clinton has roasted Obama — and twisted his words — for daring to state that Ronald Reagan was a transformational political figure who realigned this nation's politics. Our country doesn't need another four years, or eight years, of divide-and-conquer politics.

On the major issues facing the nation, the Democrats are remarkably close in their positions, and it must be added, many of these positions run counter to those often expressed by this newspaper on this opinion page. The major Democratic candidates want us out of Iraq, but with slightly different timetables. They want tax policies that reflect the Democratic Party's agenda, and they want to stimulate a faltering economy by putting more money into the pockets of more Americans, especially low-income Americans who don't pay income taxes. The Democratic candidates also want to provide health care for all Americans, although again with slightly different approaches.

In this race to capture to the Democratic Party's nomination, Obama makes the most compelling case for his nomination when he describes the differences between himself and Sen. Clinton. She is more comfortable with the "Washington lobby culture," he told our editorial board, and as seen in the failed health-care campaign in 1993, she is comfortable operating behind closed doors and trying to demonize her opponents.

Obama's approach to governing would be based on openness, inclusiveness and transparency. That approach would serve our country well.

[EMBED]

Kerry Washington, Usher and Barack Obama SCSU

Action Center

Obama Mobile

✕

✕ ✕ ✕

✕ ✕ ✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Five Top Social Networking Tips (2008-01-23 18:15)

Here are my five top social networking tips to support Barack Obama's run for president.

1. If you haven't already, create an Obama-friendly webpage on one of the social networking sites like Facebook, MySpace, LinkedIn, BlackPlanet, Migente, AsianAvenue, etc. You can download images and widgets to spruce up your site here. On Facebook, use the Obama application.
2. Add Barack Obama as a friend. Here are the links for a number of sites: ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕ ✕
3. Sites like Facebook, MySpace, LinkedIn (non-web), BlackPlanet and Migente allow you to find, add and invite friends and contacts using your web email address book, or a contacts file created by exporting your address book to a CSV or similar file. Click on the hypertext link for each site to use this feature. For MySpace, click on "Invite" located on the menu bar.
4. Some of the sites allow you to find friends and contacts using your instant messenger or searching your high school, college or workplace network.

5. Post an occasional news item, blog or other update on your page to let people know what is happening in the campaign.

Obama Campaign Stops in South Carolina

Kingstree– Jan 24

Beaufort – Jan 24

North Charleston – Jan 24

Action Center

Obama Mobile

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

New Mexico fires up for Barack Obama (2008-01-23 20:10)

From barackobama.com:

A New Beginning: New Mexico Officials Endorse Barack

by Zach Edwards

, Wednesday, January 23, 2008 at 07:31 PM

X

Here at the Obama campaign in New Mexico, things are starting to heat up. Today, 17 elected New Mexico leaders publically endorsed Barack Obama for President. We have been seeing a tremendous outpouring of volunteers who have been mobilizing and organizing our grassroots for months, and who have committed to getting their friends, family, and neighbors to stand up for change on February 5th. Our new offices are filling with volunteers and it's clear that New Mexico is ready to get involved and take back Washington with Barack Obama.

The endorsements today demonstrate our broad geographic support across the state, and the desire for change that is sweeping across the Land of Enchantment. The officials include State Treasurer James Lewis, former State Representative Patsy Trujillo, former U.S. Senator Fred Harris, and House Majority Leader Ken Martinez.

"I admire Barack Obama because he doesn't just tell people what they want to hear but what they need to know even when it is not politically popular," said State Treasurer, James Lewis. "I'm supporting Barack Obama because he has a compelling vision to change the way Washington works so that it finally addresses the problems Americans face," said Lewis.

"After Bill Richardson ended his bid for president I took a careful look at all of the candidates. But Barack Obama stands out because he has proven that he is the only candidate who can unify the country to bring change - and bring all Americans together regardless of race, party, or creed, and I am proud to support his campaign," said former Representative Patsy Trujillo.

"Our economy is in peril and Barack Obama, months ago, laid out a plan to get the economy moving by helping the middle class families that really need it, combating the mortgage crisis and reinstating faith in our government," said State Representative Peter Wirth.

Obama Leadership Counsel Co-Chairs:

The Honorable James Lewis, State Treasurer

The Honorable Fred Harris, former U.S. Senator

The Honorable Patsy Trujillo, former State Representative

Mr. John Pound, Civil Rights Attorney

Elected Officials

State Representative Al Park, Chair of the House Judiciary Committee, Albuquerque

State Representative Peter Wirth, Santa Fe

State Representative Joseph Cervantes, Las Cruces

State Representative W. Ken Martinez, House Majority Leader, Grants

State Representative Antonio Lujan, Las Cruces

State Representative Sheryl Williams Stapleton, House Majority Whip, Albuquerque

State Representative Antonio "Moe" Maestas, Albuquerque

Mr. Robert Rosebrough, former Mayor of Gallup, New Mexico

Mr. Javier Gonzales, former Santa Fe County Commissioner

Mr. Max Coll, former State Representative, Santa Fe

Mr. Damon Ely, former Sandoval County Commissioner

Mr. Jim Baca, former Mayor of Albuquerque

Mr. Michael Cadigan, City Council Member of Albuquerque

Come visit us at one of our offices across New Mexico, Join the Movement, and get involved to take back Washington!

Make calls to February 5th voters

Organize your community

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Cost of the Iraq War (2008-01-23 22:01)

The Iraq War, opposed by Barack Obama from the start, but authorized by his opponents may end up costing between $1 - $2 trillion even if the war ends in the next few years.

Here is a breakdown of the costs as provided by nationalpriorities.org:

- $275 million per day
- $4,100 per household
- Almost 4,000 U.S. soldiers killed and more than 60,000 wounded
- 700,000 Iraqis killed and 4 million refugees
- Money spent on Iraq could on a yearly basis provide 39 million people with health care, build 13,842 new elementary schools or build 1,070,377 affordable housing units.

click here to learn more

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama News on Thursday (2008-01-24 09:01)

The Washington Post reports that the Obama campaign is concentrating on six small caucus states as part of its Tsunami Tuesday strategy.

Obama's staff believes that Obama's grassroots style and organizing is well suited to caucus-type elections after good performances in Iowa and Nevada. Three of the states targeted are Minnesota, Colorado and Kansas.

In Kansas, there are reports that Gov. Kathleen Sebelius might be ready to endorse Obama after she delivers the Democratic response to the State of the Union address on Monday.

[EMBED]

Obama supporters get out the vote in South Carolina

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

WaPo: Barack's economic solution gets highest grade (2008-01-24 10:13)

The Washington Post's Ruth Marcus graded the economic stimulus plans of the three Democratic candidates:

The Washington Post

Barack Obama: A-minus. I criticized his previous tax plan, but Obama is at the head of the class with an intelligently designed, $120 billion stimulus plan. He would speed a $250 tax credit to most workers, followed by another $250, triggered automatically, if the economy continues on its sour path. Obama would direct a similar rebate to low- and middle-income seniors, who are also apt to spend and could get checks quickly. One demerit: Obama omits any increase in food stamp benefits, which Moody's estimates would have the greatest bang for the buck, $1.73 for every dollar spent.

John Edwards: B-minus. Edwards gets points for handing in his paper early – in December, he issued a $25 billion stimulus proposal (plus $75 billion more if needed), including important help to states to avoid cutting Medicaid rolls. But like Hillary Clinton (see below), he would spend too much money on programs – investing in "green collar" jobs, for instance – with too long a lag time to make them an effective stimulus. Edwards's grade goes down because he also hasn't explained how the $75 billion would be spent.

Hillary Clinton: C-plus. Clinton, too, raised the issue early, then turned in a faulty first draft with a $70 billion stimulus plan that didn't provide much immediate stimulation. It included a $25 billion increase in the program to help low-income Americans with heating costs – an excessive amount (the current program is under $3 billion) that probably wouldn't kick in until next winter. Even worse was her housing plan, including a five-year freeze on subprime mortgage rates that could produce higher interest rates and reduce liquidity.

Obama Campaign Stops in South Carolina

Kingstree– Jan 24

Beaufort – Jan 24

North Charleston – Jan 24

Action Center

Obama Mobile

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama Events in South Carolina (2008-01-24 12:54)

Stand for Change with Barack Obama

North Charleston High School Gymnasium

1087 East Montague Avenue

North Charleston, SC 29405

Thursday, January 24, 2008

Doors open: 5:30 p.m.

Program begins: 7:30 p.m. Stand for Change Rally with Barack Obama

Outdoor Amphitheater

Entrance by Carillon Gardens

Clemson University
Clemson, SC

Friday, January 25

Doors open: 2:30 p.m.

Program begins: 4:30 p.m. Stand for Change Pee Dee Rally with Barack Obama in Florence

Florence City-County Civic Center
3300 West Radio Drive
Florence, SC

Friday, January 25, 2008

Doors open: 6:20 p.m. Stand for Change Rally with Barack Obama

Koger Center for the Arts
University of South Carolina
1051 Greene St.
Columbia, SC 29201

Friday, January 25

Doors open: 8:45 p.m.

Program begins: 10:45 p.m.

A Conversation with MICHELLE OBAMA (Meeting)

Friday, January 25 at 10:00 AM

Central Oak Grove Baptist Church (Hilton Head Island, SC)

Women for Obama invite you to A Conversation with Michelle Obama

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event

For security reasons, do not bring bags. No signs or banners permitted.

These events are free and open to the public; however an RSVP is strongly encouraged.
Further details to be announced as they become available.

Host a South Carolina Watch Party

Make calls to February 5th voters

Organize your community

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Santa Cruz Sentinel backs Barack Obama (2008-01-24 15:49)

The Santa Cruz Sentinel from the Bay Area of California endorsed Barack Obama today.

January 24, 2008

As We See It: Obama our choice – Candidate brings new ideas, crossover appeal that would end Bush-Clinton political dynasties Sentinel Staff Report

Is this truly the year of meaningful political change in America?

We think so. We hope so.

And although both of the leading candidates for the Democratic presidential nomination would, if elected, be historic firsts for this country, we support Sen. Barack Obama in the Feb. 5 California presidential primary.

Sentinel elections coverage

Obama, much like his main rival, Sen. Hillary Clinton, has considerable strengths and some obvious weaknesses.

But his potential and the chance he brings to move forward unencumbered by the last 20 years of the Bush-Clinton political dynasties is significant and telling.

Moreover, Obama by his very background is that rare politician whose appeal crosses boundaries and heals divides. And his experience, while not on the same executive scope as Mrs. Clinton's, is formidable, as a community activist and organizer, as a lawyer working to advance civil rights, and as a state legislator. He comes from humble circumstances that span race, ethnicity and culture and his unique ability to get people to listen, to consider a different way of thinking bodes well for the kind of unifying, rather than polarizing, leadership this country needs.

It is this very background and political style that could revive and strengthen America's standing world-wide, a position that has been diminished under our current president.

The biggest knock on Obama is a lack of experience in foreign affairs and at the executive level. But, truthfully, presidents who have had this kind of experience – Nixon and George Walker Bush come immediately to mind – had their share of missteps, too.

Obama currently trails Clinton in the California polls and needs a win in South Carolina on Saturday to regain momentum. Former Sen. John Edwards lags significantly behind both.

Still, if change is what you want, it was Obama who opposed the Iraq war early on, not Clinton.

And there is something unsettling – and, OK, entertaining as well – at seeing Bill Clinton leading the charge against Obama. This country has been governed by a Bush, a Clinton, a Bush and now ... another Clinton? Both Clintons?

No thanks.

No one doubts that Hillary Clinton is smart, tough and a committed campaigner. The Clintons know how to win elections. In a time of economic downturn, the James Carville slogan for Clinton I, "It's the economy, stupid," might again prove irresistible.

But we don't think this country needs a reprise of 1993-2000.

Instead, we support Obama for the Democratic nomination as the candidate who truly appeals to people's best instincts, for their country and for the future.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

The Herald (SC) endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-24 16:10)

The Herald, the daily newspaper of Rock Hill, South Carolina today picked Barack Obama as the best choice for Democrats.

Obama is best choice in Democratic primary By Staff Reports · heraldonline.com FTP

Barack Obama, at 46, could have waited four or even eight years to run for the presidency, but decided that this year's campaign was his moment.

We think he was right; his candidacy is ideally suited for this point in the nation's history. Obama, more than any other candidate in either party, has based his campaign on the promise of positive change in Washington and an effort to heal the caustic partisan rift that divides not only the nation's capital but also much of the nation.

The promise of change is nothing unique in the rhetoric of the stump. But we think Obama brings both a unique biography and an impressive set of skills to this campaign.

Obama, son of a black father from Kenya and a white mother from Kansas, is the first African-American to contend seriously for the presidency. As a child, he lived for four years in predominantly Muslim Indonesia before moving with his mother to Hawaii. And after graduating from Columbia University in 1983, he deferred the pursuit of a career to work as a community organizer for a church-based group in the poor neighborhoods of Chicago.

As he notes himself, he would bring a new face to the presidency, a new face representing the United States to the rest of the world. That, alone, is a significant recommendation for his candidacy.

But he also possesses considerable charisma and oratorical skills. He is coolly rational – perhaps to a fault. His deliberative responses to questions sometimes do not lend themselves to sound bites or serve him well in debates. But that thoughtfulness derives from an apparent depth of intelligence.

His experience has been questioned. But he claims foreign policy expertise – more, he says, than Ronald Reagan or Bill Clinton had when they first ran – as a member of the Senate foreign relations committee and as one who has traveled extensively and understands the world.

He also boasts political experience. In 1996, he won a seat in the Illinois Senate, where he served for eight years. In 2004, he was elected by a landslide to the U.S. Senate.

He concedes that he lacks administrative experience, but said that putting together a $100 million campaign says something about his organizational and leadership skills.

We trust that Obama's chief Democratic opponent, Sen. Hillary Clinton of New York, would bring a wealth of experience to the White House. As she claims, she would be ready for the job "on day one."

But we believe, because of her association with her husband's two administrations, that she also would bring the baggage of polarization and bitter rhetoric that has dominated the political landscape for at least two decades.

Former Sen. John Edwards of North Carolina, a South Carolina native, has plied a populist message and concern for the nation's downtrodden as the centerpiece of his campaign. But that message has failed to ignite the voters as Obama's call for hope and change has.

Ideologically, Obama differs little from Clinton or Edwards. He plans to extricate the United States from Iraq, but cautiously. His catch-phrase is: "We need to be as careful in leaving Iraq as we were careless going in."

While he stresses that the loss of life and the toll on the U.S. military have been the worst consequences of the war, he also believes the economic damage resulting from spending billions of dollars each month on the war is severe.

Obama has a comprehensive health-care reform plan whose goal is to make health insurance available and affordable to all.

He views global warming not only as an environmental threat but also a threat to the economy and, ultimately, U.S. security. He would offer incentives to promote efficiency, invest in research in clean technology and institute a system designed to reduce carbon emissions.

He would seek a tax cut for middle-class families, as well as a tax credit of up to $4,000 toward a college education. However, he would roll back President Bush's tax breaks for the wealthiest Americans and raise the capital gains tax rate on those making more than $250,000 a year.

But the principal reason we endorse Obama in Saturday's primary is because he appears to have the skills and the genuine desire to engender new hope, bring more people – especially younger voters – into the political process, bring the nation together and restore America's image around the globe.

The Road to Change: South Carolina (2008-01-24 18:25)

From barackobama.com:

[EMBED]

The Student

Benedict College senior Joshua Stroman on why his generation is inspired by Obama.

[EMBED]

The Barbershop

At Emerson's Barber Shop in Marion, SC, talk turns to the Iraq War and the need for real leadership.

[EMBED]

The House Meeting

At house meetings across South Carolina, neighbors gather to talk about how to change their country.

[EMBED]

The Trendsetter

Grace Cusack reflects on her house meeting - and how things have changed in her neighborhood - in Florence, South Carolina.

[EMBED]

Obama Teams

Volunteers across the state assume leadership positions to get out the word about Obama.

[EMBED]

The Civil Rights Activist

She marched for civil rights, and now Annie Bennett is standing up again: no bingo until Barack becomes president.

[EMBED]

Oprah

Ms. Winfrey joins the Obamas to address a huge crowd at the University of South Carolina's football stadium.
[EMBED]

The Reverend

On the eve of the South Carolina primary, Rev. Randolph Scipio and Kathleen Fox talk to voters in North Charleston.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

SC Black News Endorses Barack (2008-01-24 22:50)

SC Black News Endorses Barack

by T. Neil Sroka, SC Obama Staff,

Thursday, January 24, 2008 at 09:40 PM

The SC Black News, the largest African American paper in South Carolina, joined The State, the Rock Hill Herald, and the Greenville News in endorsing Barack for the Democratic Presidential nomination.

SC Black News endorses Barack Obama

South Carolina's largest African American newspaper announces their endorsement of Senator Barack Obama for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Senator Obama's message has remained consistent throughout this arduous process and throughout his career. His intent to hold the office of President appears to be genuinely selfless and not ego-driven, but driven by the need to bring this country, and the world together. We find him to be the most qualified to lift this country out of the despair and his approach to the political process refreshing and inspiring. Race has little to do with our endorsement. It is the content of the message and the character of the candidates that has moved us in this direction. Senator Clinton and Senator Edwards bring many fresh ideas to the table and we respect their candidacies, but neither brings the kind of hope and vision we feel necessary to navigate our country successfully through the perilous challenges that lie ahead.

While the differences in the democratic candidates' positions are really quite small, the tactics in which they have been delivered have undeniably influenced popular opinion. It may be impossible to negate the fact that when spokespeople are speaking off the cuff on your behalf, some less than diplomatic statements and responses may occur. However, Senator Clinton's camp has repeatedly employed questionable attacks on Senator Obama's character that have no place in the new political millennium as it relates to the racial divide.

In her eagerness to point out how white presidents can get things done, she in effect relegated Dr. King's sacrifice for racial equality to nothing more than a supportive role. And that came directly out of her mouth, not her husband's, a politico supporter's or a celebrity hired gun designed to reach out to the African American population. If indeed the barrage of attacks are unscripted and not part of a larger strategy to undermine Senator Obama, then they are at best indicative of a much larger problem. If she is unable to control and steer her campaign clear of divisive political disparages, how can she be expected to effectively run a country amid great partisan divide on varying critical issues? Senator Edwards has not availed himself to Black News after repeated attempts to establish a report. His message is strong in that he is for worker's rights, the less privileged, the unemployed and the underemployed, but his lack of effort to reach out to our readership has greatly influenced our position with his overall campaign.

Obama has proven himself to be unaffected by insider political maneuvering. He politically strives to bring constructive dialogue to a problem and is truly a man of vision and embodies the spirit of cooperation that has eluded us for the past seven years. In a speech given last fall, Obama said, "What we cannot continue to do is operate as if we are the weakest nation in the world instead of the strongest one, because that's not who we are and that's not what the US has been about, historically. It is starting to warp our domestic policies, as well. We haven't even talked about civil liberties and the impact of that politics of fear-what that has done to us, in terms of undermining basic civil liberties in this country, what it has done in terms of our reputation around the world." He has proven that through hard work, commitment and sound reason, we can come together as a nation to correct the evils that plague us, both domestically and abroad.

We feel his ability to work with both sides of the aisle far eclipses the other candidates' ability to effectively run a bi-partisan government and bring our country out of the darkness that now surrounds it. We believe Obama has the integrity and clarity needed to steer clear of such harmful digression and he will be able to affect change that can enrich us all. He has worked for civil rights, human rights and women's rights throughout his career in activism, law and politics. It is his commitment to equality for all Americans that resonates with us - and the country.

Senator Obama's record as a person who will work for change, champion those who need it most while maintaining an integral, innate sense of justice speaks for itself. Experience has been one of the most debated topics among the democrats. As a civil rights attorney and professor of constitutional law, Obama has a keen understanding and deep appreciation of our nation's core values and guiding principles. Obama will be a fierce defender of the fundamental American values of freedom and equality under law. He has very strong support in the African American community and speaks forthrightly about racial issues and has a great deal of history and experience in civil rights-oriented struggles. In many ways, he breaks that mold of the politician who softens his message in order to appeal to a wide range of voters. Let's level the economic field for everyone, not just the rich and the privileged. Let's withdraw our troops from Iraq and begin the healing process we so desperately need. Let's make health care and medicines available to everyone who needs them, make housing affordable and keep our jobs in America. Let's educate our children and take care of our veterans and seniors. Despite decades of progress, women still make only 77 cents for every dollar men make. Obama believes the government needs to better enforce the Equal Pay Act, fight job discrimination, and improve child care options and family medical leave to give women equal footing in the workplace.

And last but not least, we have to consider electability in November. Clinton does not automatically enjoy the position as the most popular candidate. We feel she will be unable to sway the considerable number of moderate voters needed for a Democratic victory. In contrast, Obama is able to inspire all walks of people from different social-economic backgrounds and has single handedly rejuvenated the country's belief in a democracy that has the people's best interests at heart, not multi-nationals, defense contractors and special interest groups. He has awakened a cadre of young Americans to the philosophies of elective politics and inspired many to register for the first time in their lives. Obama is clearly the choice if we are to change the direction of this country from a selfish, greed-driven nation to one of peace and justice for all.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

The Daily Gamecock endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-24 23:23)

The Daily Gamecock is the campus newspaper of the University of South Carolina.

Gamecaucus: Democratic Endorsement

Obama sets standard for unity, cooperation

With three frontrunners it could be hard to narrow it down to one clear winner.

But for our editorial board one quality and, with that, one name topped the list.

The Democratic candidate must be able to bridge party lines to bring consensus to the U.S. Too long has America suffered under the "us versus them" mentality in Washington.

But only one candidate can unite the public and parties. For this single ability above the rest, we endorse Barack Obama as the Democratic candidate for the state primary.

Obama promises to carefully and sensibly withdraw from Iraq, and his plans for health care will cover any student under 25 on their parents' health care plans.

His plans in education are even more admirable, providing more qualified teachers and making college affordable under the American Opportunity Tax Credit.

Obama's so-called "lack" of experience is of no consequence. Obama has experience in the areas that count for our university, our state and our nation. Working in grassroots efforts in Chicago, the senator has seen the hopes and dreams of American people and the obstacles they face.

He has known the pinch of every student loan bill in the mail and knows the fear associated with the lack of adequate health care.

And it only takes a quick look around D.C. to see what's gone terribly wrong and how it can be fixed; Obama has had four years. In 2004, Obama said in his unforgettable Democratic National Convention speech that the bedrock of our nation is in "hope in the face of uncertainty" and "a belief that there are better days ahead."

And our hopes lie with Barack Obama

.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Modesto Bee backs Barack Obama (2008-01-25 08:33)

The Modesto Bee, a daily in the Central Valley of California, endorsed Barack Obama today.

Modesto Bee backs Obama in California Democratic primary last updated: January 25, 2008 06:40:55 AM

Your vote has been counted, thank you for voting. [BUTTON]

IFRAME: communication_iframe

It is looking as if the Democratic Party will break historic barriers this year. If the nominee for president is Sen. Hillary Clinton of New York or Sen. Barack Obama of Illinois, as seems likely, either a woman or an African-American will be a major party's nominee for the first time. Former North Carolina Sen. John Edwards remains in the race, but is polling and running a distant third. The small field gives California Democrats and independents an interesting choice Feb. 5.

We believe Obama is the strongest of the three, offering inspiring leadership and an openness to ideas that has been missing in the current administration.

He has less time in the Senate than the others, but he had some very effective years as a legislator in the Illinois statehouse. His experience as a community organizer, which he refers to frequently, gave him an insight into ending cycles of poverty. So he talks not just about government programs but also about initiatives to promote personal responsibility.

His own childhood gives him a worldly perspective that transcends old ethnic barriers. Although well-educated, with a Harvard law degree, he also has an intuitive sense of people and issues.

On some issues important to the valley and California, Obama holds moderate views and the potential to work with representatives from both parties to get something accomplished. He is a co-sponsor of the agriculture guest worker bill that would help assure valley farms get the workers they need to harvest crops. He supports California's effort to impose stiffer greenhouse gas regulations.

It is unfortunate that the Democratic race has gotten so mean-spirited in recent days. Until then, Obama had been consistently poised and focused.

We still believe that he, more than Clinton, will be able to ease the partisan battles that have become so common.

Hillary and Bill Clinton have been both victims and aggressors in some of the polarized politics. Obama, in contrast, has no old scores to settle. His ascension would represent a clean break with the generation that has fought and re-fought the Vietnam War and the cultural upheavals that wracked the 1960s.

Obama was an early opponent of the war in Iraq, because he thought it was a strategic blunder that would only hurt the United States. His credibility on that issue would position him well to end the occupation quickly while also giving him the flexibility to extend it if necessary to avoid shedding the blood of more innocent Iraqis.

Obama's lack of experience at the highest levels of government is more than offset by his character, energy and core values – values on which he has been consistent for years. Obama is the best choice for the Democratic nomination.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack thanks Heidi in Beaufort (2008-01-25 11:29)

Barack Obama personally thanks field organizer Heidi Johnson-Young in Beaufort, South Carolina.
[EMBED]

Make calls to February 5th voters

Organize your community

Obama Events in South Carolina

Stand for Change Rally with Barack Obama

Outdoor Amphitheater
Entrance by Carillon Gardens
Clemson University
Clemson, SC

Friday, January 25

Doors open: 2:30 p.m.

Program begins: 4:30 p.m. Stand for Change Pee Dee Rally with Barack Obama in Florence

Florence City-County Civic Center
3300 West Radio Drive
Florence, SC

720

Friday, January 25, 2008

Doors open: 6:20 p.m. Stand for Change Rally with Barack Obama

Koger Center for the Arts
University of South Carolina
1051 Greene St.
Columbia, SC 29201

Friday, January 25

Doors open: 8:45 p.m.

Program begins: 10:45 p.m.

A Conversation with MICHELLE OBAMA (Meeting)

Friday, January 25 at 10:00 AM

Central Oak Grove Baptist Church (Hilton Head Island, SC)

Women for Obama invite you to A Conversation with Michelle Obama

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event

For security reasons, do not bring bags. No signs or banners permitted.

These events are free and open to the public; however an RSVP is strongly encouraged.

Further details to be announced as they become available.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama on Politics of Hope rather than Division (2008-01-25 14:03)

Sen. Barack Obama sent out this message today.

In less than 24 hours, voters in South Carolina will head to the polls.

Before they do, I wanted to show you a bit about what kind of campaign we're running here.

When Michelle and I talked about my running for president, one of the core goals we both had for this campaign was to leave the political process better off than we found it.

Here in South Carolina, a state with a history of some pretty divisive politics, ordinary people have challenged conventional thinking about the process and built a statewide organization based on local community organizing and neighbor-to-neighbor contacts.

Our supporters – men and women of all ages, races, religions, and backgrounds – have come together around the idea that we are one people, invested in each other and in our common future.

We've put together a few videos that will give you a sense of what we've built here – please take a look:

<http://my.barackobama.com/organize>

In communities across this state, people who have never been involved in politics before – or who had given up on what they saw as a broken system – have built something special.

No matter what the outcome tomorrow, our work here will have a lasting impact on those communities and on the Democratic Party for a long time to come.

We're seeing the same story play out across the country as grassroots supporters in 22 states prepare to cast their votes or turn out to caucus on February 5th.

Remember that tomorrow night, after the votes are in from South Carolina, the playing field will expand dramatically as races in those states come into full focus.

There will be a lot happening, and the intensity will be ratcheted up.

But the spirit of the grassroots organizing we have done here – of ordinary people taking back the political process – will be apparent in thousands of communities across the country.

I believe more strongly than ever that this movement for change can do more than just win an election. Together, we can transform this country.

Thank you for being part of this,

Barack

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Sun-Sentinel endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-25 15:01)

The Sun-Sentinel of South Florida endorsed Barack Obama today.

Obama: A worthy choice

South Florida Sun-Sentinel

4:38 PM EST, January 25, 2008

Disappointingly, the Democrat presidential candidates kept their pledge to not campaign in Florida. The Democratic National Committee has also warned that Florida's primary this Tuesday won't count toward assignment of delegates to this summer's national convention.'

Nonetheless, there is a vote, and it's an important one for a host of reasons. Not least of which is that whoever wins the popular vote in the Sunshine State, a place that has been a house of horrors for the party in the past two presidential elections, can claim to be the popular front-runner headed into Super Tuesday.

The South Florida Sun-Sentinel Editorial Board recommends voters choose Illinois Sen. Barack Obama. Obama is in his first term in the U.S. Senate. He splashed onto the national political stage with a stirring speech at the 2004 Democratic National Convention, a speech that catapulted him from being an obscure state senator to what is now a historic and inspiring presidential candidacy.

Obama, 46, is characteristically a cool-headed yet passionate politician who could transform the mood of the country with his message of hope and change. He and his opponents - U.S. Sen. Hillary Clinton of New York and John Edwards, a former U.S. senator from North Carolina and the 2004 Democratic vice presidential nominee - have all pledged to end the Iraq war, reform health care and bridge the gap between the rich and poor. They are all well-versed on government policy and international affairs. But what sets Obama apart is his ability to spark passion in the American people, who are ultimately the ones with the power to make real change.

Clinton, a two-term senator and wife of former President Bill Clinton, has proven her ability to win among Democrats through victories in New Hampshire and Nevada. But she is also a polarizing figure, based on baggage from her husband's presidency, and would have difficulty gaining the support of Republicans and Independents. Edwards, a former trial lawyer, trails far behind the two other candidates in the polls and has yet to win a primary.

Campaign transcends race

The three are in a competitive race that's been brutal at times, but it hasn't diminished Obama's image as a reconciling figure who can bring the country together.

Instead of relying on racial politics, the bi-racial son of a black Kenyan father and white Kansas mother, Obama has chosen to transcend race. His strong victory in predominantly white Iowa turned the election on its head, due to support from voters of both genders and all political persuasions. Turnout among new and young voters was phenomenal.

Obama is not only a man of lofty ideas and eloquent speech; he is also a leader with good judgment as the only candidate among the three contenders who publicly opposed the Iraq war from the beginning. As a state senator he called it "a U.S. occupation of undetermined length, at undetermined cost with undetermined consequences."

If elected, Obama has pledged to pull all U.S. combat brigades out of Iraq within 16 months of his administration, while keeping some troops in the country to protect our embassy and diplomats and strike against al-Qaida if necessary.

To tackle the immigration problem, he would secure the borders, remove incentives to enter illegally and create a system to allow undocumented immigrants to apply for citizenship after paying a fine and learning English. He pledges to make health care more affordable for everyone and require mandatory coverage for all children.

To address the current economic crisis, he proposes a $75 billion stimulus package to provide workers with an immediate $250 tax credit and Social Security recipients with a one-time $250 supplement. It would also include a $10 billion fund to help homeowners facing foreclosures and a $10 billion fund for states dealing with lower tax revenues.

Level of experience a concern

Some legitimately question Obama's level of experience. That's a concern in foreign policy issues, particularly. Obama's suggestion that he'd be willing to talk to U.S. rivals and foes is refreshing - to a point.

Sure, U.S. policy toward some countries, like Cuba, needs a new approach. But it's naive to think the diplomacy of talk would work magic on its own in other places, such as Tehran.

Obama's plan to pull all combat brigades out of Iraq within less than two years of his administration may also be a little too ambitious. The last thing we need is a failed state in Iraq, and every effort should be made to leave the country as stable as possible.

Obama unquestionably has the wherewithal to match the presidency's intellectual demands. He has a solid resume as a Harvard Law School graduate and was the first African-American editor of the Harvard Law Review. His background also includes work as a constitutional law professor, community organizer, Illinois state senator and now a U.S. senator. His background may be different to many politicians in Washington, but that's part of what makes him so appealing. He could bring a fresh approach to the presidency as we face challenges of the 21st century.

Obama also has a multiethnic background that reflects America's diversity, and could project a more tolerant and progressive image to the rest of the world. He has already proven his ability to bring people of all walks of life together; imagine what he could do on an international stage.

What the nation needs most is someone with a good mix of experience, sound judgment and a potent dose of inspiration to move the country forward. Obama has what it takes.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

San Jose Mercury News endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-25 16:34)

Silicon Valley's San Jose Mercury News, one of California's most respected and widely-read newspapers, just endorsed Barack Obama for Democrats.

Editorial: Obama best choice for Democrats

Mercury News Editorial

Article Launched: 01/25/2008 03:23:21 PM PST

America longs for a change of style, a change of policy and a change of heart. Sen. Barack Obama is the Democratic candidate with the best chance to unify the country and put it back on track. He is the candidate who can best restore the world's faith in America and America's faith in itself.

We recommend Obama as the Democratic nominee, believing that his political approach could eventually make as much history as being the first African American president.

The Democratic race is boiling down to two candidates, although former Sen. John Edwards vows to stay in the hunt until the convention.

Choosing between Obama and Sen. Hillary Clinton will not be easy for Democrats in Silicon Valley. The candidates' positions and their centrist approach to potentially divisive issues are remarkably similar.

From a pure Valley perspective, Clinton has articulated a clearer agenda to unleash American innovation. We believe Obama understands the importance of this region to the national and world economy. Nevertheless, he could learn from Clinton on how to appeal to the Valley's entrepreneurial spirit.

But this election is about far more than Silicon Valley. And ultimately, the best way to make the Valley strong is to make America strong - at home and abroad.

What tips the scales in Obama's favor is the freshness of his approach and the lack of political baggage he would bring to the White House.

We don't agree with most of the aspersions Republicans cast upon Clinton. She has built a record of accomplishment and compromise in the Senate, winning the respect of past foes including, of all people, Newt Gingrich. But Clinton's perceived negatives will cloud the campaign, and some positions she has taken over the years appear to have been based on political expediency more than core values. With that history, it will be harder for her to be successful.

Obama would dramatically change the nation's approach to foreign policy and domestic issues. While the substance might not differ substantially from Clinton's in many areas, he would have more cross-over appeal to independents and Republicans, whose support will be needed to bring about significant change.

Obama is the only candidate who opposed the Iraq war from the outset. His ethnic background and his upbringing give him a unique world view. He has the best chance to change how the world looks at the United States and restore the respect it has squandered during the past eight years.

While Clinton has a deep understanding of health care issues, her failed attempt to reform the system during her husband's first term dogs her steps. She chose experts with similar views and did not broadly engage stakeholders, which made her end result easy to shoot down. Obama can start fresh, and seems to understand the urgency.

He also brings a solid approach to the issues of climate change, education, election reform and stem cell research.

The nagging doubt about Obama is his lack of experience. He has worked hard to prepare for the White House, and it's not clear another six years in the Senate would necessarily make him a better president. Ronald Reagan showed that the most effective presidents have clear vision, good judgment and the ability to spur change.

For Obama, the important thing will be surrounding himself with intelligent and experienced advisers with a range of viewpoints and no reluctance to disagree with him. Abraham Lincoln's "Team of Rivals" would be the example here. Then it's a matter of deciding when to heed experience and when to follow his own instincts. Obama is smart enough to make good choices.

The George W. Bush-era has been the most divisive period in American history since the 1960s. Barack Obama represents the voice of a new generation. He resonates much as John F. Kennedy did with his message of hope and challenge. He is the best choice to unify and inspire America.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video from South Carolina (2008-01-25 18:40)

From Florence, South Carolina

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

At a women's roundtable in Columbia, South Carolina.

[EMBED]

Action Center
Obama Mobile

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Huge crowds gather for pre-election rallies (2008-01-25 20:58)

A diverse crowd of about 5,000 people gathered earlier today at Clemson University in support of Sen. Barack Obama .

A large crowd has also gathered in Columbia for the final late night rally before tomorrow's primary in South Carolina.

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Write a letter to the editor (2008-01-25 21:10)

Write a letter to the editor

by Sam Graham-Felsen

, Friday, January 25, 2008 at 06:18 PM

If you're in a Feb 5 voting state, consider writing a letter to your area newspaper – it's one of the most powerful ways to make your voice heard in your community and share your hope with your neighbors. Here are some of the newspapers and how you can get in touch and send in a letter...

- Birmingham News: <http://www.al.com/birminghamnews/info.ssf?lettereditor.html>
- Montgomery Advertiser: <http://www.montgomeryadvertiser.com/customerservice/letter.htm>
- Tuscaloosa News: ben.windham@tuscaloosanews.com
- Anchorage Daily News: <http://www.adn.com/help/letters/>
- Arizona Daily Star: letters@azstarnet.com
- Arizona Republic: <http://www.azcentral.com/arizonarepublic/opinions/sendalletter.html>
- Arkansas Democrat-Gazette: <http://www2.arkansasonline.com/contact/voicesform/>
- Sacramento Bee: opinion@sacbee.com
- San Diego Union-Tribune: letters@uniontrib.com
- San Francisco Chronicle: letters@sfgchronicle.com
- Denver Post: openforum@denverpost.com
- Rocky Mountain News: letters@rockymountainnews.com
- Hartford Courant: letters@courant.com
- Delaware News Journal: <http://www.delawareonline.com/apps/pbcs.dll/section?Category=OPINION>
- Atlanta Journal-Constitution: letters@ajc.com
- Savannah Morning News: letted@savannahnow.com
- Lawrence Journal World: http://www2.ljworld.com/submit/letter_to_the_editor/
- Wichita Eagle: letters@wichitaeagle.com
- Minneapolis Star Tribune: <http://mpls.startribune.com/dynamic/feedback/form.php>
- St. Paul Pioneer Press: letters@pioneerpress.com
- St. Louis Post-Dispatch: jameriley@post-dispatch.com
- Kansas City Star: letters@kcstar.com
- Santa Fe New Mexican: letters@sfnewmexican.com
- Albuquerque Tribune: editor@abqtrib.com
- Buffalo News: LetterToEditor@buffnews.com
- New York Sun: editor@nysun.com
- Oklahoman: yourviews@oklahoman.com
- Tulsa World: letters@tulsaworld.com
- Memphis Commercial Appeal: letters@commercialappeal.com
- Tennessean: <http://tennessean.com/SITES/OPINION/submit-editor.shtml>
- Salt Lake Tribune: letters@sltrib.com

Barack Obama's Plan to tackle the Housing Crisis (2008-01-25 21:23)

Barack Obama's Plan to Stimulate the Economy and Protect American Families

- Provide an immediate $250 tax cut for workers and their families.
- Provide an immediate, temporary $250 bonus to seniors in their Social Security checks.
- Provide an additional $250 tax cut to workers and an additional $250 to seniors if the economy continues to worsen
- Provide relief to homeowners hit by the housing crisis.
- Provide aid to states hardest-hit by the housing crisis to avoid a slash in services.
- Extend and expand Unemployment Insurance .

 Click here to read Barack's economic stimulus plan.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

South Carolina votes (2008-01-26 07:33)

The polls are open in South Carolina. Vote early.
Here is video from last night's big rally in Columbia.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Philadephia Inquirer endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-26 10:32)

As voters make their choice for Democratic nominee in South Carolina , Obama supporters will be glad to hear of another newspaper endorsement, this time from the Philadephia Inquirer.

Inquirer's Democratic endorsement for president: Obama Change.

Democrats are so sure Americans want a change from the eight years they have endured under President Bush that the party thinks winning back the White House from the Republicans is virtually guaranteed.

But only if the right nominee is chosen for the office.

Barely a month into the calendar of caucuses and primaries, the field has been winnowed. Gone are Joe Biden, Bill Richardson, Chris Dodd and Dennis Kucinich. Quixotic is the only way to describe Mike Gravel's campaign heading to Super Tuesday, Feb. 5, when more than 20 states, including New Jersey and Delaware, will hold their caucuses and primaries.

John Edwards' hopes had hinged on the outcome of yesterday's primary in his home state of South Carolina. On the party's ticket for vice president in 2004, Edwards' populist style might have made him a formidable candidate in any other presidential election.

But not this one.

This year it's been hard for anyone to get traction against two candidates who would make history no matter which one is nominated - Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama. In them, Democrats could choose as their nominee either the first woman or the first African American to become president.

But the choice is hard.

In some respects, Clinton is much better prepared than was her husband, Bill, when he, as Arkansas governor, was elected president in 1992. The senator from New York could be a strong leader, comparable to Britain's Margaret Thatcher, but with a compassion for children's issues that could glue the nation's focus on its most precious asset.

But in an election where change is the operative word, would the former first lady represent that? After two Bush presidencies, many Americans don't see change in a Clinton dynasty. Hillary's high negatives in polls may have more to do with her husband's behavior as president than anything she has done since. But those negatives suggest she could be a catalyst for division when the nation longs for unity.

Given that, BARACK OBAMA is the best Democrat to lead this nation past the nasty, partisan, Washington-as-usual politics that have blocked consensus on Iraq; politics that never blinked at the greedy, subprime mortgage schemes that could spawn a recession; politics that have greatly diminished our country's stature in the world.

Obama inspires people to action. And while inspiration alone isn't enough to get a job done, it's a necessary ingredient to begin the hard work.

Obama's appeal to Americans to have the audacity to hope, even in the face of tragedies such as 9/11 and Hurricane Katrina, has fallen on fertile ground. Americans want desperately to believe they can overcome any difficulty - given the right leadership.

But the Illinois senator has shown on the campaign trail that he offers more than pretty words. In debates and speeches, he has provided details of a White House program that, with adjustments, could produce the outcomes this nation needs.

On the war, Obama wants to have all combat brigades out of Iraq within 16 months, while maintaining a force in the region for targeted strikes on al-Qaeda. On the economy, he proposes tax credits for working families and a mortgage credit to help lower-income homeowners. He proposes a national health insurance exchange to help individuals purchase coverage. He wants to do better than No Child Left Behind to improve education.

The question is whether a first-term U.S. senator with no major record as an Illinois legislator is ready to be president. His life story says yes. This former community organizer knows how to bring people together to beat the odds. Others who seemed an unlikely fit rose to the occasion once in the Oval Office. Obama could do that, too.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

The Bohemian (CA) recommends Barack Obama (2008-01-26 14:18)

There are about 3 hours left before the South Carolina polls close.

The Bohemian, an alternative newspaper covering the North SF Bay Area in northern California is recommending Barack Obama for the Democratic nomination.

bohemian.com

Say You Want a Revolution?

Recommendations for the Feb. 5 California State Primary

Former president Bill Clinton made a surprise trip to U. C. Davis on Jan. 15, where some 11,000 college students crowded the campus' new athletic center to hear Clinton, the J.F.K. of their generation, re-envision the American Dream. The Clinton campaign had offered less than 24 hours to organize the event, hoping that a rough handful of 1,000 people might attend. That the total number was some 11 times their expectations speaks exactly to what young voters, and American voters in general, are rapaciously thirsty for: vision, leadership and even that workhorse of the current media blip, change.

Clinton spoke extemporaneously for over an hour that night, reminding the crowd who Americans are and what America is supposed to be. Were most of the students there that night—raucously repeating Clinton's name, screaming in adulation and stomping the floor like he is a rock star—Hillary supporters? An informal survey of the crowd says no. Televised news stories say no. Newspaper interviews say no. Blog entries after the event say no. They were, by and large, Bill Clinton supporters, buoyed aloft by childhood memories of a larger-than-life politician whose mistakes are filmed in haze when compared to his successes; who, as a leader, spoke regularly of hope; who reminded citizens of our noblest goals. And they are absolutely thirsty for such leadership today.

Many of those still on the fence about the Democratic presidential candidate are attracted to Hillary's "Ready to Go" slogan. There is a sense of childlike calm in thinking that since this mess is so big and so deep and so tall, someone who's been there before can clean up it, all. And have Bill there to help her do it. ("Billary!" was a consistent bellow from the college crowd.)

Hillary knows Washington, she knows the players, she knows how the sausage gets made. As you'll read in the argument below, that's exactly what's wrong with her. Given our current circumstances, it no longer seems wise to worry if the next president already knows how to find the washroom on the Oval Office floor. The right team can direct the president there.

The president, rather, needs to have an acute vision and leadership, ideas and values that match the highest principles. As wonderful as Bill Clinton is in hindsight and as ready to go as Hillary Clinton undoubtedly would be, we're recommending away from dynasty. We're recommending toward the future. That's the best vision. —Gretchen Giles

Proposition recommendations written by Gretchen Giles, Traci Hukill, Eric Johnson, Steve Palopoli and Paul Wagner.

Democratic Primary: Barack Obama

Obama has the vision to return the U.S. to itself

Bill Clinton and Al Gore erected a bridge to the new century. George W. Bush bombed it. We need to rebuild it.

If Barack Obama is elected, it will send the world a message that this is a new America: not the monocultural, aggressive, ugly America that we occupy this very moment, but one that is hopeful, forward-looking and engaged with a diverse planet. Hillary Clinton is less well-equipped for that job. For all of her strengths, she is essentially a policy wonk, with more scars than accomplishments from her Washington years. Failed health care initiatives, as well as her votes on Iraq, should give voters pause. Her condemnations of disgraceful national practices like water-boarding and extraordinary rendition came only after she was pressed on the campaign trail, when she could have been a leader in the Senate opposing the administration's conduct. Obama has been such a leader. The clarity of his ideas is rooted in the depth of his convictions. Even more important in this bleak political landscape, he has shown an extraordinary ability to inspire a broad range of Americans.

Obama has been primarily responsible for the rare buzz of excitement surrounding the 2008 primaries. This is often attributed to his prowess as a speechmaker, but it's a mistake to think of Obama as merely a great orator. Ever since Obama first captured the national spotlight with a show-stopper of a keynote address at the 2004 Democratic National Convention, what's electrified voters is the power and clarity of his ideas, and the sense that people get, when listening to him talk, that he is speaking the truth.

In a debate a few weeks ago, NBC's Tim Russert asked the candidates to describe the moment that they decided to run for office. Obama's response was by far the most memorable. He said he has struggled with the decision: "The most important question was not whether I could win the presidency," he said, "but whether I should."

At the same time that he is connecting in a heartfelt way with the people who hear him, Obama is putting forward some simple and powerful ideas. At the center of his campaign—as everyone knows—is the simple and profound notion that American politics is in need of a revolution.

"It's not the magnitude of our problems that concerns me the most," he says, "it's the smallness of our politics. Obama's promise is that he brings a vision, that he is a true leader. When he says, "I will bring the country together," he is talking once again about building a bridge. Americans know in their hearts that this is exactly what needs to be done if the country is going to be able to move forward again. It's a big job, and we believe Sen. Barack Obama can do it. We recommend voting for Barack Obama. —E. J.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

The Bohemian (CA) recommends Barack Obama (2008-01-26 14:18)

There are about 3 hours left before the South Carolina polls close.

The Bohemian, an alternative newspaper covering the North SF Bay Area in northern California is recommending Barack Obama for the Democratic nomination.

Say You Want a Revolution?

Recommendations for the Feb. 5 California State Primary

Former president Bill Clinton made a surprise trip to U. C. Davis on Jan. 15, where some 11,000 college students crowded the campus' new athletic center to hear Clinton, the J.F.K. of their generation, re-envision the American Dream. The Clinton campaign had offered less than 24 hours to organize the event, hoping that a rough handful of 1,000 people might attend. That the total number was some 11 times their expectations speaks exactly to what young voters, and American voters in general, are rapaciously thirsty for: vision, leadership and even that workhorse of the current media blip, change.

Clinton spoke extemporaneously for over an hour that night, reminding the crowd who Americans are and what America is supposed to be. Were most of the students there that night—raucously repeating Clinton's name, screaming in adulation and stomping the floor like he is a rock star—Hillary supporters? An informal survey of the crowd says no. Televised news stories say no. Newspaper interviews say no. Blog entries after the event say no. They were, by and large, Bill Clinton supporters, buoyed aloft by childhood memories of a larger-than-life politician whose mistakes are filmed in haze when compared to his successes; who, as a leader, spoke regularly of hope; who reminded citizens of our noblest goals. And they are absolutely thirsty for such leadership today.

Many of those still on the fence about the Democratic presidential candidate are attracted to Hillary's "Ready to Go" slogan. There is a sense of childlike calm in thinking that since this mess is so big and so deep and so tall, someone who's been there before can clean up it, all. And have Bill there to help her do it. ("Billary!" was a consistent bellow from the college crowd.)

Hillary knows Washington, she knows the players, she knows how the sausage gets made. As you'll read in the argument below, that's exactly what's wrong with her. Given our current circumstances, it no longer seems wise to worry if the next president already knows how to find the washroom on the Oval Office floor. The right team can direct the president there.

The president, rather, needs to have an acute vision and leadership, ideas and values that match the highest principles. As wonderful as Bill Clinton is in hindsight and as ready to go as Hillary Clinton undoubtedly would be, we're recommending away from dynasty. We're recommending toward the future. That's the best vision. —Gretchen Giles

Proposition recommendations written by Gretchen Giles, Traci Hukill, Eric Johnson, Steve Palopoli and Paul Wagner.

Democratic Primary: Barack Obama

Obama has the vision to return the U.S. to itself

Bill Clinton and Al Gore erected a bridge to the new century. George W. Bush bombed it. We need to rebuild it.

If Barack Obama is elected, it will send the world a message that this is a new America: not the monocultural, aggressive, ugly America that we occupy this very moment, but one that is hopeful, forward-looking and engaged with a diverse planet. Hillary Clinton is less well-equipped for that job. For all of her strengths, she is essentially a policy wonk, with more scars than accomplishments from her Washington years. Failed health care initiatives, as well as her votes on Iraq, should give voters pause. Her condemnations of disgraceful national practices like water-boarding and extraordinary rendition came only after she was pressed on the campaign trail, when she could have been a leader in the Senate opposing the administration's conduct. Obama has been such a leader. The clarity of his ideas is rooted in the depth of his convictions. Even more important in this bleak political landscape, he has shown an extraordinary ability to inspire a broad range of Americans.

Obama has been primarily responsible for the rare buzz of excitement surrounding the 2008 primaries. This is often attributed to his prowess as a speechmaker, but it's a mistake to think of Obama as merely a great orator. Ever since Obama first captured the national spotlight with a show-stopper of a keynote address at the 2004 Democratic National Convention, what's electrified voters is the power and clarity of his ideas, and the sense that people get, when listening to him talk, that he is speaking the truth.

In a debate a few weeks ago, NBC's Tim Russert asked the candidates to describe the moment that they decided to run for office. Obama's response was by far the most memorable. He said he has struggled with the decision: "The most important question was not whether I could win the presidency," he said, "but whether I should."

At the same time that he is connecting in a heartfelt way with the people who hear him, Obama is putting forward some simple and powerful ideas. At the center of his campaign—as everyone knows—is the simple and profound notion that American politics is in need of a revolution.

"It's not the magnitude of our problems that concerns me the most," he says, "it's the smallness of our politics. Obama's promise is that he brings a vision, that he is a true leader. When he says, "I will bring the country together," he is talking once again about building a bridge. Americans know in their hearts that this is exactly what needs to be done if the country is going to be able to move forward again. It's a big job, and we believe Sen. Barack Obama can do it. We recommend voting for Barack Obama. —E. J.

X

St. Louis Post-Dispatch picks Obama (2008-01-26 15:19)

The full endorsement is not online yet, but the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, the largest newspaper in Missouri, is recommending Barack Obama.

We disagree with the details of some of Mr. Obama's legislative proposals, particularly his heavy reliance on insurance companies as part of an overhaul of national health policy. But we are comforted by his legislative career in Springfield and in Washington, where he worked diligently across party lines, seeking common ground and, often, finding it. He offers a welcome return to civility and cooperation.

We're afraid that wouldn't be the case with his principal opponent for the Democratic nomination, Sen. Hillary Clinton of New York. She has been a diligent senator since her election in 2001, but she is a lightning rod. There is a difference, too, between seeking consensus and "triangulating" core principles into positions palatable to campaign donors.

And we confess to a certain "Clinton fatigue." The emergence of the former president as the Luca Brasi of the campaign trail reminds us of the worst of the Clinton years: the divisiveness and the bickering; the too-casual, if artful, blend of truth and half-truth. We're not eager for the replay. As to John Edwards, the former senator from North Carolina, he is the right man at the wrong time, a star whose light is eclipsed by the tail of a comet.

Comets don't come around that often. In January of 1961, Ann Dunham Obama was six weeks pregnant with Barack Obama Sr.'s child when President Kennedy said at his inauguration that "the torch has been passed to a new generation." It's that time again.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Chicago Tribune endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-26 15:27)

A big one. The Chicago Tribune has just endorsed Barack Obama.

For the Democrats: Obama

January 27, 2008

In 1996, this page endorsed a Chicago attorney, law school instructor and community activist named Barack Obama for a seat in the Illinois Senate. We've paid him uncommon scrutiny ever since, wryly glad that he lived up to our modest prediction: We said Obama "has potential as a political leader."

Since then, so much has been written about U.S. Sen. Barack Obama that it's easy to forget how far an entire nation's scrutiny of him "as a political leader" has led us all. No longer does every article obsess on whether voters are ready for a black man in the White House.

Most Americans, we'd wager, by now have concluded that the color of his skin matters less than his evident comfort within it. Yes, he is vilified by less-secure Democrats for acknowledging Ronald Reagan was a transformative president who "put us on a fundamentally different path because the country was ready for it." Our takeaway: Obama has the confidence to speak truth, poll-tested or not.

IFRAME: http://www.chicagotribune.com/common/includes/google-adsense-content.html?client=ca-tribune_news3_html&channel_content=chicagotribune.com&channel_section=chicagotribune_section&type=wide&keywords=government%20grants%2C%20government%20records%2C%20homeland%20security%2C%20international%20affairs%2C&page_url=http://www.chicagotribune.com/news/opinion/chi-0127edit1jan27,0,1033826,p rint.story

IFRAME: http://www.chicagotribune.com/common/includes/topix.html?pcode=6003&url=http%3A%2F%2Fwww.chicagotribune.com%2Fnews%2Fopinion%2Fchi-0127edit1jan27%2C0%2C1033826%2Cprint.story%3Flast_modified%3D1%2F25%2F08%2010%3A20%3A41

Barack Obama is the rare individual who can sit in the U.S. Senate yet have his career potential unfulfilled. He is the Democrat best suited to lead this nation. We offer him our endorsement for the Feb. 5 Illinois primary.

By one measure, this endorsement is a paradox. We're urging votes for a candidate whose political views we often disagree with. But this is a more complicated contest, and a more complex candidate, than the norm. This nation's next president inherits a war—against terrorists in Iraq and elsewhere—that has found many ways to divide Americans. Capitol Hill is gridlocked and uncivil. Our discourse is hostage to blame.

Obama can help this nation move forward. A Tribune profile last May labeled his eight years in Springfield as "a study in complexity, caution and calculation. In the minority party for all but his final two years in the Statehouse, he tempered a progressive agenda with a cold dash of realism, often forging consensus with conservative Republicans when other liberals wanted to crusade."

Racial profiling, death penalty reform, recording of criminal interrogations, health care—when victory was elusive, Obama seized progress. He did so by working fluidly with Republicans and Democrats. He sought out his ideological foes. He listened closely to them. As a result, many Republicans in Illinois have warm words for Barack Obama.

Obama's key opponent, U.S. Sen. Hillary Clinton, unifies only her foes. Her penchant for gaming every issue—recall her clumsy dodging when asked in a Philadelphia debate whether illegal immigrants should be licensed to drive—feeds suspicion of maneuvering that would humble Machiavelli.

As this campaign has progressed, Hillary Clinton in moments of crisis hasn't been an ennobling sight. Her reliance on her husband, the less-than-presidential Bill, to trash-talk Obama reaffirms that the Clintons do whatever it takes to prevail. Depicting Obama's record on Iraq as a "fairy tale" is instructive: Think what you will of the war, but Sen. Clinton was an enabler when that was popular. In Kerryspeak, she was for the war before she was against the war.

The candidates' differences on issues are minor and largely irrelevant: Presidents don't dictate laws, they tussle over legislation with Congress. Much of the "experience" Hillary Clinton touts in that realm instead was proximity to power. Bill's power.

Last week, Hillary Clinton attacked Obama for his association with alleged influence-peddler Tony Rezko. If Obama had dealt with the Rezko issue forthrightly long ago, it might rank in public memory with Clinton's remarkable success in cattle futures.

Instead, as we've said, Obama has been too self-exculpatory. His assertion in network TV interviews last week that nobody had indications Rezko was engaging in wrongdoing strains credulity: Tribune stories linked Rezko to questionable fundraising for Gov. Rod Blagojevich in 2004—more than a year before the adjacent home and property purchases by the Obamas and the Rezkos.

One more time, Senator:

You need to divulge all there is to know about that relationship. Until you do, the journalistic scrubbing and opposition research will intensify. You should have recognized Rezko as a political seducer of young talent. But given that you've not been accused of any crime or ethical breach, your Rezko history is not a deal-breaker.

Nor do we know of similar lapses during the 12 years we've been watching Obama.

To the contrary, the professional judgment and personal decency with which he has managed himself and his ambition distinguish Barack Obama. We endorse him convinced that he could lead America in directions that the other Democrats could not.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama's Sleeping Giant: Young Voters (2008-01-26 16:10)

Since the campaign started nearly a year ago, the Obama campaign has carefully courted and organized young people to support his candidacy. Indeed, it was a group of young supporters known as Students for Barack Obama that helped orchestrate the drive for Obama to run in the first place.

If these young people do actually awake and turn out on Feb. 5, the Illinois senator could shock everyone with a tsunami victory. If not, then it will be much, much tougher. Of course, there are other important factors like independent voters, cross-over voters, etc., but none quite so difficult to predict as young voters.

According the U.S. census, about 10.46 percent of the Iowa population is between 18 and 24 years old. In comparison, New Hampshire has about 9.13 percent in the same category and Nevada only 8.55 percent.

South Carolina, which just finished voting today, has 9.72 percent in the 18-24 range. We saw today a masterful example of how getting out the vote should be done.

Tsunami Tuesday states with high percentages of young people include North Dakota (12.86 %), Utah (12.51 %), Alaska (10.70 %), Kansas (10.59 %), New Mexico (10.48 %), California (10.38 %), Minnesota (10.07 %) and New York (10.04 %).

In traditional voter turnout among Feb. 5 states, Minnesota (43 %) and Massachusetts (34 %) are standouts.

Much of Barack's support among young people is found at the nation's colleges and universities. California had the leading number of fall enrollment in 2005 with 2,399,833 at degree-granting institutions followed by New York, among Feb. 5 states, with 1,152,081.

Hillary Clinton's campaign understands Barack's appeal to young people and recently she has highlighted her programs to cut tuition fees and reign in predatory student lenders. Her daughter Chelsea and Hollywood stars like America Ferrera can also be expected to make circuits of college campuses for Hillary.

Obama may have a bit of a lead here though with hundreds of college chapters of Students for Barack Obama created over the last year. It will be up to his supporters though to make sure these chapters are energized to spread the word and get out the youth vote.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama projected winner in South Carolina (2008-01-26 17:05)

NBC and CNN are projecting Barack Obama has won by a good margin. More details later.

Update : Those early numbers were based on just a few precincts. Barack has about 52 percent of the vote with 2 percent of the precincts reporting.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Caroline Kennedy: 'A President Like My Father' (2008-01-26 19:31)

Looks like Barack Obama will have won by 27 or 28 percentage points when the counting is done. A huge victory. There are rumors of some big endorsements tomorrow, possibly Ted Kennedy and even Al Gore according to Lynn Sweet.

In tomorrow's New York Times, Caroline Kennedy will endorse Obama in an op-ed.

Caroline Kennedy: 'A President Like My Father'

by Sam Graham-Felsen,

Saturday, January 26, 2008 at 05:49 PM

Caroline Kennedy endorses Barack Obama for President in the New York Times...

By CAROLINE KENNEDY

OVER the years, I've been deeply moved by the people who've told me they wished they could feel inspired and hopeful about America the way people did when my father was president. This sense is even more profound today. That is why I am supporting a presidential candidate in the Democratic primaries, Barack Obama.

My reasons are patriotic, political and personal, and the three are intertwined. All my life, people have told me that my father changed their lives, that they got involved in public service or politics because he asked them to. And the generation he inspired has passed that spirit on to its children. I meet young people who were born long after John F. Kennedy was president, yet who ask me how to live out his ideals.

Sometimes it takes a while to recognize that someone has a special ability to get us to believe in ourselves, to tie that belief to our highest ideals and imagine that together we can do great things. In those rare moments, when such a person comes along, we need to put aside our plans and reach for what we know is possible.

We have that kind of opportunity with Senator Obama. It isn't that the other candidates are not experienced or knowledgeable. But this year, that may not be enough. We need a change in the leadership of this country — just as we did in 1960.

Most of us would prefer to base our voting decision on policy differences. However, the candidates' goals are similar. They have all laid out detailed plans on everything from strengthening our middle class to investing in early childhood education. So qualities of leadership, character and judgment play a larger role than usual.

Senator Obama has demonstrated these qualities throughout his more than two decades of public service, not just in the United States Senate but in Illinois, where he helped turn around struggling communities, taught constitutional law and was an elected state official for eight years. And Senator Obama is showing the same qualities today. He has built a movement that is changing the face of politics in this country, and he has demonstrated a special gift for inspiring young people — known for a willingness to volunteer, but an aversion to politics — to become engaged in the political process.

I have spent the past five years working in the New York City public schools and have three teenage children of my own. There is a generation coming of age that is hopeful, hard-working, innovative and imaginative. But too many of them are also hopeless, defeated and disengaged. As parents, we have a responsibility to help our children to believe in themselves and in their power to shape their future. Senator Obama is inspiring my children, my parents' grandchildren, with that sense of possibility.

Senator Obama is running a dignified and honest campaign. He has spoken eloquently about the role of faith in his life, and opened a window into his character in two compelling books. And when it comes to judgment, Barack Obama made the right call on the most important issue of our time by opposing the war in Iraq from the beginning.

I want a president who understands that his responsibility is to articulate a vision and encourage others to achieve it; who holds himself, and those around him, to the highest ethical standards; who appeals to the hopes of those who still believe in the American Dream, and those around the world who still believe in the American ideal; and who can lift our spirits, and make us believe again that our country needs every one of us to get involved.

I have never had a president who inspired me the way people tell me that my father inspired them. But for the first time, I believe I have found the man who could be that president — not just for me, but for a new generation of Americans.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama's victory speech in South Carolina (2008-01-26 21:14)

Check out Barack Obama's victory speech after the South Carolina Primary.
[EMBED]

To rate up this video and add to your favorites, visit the YouTube site:
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=-iVAPH_EcmQ

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Seattle Times endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-27 07:20)

The Seattle Times endorsed Barack Obama today.

The Times recommends ...

Obama for the Democrats

PREV

of

NEXT

+ enlarge

After seven years of George Bush's failed presidency, after five years of unnecessary war in Iraq, America is ready to write a new narrative. All candidates favor the now-bromidic slogan: change. Only one candidate truly embraces the yearnings this word represents.

The Seattle Times endorses Sen. Barack Obama for the Democratic nomination for president. He has the grasp, temperament and skills to right our standing in the world. He has broad insight and specific ideas to assuage our own hardworking citizens' fears of an economy turning sour.

Obama has thoughtful plans to help citizens with everyday problems: middle-class tax breaks; elimination of income tax for seniors earning less than $50,000; health care for minors.

Critics ask a fair question about Obama's experience. He has been a U. S. senator for three years, Illinois state senator for eight, lawyer, lecturer, community organizer — a résumé some say is not executive enough for a president.

American voters tend to select governors rather than senators for president, President Bush being a recent example. Bush fit the mold — governor of Texas six years — but his résumé proved to be a failed indicator.

Judgment is more important. Bush's decision to invade Iraq was the most-wrongheaded decision of our time.

Voters this time have reason to focus on other qualities, such as the courage to tell people things they might not want to hear. Obama, for example, took his pitch for higher fuel-efficiency standards to the most-challenging audience, Detroit.

And in October 2002, when our country was horribly bruised by Sept. 11, he came out against the war in Iraq: "I don't oppose all wars. ... What I am opposed to is a dumb war. ... What I am opposed to is a rash war."

Such statements might sound unpatriotic — unless, of course, the speaker turns out to be correct. In an Obama administration, American troops have a chance to start coming home.

Americans have not selected a candidate for president directly from the Senate since 1960, when they elected Sen. John Kennedy, who offered similar charisma and hope.

Obama, more than other candidates, is gut-level inspiring. All candidates speak in platitudes that make us feel good. Sometimes their words actually move us.

"We want a politics that reflects our best values," Obama said early in the campaign. "We want a politics that reflects our core decency, a politics that is based on a simple premise that we stand and fall together."

We need that after the divisiveness of Bush-Cheney. Obama would rather talk to world leaders than rattle sabers at them.

That approach is likely to appeal to moderates and independents if they participate in Washington's Feb. 9 caucuses and Feb. 19 primary.

Obama's personal story offers progress in the ongoing struggle to be a more comfortable, racially diverse country. The son of a white mother from Kansas and an absent father from Kenya, he doesn't need to say much about diversity. He moves the issue forward just by waking up in the morning. Obama would be the first African-American president. But in his way of transcending the harshness of typical racial politics, he makes that almost a side point.

Obama has realistic ideas about education: performance pay and universal prekindergarten that is not mandatory; after-school and summer programs.

Obama would mandate health-insurance coverage for children, but not for adults. His approach to expanding coverage and stemming escalating costs is pragmatic enough to gain legislative traction.

Obama speaks eloquently about media issues. His positions encourage a public worried about a consolidated media. He supports network neutrality and laments media consolidation. He co-sponsored a bill to stop recent changes to the cross-ownership rule adopted by the Federal Communications Commission. Obama says he would appoint FCC commissioners who will work in the public's interest and against media concentration.

Obama has the smarts, the plans and, yes, the charisma to capably lead and transform a nation that aches for a new direction.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Stockton Record recommends Barack Obama (2008-01-27 07:30)

The Stockton Record , widely read in California's San Joaquin county, has recommended Barack Obama today.

Barack Obama: The possibilities of setting a new course

Because the Feb. 5 primary election gives California voters a real chance to impact the presidential nominating process, The Record is breaking precedent by offering its recommendations.

January 27, 2008 6:00 AM

Barack Obama is turning "The Audacity of Hope" into a working title.

The 46-year-old first-term U.S. senator from Illinois is audaciously challenging the Democratic Party establishment in his historic bid to become the country's first black presidential nominee.

With poise and assurance, he's reasserted a visionary agenda of hope, inspiration, dedication and commitment so eloquently expressed in his 2006 book. He's aiming his policies and programs in a new direction, expressing a determination to create unity, inclusiveness and bipartisanship that would make him a formidable contender in the Nov. 4 election.

The schedule for The Record's editorial endorsements for the Feb. 5 primary election:

» Today: John McCain, Republican, and Barack Obama, Democrat, for president

» Monday: State Propositions 91, 92 and 93

» Tuesday: State Propositions 94, 95, 96 and 97

» Wednesday: Measure Q, the Stockton Unified School District's construction bond

Obama already has demonstrated the strength, resiliency and perseverance that leadership requires during his campaign against New York Sen. Hillary Clinton. She's been buttressed by the ongoing popularity of her husband, former President Clinton, and the well-calibrated Democratic machinery he helped construct.

Obama, an interloper who seems to have affronted the Clintons' sense of entitlement, has energized and mobilized young people, independents and first-time voters - expanding and diversifying the party's base while threatening the established protocols.

He's been bold and straightforward about his policies and increasingly defiant when challenged on his basic beliefs. He's tried to be tactful and thoughtful regarding race, attempting to transcend it while competing respectfully - despite some recent bickering - against the first woman to have a viable chance to be president.

On most major issues, Obama differs only marginally from Clinton or former North Carolina Sen. John Edwards.

Unlike them, however, he doesn't need to renunciate or equivocate about the war in Iraq. He opposed the war and didn't have to vote to authorize its funding, as did Clinton and Edwards. He was a state legislator at the time.

Like Clinton, he supports phased withdrawals of U.S. troops - a stark contrast and clear choice in a campaign against a Republican opponent.

Though he lacks foreign policy experience, he's said he'll assemble a team of seasoned specialists to assist him. Decades of experience couldn't prevent the country and its undersized military from being bogged down in the bloody, costly conflict in Iraq since 2003.

Obama, whose father was born in Kenya, supports comprehensive immigration reform and an all-inclusive health care plan. He fits the Democratic demographic when it comes to values issues. He'll have to be forceful as the U.S. economy deteriorates.

It'll require more than audacity and hope to sustain Obama during what could become a personal and polarizing campaign. He'll need to keep his cool, stick to his core beliefs and refrain from demonizing the opposition.

If he does that and stays committed to unifying a badly divided nation, he could end 20 years of Bush-Clinton dominance of the presidency and set a new course for which the majority of Americans have been hoping.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Times of Trenton (NJ) backs Barack Obama (2008-01-27 07:43)

The Times of Trenton in New Jersey endorsed Barack Obama today.

The Times

Dem primary: Obama

Sunday, January 27, 2008

Now that New Jersey has a real voice in the primary process, we'd like to become part of the chorus. We're endorsing candi dates for the Garden State's Feb. 5 contest – one of 23 across the country that day that will go a long way toward determining the presidential nominees.

We'd trust the keys to the White House to any one of the three leading Democratic candidates. Barack Obama, Hillary Clinton and John Edwards have plans, passion and a grounding in government that would serve the country well. Their engagement, their energy would represent a huge change from the lackluster leadership of the past seven years.

That said, we're backing Sen. Obama for several reasons, not the least of which is that he has the ability to change the image of the United States overnight. And he understands the importance of that power, the first step toward restoring our country as a beacon of liberty and justice.

Sen. Obama has advanced an agenda of sound economic proposals. And his health-care approach, with buy-in plans, would pave the way toward the eventual goal of an all-inclusive health-care system.

He's serious about the development of alternative fuels and is not beholden to the interests of the big oil companies.

He has displayed solid judgment throughout his career. When, as a state senator, he warned against going to war in Iraq, he eloquently anticipated the worst that has come to pass. Having never voted for the war, he's in a better position than his rivals to begin to undo that unholy mess with a timetable for the withdrawal of troops.

His candidacy also is a clear signal that the United States has moved beyond whatever remnants of racism still cling to this country's conscience. Pockets of prejudice still may remain here and there, but they will no longer be countenanced.

Most important, Sen. Obama represents a fresh start and a departure from two decades of the Bush-Clinton-Bush monopoly on government – and all the attendant scandals, favors, battles, special interests, failures and foibles of that time.

He's tapped a spring of hope in the people of this country. He's inspired us to believe that the little guy will not be lost in the business of government, but participate in it and benefit from it.

John Edwards also has sounded that theme, but he seems to have overplayed the populist card.

Hillary Clinton is more than qualified to run the country. She's smart, experienced, eminently able – and she's promised to roll up her sleeves and begin work on her first day in office. Our government, though is so huge, so entrenched, such a mighty force of inertia, it may be impossible, despite her best efforts, for her to actually push it in a different direction.

That's the advantage of Obama and the ignition of optimism he's brought about. Appealing to our best and brightest instincts, he's made us believe a better future is possible.

He's intent on pushing the massive behemoth of government toward change, and he has the ability to inspire Congress and the people to unite and join the effort.

Obama is convinced that our country is capable of better. And he has convinced us.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

WantaDemocratThisTime (2008-01-27 11:18:00)

That's it? Obama inspires, and its going to change something in Washington? Gads. I guess I will go back to my own brand of hope, based on reality. If the press manages to force the last electable Democrat out of the race, they will turn on Barack and Hillary like hyenas on a zebra. Maybe we can have a Democrat in the White House in 2012

Ted Kennedy to endorse Barack Obama? (2008-01-27 08:09)

Time magazine's Mark Halperin suggests another endorsement from "Camelot," this time from Sen. Ted Kennedy may be on the way. Yesterday, Lynn Sweet hinted at the same thing.

ChrisR of mydd.com sees this is as a big gain for the following reasons:

Five reasons:

- 1) Symbolism: One can knock the Kennedys as the past. There's some powerful symbolism there among a great deal of Democratic voters – particular older ones.
- 2) Credibility: He's still one of the leading D's out there in the Senate. He's what many thought HRC was going to be in the Senate – a major power broker in the D party,

- 3) A nudge to superdelegates: This provides momentum and provides a signal to others in Congress: hop on board.
- 4) Media: This is two days of free media – and provides an incredibly strong media narrative for one if not two of the nine days remaining,
- 5) Massachussets: It matters. With Patrick, Kerry and Kennedy, that puts Obama in much stronger shape in MA. The polls that took place before this endorsement and before SC? Utterly meaningless.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

San Francisco Chronicle backs Barack Obama (2008-01-27 08:15)

Another big California endorsement: the San Francisco Chronicle recommends Barack Obama for the Democratic primary.

Reprieve and renewal

Sunday, January 27, 2008

The American political system needs a period of reprieve and renewal.

It needs a reprieve from a White House that draws power from fear, sneers at any science that gets in the way of corporate or theocratic missions and stubbornly adheres to policies that leave the nation sinking in debt and mired in war. It craves a reprieve from the politics of bloodsport that prize clever calculation over courage, winning over principle, party label over national interest.

The renewal must come from a president who can lead by inspiration, who can set partisanship aside to define and achieve common goals, who can persuade a new generation of Americans that there is something noble and something important about public service.

There is no doubt about the Democrat with the vision and skills to bring that period of reprieve and renewal. It is Sen. Barack Obama.

As is often the case in a heavily contested primary, the relatively modest policy differences among the candidates have become magnified and inflamed beyond all due perspective. For example, Obama, Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton and Sen. John Edwards have pledged to expand health coverage, albeit with somewhat different approaches. Obama's is certainly the most cautious, though perhaps the most realistic, considering that any overhaul of the health care system would require buy-in from at least some Republicans and myriad business interests that would be affected by such landmark federal regulation.

All three have vowed to phase out the U.S. military presence in Iraq. Obama, however, stands alone in his opposition to the invasion at the outset. Clinton and Edwards each voted to give President Bush the authorization to use military force against Saddam Hussein. Edwards acknowledges his mistake, Clinton parses the meaning of the resolution. It was Obama's instincts that proved sound.

Clinton, who arrived in the U.S. Senate four years before Obama, has tried to make experience the issue. As senator, she has proved skillful at representing diverse New York interests and working with Republicans. But if she wants to highlight her White House experience as a defining difference, then it's only fair to point out that two of the projects she was most deeply involved with produced a debacle (health care) and scandals (fund raising). Especially in recent days, her campaign has shown the sharp elbows that evoke the ugly underside of the Clinton years, and the (Karl Rove inspired) Bush years that succeeded them: the reflex to scorch the Earth, to do what is necessary to vanquish political adversaries ... all is justified if you are left standing at the end.

America deserves better than these cycles of vengeance and retribution. Its possibilities are too great, its challenges too daunting, for partisan pettiness.

In a Jan. 17 meeting with our editorial board, Obama demonstrated an impressive command of a wide variety of issues. He listened intently to the questions. He responded with substance. He did not control a format without a stopwatch on answers or constraints on follow-up questions, yet he flourished in it.

He radiated the sense of possibility that has attracted the votes of independents and tapped into the idealism of young people during this campaign. He exuded the aura of a 46-year-old leader who could once again persuade the best and the brightest to forestall or pause their grand professional goals to serve in his administration.

Of all the candidates who talk about change, Barack Obama has made the case most forcefully and most convincingly. He gets our endorsement for the Democratic nomination.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Arizona Republic backs Barack Obama (2008-01-27 08:30)

The Arizona Republic , the state's largest newspaper is endorsing Barack Obama.

Obama can unite nation

Jan. 27, 2008 12:00 AM

This is historic. Savor it.

For the first time, a Black man and a woman are within striking distance of the U.S. presidency. That is a remarkable statement about how far this country has come toward the goal of equality. It is shining testimony to the world that the United States continues to move toward the "more perfect Union" our Constitution envisions.

These two candidates for president do not want their efforts to win the Democratic presidential primary to be defined by their gender or race. That, too, is significant, and it signals a level of national maturity that would have been unthinkable not so very long ago. So we will consider Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton on criteria other than gender and race.

First, we need to acknowledge that there will be other candidates on Arizona's Feb. 5 Democratic primary ballot. The most significant of these is John Edwards. As the son of a mill worker, he also exemplifies the promise of America. But his populist appeal relies too much on demonizing big business, and his death knell for the middle class is premature. He doesn't measure up.

This contest is between Obama and Clinton.

Their Senate voting records and political philosophy about the role of government are not appreciably different. Both are intelligent and competent individuals who can be trusted to surround themselves with top-notch advisers.

What sets these two apart is the likelihood they can deliver on the promise of change.

We believe Barack Obama has the best chance of moving Washington and the nation beyond the poisonous partisanship of recent decades. He appeals to independent voters and Republicans, in addition to members of his own party. His promise to unite is convincing.

Fierce political divisions have made it impossible to enact needed reforms in such areas as immigration policy, Social Security and health care. In addition to making domestic challenges untouchable, the partisan antagonism has made it more difficult to deal with international issues - from trade to terrorism.

The natural tension between branches of government and political parties is built into the system because it provides brakes and checks. Yet deeply entrenched opposition based on personalities is corrosive. Sadly, that type of active hostility has become a hallmark of Washington.

In addition, many Americans are cynical and frustrated because they perceive that special interests exert undue influence on government decision-making.

Hillary Clinton, though highly experienced, is very much a part of the current gridlocked system. She is a polarizing figure who would face instant opposition from those who continue to have a visceral reaction to Bill Clinton's administration.

To make matters worse, the combative stance the former president has taken during the campaign is more than just unseemly. It reaches beyond the primary, and will be answered growl for growl by Republicans in Congress if Hillary Clinton becomes president. Partisan politics will continue as usual.

Hillary Clinton is tough, and she might demonstrate the skills to overcome the opposition. But that will take time and energy, and prevent her from hitting the ground running, as she promises to do. In all likelihood, the lingering ill will from her husband's administration would cripple Clinton's presidency.

Obama is free from that baggage. He promises to move politics beyond the past two decades of screaming heads to something more productive. His campaign's tone is one of cooperation and bipartisanship. Obama's call for Americans to believe in their power to change things is Kennedy-esque in its idealism. But it is also solidly rooted in an understanding of how badly the nation needs to remember its true strengths. He wants to provide tools, such as an accessible Internet database of lobbyist activities, to bring more openness to government and encourage public participation.

Obama represents a fresh, optimistic approach. His youthful voice calls for fundamental changes and a return to "an America that believes again." His oratory soars. While talk alone isn't enough, it has been a very long time since Americans had a leader who appealed to their better nature.

Democrats would do well to let Barack Obama carry their hopes into November.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

WantaDemocratThisTime (2008-01-27 11:11:00)

This prose is all nice and pretty, except there are no republicans who would vote for Obama. How about we end the pep rally, and start the process of ELECTING a head of state? It is still done by educated people casting votes.

Rep. Xavier Becerra (D - LA) endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-27 09:43)

U.S. Rep. Xavier Becerra of Los Angeles, the highest ranking Latino in the House of Representatives and a close ally of Nancy Pelosi, announced his endorsement of Sen. Barack Obama today.

Another Pelosi friend, Rep. George Miller, has already endorsed Obama and some see these endorsements as an unofficial nod from the Speaker herself.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Sen. Ted Kennedy to endorse Barack Obama (2008-01-27 10:39)

The Boston Globe, citing "Kennedy confidantes" reports that Sen. Ted Kennedy will endorse Sen. Barack Obama in person along with his niece Caroline tomorrow morning at American University in Washington DC. The Globe also reports that Ted Kennedy plans to campaign for Obama especially among Hispanics and labor union members. The support of the Massachusetts elder statesman could help the Illinois senator gain more superdelegate endorsements.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Ground forces, surrogates will play key Super Tuesday role (2008-01-27 12:21)

No candidate will be able to effectively stump through 22 states leading up to Super Tuesday. Instead they will depend on an army of volunteers and surrogates to fan out and represent them in these locations.

Elected officials and celebrities who support the candidate can stump in key areas allowing the candidate to pick and choose which locations to target. Organizations like labor unions and political action committees will also play a role. Celebrity surrogates vary in their effectiveness depending on the venue. In California, where two former Hollywood stars have governed the state, people often welcome the fanfare. Someone like Oprah Winfrey could have a big impact on the campaign trail in the Golden State.

Regular supporters also act as surrogates representing the candidate with their family, friends and associates. They may also volunteer to "cold call" working door-to-door, on the phones or at visibility/tabling events.

Barack Obama is widely seen as having the most extensive ground operation across the Tsunami Tuesday states. Here in California the operation is unprecedented. There are at least 13 official field offices most now working feverishly seven days a week. Numerous events are scheduled across the state to make contact with voters on behalf of the candidate.

The internet will also play an important role as supporters use email, texting and the like to cajole their contact list. Some may even work the social networks like Facebook and MySpace seeking new friends in Feb. 5 states across cyberspace.

Make calls to February 5th voters

MAKE THE CALL

Organize your community

GET INVOLVED IN YOUR COMMUNITY

Action Center
Obama Mobile

X

X X X X X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

More Endorsement News (2008-01-27 14:55)

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius will endorse Sen. Barack Obama on Tuesday according to Marc Ambinder, giving unnamed Democratic sources. That would be very big, and Sebelius is often touted as a VP candidate.

Over at the Huffington Post, progressive activist and former California State Senator Tom Hayden promises to support Barack Obama.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

New Spanish Language Phone Banking Tool (2008-01-27 20:58)

From barackobama.com/blog:

New Spanish Language Phone Banking Tool

By Zach Edwards - Jan 27th, 2008 at 4:57 pm EST

Yes We Can!;Sí se Puede!

We're extremely excited to announce that we have launched our new online phone banking center for Spanish speakers. Here are two letters that were sent out to our grassroots supporters to explain the new tool and to help everyone get started making these important calls.

Dear Friends,

The Barack Obama campaign has introduced a new online tool that will allow our Spanish speaking supporters around the country to call undecided Spanish-speaking voters in the critical February 5th states. All you have to do is log on to our website to begin making calls to potential supporters.

Log on using this link.

And click "Click here to get started"

We also have a step-by-step guide to help you get started.  Download it here.

Help us build our grassroots movement that will ensure there is affordable healthcare for all, bring common sense to our immigration policies, and send a message of hope, unity, and opportunity to everyone in this great nation. The February 5th contests are just over a week away. We need your help today. Yes We Can!

Queridos amigos,

La campaña de Barack Obama esta introduciendo una nueva aplicación que latinos que son partidarios de Obama podrán utilizar para llamar a otros latinos que no han decidido por quien votar en las elecciones primarias del 5 de febrero.

Favor visite:

Y haga clic donde dice "Click here to get started"  Download it here.

Incluido esta un guía que explica paso por paso como empezar.

Ayúdenos construir el movimiento popular para asegurar que toda la gente tenga acceso a los servicios sanitarios, a traer sabiduría a nuestras leyes inmigratorias, y a mandar un mensaje de esperanza, unidad, y oportunidad a todas las personas que viven en este gran país. Falta menos de una semana hasta las elecciones primarias del 5 de febrero. Necesitamos su ayuda este mismo día. ¡Sí se puede!

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Toni Morrison endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-28 10:11)

Toni Morrison, Nobel and Pulitzer prize winning author, endorsed Barack Obama today. Here is a copy of her endorsement letter.

Dear Senator Obama,

This letter represents a first for me—a public endorsement of a Presidential candidate. I feel driven to let you know why I am writing it. One reason is it may help gather other supporters; another is that this is one of those singular moments that nations ignore at their peril. I will not rehearse the multiple crises facing us, but of one thing I am certain: this opportunity for a national evolution (even revolution) will not come again soon, and I am convinced you are the person to capture it.

May I describe to you my thoughts?

I have admired Senator Clinton for years. Her knowledge always seemed to me exhaustive; her negotiation of politics expert. However I am more compelled by the quality of mind (as far as I can measure it) of a candidate. I cared little for her gender as a source of my admiration, and the little I did care was based on the fact that no liberal woman has ever ruled in America. Only conservative or "new-centrist" ones are allowed into that realm. Nor do I care very much for your race[s]. I would not support you if that was all you had to offer or because it might make me "proud."

In thinking carefully about the strengths of the candidates, I stunned myself when I came to the following conclusion: that in addition to keen intelligence, integrity and a rare authenticity, you exhibit something that has nothing to do with age, experience, race or gender and something I don't see in other candidates. That something is a creative imagination which coupled with brilliance equals wisdom. It is too bad if we associate it only with gray hair and old age. Or if we call searing vision naivete. Or if we believe cunning is insight. Or if we settle for finessing cures tailored for each ravaged tree in the forest while ignoring the poisonous landscape that feeds and surrounds it. Wisdom is a gift; you can't train for it, inherit it, learn it in a class, or earn it in the workplace—that access can foster the acquisition of knowledge, but not wisdom.

When, I wondered, was the last time this country was guided by such a leader? Someone whose moral center was un-embargoed? Someone with courage instead of mere ambition? Someone who truly thinks of his country's citizens as "we," not "they"? Someone who understands what it will take to help America realize the virtues it fancies about itself, what it desperately needs to become in the world?

Our future is ripe, outrageously rich in its possibilities. Yet unleashing the glory of that future will require a difficult labor, and some may be so frightened of its birth they will refuse to abandon their nostalgia for the womb.

There have been a few prescient leaders in our past, but you are the man for this time.

Good luck to you and to us.

Toni Morrison

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Rep. Mike Capuano endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-28 10:54)

U.S. Rep Mike Capuano of Massachusetts endorsed Sen. Barack Obama today.

I want somebody who's both a dreamer and a doer. Barack will shake Washington up," Capuano said.

"He has more likelihood of bringing people together," Capuano said. The bottom line is you take a look at them like everybody does, and figure out who's best for the party, and who can win."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Is Camelot Relevant? (2008-01-28 15:12)

There are some commentators who are questioning whether the endorsements of Sen. Ted Kennedy Rep. Patrick Kennedy and Caroline Kennedy, daughter of JFK will have any impact on the race.

One way to look at it: For every current and past Democrat in elected office who owes something to Bill Clinton, there are probably at least two people who owe something to the Kennedy family and that includes Hill and Bill.

Caroline Kennedy speaks to the crowd at American University

[EMBED]

Remarks by Sen. Ted Kennedy

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

California State Legislators Endorse Barack Obama (2008-01-28 19:35)

California state legislators including Senate Majority Leader Gloria Romero, the highest-ranking woman in the legislature, and Karen Bass, the Assembly Majority Leader, gathered at the State Capitol to express their support for Barack Obama.

I took some video of the event and uploaded it to YouTube. The press release that includes all the endorsing legislatures is appended below.

[EMBED]

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

January 28, 2008

CONTACT: Debbie Mesloh, CA Director of Communications, 323-854-8609 , dmesloh@barackobama.com

State Legislators Say Obama is Candidate To Bring Change to Washington D.C .

Highest Ranking Women State Legislators and Legislative Colleagues Speak in Support of Senator Obama

SACRAMENTO

– At a press conference on the North Steps of the State Capitol today, state legislators from across California met to discuss their support for Senator Obama and explain why they believe he will be the president to bring change we can believe in to Washington D.C . The highest ranking female state legislators, California Senate Majority Leader Gloria Romero and Assembly Majority Leader Karen Bass were joined by their colleagues to urge California Democrats and ‘Decline to State’ voters to support Senator Obama in the February 5 primary.

“ Barack Obama is the one candidate who can bring Californians and Americans together around an agenda that can help struggling families pay the bills, keep their homes, afford health care, and find good jobs with decent wages,” said Senate Majority Leader Gloria Romero. “He is more interested in solving problems than scoring political points, because that’s the only way we’re going to change the divisive, negative politics in Washington and actually make progress on the issues that matter to the American people like the economy and health care.”

“Poll after poll shows that Senator Barack Obama is the most electable Democrat because he can unite Democrats, Independents, and Republicans like no other candidate in this race,” said Assemblyman Ted Lieu. “He’ll help Democrats get elected all across the country - especially in conservative areas where Democrats have not fared well for decades. At this defining moment in our history, we need to nominate a candidate who can build the majority necessary to become President.”

State legislators who have officially endorsed Senator Obama include:

Senate Majority Leader Gloria Romero (SD24)

Senator Elaine Alquist (SD13)

Senator Gilbert Cedillo (SD22)

Senator Dean Florez (SD16)

Senator Alan Lowenthal (SD27)

Senator Mark Ridley-Thomas (SD26), chair of the Black Caucus

Senator Jack Scott (SD21)

Senator Darrell Steinberg (SD6)

Assembly Majority Leader Karen Bass (AD47)

Assemblymember Joe Coto (AD23), chair of the Latino Caucus

Assemblymember Mike Davis (AD48)

Assemblymember Jared Huffman (AD6)

Assemblymember Ted Lieu (AD53), chair of Asian Pacific Islander Caucus.

Assemblymember Gene Mullin (AD19)

Assemblymember Nicole Parra (AD30)

Assemblymember Curren Price (AD51)

#

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Anonymous (2008-02-09 01:23:00)

The Skinny on Hillary

Dear brothers in arms,

We put a piece of truth about the Clintons on www.matrix-evolutions.com that would make a difference in the race if people could hear it. It begins:

We are scientists who derive our politics from an evolutionary perspective, not from conservative ideology. Our analysis concludes that our so-called war on terror is slowly but surely taking us to World War III. Note Putin's 2/8/08 call for a renewed arms race to counter America's efforts to conquer the world. For that reason we support Barack Obama as the only real anti-war candidate, the only one who can keep such a nuclear tipped train wreck from happening.

As to Hillary Clinton, recall during their populist administration that President Bill and missus, while promising health care they never delivered, did deliver more police and prisons, and took our jail population to the highest per-capita level in the world. This statistic, ahem, is historically associated with hardened police states like Stalinist Russia and apartheid South Africa. We all know that spitting on the street nowadays will get you six months in jail. But of course we're not a police state, because if we were, you'd have heard about it on the evening news.

The Clintons as president also made their upper class handlers happy by ending LBJ's war on poverty, which brought about the vast population of homeless beggars we see on the streets of America today. Pearls for the wealthy, evictions for the rest of us. Don't laugh. It could happen to you. Wait until the recession, caused primarily by our trillion dollar War in Iraq, gets into high gear. Goodbye nest egg when the market totally collapses. Goodbye home thanks to the Shylock mortgage brokers in bed with the conservatives. Hello suffering on the street with your kids in a foster home.

Actually Hillary does have a few things she can be very proud of. She is a most talented actress, a profoundly adept social climber and a top paid shill of the upper class. She is our American Evita and almost everybody loves her style. But whatever her talents and personal accomplishments, she is not going to go against the wishes of the ruling clique who created her and Bill and stop their war.

Some think that Hillary would never lie to us. But Bill also insisted he would never lie to us and is so amazingly good an actor, almost as good as his wife, that we yet believe him even after the tape recording caught him with the cigar between Monica's legs. What character is there in a first family when the head of the most powerful nation on earth is sticking a penile object, not even his own, up some college kid's vagina? Does anybody think Hillary felt personally bad about the Monica thing other than not having her usual go with one of Bill's girls? Watch the conservatives bring forth one of Hillary's lovers soon to clarify her tastes in this area. Indeed, one would not be surprised if the less than confident, slightly retarded, persona Chelsea Clinton was condemned to live her life with derives from her pervert parents abusing her when she was four years old. Certainly there is as much truth in this conjecture as in the equally outrageous conjecture that the Clintons are not good people even though they go to church every Sunday. If evil is badness that comes from an unexpected source, the Clintons are evil enough to have shit stuffed in their mouths and be set on fire. That's an opinion of their character, not a threat on their lives, for all you hate speech monitors out there.

Unfortunately, though, short of a revolution, we may be stuck with another Clinton figurehead presidency, for our evolutionary analysis shows clearly that while biological evolution is not of intelligent design, our presidential elections are. They are intelligently designed by the conservative ruling clique that has hold of our media and our courts, including our Supreme Court, which designed the last election outcome. Which all of you meekly accepted because the majority of Americans are basically passive cowards who lack the courage it takes to stand up to tyranny. The upper classes would never allow Obama to become president and stop the war. They would assassinate him first, literally have him shot like Martin Luther King, if the media they control can't derail his candidacy in a more subtle way. We reach these outrageous conclusions, not from bipolar disease, but from a firm scientific analysis whose details follow after we have introduced ourselves.

Yours in the struggle,

Dr. and Mrs. Peter V. Calabria

Barack Obama responds to State of the Union Address (2008-01-28 20:35)

[EMBED]

Tonight, for the seventh long year, the American people heard a State of the Union that didn't reflect the America we see, and didn't address the challenges we face. But what it did do was give us an urgent reminder of why it's so important to turn the page on the failed politics and policies of the past, and change the status quo in Washington so we can finally start making progress for ordinary Americans.

Tonight's State of the Union was full of the same empty rhetoric the American people have come to expect from this President. We heard President Bush say he'd do something to cut down on special interest earmarks, but we know these earmarks have skyrocketed under his administration.

We heard the President say he wants to make tax cuts for the wealthiest Americans permanent, when we know that at a time of war and economic hardship, the last thing we need is a permanent tax cut for Americans who don't need them and weren't even asking for them. What we need is a middle class tax cut, and that's exactly what I will provide as President.

We heard the President say he has a stimulus plan to boost our economy, but we know his plan leaves out seniors and fails to expand unemployment insurance, and we know it was George Bush's Washington that let the banks and financial institutions run amok, and take our economy down this dangerous road. What we need to do now is put more money in the pockets of workers and seniors, and expand unemployment insurance for more people and more time. And I have a plan that to do just that.

And finally, tonight we heard President Bush say that the surge in Iraq is working, when we know that's just not true. Yes, our valiant soldiers have helped reduce the violence. Five soldiers gave their lives today in this cause, and we mourn their loss and pray for their families.

But let there be no doubt - the Iraqi government has failed to seize the moment to reach the compromises necessary for an enduring peace. That was what we were told the surge was all about. So the only way we're finally going to pressure the Iraqis to reconcile and take responsibility for their future is to immediately begin the responsible withdrawal of our combat brigades so that we can bring all of our combat troops home.

But another reason we need to begin this withdrawal immediately is because this war has not made us safer. I opposed this war from the start in part because I was concerned that it would take our eye off al Qaeda and distract us from finishing the job in Afghanistan. Sadly, that's what happened. It's time to heed our military commanders by increasing our commitment to Afghanistan, and it's time to protect the American people by taking the fight to al Qaeda.

Tonight was President Bush's last State of the Union, and I do not believe history will judge his administration kindly. But I also believe the failures of the last seven years stem not just from any single policy, but from a broken politics in Washington. A politics that says it's ok to demonize your political opponents when we should be coming together to solve problems. A politics that puts Wall Street ahead of Main Street, ignoring the reality that our fates are intertwined; a politics that accepts lobbyists as part of the system in Washington, instead of recognizing how much they're a part of the problem. And a politics of fear and ideology instead of hope and common sense.

I believe a new kind of politics is possible, and I believe it is necessary. Because the American people can't afford another four years without health care, decent wages, or an end to this war. The woman who's going to college and working the night shift to pay her sister's medical bills can't afford to wait. The Maytag workers who are now competing with their teenagers for $7 an hour jobs at Wall Mart can't afford to wait. And the woman who told me she hasn't been able to breathe since her nephew left for Iraq can't afford to wait.

Each year, as we watch the State of the Union, we see half the chamber rise to applaud the President and half the chamber stay in their seats. We see half the country tune in to watch, but know that much of the country has stopped even listening. Imagine if next year was different. Imagine if next year, the entire nation had a president they could believe in. A president who rallied all Americans around a common purpose. That's the kind of President we need in this country. And with your help in the coming days and weeks, that's the kind of President I will be.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Ted Kennedy: Why I'm Endorsing Barack Obama (2008-01-28 21:14)

From barackobama.com:

Why I'm Endorsing Barack Obama

by Senator Ted Kennedy

Monday, January 28, 2008 at 03:07 PM

Cross posted at the Huffington Post

Earlier today I endorsed Barack Obama for president, and I couldn't be more excited for the Democratic Party, the nation – and the world.

Barack inspires me – it's that simple. In the words of President Kennedy:

"The world is changing. The old ways will not do... It is time for a new generation of leadership."

In Barack, I see that next generation of American leadership: a figure who can transcend the divisions in this country that my family and I have fought so hard to tear down.

We were all moved four years ago as Barack told us a profound truth: We are not red states and blue states, but one United States. Since then, he has matched that rhetoric with action, traveling the country to inspire record turnouts of men and women of all ages, races, parties and faiths. Barack has forged consensus in the Senate on contentious issues such as immigration and pushed through necessary reforms like the most far-reaching ethics reform in its history.

But I'm not only supporting Barack because of what he has done. What counts in our leadership is not the length of years in Washington, but the reach of our vision, the strength of our beliefs, and that rare quality of mind and spirit that can call forth the best in our country and our people.

That's why I'm most excited about the promise of President Obama:

As president, Barack Obama will break the Washington gridlock to finally make health care what it should be in America.

He will turn the page on the old politics of misrepresentation and distortion and bridge the divisions of race, gender, ethnicity and sexual orientation that plague our country.

He will end a war in Iraq that he has always stood against, that has cost us the lives of thousands of our sons and daughters, and that America never should have fought.

He will close the door on the old economics that has written off the poor and left the middle class poorer and less secure.

He will make the United States the great leader and not the great roadblock in the fateful fight against global warming.

When Barack Obama raises his hand on Inauguration Day a new generation of American leadership will take charge and restore the hope, peace and prosperity the country so desperately needs.

Looking out from the stage today, I realized just how powerful his campaign has become. It's a movement for change – and one that I'm proud to be a part of.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Make calls to February 5th voters

MAKE THE CALL

Organize your community

GET INVOLVED
IN YOUR COMMUNITY

Action Center
Obama Mobile

X

X X X

X X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Two New Ads on the Air (2008-01-28 23:40)

[EMBED] Check ou the two new television ads now airing in Tsunami Tuesday states.
[EMBED]

Obama Campaign Stops

Jan 29 Community Event with Barack Obama

in El Dorado, KS

Jan 29 Stand for Change Town Hall with Barack Obama

in Kansas City, MO

Jan 30 Community Event with Barack Obama

in Denver, CO

Jan 30 Stand for Change Rally with Barack Obama

in Phoenix, AZ

Make calls to February 5th voters

758

Organize your community

Action Center
Obama Mobile

✕

✕ ✕ ✕

✕ ✕ ✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

TechCrunch endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-29 07:17)

TechCrunch, the popular internet-focused weblog, announced its endorsement of Barack Obama today.

✕

Senator Barack Obama - Democrat

✕ Senator Obama has put more time and effort into defining his technology policies than any other candidate. In November he released a detailed position paper on technology issues, and we had a one-on-one interview with him two weeks later.

He is staunchly in favor of net neutrality, and has promised to make it a priority to reinstate it in his first year in office. He has proposed intelligent programs for increasing technology education and access to children. He doesn't believe the FCC went far enough in their proposed rules for opening up the 700MHz spectrum auctions. He wants to see increases in the number of H1-B visas given out each year. He strongly supports research into renewable energy sources and he has a realistic, market based approach to capping carbon emissions.

More importantly, though, Senator Obama talks about the future with a sense of optimism that the other candidates seem to lack. America has done great things in the past, and we can do great things in the future, so long as our leaders support our home-grown and immigrant entrepreneurs, or at least get out of the way. Jobs will be lost in some sectors, but growth in technology can drive our economy ever forward. Senator Obama seems to understand that, and has spent a great deal of time addressing technology issues and talking to Silicon Valley leaders. Some of the other Democratic candidates have staked out similar positions as Senator Obama on tech issues - but I get the sense that they are playing "me too" rather than showing real leadership and thoughtfulness on the issues.

Senator Obama also continues to surge when it comes to using the Internet to amplify his voice. I talked about his online surge earlier this month. Senator Obama is the candidate of optimism and leadership, and he will be getting my personal vote.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

The Day backs Barack Obama (2008-01-29 07:37)

The Day, an Eastern Connecticut daily newspaper, recommended Barack Obama as nominee today.

X

Obama In Democratic Race Sen. Obama's desire for a change in the political discourse is inspiring

By The Day Published on 1/29/2008

For Democratic voters the race for the party nomination for president has come down to two candidates — Sen. Hillary Clinton of New York and Sen. Barack Obama of Illinois. The election of either would be historic, presenting the nation with either the first woman or first African-American president.

Former Sen. John Edwards remains active in the race, but his optimistic message that impressed Democrats in 2004 has morphed into an angry rant that blames corporate America for all our nation's ills and invites class warfare. His call for simply leaving Iraq is reckless. Voters in early primary states have not found his message credible or attractive, and neither have we.

On the significant issues, the policy differences between Sen. Clinton and Sen. Obama are minor. Both support universal health care, though Sen. Obama's plan does not include a personal insurance mandate. Both want to aim tax relief programs and college-tuition assistance efforts at the middle class.

They have called for a gradual withdrawal from Iraq. If elected, both pledge a global diplomatic initiative aimed at restoring the United States' credibility. They favor government investment in emerging technologies to generate power cleaner and more efficiently. Both call for reforms to the No Child Left Behind Act education program.

The choice, then, comes down to leadership ability.

Sen. Clinton is the more experienced candidate. In terms of policy involvement, she was the most influential first lady in the nation's history during the presidency of her husband, Bill Clinton. She has focused on public policy her entire adult life and displays an impressive understanding of the issues. She has proved a popular senator in New York. And she has been tested under fire.

But there is a win-at-all-cost mentality to the pursuit of power by both Clintons that is disturbing.

In the primary race so far, the Clinton campaign has unleashed attacks on Sen. Obama that intentionally distorted the truth. Mr. Clinton dismissed Sen. Obama's claim that he consistently opposed the Iraq invasion as a "fairy tale," when in fact it is true. And when Sen. Obama suggested that for a time in the 1980s Republicans were the party putting forth more new ideas, the Clinton campaign twisted the comment in radio ads suggesting Sen. Obama endorsed those Republican ideals. Sen. Clinton knows that is not true. This Clintonian trait of using all means necessary to gain power generates great animosity and it clearly suggests what a second Clinton presidency would look like — continued political conflict.

Sen. Obama, in stark contrast, has said he would search for unity in his presidency, seeking the counsel of independents and even Republicans. He has responded when unfairly attacked, but we see no evidence that he has tried to distort the records of his foes in the primary. Sen. Obama is blessed with immense oratory skill, but he has not used it to demean political foes — Democrats or Republicans.

For too long, our national political debate has been focused on discrediting the opposition and seeking political leverage, rather than on pursuing collective solutions to the serious challenges the U.S. faces. Some may see Sen. Obama's desire for a change in the political discourse as naïve. We view it as inspiring.

As only a first-term senator, concerns about the Illinois senator's lack of experience are legitimate, but his willingness to pick the best advisers, even reaching over political lines, suggests he will put the right people in place to provide the counsel needed to make critical decisions.

Finally, no one offers a better chance to mend America's damaged reputation around the world. His message of unity — delivered by a man of color with roots in Africa and years spent growing up overseas — could be transformative.

The Day urges Democratic voters to select Sen. Barack Obama in the Feb. 5 primary.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

elsylee (2008-02-05 13:57:00)

Guys make sure you check out the article "The Intoxication of Inspiration" on the blogzine SAVAGE POLITICS (not related to Mike Savage) at www.savagelitics.com. It is awesome.....everyone should read it before voting.

Kathleen Sebelius to Endorse Barack Obama (2008-01-29 09:37)

The Associated Press is reporting that Kansas Gov. Katherine Sebelius will endorse Sen. Barack Obama today. This likely could happen during an Obama rally in El Dorado, Kansas. Barack's parents grew up in Kansas.

El Dorado, KS

OBAMA DELIVERS SPEECH ON RECLAIMING THE AMERICAN DREAM

Butler Community College Gymnasium

901 S Haverhill Rd

El Dorado, KS Doors Open: 11:45 am

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Rep. Raul Grijalva endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-29 11:24)

Arizona Congressman Raul Grijalva is switching his endorsement from John Edwards to Barack Obama.

"The best opportunity to win in November rests with Senator Obama," Grijalva said. "I am proud to support Senator Obama as we move forward toward the nomination. This election is not merely about moving the pieces around in Washington D.C., but to fundamentally change the rules of the game. I am proud to help Senator Obama work toward that change."

From neighboring New Mexico, Gov. Bill Richardson said that if he decides to endorse a candidate it will be by the end of the week. His nod could help Obama in winning over Latino voters.

It is worth noting that a great many of Richardson's Latino supporters have now openly endorsed Barack Obama.

Make calls to February 5th voters

Organize your community

Action Center
Obama Mobile

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

California Absentee Ballots Due Feb. 5 (2008-01-29 13:24)

First absentee voters in California should note that ballots must be received at the registrar's office by Feb. 5. A postmark is not good enough.

If you are in doubt that it will arrive on time, you can deliver it personally to your county voter registrar's office. You can also vote early even if you aren't an absentee or mail voter and avoid long lines on Super Tuesday. You do this by voting in person at the registrar's office during business hours. Some counties also have special early voting sites set up in shopping malls and other public places with information available from the registrar's office.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius Endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-29 13:29)

From barackobama.com:

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius Endorses Barack Obama in El Dorado, Kansas

By Sam Graham-Felsen - Jan 29th, 2008 at 2:34 pm EST

Senator Obama was endorsed by Governor Kathleen Sebelius today in El Dorado, Kansas. Governor Sebelius stated... I am especially pleased to announce my enthusiastic endorsement of Senator Barack Obama for President of the United States - because Barack Obama represents exactly the kind of change Kansans can believe in.

His candidacy offers the heartland values instilled by his mother and grandparents - all three native Kansans. Values of believing in something greater than ourselves, finding common sense solutions to problems, knowing that education is the doorway to opportunity, and working for the common good.

Senator Obama demonstrates a unique ability to reach across party lines - a quality we need now, right now, to unite our leaders and meet the serious challenges our country faces at home and abroad.

We are now in the process of choosing a Democratic nominee, yes; but, even more importantly to me, and to this country, we are choosing a leader for America.

And, on an especially personal note - I admire the way Senator Obama has inspired a younger generation of Americans, my own children included.

For months now, my two sons have implored me to make my admiration for Senator Obama public. To offer him my endorsement, and join this fight for change all of us can believe in. I am proud to do so today. Life at home will be easier for me after today, Barack, I assure you!

Barack spoke about how the how we can reclaim the American dream...

You know, we have been told for many years that we are becoming more divided as a nation. We have been made to believe that differences of race and region; wealth and gender; party and religion have separated us into warring factions; into Red States and Blue states made up of individuals with opposing wants and needs; with conflicting hopes and dreams.

It is a vision of America that's been exploited and encouraged by pundits and politicians who need this division to score points and win elections. But it is a vision of America that I am running for President to fundamentally reject – not because of a blind optimism I hold, but because of a story I've lived.

It's a story that began here, in El Dorado, when a young man fell in love with a young woman who grew up down the road in Augusta. They came of age in the midst of the Depression, where he found odd jobs on small farms and oil rigs, always dodging the bank failures and foreclosures that were sweeping the nation.

They married just after war broke out in Europe, and he enlisted in Patton's army after the bombing of Pearl Harbor. She gave birth to their daughter on the base at Fort Leavenworth, and worked on a bomber assembly line when he left for war.

In a time of great uncertainty and anxiety, my grandparents held on to a simple dream – that they could raise my mother in a land of boundless opportunity; that their generation's struggle and sacrifice could give her the freedom to be what she wanted to be; to live how she wanted to live.

I am standing here today because that dream was realized – because my grandfather got the chance to go to school on the GI Bill, buy a house through the Federal Housing Authority, and move his family west – all the way to Hawaii – where my mother would go to college and one day fall in love with a young student from Kenya.

I am here because that dream made my parents' love possible, even then; because it meant that after my father left, when my mother struggled as a single parent, and even turned to food stamps for a time, she was still able to send my sister and me to the best schools in the country.

And I'm here because years later, when I found my own love in a place far away called Chicago, she told me of a similar dream. Michelle grew up in a working-class family on the South Side during the 1960s. Her father had been diagnosed with multiple sclerosis at just thirty years old. And yet, every day of his life, even when he had to rely on a walker to get him there, Fraser Robinson went to work at the local water filtration plant while his wife stayed home with the children. And on that single salary, he was able to send Michelle and her brother to Princeton. Our family's story is one that spans miles and generations; races and realities. It's the story of farmers and soldiers; city workers and single moms. It takes place in small towns and good schools; in Kansas and Kenya; on the shores of Hawaii and the streets of Chicago. It's a varied and unlikely journey, but one that's held together by the same simple dream. And that is why it's American.

Obama highlighted his plan to help revitalize our economy and strengthen middle class families...

This will not be easy, but America's story tells me it's possible. My story tells me it's possible. What began here in Kansas all those years ago tells me it's possible.

Because as we face another time of anxiety and uncertainty – a time where foreclosures sweep the nation and families struggle to stay afloat; where loved ones leave for war and parents wonder what kind of world their children will inherit – I believe that this nation can rally around the simple dream that my grandparents held on to even in the darkest of days.

It's a dream that we can find a job with wages that support a family. That we can have health care that's affordable for when we get sick. That we can retire with dignity and security. And that we can provide our children with education and opportunity – so that they can be what they want to be and live how they want to live. They are the common dreams that can finally unite a nation around a common purpose.

There are those who will continue to tell us we cannot do this. That we cannot come together. That the divisions in our politics run too deep. That we are offering the American people false hopes.

But here's what I know.

I know that when I hear people say that we can't come together to lift up working families who are struggling in this economy, I think back to the streets of Chicago, where I began my career as a community organizer twenty-five years ago. In the shadow of a closed steel mill, we brought white people and black people and Latinos together to provide job training to the jobless and after school programs for children.

Block by block, we restored hope and opportunity to those neighborhoods, and I can believe we can do the same thing for the working families of America.

He continued...

Right now, there's an economic stimulus package moving through Congress that will provide a boost to the economy and to working families. It's similar to the one I proposed a few weeks ago, and would provide immediate tax relief for working families. I hope that when it's final, it will also provide relief to seniors and extend unemployment insurance to those who've lost their jobs.

But we need to do even more to restore fairness and balance to our economy. Last night, we heard the President say that he wanted to make his tax cuts for the wealthiest Americans permanent – again. Well we can't afford more George Bush tax cuts for those who don't need them and weren't even asking for them. It's time to give tax relief to the middle-class families who need it right now.

When I am President, we'll stop giving tax breaks to companies who ship our jobs overseas, and I'll put a middle-class tax cut into the pockets of working families. This tax cut will be worth up to $1000 for a working family. We'll provide struggling homeowners some relief by giving them a tax credit that would cover ten percent of a family's mortgage interest payment every year. And we're also going to give seniors a break by eliminating income taxes for any retiree making less than $50,000 a year, because every single American should be able to retire with dignity and respect.

That also means helping Americans save for retirement when they're still working. When I'm President, employers will be required to enroll every worker in a direct deposit retirement account that places a small percentage of each paycheck into savings. You can keep this account even if you change jobs, and the federal government will match the savings for lower-income, working families.

It's also time we had a President who won't wait another ten years to raise the minimum wage. I will raise it to keep pace every year so that workers don't fall behind. I'll institute a Credit Card Bill of Rights that will ban credit card companies from changing the agreement you signed up for, changing the interest rate on debt you've already incurred, or charging interest on late fees. Americans should pay what they owe, but they should also pay what's fair, not just what's profitable for some credit card company.

The same principle should apply to our bankruptcy laws. I opposed the credit card industry's bankruptcy bill that made it harder for working families to climb out of debt, and when I'm President, I'll make sure that CEOs can't dump your pension with one hand while they collect a bonus with the other. That's an outrage, and it's time we had a President who knows it's an outrage.

It's also time we had a President who stopped talking about the outrage of 47 million uninsured Americans and started doing something about it. When I hear that we can't come together and expand health care to the uninsured, I think back to how I was able to bring Democrats and Republicans together in Illinois to provide health insurance to 150,000 children and parents. And when I'm President, we'll finally pass a universal health care plan that will make sure every single American can get the same kind of health care that members of Congress get for themselves. My plan does more to cut costs than any other plan in this race – up to $2500 for a typical family. And we won't pass it twenty years from now, not ten years from now – we'll pass health care by the end of my first term in office.

Click here for more on Obama's economic policy, and if you're from Kansas, check out KS.BarackObama.com to find out how you can get involved locally.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

New Campaign Ads (2008-01-29 15:56)

The first ad in Spanish features Congressman Luis Guterrez and it airs in Arizona and California.

[EMBED]

The next ad features Caroline Kennedy and is airing in New York City, Philadelphia, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles and on cable tv nationwide.

[EMBED]

The next ad airing in Feb. 5 states features Sen. Kent Conrad of North Dakota.

[EMBED]

Make calls to February 5th voters

Organize your community

Action Center
Obama Mobile

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Connecticut Post endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-29 19:00)

The Connecticut Post endorsed Barack Obama today.

Barack Obama for the Democrats

Article Last Updated: 01/29/2008 07:36:03 PM EST

Experience matters. But it's not everything.

In staking her claim for the Democratic presidential nomination, Sen. Hillary Clinton has made her decades in public life her top selling point. She alone among the available choices, she says, is able to step in and be ready to lead the nation on her first day in office.

Her argument is not without merit. But there are many politicians with more years of experience than she who have no business in the White House. Years of service is important, but nothing can substitute for good judgment and an ability to lead.

It is in this regard that the Connecticut Post endorses Illinois Sen. Barack Obama for his party's presidential nomination in the Feb. 5 Connecticut Democratic Presidential Primary. It's true, he is only in his first term in the U.S. Senate, but his life experience was formed in other realms, not just in Washington. For years, he served as a community organizer and advocate in some of Chicago's poorest neighborhoods. As a state senator in Illinois, he championed progressive causes and offered a forward-thinking, positive alternative to politics as usual.

He is also experienced as a citizen of the world. He is well known as the son of a mother from Kansas and a father from Kenya. He spent time growing up in Hawaii, maybe our most diverse state, and overseas, in Indonesia. Alone among serious presidential candidates, he understands our place in the world, and how to bring America and other nations closer together.

Clinton and Obama offer similar platforms, and would likely make many of the same choices in foreign and domestic policy. But in one key aspect, Obama stands above. In 2002, when war fever gripped the nation and Democrats lined up behind President Bush and his war of choice in Iraq, Obama spoke against it. It's true, he was not in the U.S. Senate, and therefore was not under the pressure his counterpart faced. But there is no excusing Sen. Clinton for supporting a war for what was, to all appearances, political expediency. Obama's desire for higher office was apparent even then, but he did not fall into that trap.

Finally, do not discount the ability of a leader to bring people together. No, the gridlock of Washington will not magically disappear with his inauguration, but Obama has brought untold numbers of young people into the political process through his vision, his hope and his eloquence. Combined with his sound judgment and political skills, he has the potential to be a president who ushers our nation into a new era.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Pres. Jimmy Carter talks up Barack Obama (2008-01-29 22:29)

Former President Jimmy Carter has decided not to formally endorse any candidate this cycle, but that did not stop him from heaping praise on Sen. Barack Obama.

"Obama's campaign has been extraordinary and titillating for me and my family," the 83-year-old Carter told the Wall Street Journal.

"He has an extraordinary oratory...I think that Obama will be almost automatically a healing factor in the animosity now that exists, that relates to our country and its government," said Carter, who won the Nobel Peace Prize in 2002. [EMBED]

In this video, Carter states that all his children and grandchildren except one are supporting Barack Obama.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

B.L. (2008-01-30 10:59:00)

As a life long Democrat I cannot understand why anyone would think that Obama would made a better President than Sen. Clinton. Just what is on his resume that makes him qualified to be President? As for him being like JFK, give me a break, please, that is the biggest fairy tale of all. Teddy should take his own advise and shut up.

B.L.

A WOMAN NOT FOR HILLARY (2008-01-30 13:45:00)

Well I my self have been a long time Democrat, and the way Hillary and that husband Bill has been display with this election is an outrage. The Clintons should be completely ashamed of themselves for acting like idiots! We are not pleased with the Clintons with that RACE issue that them alone started and the continue backbitting that Hillary is always doing, not to mention this last trick of hers with the Kenneys' family. Really i can't understand how anyone with sense could even vote for her. The Clintons have always been dirty with fights. My word, she can't bring this nation together. As soon as Mr. Kenney endorse Mr. Obama, Hillary got mad and went crying to the woman Kenney begging for support, Hillary don't care about people, Hillary cares about Hillary. I think that it was wrong for her to split up the Kenney Family in the national public. Because of her selfish ways the nations is talking bad about the divison on the Kenney family. Hillary is too seflish to untify this nation and all the dirty tacts and tricks she pulls, she should NOT BE PRESIDENT!! ALL THE WAY TO THE WHITE HOUSE OBAMA.

John Edwards to withdraw from race (2008-01-30 07:53)

John Edwards will pull out of the presidential primary according to the Associated Press.

He is expected to make the announcement at a speech addressing poverty in New Orleans at 1 p.m. EST today.

Edwards will not immediately endorse one of the remaining two candidates according to campaign sources, AP reports.

It's difficult to predict how Edwards' withdrawal will effect Super Tuesday outcomes. There is one argument that Edwards competed with Barack Obama for white men, especially in the South. Some believe that Edwards splits the "white vote" with Hillary Clinton.

Still another argument is that the progressive wing of the party is mostly split between Edwards and Obama. One bit of evidence for this is that polls conducted by progressive forums like MoveOn.org and DailyKos generally tend to feature these two candidates battling for the lead.

I tend to believe that at least from the standpoint of volunteers and grassroots efforts, Obama will benefit more as a larger number of progressive activists move toward his campaign in the coming days. The powerful SEIU union has tended to favor either Edwards or Obama in this race, so we might see this powerful organization shift toward the latter's camp.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama Live in Denver (2008-01-30 10:59)

[EMBED]

Make calls to February 5th voters

Organize your community

Action Center
Obama Mobile

X
X X X
X X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More Campaign Videos (2008-01-30 12:51)

Barack Obama speaks in El Dorado, Kansas.

[EMBED]

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius endorses Barack Obama in El Dorado, Kansas.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Sen. Ted Kennedy: I'm Fired Up (2008-01-30 13:16)

Here's an email sent out earlier today by Sen. Ted Kennedy.

Dear Paul,

When I endorsed Barack Obama on Monday, I was also endorsing a candidate with the power to transform America.

As President Kennedy said in 1960, "It is time for a new generation of leadership."

This campaign is about a new generation of leadership today. A generation ready to be part of something bigger than themselves. A generation ready to change the country, and a generation ready to change the world.

I'm doing everything I can to elect Barack Obama . With less than a week before my state and 21 others make their voices heard, there is no time to lose.

Please join me by making a $50 donation now:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/newgeneration>

Like my son Patrick and my niece Caroline, I have found a new generation of leadership for America in Barack Obama – and I hope you have too!

Sincerely,

Senator Edward M. Kennedy

P.S. – You may have already seen clips of my speech or parts of it on Monday. But take a look here. The energy in that room was amazing, and it's spreading across America:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/newgeneration>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Endorsement News (2008-01-30 13:50)

Barack Obama has received a bevy of endorsements recently some of them rather unusual.

From the press, the New York Post, The Stranger (Seattle) and Marin Independent-Journal (N. SF Bay, CA) are backing Obama. Here is the Post endorsement:

POST ENDORSES BARACK OBAMA

January 30, 2008 – Democrats in 22 states across America go to the polls next Tuesday to pick between two presidential prospects: Sens. Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton.

We urge them to choose Obama - an untried candidate, to be sure, but preferable to the junior senator from New York.

Obama represents a fresh start.

His opponent, and her husband, stand for déjà vu all over again - a return to the opportunistic, scandal-scarred, morally muddled years of the almost infinitely self-indulgent Clinton co-presidency.

Does America really want to go through all that once again?

It will - if Sen. Clinton becomes president.

That much has become painfully apparent.

Bill Clinton's thuggishly self-centered campaign antics conjure so many bad, sad memories that it's hard to know where to begin.

Suffice it to say that his Peck's-Bad-Boy smirk - the Clinton trademark - wore thin a very long time ago.

Far more to the point, Sen. Clinton could have reined him in at any time. But she chose not to - which tells the nation all it needs to know about what a Clinton II presidency would be like.

Now, Obama is not without flaws.

For all his charisma and his eloquence, the rookie senator sorely lacks seasoning: Regarding national security, his worldview is beyond naive; America must defend itself against those sworn to destroy the nation.

His all-things-to-all-people approach to complicated domestic issues also arouses scant confidence. "Change!" for the sake of change does not a credible campaign platform make. But he remains a highly intelligent man, with a strong record as a conciliator.

And, again, he is not Team Clinton.

That counts for a very great deal.

A return to Sen. Clinton's cattle-futures deal, Travelgate, Whitewater, Filegate, the Lincoln Bedroom Fire Sale, Pardongate - and the inevitable replay of the Monica Mess?

No, thank you.

And don't forget the Clintons' trademark political cynicism. How elseto explain Sen. Clinton's oft-contradictory policy stands: She voted for the war in Iraq, but now says it was a bad idea. She'd end it yesterday - but refuses to say how.

It's called "triangulation" - the Clintonian tactic by which the ends are played against the middle.

Once, it was effective - almost brilliant. Today, it is tired and tattered - and it reeks of cynicism and opportunism.

Finally, Sen. Clinton stands philosophically far to the left of her husband, and is much more disciplined in pursuit of her agenda.

At least Obama has the ability to inspire.

Again, we don't agree much with Obama on substantive issues.

But many Democrats will.

He should be their choice on Tuesday.

From the entertainment world, professional Hulk Hogan threw his support to Barack Obama. Designer Shepard Fairey is endorsing Barack with some new graphic art.

Shepard Fairey's New Poster Elizabeth B. Moynihan, the widow of Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan, is endorsing Obama. Brooklyn City Councilmember Simcha Felder, an Orthodox Jew, is supporting the Illinois senator.

Across the country in Los Angeles, the openly-gay city councilman Bill Rosendhal is for Obama.

Other political endorsements: Macon, Georgia Mayor Robert Reichert; Palo Alto City Council Members Yoriko Kishimoto and Yiaway Yeh; NJ Senate President Richard Codey; and Rep. Paul C. Casey (D-Winchester).

More than eighty Guantanamo lawyers are endorsing Obama. Here's part of their letter of support:

"Some politicians are all talk and no action. But we know from first-hand experience that Senator Obama has demonstrated extraordinary leadership on this critical and controversial issue. When others stood back, Senator Obama helped lead the fight in the Senate against the Administration's efforts in the Fall of 2006 to strip the courts of jurisdiction, and when we were walking the halls of the Capitol trying to win over enough Senators to beat back the Administration's bill, Senator Obama made his key staffers and even his offices available to help us. Senator Obama worked with us to count the votes, and he personally lobbied colleagues who worried about the political ramifications of voting to preserve habeas corpus for the men held at Guantanamo. He has understood that our strength as a nation stems from our commitment to our core values, and that we are strong enough to protect both our security and those values. Senator Obama demonstrated real leadership then and since, continuing to raise Guantanamo and habeas corpus in his speeches and in the debates...We need a President who will restore the rule of law, demonstrate our commitment to human rights, and repair our reputation in the world community. Based on our work with him, we are convinced that Senator Obama can do this because he truly feels these issues 'in his bones'"

And finally, Little India, describing itself as the largest circulation Indo-American magazine in America, is backing the Illinois senator:

Obama for President

There is something magical and transcendental in this moment about Sen. Barack Obama both for the country and the Indian American community.

By:

The Editors

Little India has decided to break from its tradition of staying out of the primary selections by endorsing Sen. Barack Obama for the Democratic Party nomination for president. We take this unusual step as we have come to share his inspiring message and his call for the "fierce urgency of now."

We value the Clintons' long association with the Indian American community and with India, so the decision to endorse her opponent has not been easy. But there is something magical and transcendental in this moment about Sen. Obama both for the country and the Indian American community.

✕

His life story is in so many ways ours. In his political pursuits, he has defied both traditional paths pursued by minority politicians: identity politics built on narrow affiliations, typical of most ethnic leaders, as well as that of right wing politicians (like our own Bobby Jindal in Louisiana) who run from their history and identity. Obama, by contrast, has transcended boundaries. The Obama phenomenon, even if it does not get him the ultimate prize, offers something unique and it is important that we embrace this moment, for, as the Nobel Prize writer Toni Morrison wrote in her endorsement of Obama, "this is one of those singular moments that nations ignore at their peril."

We reject the proposition that Sen. Hillary Clinton's experience trumps the promise that Obama has to offer. As Sen. Obama has retorted: "One of my opponents says a vote for me would be a gamble. But the real gamble would be to do the same old things with the same old people over and over again and hope that the next time the results will somehow be different."

In the wake of the disastrous Bush presidency, Democrats are wistful about the Clinton era. In actual fact, the Clinton presidency was a period of political gridlock and public venom. Besides, Sen. Clinton already had an opportunity to shape public policy during Pres. Bill Clinton's term. We are likely to see a return of the stalemate and the tiresome and virulent conflicts of the 1990s if Clinton were the Democratic nominee. Indeed, the Clintons' subtle race-baiting tactics during the South Carolina primaries offer a preview of their divisive and ultimately futile scorched earth politics. Their reprehensible, win-at-all-costs, racially-laced attacks against Sen. Obama, even at the price of undermining their personal and historic commitments to racial justice, proved a tipping point for us, as they did for many other progressives in this country.

A Clinton supporter, Gloria Steinem, dubiously asserted that the gender barrier in politics is higher than the racial one, wondering: "Why is the sex barrier not taken as seriously as the racial one?"

But Sen. Clinton fails even by that measure, because her candidacy only underscores the painful stereotype that women's advancement begins at the altar. As Kerry Howley has tellingly pointed out, the first three women to serve in the Senate succeeded their husbands; six of the first 14 women elected to Congress were widows of incumbents and three others were daughters. Even Steinem would acknowledge that the gender barrier is better broken by a woman who wasn't riding her husband's coattails.

Sen. Obama, the son of an immigrant, offers an exciting opportunity to take Americans, men and women, of all races and affiliations, to an exciting new place and time. As Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., so eloquently said in his endorsement: "In Barack Obama, I see not just the audacity, but the possibility of hope for the America that is yet to be."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Anna Eshoo (D-Palo Alto) endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-30 16:14)

Anna Eshoo (D-Palo Alto) just endorsed Barack Obama.

✖ Barack Obama inspires me. He gives me hope. He appeals to the best in us and in doing so, he restores the sense of idealism that brought me to public service. He challenges us to dream bigger and reach farther.

He reminds me of the people in my district: innovative, collaborative, optimistic and dedicated to change as a way to make things better.

Senator Obama also reminds me of John Kennedy who inspired my generation to fight injustice at home and to be ambassadors for democracy around the world. And he recalls Robert Kennedy who sought to heal a dispirited and divided nation and touched those who saw him as their champion for social justice.

Senator Obama's candidacy is historic, and so is the reaction to it. He has brought thousands of disaffected and skeptical people back into the political process and he has struck a chord with thousands of young voters. Still more are poised to participate in the days ahead.

Barack Obama is a true son of America. The country needs the benefit of his extraordinary life experience, as well as his practiced policy and leadership skills. As someone who works in Washington, but who lives on the other side of the country, I know how deeply engrained the "old ways" of Washington are, and how they often exclude and dismiss the aspirations of our people.

His candidacy presents an opportunity we cannot afford to pass by. Years from now, I do not want to ask "what if..." That's why I will do everything I can to see that Senator Obama wins the Democratic Party nomination and the Presidency of the United States.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✖

MAPA endorses Barack Obama (2008-01-30 20:47)

MAPA, the Mexican American Political Association, has endorsed Barack Obama in its newsletter sent out Wednesday.

SI SE PUEDE WITH OBAMA January 30, 2008

Greetings!

SI SE PUEDE WITH OBAMA

In various previous bulletins we have pointed out numerous contradictions and challenges facing us during this presidential campaign. The aspirations for political change that conforms to the myriad social needs of Latinos, the working majorities of the U.S., and all people of color are huge. Fair and humane immigration reform, an end to the war in Iraq and Afghanistan and the return of U.S. troops to their loved ones, universal and affordable healthcare, fair versus "free" trade policies and an end to the export of millions of jobs, immediate relief to working families devastated by the subprime housing crisis, equitable and progressive tax rates, a reduction of the budget deficit not on the backs of working people, a restoration and protection of privacy rights and an end to government spying and surveillance on its citizens and residents, protected right to organize a union and negotiate a collective bargaining unit, an end to the era of dependency on fossil fuels, the inviolability of women's right to choice and immediate access to health services - these and many more issues are moving millions of people into motion in search of relevant change in our country.

The real question before us is whether any of the current presidential candidates measures up to our expectations and aspirations for change within the context of a constrained political system dominated by two main political parties - Republican and Democratic, its various minor parties, but an ever growing and robust independent segment of the electorate?

The Mexican American Political Association (MAPA), the oldest political-civic organization of Mexican Americans and Latinos in the U.S., answers the question in the affirmative with some reservations. The task before us is enormous and we refuse to invest everything on one woman or man aspiring to assume the highest political office in the land, and expect that this will create the change we desire. This is only one element of the political equation. The majority of the responsibility for change is ours - our collective responsibility to create sweeping social movement and impose our political will as the majority producers of society. We do this by participating in political elections, mobilizations of masses of people, social protests, lobbying, sit-ins, petitions, recall of elected officials when necessary, and the use of many other tactics.

No political candidate is perfect, but which candidate comes closest to our ideal and speaks to our issues and interests, exudes confidence, demonstrates a track-record for integrity and speaking truth to power, and voting in favor of working peoples interests?

Our first choice was Congressman Dennis Kucinich. We firmly believe that his platform is our platform, and that his progressive trajectory as an elected official speaks for itself. However, for many reasons citizen Kucinich retired from the presidential primary race to pursue a re-election bid for his current seat. MAPA stood on principle to support the candidate who thoroughly stands for peace, fair trade, humane immigration reform, universal healthcare access, women's choice, worker's rights, and while his candidacy may have represented an impossible long- shot - we resolved that elections in and of themselves do not constitute the main measure of political change, and that our fight is a strategic one premised on deep-rooted organization of political conscious Latino workers and families in alliance with affinity constituencies.

However, something nasty in the national campaigns reared its head over the past two weeks, which motivated us to consider another endorsement for a presidential candidate of the Democratic Party primary elections. We have observed with utter disgust the use of racially divisive and polarizing tactics employed by the Clintons, both Hillary and Bill, against Senator Barack Obama, not the first presidential candidate of African American origin. This is something that we would have expected from Republican candidates, but instead it surfaced from the bowels of the center-right institutional currents of the Democratic Party. The tactics are absolutely deplorable and clearly demonstrate what the Clintons think of all people of color.

In other words, when they speak and refer to Senator Barack Obama in the racially disparaging manner in which they have, they are really referring to all of us people of color - African Americans, Latinos, Asian Pacific Islanders, and Native Americans. Perhaps worst yet, they think little of white members of the electorate wrongly believing that such tactics would move white voters away from Senator Obama - the scary specter of a black candidate with little experience and questionable credibility assuming the reins of power. The repeated claim by the Clintons' paid pollster, Sergio Bendixen that Latinos won't vote for a black man is one more example of the polarizing self-fulfilling prophecy injected into the campaign of late. Certainly they will deny such a charge, but then again, they are not people of color and have not been the victims of their own invective.

MAPA has historically supported candidates it believed were competent to represent the corresponding electorate irrespective of their national origin, race, gender or age. The content of their character is what mattered most to us.

The leadership and membership of MAPA have resolved to endorse Senator Barack Obama as the presidential candidate for the Democratic Party, who also just happens to be African American.

We also observe with great pride growing numbers of young white voters enthusiastically embracing the message of Senator Obama, black voters turning out in greater percentages than previous elections exuding pride and hope, Latino culinary union members who see themselves in the candidacy of the young senator, and women who deposit their faith in the intelligence and oratorical imagery displayed by candidate Barack Obama. All of this bodes well for the future of America - seeing beyond race - capable of assimilating the message of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Senator Obama is the only remaining candidate who has declared in favor of issuing driver's licenses to immigrants (much before the current campaign) and the right of immigrant youth to higher education through the Dream Act, pursuing humane immigration reform his first year in office, returning all U.S. combat troops from Iraq, (one of the few federal legislators who originally opposed the war publicly), and pursuing universal healthcare reform (albeit retaining a role for private insurance companies) - these are a few of his down-payment commitments to the electorate he seeks to convince that now is the time to carve the change required due to the current maladies plaguing the country. It is our obligation to move this campaign and candidacy still closer to the wishes and pressing needs of the majorities.

Si Se Puede con Obama, Yes We Can with Obama, is the recurring chant that we now will also raise to oppose those candidates who live in the past, seek dynasty, angle to divide and polarize us, or propose continued neo-liberal directions for the nation-state.

Si Se Puede with Obama, and with and by and for the people.

Nativo V. Lopez

National President

A crowd of about 13,000 was fired up for the Obama rally in Phoenix, Arizona with Gov. Janet Napolitano and Caroline Kennedy.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

College Newspapers Endorse Barack Obama (2008-01-31 07:04)

The Campus Press of Colorado University; The California Aggie of the University of California, Davis; The Chanticleer of Jacksonville State University; The Santa Clara of Santa Clara University; and the Trinity Tripod of Trinity College (CT) have all endorsed Barack Obama .

Here is the endorsement from The Santa Clara:

Obama: Best candidate for America's future

Issue date: 1/31/08 Section: Opinion

Originally published: 1/30/08 at 11:35 PM PST

For nearly eight years, Americans have watched TV in horror and opened newspapers with dread as the country has forsaken its ideals – and its people.

Every day troops die in a war begun by lies. America has become the curiosity of the international community, if not the laughing stock. The struggling economy has even spurred the Feds to intervention and led politicians to throw around the word "recession."

It's safe to say that Americans are ready for a change of pace.

And Senator Barack Obama is the perfect person to set this pace.

Perhaps it's Obama's claim that he believes "in what the country can be" that has inspired such an outpouring of support for him. Indeed, this image of what the country could be under Obama's leadership is an enticing one.

As president, Obama hopes to end the war and have all combat personnel home within 16 months of his election. And rather than promoting a transnational war on terror as a selling point of his candidacy, Obama has vowed to work to increase regional diplomacy in tense areas like the Middle East.

With less money put toward the war effort, Obama hopes to provide a $4,000 yearly tax credit for college students, a number that seems small in light of the $33,000 that is Santa Clara's tuition, but a very real sum for students attending state and community colleges.

Obama also has plans to reform the ailing health care system. He looks toward universal coverage that will serve as a form of quality control for private systems that charge too much to do too little.

As tempting as all this may seem, Obama's supporters are less enthralled by his policies than his personal invitation to join him in this "movement for change."

For the first time since John F. Kennedy, a presidential candidate is offering the American people an active role in shaping the nation's destiny. Lamenting the ways Washington, D.C., has alienated the American people, Obama promises to involve citizens in federal government.

And after all, isn't that what all freedom-loving and democracy-trusting Americans want – to work with their chosen leader as "one people, reaching for what's possible"?

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Campaign Goodies at Obama Store (2008-01-31 08:31)

The Obama Store has some great campaign items for sell. All the money earned from the items goes toward funding the campaign effort.

Long sleeve shirts

Yard signs, fans, placards

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

More Obama Endorsement News (2008-01-31 09:48)

From the political front, three superdelegates endorsed Barack Obama today: Reps. John Larson and Chris Murphy from Connecticut, and Rep. Earl Pomeroy from North Dakota.

In San Francisco, State Senator Leland Yee endorsed Obama, a move that should help the candidate make inroads with the Bay Area's Asian Pacific Islander community.

From the press, The Minnesota Daily, the Santa Fe New Mexican, the Belmont Citizen-Herald (MA), The Phoenix, a Boston weekly, the Sacramento News & Review, the Chico News & Review (CA) and Gay City News (NYC) are backing Obama.

There are also rumors flying around that John Edwards may endorse Obama on Friday. Robert Novak reported that Edwards and Obama may have reached a deal in which the former would become Attorney General if Obama is elected. There are also reports that Edwards' "inner circle" is advising him to team up with Obama. I guess we'll have to wait and see.

Below is the endorsement from the Santa Fe New Mexican:

Editorial: Our nation needs a Democrat; Obama's a better choice

On the other side of this weekend lies Super Tuesday — or Super Duper Tuesday in its new, 24-state form that could well determine both parties' presidential nominees.

New Mexico is part of it — a small part, given our big state's small population, but there's enough of a role that the two remaining Democratic challengers are mounting campaigns for the 26 of our 38 convention delegates to be chosen that day — out of 2,000 nationwide — in what's being called a party caucus.

Far from being a gathering of politically like-minded people, and unlike the barn-dance event it's become in first-in-the-nation Iowa, ours amounts to a single-office primary election (more about this tomorrow). But at least our half-million registered Democrats, at costs being picked up by their party, will have a say on the day most of the American people can choose a nominee. As for the human-gestation stretch of time between Feb. 5 and Nov. 4, how 'bout putting the candidates in cold storage — at least until Labor Day ...

The nation needs a Democratic president — mostly for the sake of the Supreme Court and the rest of the federal judiciary, but also because our government's policies, foreign and domestic, are badly out of kilter.

There are many good Republicans embarrassed to tears by the Bush-Cheney administration — and they'll be quick to remind their fellow Americans that, come January, those two are outthere. So elect John McCain or Mitt Romney, and things will be fine; at least finer than they are now ...

Not good enough; eight years of the best that party could offer us is plenty for now. Despite our high personal regard for Sen. McCain, we think it will take Democratic leadership to undo past wrongs, recover the reputation of our globally humiliated country and restore economic and social justice.

But the same operatives who fooled our nation not once, but twice, into Bush-Cheney already are plotting another puppet regime controlled by corporate scoundrels. They'd be ecstatic at the prospect of Democrats floating a Clinton co-presidency, and they've been rubbing their hands with glee during recent weeks as the former president mounted the stage on behalf of his wife, one of the two remaining candidates.

This is the president who unnecessarily lied about an affair with a White House intern; who fecklessly fired off missiles to distract the nation from his all-too-human failings; who, as we noted at the time, should have resigned, or should have been impeached — and was.

Bill Clinton back in a White House he left in the wake of scandalous presidential pardons? The Karl Roves of this world would have a field day with a dual-Clinton candidacy, whether or not the ex-president were to go back in the closet and let the extremely sharp senator run on her own. The nation's newspaper readers and TV audiences would be in for nine months of propaganda far beyond mere mudslinging.

Hillary Clinton is only one of two outstanding candidates for the Democratic nomination, and The New Mexican endorses the other: Illinois Sen. Barack Obama.

Shorter on experience, he also is unsullied by the quid-pro-quo world of Washington. That puts him in excellent position:

To lead a long-overdue initiative toward universal health care;

To lead another overdue initiative, on a new nationwide energy source;

To lead our public schools out of the doldrums;

To lead the country back to financial solvency and economic independence.

To lead, indeed. Sen. Obama is someone Americans can rally 'round.

His honesty will confound those trying to twist voters' perception of him and the working-people's party; his genuineness will disarm critics jaded over politics-by-rrote; his academic brilliance and organizing skills will allow him to handle the complexities of the presidency; and his oratorical skills and compelling personality will inspire a long-lax nation to get off its collective butt and achieve what we're capable of.

New Mexico Democrats can catch an exciting new wave with votes for Barack Obama on Tuesday.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

the sojourner (2008-01-31 11:05:00)

Hooray! It's always refreshing to see a media outlet get it right. We need a Democrat, but we don't just need any Democrat—we need Barack Obama. It also means that people all over the country recognize this need, not just Iowa and South Carolina, but New York, Massachusetts, California, and New Mexico as well. Thanks for bringing all the endorsements to our attention.

Obama Endorsements Still Pouring In (2008-01-31 12:27)

Former Federal Reserve Chair Paul Volcker endorsed Barack Obama today. From the Wall Street Journal:

"After 30 years in government, serving under five Presidents of both parties and chairing two non-partisan commissions on the Public Service, I have been reluctant to engage in political campaigns. The time has come to overcome that reluctance," Mr. Volcker said in a statement today. "However, it is not the current turmoil in markets or the economic uncertainties that have impelled my decision. Rather, it is the breadth and depth of challenges that face our nation at home and abroad. Those challenges demand a new leadership and a fresh approach."

Savannah Mayor Otis Johnson announced his support of the Illinois senator today.

"When you read what he is proposing, you can actually see it happening, because he can bring together groups who need to be brought together to bring this country forward. He is showing more than anyone he can bring together young and old, black and white, people of all colors, and that is why I feel he is the right candidate at this time."

Four delegates supporting John Edwards have endorsed Barack Obama now that Edwards has left the race.

Betsy Feist and Jeremiah Frei-Pearson of New York City's 14th Congressional district, and Marc A. Landis and Bobby Berlin of NYC's 8th Congressional district are throwing their support to Obama. These are not superdelegates, and will only be pledged if at 15 percent vote threshold is met.

The weekly Colorado Springs Independent also endorsed Obama today.

Caucuses: Colorado's voice in the race

By RALPH ROUTON AND JOHN WEISS

After months of watching the presidential race on TV, with only a few scattered "live" campaign-related events in the area, Colorado voters finally have the chance to influence the outcome.

It's just not as easy here. Instead of a presidential primary, Colorado is among the few conducting caucuses. That's the format, for Republicans and Democrats — separately, of course, on Feb. 5, as our state joins 23 others taking part in Tsunami Tuesday.

Obama campaign

Instead of having all day to vote (or submitting an absentee ballot), voters must participate in their local party precinct caucus, often at schools or churches, starting at 7 p.m. on Feb. 5. The gathering, lasting up to 90 minutes, gives you a chance to meet neighbors sharing your political registration.

The Independent marks the occasion with a ringing endorsement and a halfhearted recommendation. Most importantly, our first concern is encouraging everyone to make their voices heard on an evening when far fewer than 10 percent of registered voters will likely participate.

We'd prefer an old-fashioned primary, and we support any effort for Colorado to go that way in 2012. But for now, our only choice is to embrace caucus participation. Sure, it'll be different, but also educational and, we hope, rewarding.

Endorsement:

Barack Obama

The best part of this Democratic presidential race is having a choice, even after the field has narrowed with John Edwards the latest withdrawal after the demise of Bill Richardson, Dennis Kucinich, Chris Dodd and Joseph Biden.

Democrats have two remaining options: Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton. But Obama's inspiring theme — "Yes, we can" — has brought a freshness to the campaign.

On the significant issues, there is no real gulf separating the two U.S. senators, both of whom are sharp lawyers. The true strength of any president lies in assembling a gifted, diverse nucleus of top officials and advisers, and either front-runner would recruit a "super team" (with the same pool available to both) for the next administration.

For us, Obama's skills as a community organizer, his multiracial and international background, his ability to inspire 18- to 35-year-olds to vote (many for the first time) and his zeal to end partisan pandering provide America with the best chance to undo the damage President Bush has inflicted. We also like that the Obama campaign has a staffed Pikes Peak campaign office, which has superbly mobilized and educated local citizens.

We acknowledge Clinton's experience, but she has overplayed that hand with the exaggeration that she's been "doing this for 35 years." And we wish she would have muzzled her husband before he manipulated and twisted Obama's record. A former president should be a statesman, not a player in gutter politics.

For the past 20 years, the Oval Office has been occupied by a Bush or a Clinton. At this point in our history, we need a new vision. A Clinton presidency would be focused on the possible, based more on poll numbers and efficient compromises, while Obama has the Robert Kennedy-like ability to unite and uplift our polarized nation, to restore our government's moral leadership at home and throughout the world, and to use his fresh, exciting energy and vision to rally Americans to be all they can be.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Campaign Rallies (2008-01-31 15:27)

Edwards' Union supporters expected to back Obama (2008-01-31 17:33)

According to Sal Rosselli of United Health Workers, the 650,000 strong Service Employees International Union (SEIU) in California will endorse Barack Obama on Friday. The union had previously backed John Edwards.

Another union from the Edwards camp, the Transport Workers Union with 200,000 members, is also expected to endorse Obama on Friday.

Two unions backing Edwards, United Steelworkers and the United Mine Workers along with the AFL-CIO are expected to wait until a clear front-runner emerges before endorsing a candidate.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama talks immigration policy during debate (2008-01-31 20:33)

Check out Barack Obama's statements on immigration policy during tonight's debate. Also, parts of his speech from a rally earlier today in Los Angeles.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

the sojourner (2008-02-01 01:03:00)

This demonstrates Obama's brilliance: he is walking a fine line, balancing his identity as a black man while at the same time reaching out to people of all ethnicities. While the media flounders around the issue of race, Obama responds with eloquence and grace.

There's nothing more to say, other than we need this man as our president.

2.2 February

Obama News on Friday (2008-02-01 08:32)

The Obama campaign is now saturating 24 states with television ads as Barack and Michelle stump largely in smaller states until Sunday when Barack appears in Delaware.

On the endorsement front. The Nation, the Chicago Sun-Times, The Brooklyn Paper, Aspen Times (CO), Oneonta Daily Star (NY), Eagle Tribune (MA) and The Salem News (MA) are backing Barack Obama.
Rep. Rosa DeLauro of Connecticut is expected to endorse Obama on Saturday.
Tiger Woods heaped praise on Obama during a golf tournament in Dubai.

“I’ve seen him speak. He’s extremely articulate, very thoughtful,” Woods said. “I’m just impressed at how well, basically all politicians really do, how well they think on their feet. Especially those debates. It’s pretty phenomenal to see them get their point across. But I just think that he’s really inspired a bunch of people in our country and we’ll see what happens down the road.”

From Roland Martin, we learn that Clarence B. Jones Martin Luther King’s lawyer and speechwriter, and author of “What Martin Would Say,” has endorsed Barack Obama.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Good Judgment on Day One (2008-02-01 10:15)

Barack Obama speaks about his judgment on the Iraq War.

[EMBED]

Action Center

Obama Mobile

X X
X X
X X
X X
X X
X X
X X
X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

MoveOn.org endorses Barack Obama for President (2008-02-01 10:33)

MoveOn.org, with 1.7 million members in Feb. 5 states, made its first primary endorsement ever backing Sen. Barack Obama today. The organization’s website encouraged members to volunteer for the Obama ground campaign with heavy duty get out the vote efforts starting tomorrow.

Here is MoveOn.org’s press release on the endorsement:

MoveOn Endorsement Throws Progressive Weight Behind Barack Obama

3.2 Million Members Nationwide Mobilize to Get Out the Progressive Vote for Senator Obama Group Has Over 1.7 Million Members In Super Tuesday States

In a resounding vote today, MoveOn.org Political Action's members nationwide voted to endorse Senator Barack Obama for the Democratic nomination for President. The group, with 3.2 million members nationwide and over 1.7 million members in Super Tuesday states, will immediately begin to mobilize on behalf of Senator Obama. The vote favored Senator Obama to Senator Clinton by 70.4 % to 29.6 %.

Senator Obama accepted the endorsement stating:

"In just a few years, the members of MoveOn have once again demonstrated that real change comes not from the top-down, but from the bottom-up. From their principled opposition to the Iraq war - a war I also opposed from the start - to their strong support for a number of progressive causes, MoveOn shows what Americans can achieve when we come together in a grassroots movement for change. I thank them for their support and look forward to working with their members in the weeks and months ahead."

Eli Pariser, MoveOn.org's Executive Director, issued the following statement on the group's endorsement:

"Our members' endorsement of Senator Obama is a clear call for a new America at this critical moment in history. Seven years of the disastrous policies of the Bush Administration have left the country desperate for change. We need a President who will bring to bear the strong leadership and vision required to end the war in Iraq, provide health care to every American, deal with our climate crisis, and restore America's standing in the world. The enormity of the challenges require someone who knows how to inspire millions to get involved to change the direction of our country, and someone who will be willing to change business as usual in Washington. Senator Barack Obama has proved he can and will be that President.

"With 3.2 million members nationwide and over 1.7 million members in states that vote next Tuesday, we'll be able to immediately jump into action in support of Senator Obama's candidacy. We've learned that the key to achieving change in Washington without compromising core values is having a galvanized electorate to back you up. And Barack Obama has our members 'fired up and ready to go' on that front.

"We congratulate Sens. Clinton, Dodd and Biden, former Senator Edwards, Governor Richardson, Congressman Kucinich and former Senator Gravel on running tremendous campaigns. We thank them for their contributions to the important debate that has gripped our nation and for their ongoing engagement with our members. We're looking forward to working together to bring progressive values to the nation's capitol and to end this disastrous war in Iraq. MoveOn members are committed to putting a Democrat in the White House in 2008 and ushering in a new era of progressive values no matter who wins the nomination."

MoveOn members' comments in the vote reflect the reasons they support Senator Obama:

"Obama's grassroots organizing experience and unifying message combine to show he will work for working people and speak to a broad cross section of the American public. We need this," said Linda Blong of Pennngrove, CA.

"There are defining moments in our nation's political history and this is one of them. Barack Obama appeals to the very BEST of the American Spirit," said Estina Baker, Hackensack, NJ

"Barack Obama represents CHANGE in so many levels. He brings HOPE that America can, again, be respected by the rest of the world and that Americans can be proud, again, of our leaders!" Isabelle Mollien, Denver, CO

"Obama has the ability to draw people to him, to energize people who generally don't vote, to create an atmosphere of long-overdue possibility around himself and what he could bring to the office. It is my belief that he can re-establish the lost connection between the American people and their leader, and put our country back on course to be a positive force in the world.” Matthew Smith in Columbus, OH

MoveOn’s endorsement means a fresh infusion of people-power for Obama in the critical days before Super Tuesday. MoveOn will immediately connect thousands of progressive activists into the Obama GOTV volunteer operation. It will also use the same cutting-edge computer-based phone program that made 7 million GOTV calls for Democrats in 2006 to allow MoveOn members to call other MoveOn members in Feb. 5 states and encourage them to vote for Obama.

Today’s endorsement is the first time MoveOn.org has endorsed a candidate for President in the Democratic primary. Over the past year, MoveOn surveyed a rotating sample of 30,000 members each week to determine their membership’s preference in the Democratic presidential primary. For months, MoveOn members were divided among many candidates – as many waited to see who would take bold progressive positions on the issues. As the primary race has gained momentum, the polling showed a consensus forming and, with Senator John Edward’s withdrawal from the race, members made their decision in favor of Senator Obama. The vote took place from Thursday, January 31st to Friday, February 1st.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Dean Florez on GOTV (2008-02-01 13:11)

Check out the YouTube video where California State Senator Dean Florez talks about the importance of grassroots and the get out the vote effort in the final push until the polls close on Tuesday, Feb. 5 .

[EMBED]

Action Center

Obama Mobile

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

ObamaForPrez (2008-02-01 14:47:00)

Hey, nice blog, I made a map for all obama supporters to show their support, here’s the link:

<http://www.obamaworldwide.com/SupporterMap.aspx>

Here is the Digg Link:

http://www.digg.com/2008_us_elections/barack_obama_worldwide_supporter_map_get_on_the_map/all

I’m adding a link pages right now and i’ll add your blog, feel free to make a post, you can also embed the charts on the statistic pages and they’ll stay up-to-date!

Los Angeles Times Endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-01 15:23)

The Los Angeles Times, the most widely-read newspaper in California, endorsed Barack Obama today.

Los Angeles Times

Barack Obama for Democratic nominee

Endorsements for president 2008

February 3, 2008

Democrats preparing to vote in Tuesday's California primary can mark their ballots with confidence, knowing that either candidate would make a strong nominee and, if elected, a groundbreaking leader and capable president. But just because the ballot features two strong candidates does not mean that it is difficult to choose between them. We urge voters to make the most of this historic moment by choosing the Democrat most focused on steering the nation toward constructive change: We strongly endorse Barack Obama.

The U.S. senator from Illinois distinguishes himself as an inspiring leader who cuts through typical internecine campaign bickering and appeals to Americans long weary of divisive and destructive politics. He electrifies young voters, not because he is young but because he embodies the desire to move to the next chapter of the American story. He brings with him deep knowledge on foreign relations and on this nation's particular struggles with identity and opportunity. His flair for expression, both in print and on the stump, too easily leads observers to forget that Obama is a man not just of style but of substance. He's a thoughtful student of the Constitution and an experienced lawmaker in his home state and, for the last three years, in the Senate.

On policy, Obama and his rival Democratic candidate, Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton of New York, are a hairsbreadth apart. Both vow to pull troops from Iraq. Both are committed to healthcare reform. Both offer candid critiques of the failed George W. Bush presidency, its blustering adventurism, its alienating stance toward other countries and its cavalier disregard for sacred American values such as individual liberty and due process of law.

With two candidates so closely aligned on the issues, we look to their abilities and potential as leaders, and their record of action in service of their stated ideals. Clinton is an accomplished public servant whose election would provide familiarity and, most important, competence in the White House, when for seven years it has been lacking. But experience has value only if it is accompanied by courage and leads to judgment.

Nowhere was that judgment more needed than in 2003, when Congress was called upon to accept or reject the disastrous Iraq invasion. Clinton faced a test and failed, joining the stampede as Congress voted to authorize war. At last week's debate and in previous such sessions, Clinton blamed Bush for abusing the authority she helped to give him, and she has made much of the fact that Obama was not yet in the Senate and didn't face the same test. But Obama was in public life, saw the danger of the invasion and the consequences of occupation, and he said so. He was right.

Obama demonstrates as well that he is open-eyed about the terrorist threat posed to the nation, and would not shrink from military action where it is warranted. He does not oppose all wars, he has famously stated, but rather "dumb wars." He also has the edge in economic policy, less because of particular planks in his platform than because of his understanding that some liberal orthodoxies developed during the last 40 years have been overtaken by history. He offers leadership on education, technology policy and environmental protection unfettered by the positions of previous administrations.

By contrast, Clinton's return to the White House that she occupied for eight years as first lady would resurrect some of the triumph and argument of that era. Yes, Bill Clinton's presidency was a period of growth and opportunity, and Democrats are justly nostalgic for it. But it also was a time of withering political fire, as the former president's recent comments on the campaign trail reminded the nation. Hillary Clinton's election also would drag into a third decade the post-Reagan political duel between two families, the Bushes and the Clintons. Obama is correct: It is time to turn the page.

An Obama presidency would present, as a distinctly American face, a man of African descent, born in the nation's youngest state, with a childhood spent partly in Asia, among Muslims. No public relations campaign could do more than Obama's mere presence in the White House to defuse anti-American passion around the world, nor could any political experience surpass Obama's life story in preparing a president to understand the American character. His candidacy offers Democrats the best hope of leading America into the future, and gives Californians the opportunity to cast their most exciting and consequential ballot in a generation.

In the language of metaphor, Clinton is an essay, solid and reasoned; Obama is a poem, lyric and filled with possibility. Clinton would be a valuable and competent executive, but Obama matches her in substance and adds something that the nation has been missing far too long – a sense of aspiration.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Endorsement Wave Keeps Rolling (2008-02-01 15:53)

The support for Barack Obama is coming in so fast it's hard to keep track of it all.

Here are some of the new endorsements.

From the press, the Native Times, Oakland Tribune, Contra Costa Times (CA), Yale Daily News (CT), and The Statesman (Stony Brook University) are backing Obama.

The owner of the Oakland Tribune also owns other Bay Area newspapers that will also carry the same endorsement: San Mateo County Times, Tri-Valley Herald, The Argus, The Daily Review and the Alameda Times-Star. These papers cover the entire Bay Area.

The very powerful California SEIU labor organization will be rallying their members behind Obama after endorsing the Illinois senator today.

Elected official endorsements include Reps. Earl Blumenauer of Oregon and Jim Oberstar of Minnesota.

Kansas Lt. Gov. Mark Parkinson is supporting Obama as is Seattle Mayor Greg Nickels.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Michelle Obama, Oprah Winfrey and Caroline Kennedy Rally this Sunday in Los Angeles (2008-02-01 16:04)

Talk about surrogates!

Announcement: Michelle Obama, Oprah Winfrey and Caroline Kennedy Rally this Sunday in Los Angeles

by Sam Graham-Felsen

, Friday, February 01, 2008 at 02:58 PM

The Obama for America campaign today announced that Michelle Obama, Oprah Winfrey and Caroline Kennedy will hold a Get Out The Vote Rally this Sunday in Los Angeles. The rally will be free and open to the public. More details will be released when they become available.

WHO: Michelle Obama, Oprah Winfrey, and Caroline Kennedy

WHEN: Sunday, February 3rd

WHAT: Get Out The Vote Rally

WHERE: Los Angeles, CA

For more information visit california.barackobama.com/michelleinla. Further details will be announced.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Seattle Post-Intelligencer Endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-01 19:11)

The Post-Intelligencer, Seattle's oldest newspaper, endorsed Barack Obama today.

P-I Endorsement: A time for change

SEATTLE POST-INTELLIGENCER EDITORIAL BOARD

Washington voters begin having their official say on the 2008 presidential election this week with the field substantially narrowed.

In this week's caucuses and the primaries that follow, Democrats are fortunate to have a difficult choice between two capable leaders whose largely similar visions on global warming, health care and the economy offer the best hopes for this country's future. In this history-making race, Sen. Barack Obama is the better choice over his worthy rival, Sen. Hillary Clinton, because of the real prospects he offers for change in domestic policy, the tone of government in Washington, D.C., and the conduct of foreign affairs.

We are less enamored of the Republicans. Undisturbed by a wrongly launched war of aggression, the leading contenders have competed to show who would be best at standing by the Bush-Cheney legacy of arrogant intervention. Despite his embrace of a particularly dangerous stance on Iraq, Sen. John McCain stands out on the basis of his forceful climate change position, his independence and his distinguished record of public service.

If the two races remain undecided after Super Tuesday, Washington residents will have a rare opportunity to have a voice in the nomination outcomes, joining a healthy national conversation in which the public, more than the media, has taken seriously the prospects for change.

We're delighted the state's Feb. 9 caucuses offer plenty of excitement. The Feb. 19 presidential primary vote will help determine Republican delegate allocations (kudos to the GOP for respecting voters). But it's regrettable that Democrats have relegated their primary to beauty-contest status, a process that flies in the face of the party's own name. It's anything but democratic.

Barack Obama

Sen. Obama has emerged as an impressive, balanced thinker with a charismatic presence. His ability to address a wide range of ideas in nuanced yet deeply inspirational fashion could re-energize political discourse in a manner reminiscent of Franklin D. Roosevelt because Obama has the potential to lift us into a transformative era. Right now, too many Americans see their lives distorted by the misdirected post-9/11 age of secrecy, fear and division. Obama can help the country close that chapter.

The Illinois senator is a candidate particularly well equipped to improve the nation's performance in the world at large. Obama starts from sound, well-considered positions. He opposed the wrongfully launched Iraq invasion. After years in which U.S. leaders have forgone critical diplomatic opportunities with Iran and North Korea, Obama would start from a bolder, more engaged position. He would understand broader parts of the world in a more personal way than any recent president because he lived in Indonesia and has connections with Africa. His presence in the White House would cause the world to look to this country with a renewed hope for positive leadership.

On domestic issues, Obama's instinct for compromise offers a larger hope for a creative, less-contentious pursuit of a society with better education, health care and job opportunities.

For all practical purposes, a Hillary Clinton presidency could open just as many or more doors at home and abroad. Despite our differences with her Iraq war vote, we believe she would pursue Iraq questions skillfully. Democratic caucus-goers will have legitimate debates about whether her hard-won experience or Obama's freshness will better translate into much-needed changes on environmental, health and economic-equity questions. Either could be a worthy general election candidate.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

MySpace-MTV "Closing Arguments" (2008-02-01 20:20)

From barackobama.com:

Young Voters Organizing, MySpace-MTV Dialogue & New Ringtones!

by Scott Goodstein

Friday, February 01, 2008 at 07:47 PM

With so many issues directly affecting young voters, it is exciting to see the overwhelming support our campaign is receiving from this new generation of voters. As Barack has said many times before, "our nation is at war; our planet is in peril," and it truly is time for the next generation to carry the torch. Please view this online video of how the young voters are not just voting for Barack Obama, but organizing for him. [EMBED]

MySpace and MTV are doing another "Presidential Dialogue" in the final days before the Super Tuesday Election. You can watch it live on MTV or online at MySpace.com.

New Ringtones!

Visit Obama Mobile to check out our new ringtones! Make sure all your friends know who you are supporting in the days ahead. There are even versions of Barack chants of "Fired up, Ready to Go!" My personal favorite the one where Barack says, "It's time we all answer the call!"

[EMBED]

Text Ringtone 11 to 62262

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Barack speaks on Education in Santa Fe (2008-02-01 21:28)

Barack Obama talks about "our children" in Santa Fe, New Mexico today.

[EMBED]

Action Center

Obama Mobile

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

La Opinión endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-02 07:28)

La Opinión, the largest Spanish newspaper in the United States, endorsed Barack Obama today. Here is the endorsement in both Spanish and English.

La opción demócrata es Barack Obama

El Partido Demócrata llega a la primaria de California con una oferta histórica entre dos candidatos extraordinarios. Creemos que entre ellos el senador Barack Obama representa realmente el cambio en una campaña en que "el cambio" es el tema central. Los puntos sobre inmigración del legislador de Illinois y su visión inspiradora es lo que necesita el país para salir del sentimiento actual de agotamiento político.

No hay duda de que la senadora Hillary Clinton sería una presidenta excelente si fuera electa. Es una mujer capaz, competente, disciplinada y trabajadora que ha demostrado talento como legisladora y que tiene la posición correcta en la mayoría de los temas. Su plan para un seguro de salud universal es un ejemplo de las valiosas iniciativas que ha propuesto la candidata. Sería grandioso poder elegir a la primera mujer presidente de esta nación.

La senadora ha obtenido un respaldo significativo de influyentes y reconocidos líderes nacionales latinos como Raúl Yzaguirre, Henry Cisneros y el alcalde Antonio Villaraigosa. Ella trabajó arduamente durante muchos años representando el mejor interés de los latinos y su compromiso personal está documentado a lo largo de esta campaña.

Sin embargo, este es un momento histórico donde la gran capacidad y experiencia de la senadora es insuficiente para brindar al país el sentido de renovación que necesita después de ocho años de George W. Bush.

Nos ha desilusionado también la calculada oposición de Clinton a las licencias de conducir para los indocumentados, que contrasta con la contundencia de los argumentos de Obama a favor de las mismas. Sabemos que eso es muy controversial, pero hay una sola posición correcta y es la del legislador de Illinois. Ambos senadores respaldan una reforma integral de inmigración, pero Obama es el único que se comprometió a presentar de nuevo el proyecto de ley durante su primer año de gobierno.

Ese mismo compromiso con el tema migratorio llevó a Obama a condenar en un debate las mentiras que se dicen maliciosamente sobre ellos; a comprender la necesidad de las licencias y a defender a los estudiantes indocumentados con la coautoría del DREAM Act en la Legislatura. El senador ha mostrado carácter, manteniendo su línea pese al antagonismo del clima político.

Al mismo tiempo, no existe una gran diferencia entre los dos demócratas en la mayoría de los temas más importantes; por eso la visión marca la diferencia. Obama tiene un mensaje inclusivo y de esperanza, necesario para los momentos que vive el país. Él reúne las condiciones conciliadoras para revertir el círculo vicioso de rencor que desde hace décadas predomina en Washington y paraliza las grandes decisiones necesarias.

Necesitamos un presidente que de nuevo inspire y una a los ciudadanos alrededor de las grandes posibilidades que nos brinda el futuro. Obama es el líder adecuado para este momento. Sabemos que no es muy conocido en nuestra comunidad y si bien tiene el respaldo de María Elena Durazo, del senador Gil Cedillo y de otros. No obstante, es quien hoy merece el respaldo de la comunidad latina.

Los demócratas ya están haciendo historia al tener que decidir su candidato a presidente entre una mujer y un afroamericano.

Barak Obama tiene la sensibilidad de un origen humilde, de un hogar multicultural y es la mejor opción para un cambio visionario.

The Democratic choice is Barack Obama

The Democratic Party arrives at the California primary with a historic choice between two extraordinary candidates. We believe that of the two, Senator Barack Obama represents fundamental change in a campaign in which "change" has become a central theme. Obama's approach to immigration and his inspiring vision are what the country need to break through the current feeling of political malaise.

There is no doubt that Senator Hillary Clinton would be an excellent president if elected. She is capable, competent, disciplined, and hard working. She has shown herself to be a talented legislator and is on the right side of the major issues. Her plan for universal health care is one example of the courageous initiatives she has proposed as a candidate. And it would be wonderful to elect the country's first woman president.

She has garnered significant Latino support from such influential and high profile national leaders as Raúl Yzaguirre, Henry Cisneros and Antonio Villaraigosa. She has worked tirelessly over many years to represent the best interests of Latinos and her personal commitment has been well-documented throughout this campaign.

Yet, this is a historic moment and tremendous skills and experience are not enough to inspire a feeling of renewal in our country after eight long years of George W. Bush.

As well, we were disappointed with her calculated opposition to driver's licenses for the undocumented, which contrasts markedly from the forceful argument in support made by Obama. We understand that this is an extremely controversial issue but we believe there is only one right position and it is that of the senator from Illinois. And, while both senators support comprehensive immigration reform, only Obama has committed to bringing forward new legislation during his first year in office.

It is this commitment to the immigration issue which drove Obama to condemn the malicious lies made during the immigration debate, to understand the need for driver's licenses, and to defend the rights of undocumented students by co-authoring the DREAM Act. The senator has demonstrated character by maintaining his position despite the hostile political climate.

At the same time, there are not huge differences between the two Democratic candidates on most of the major issues. Thus, vision makes the difference! Obama offers an inclusive message of hope that addresses our country's historic moment. He has a conciliatory style that can reverse the vicious cycle of rancor which has dominated Washington over these past decades and has paralyzed its ability to come together on major decisions.

We need a leader today that can inspire and unite America again around its greatest possibilities. Barack Obama is the right leader for the time. We know that he is not as well known among our community and while he has the support of Maria Elena Durazo, Senator Gil Cedillo and others he comes to the Latino community with less name recognition. Nevertheless, it is Obama who deserves our support.

By deciding between a woman or an African American as their presidential nominee, the Democrats are making history. Barack Obama has the sensibilities of a man from humble beginnings raised in a multicultural home. He is the best option for a truly visionary change.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Albuquerque Tribune endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-02 07:52)

The Albuquerque Tribune endorses Barack Obama today.

Editorial: The Trib endorses Barack Obama in Tuesday's N.M. Democratic presidential caucus Tribune staff
Saturday, February 2, 2008

We have a dream.

In it, a new, young president inspires all Americans to rise above partisan politics, gender, race, religion, region, money, ideology and economic philosophy to make this nation all that it can be.

That young president of vision and promise is the charismatic Barack Obama, the first-term Democratic Illinois senator whose presidential campaign has caught fire. We add fuel to his blaze by endorsing him in Tuesday's New Mexico caucus to be the Democratic nominee for president.

The Tribune believes Obama has reawakened the imagination, work ethic and hope of Americans coast to coast and across the political spectrum — particularly among the nation's youngest voters who finally seem engaged in their country and their future.

In this dream, he wins the nomination of his party, prevails in November and leads America back to the progressive promised land.

There, a united America walks its democratic talk.

There, its Constitution — in particular its Bill of Rights — once again reigns supreme.

There, Americans stand shoulder to shoulder against any and all foes, not as conservatives or liberals, Republicans or Democrats, not as men or women, black, white, Hispanic or American Indian, but as Americans.

It's not that Obama's resilient rival, New York Sen. Hillary Clinton, would not be a good president. She could be. Indeed, she has been tested and has dedicated virtually her entire adult life to American public service. But in the tumultuous life that is competitive politics, Obama offers true change — a different and unique vision with purpose, determination and outstretched hands.

From Iraq to health care, both candidates hold similar positions on major issues. But Obama has a far better chance of unifying the country by refusing to play the standard political game. Pick your metaphor, but he rises above ordinary politics, does an end run around the old guard and challenges every American to step up and make a difference.

In spite of his relative youth and inexperience — which have drawn barbs from Clinton and her husband, Bill, the former president — Obama's candidacy most recently gained impressive traction among all categories of voters — women, men, black, white, brown, rich, poor, red, blue.

Yet there also have been incredible endorsements from some of the most potent and legendary Democratic voices of our time, including the brother and daughter of President Kennedy.

Like John F. Kennedy, who asked his "fellow Americans" to come to the aid of their country, Obama makes it plain that each of us can do something to make America great — together. In doing so, we can achieve America's global destiny as the mother of all democracies.

It has been a very long time since America had the leadership of someone who could disarm us of our pessimism, remind us of our roots and heritage and insist that we can solve America's enormous problems together. Instead of an impassable American mountain, Obama sees a team of American mountaineers plodding toward the summit.

There, law rules, not men.

There, every citizen is equally free and accountable.

There, opportunity, ability and hard work determine our individual and collective dreams.

Not since the 1960s have we been so touched by someone who espouses the hopes and strengths of a nation.

Some will find a reason not to vote for Obama. He is too young, too inexperienced. Too liberal. Too conservative. Too black. Too white. Too soft. Too religious. Too secular. Too naive. Too full of himself.

But we see in him a vibrant American leader who understands that leadership begins first and foremost with the people and a respect for — not manipulation of — them.

Obama seeks to leapfrog Washington's harsh political rhetoric and gridlock for all the right reasons. While some might ask why him, why now, we ask: Why not?

We enthusiastically endorse the presidential aspirations of Obama as the candidate in the New Mexico Democratic caucus most capable and willing to lead this country by challenging each and every one of its citizens to do what needs doing — achieve the American dream, rooted in those famous words: life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Action Center

Obama Mobile

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama News on Saturday (2008-02-02 15:35)

I have some video from the great but cold and rainy pre-canvass rally here in Sacramento that I'll upload after getting more footage from the John Kerry rally here this afternoon.

Here is a great panoramic shot of the rally in Boise, Idaho today that attracted a staggering 15,000 people. Click on the image for full resolution.

Video from the Boise rally

[EMBED]

Minnesota rally

Check out this new independent video of the song "Yes, We Can," featuring artists like Scarlett Johansson, Tatyana Ali, John Legend, Herbie Hancock, Kate Walsh, Kareem Abdul Jabbar, Adam Rodriguez, Kelly Hu, Adam Rodriguez, Amber Valetta and Nick Cannon.

The song was written by will.i.am of the Black-Eyed Peas.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Sacramento Rallies for Barack Obama (2008-02-03 07:52)

In Sacramento, California, on Feb. 2, 2008, we had a morning rally and canvass followed by an evening rally with Sen. John Kerry at California State University.

Despite the cold, rain and wind at the rally, people were fired up and ready to go turn out the vote on Tuesday, Feb. 5.

[EMBED]

Action Center

Obama Mobile

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama Rallies on Sunday and Monday (2008-02-03 09:29)

Feb 3 GOTV Rally with Michelle Obama, Oprah Winfrey, and Caroline Kennedy

in Los Angeles, CA

Feb 3 Stand for Change Rally with Barack Obama

in Wilmington, DE

Feb 4 Stand for Change Rally with Michelle Obama

in Salt Lake City, UT

Feb 4 Stand for Change Rally with Barack Obama

in Boston, MA

Feb 4 Stand for Change Rally with Barack Obama

in East Rutherford, NJ

Feb 4 Stand for Change Rally with Barack Obama

in Boston, MA

Action Center
Obama Mobile

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

The Last 72 Hours... (2008-02-03 09:35)

..until the polls close on Tuesday.

Political analysts, for example, have long realized the importance of late deciders, launching all- out GOTV (get-out-the-vote) drives in the last 72 hours before the election.

– Robert E. Denton, The 1996 Presidential Campaign: A Communication Perspective , 1998.

Over the last two decades, campaigns have spent enormous amounts of the campaign budget on get out the vote (GOTV) drives in the last 72 hours before the election. That strategy emerged from polls indicating that a large percentage of people decide who to vote for close to the time of the election.

– Alan B. Albarran and David H. Goff, Understanding the Web: Social, Political and Economic Dimensions of the Internet , 2000.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

The Star Ledger (NJ) endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-03 10:55)

X

"The inspired choice"

Sunday, February 03, 2008

After eight years of a flat-footed administration that booted just about every foreign and domestic issue, the nation needs a sure-footed president who can repair the considerable damage wreaked at home and abroad. America – and the world – are thirsting for someone who can be a true leader.

We firmly believe this is a moment in the nation's history unlike any other, one that requires a president who is not just competent but who can inspire. That is why we endorse Barack Obama for the Democratic nomination for president.

We say that while acknowledging the exemplary qualities of Hillary Clinton, who has clearly demonstrated her mastery of policy details during her seven years in the U.S. Senate. Nor do we quibble with her stands on the issues, which to a great extent mirror Obama's.

Both favor a withdrawal of American forces from Iraq. Clinton, who has had a tough time explaining her initial vote in favor of the war, promises to begin bringing troops home within 60 days and hopes to have all troops out within a year.

Obama, who opposed the war from the beginning, says he wants just about all American servicemen and women out of Iraq within 16 months. Both say they'd make sure such a withdrawal did not endanger our embassy people or the thousands of Iraqis who have helped us during the war.

Both talk tough about Iran, not ruling out military action but allowing for direct diplomacy. On the economy, both would repeal the Bush tax cuts and both would extend help to those caught in the mortgage crisis. Clinton leans toward more government meddling with financial markets, while Obama favors a lighter government touch on the markets.

On health care, their differences are more pronounced. Clinton would require coverage, while Obama would do so for children but concentrate more on attacking what's wrong with the health care delivery system so coverage becomes more affordable.

To parse their policy differences is to smack into the mountain while stumbling over molehills. Democratic voters face a decision between a more known commodity, a careful pragmatist, and a less seasoned politician who has sounded a call to change unlike any heard in decades, one that has the ability to echo among young and old, black and white.

A Clinton presidency would not be a disaster. Far from it. But it would be a lot more of what we've had in the past.

An Obama presidency has the potential of restoring the world's faith in America. Some say faith is the problem, that voting for Obama requires a leap of faith that he indeed can deliver. We believe a vote for Obama is an affirmation of one's faith in an America that brings out the best in all of its people.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Endorse-O-Thon (2008-02-03 13:17)

There's a new group on Facebook called Endorse-O-Thon, that encourages MoveOn.org to endorse Barack Obama and let their people know about their choice.

The opinions of trusted friends and family are more persuasive to most voters than anything else. Millions of Americans who will vote this Tuesday in 22 states are still undecided or uncommitted—and you know some of them!

That's why we're launching a personal Endorse-O-Thon for Barack Obama. If you support Obama, can you send a short personal note to some of your friends and family explaining why? Click the link below to tell us how many people you'll email, to see some sample letters, to see how many others are doing it:

http://pol.moveon.org/endo

rse-o-thon/?rc=fb.iendorse

Our NEW goal is 75,000 person-to-person endorsements by Monday, Feb. 4th—if you email or send Facebook messages to 10 people, that brings us 10 notches closer to the goal.

If ever there were a time to tell your friends and family what you think about the presidential race, it's now, days before half the country votes!

Of course, you don't have to be a MoveOn.org member to pass the word on.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-02-03 14:50:00)

What do you think about the Hillary joke on Mahatma Gandhi running a gas station and then underscoring Martin Luther King Jr accomplishment who ran on Gandhi's principle and instead endorsing LBJ for civil right's.

First Lady Maria Shriver to Endorse Barack Obama (2008-02-03 16:01)

Maria Shriver to endorse Obama

Posted: 05:29 PM ET

LOS ANGELES (CNN) — Maria Shriver will endorse Democrat Barack Obama's White House bid today at a Los Angeles rally.

The California First Lady will make a surprise appearance on-stage at the Sunday event, backed by the candidate's wife Michelle Obama, talk show host Oprah Winfrey and Shriver's cousin Caroline Kennedy. Shriver is married to California's Republican Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, who endorsed GOP presidential hopeful John McCain earlier this week.

The former NBC journalist had said in the past she was drawn to Obama's message. Shriver is the niece of Sen. Ted Kennedy, and has been close to Oprah Winfrey since both got their starts in local TV in Baltimore. Both Winfrey and the Massachusetts senator have actively campaigned for Obama.

California's vote is this Tuesday, February 5. Most recent polls show Barack Obama and New York Sen. Hillary Clinton locked in a tight race in the Democratic primary in this delegate-rich state.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Alex, VA (2008-02-03 19:11:00)

Just yesterday I noted that people had very limited information on Sen. Barack Obama as we go into millions of people voting on the two candidates.

And then in the last two days we see three stories that illustrate the point very clearly about what Sen. Obama says about his views and record and what journalists find when they dig into the facts:

- 1) The New York Times on its front page explains how Sen. Barack Obama told voters he stood up to the nuclear power industry and how he passed a bill to require reports of any radioactive leaks after hearing from his constituents. But The Times discovers, after a lengthy examination, that the bill was watered down after meeting with Exelon, the company whose plants created the issue and whose key executives are big contributors and bundlers to his campaign. Answering written questions for the NY Times, the campaign, in the words of the paper, never "directly" explains why Sen. Obama would tell voters he passed a bill that in fact was not passed and did not become law.
- 2) The Chicago Tribune features a similar story on a different topic. While Sen. Obama on the stump tells people about the plight of Maytag workers who lost their jobs, ("Obama's fundraising collides with his rhetoric") the Tribune documents that the union covering those workers believes they got no help from the Senator, who was again taking significant contributions and bundling from one of the company's directors and biggest investors.

3) And yesterday there was an AP story where Senator Obama told the voters of Idaho: "And then there are people who say, 'Well, he doesn't believe in the Second Amendment,' even though I come from a state – we've got a lot of hunters in downstate Illinois. And I have no intention of taking away folks' guns." But he didn't disclose to those voters, as the AP said that "he does support gun control and has a record of voting for it in the Illinois Senate. He backed limiting handgun purchases to one a month, but he made no attempts to ban them." When he originally ran for the state legislature 12 years ago, he filled out a questionnaire saying he "supported banning the manufacture, sale and possession of handguns." He gave the voters of Idaho no indication whatsoever of either his record in the State Senate or his prior views on the questionnaire.

Video: Maria Shriver endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-03 17:15)

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Oprah Winfrey at LA Rally (2008-02-03 20:13)

Oprah voices her support for Barack Obama at today's rally in Los Angeles.

[EMBED]

Action Center

Obama Mobile

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Super Bowl Ad (2008-02-03 20:39)

Things are heating up here in California with two days left until the election. Today, Hillary Clinton's campaign called twice, one human caller in the morning and a robo-call in the evening. It was a little late since we've all voted by mail about a week ago.

The Obama campaign aired a television ad during the Super Bowl. Check out below.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

The Oregonian endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-03 22:23)

The Oregonian has endorsed Barack Obama as Democratic nominee.

Einstein said time is nature's way of keeping everything from happening at once. It's clear now why he never claimed much expertise in presidential politics.

Some of us hoped that the emergence of the first woman and the emergence of the first African American as leading candidates for president would come at slightly different times.

Maybe in a more just universe.

In ours, though, Democratic voters facing the crucial Super Tuesday primaries this week must choose between the greater of two goods, which isn't the way it usually happens. A system that all too often seems to produce mediocre candidates and visionless campaigns ground out a diamond this time.

There are few, if any, limits to what a candidate will do to woo the electorate, of course, and the night is still young; but the debates in both parties have been substantive. Even if you count the brief distraction offered by a certain former president, this election year has been light on the made-up service records, swift boaters and other subterranean smear mongers. It's too much to hope that they'll stay in their mothers' basements for the duration, but so far, so good.

This is the week when the primary campaigns shed the dominance of local quirks, customs and weather and switch to mass-market politics. Considering that Oregon's primary is nearly four months away, this seemed the best time to declare our own preferences.

THE DEMOCRATS: OBAMA

Hillary Clinton's campaign benefits by formulating the race with Barack Obama as a contest between similar candidates who differ in experience.

If this were a normal year and Barack Obama were a normal candidate, that might be true. But millions of Americans have responded to the broad themes of Obama's campaign. They hunger for real political change, and they see Obama as the candidate who can deliver it. With that ability to get people to listen to his message, Obama can be a transformational president.

On the issues, Obama and Clinton are hard to distinguish from each other. Obama opposed the Iraq war from the beginning, for example, and Clinton came to that view over time. As president, though, each would put the United States in pretty much the same place. Health care? Clinton understands the issue deeply and would push a promising agenda. But Obama's plan resembles Clinton's – and in the contentious arena where this will be decided, nobody's plan will come out the way it went in.

In the nonissue part of the campaign, we happen to think that Sen. Clinton gets a great deal of undeserved criticism over the fact that she stood by her husband during his self-inflicted travails. Being a faithful spouse is a virtue. So is forgiveness. Clinton is living proof that sex discrimination and misogyny are alive and well in America, and she has been confronted daily by both, as are most women. These are not arguments for her candidacy, but they should not be arguments against it, either.

As for Obama, the case for his candidacy seems to grow stronger every day. It seems to us that his approach to politics and, especially, leadership offers the cleanest and clearest break from the direction that the Bush presidency took the United States.

Obama's political gift is often described as charisma, but there is a better word for it: authenticity. Americans yearn for it in their leaders and rarely find it. Obama has it, and because of that, he displays the potential to restore Americans' faith in their own national ideals and perhaps even renew the belief that service to one's fellow citizens is a high calling, not a reward for political support.

The mere election of Obama would advance the crumbling credibility of and restore international respect for the United States in the wider world, where symbolism is a potent force.

Obama has not yet been tempered in the fires of world conflict or tested in the snares and traps of Washington insider politics. But as any number of former presidents tell us: Everyone's an amateur when they first set foot in the Oval Office.

What we see in Obama is strength and personal integrity to overcome these obstacles and others. What we see in him is not just the ability to lead a government, but the ability to lead a nation.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Joan Baez Endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-04 06:44)

60s icon Joan Baez endorsed Barack Obama yesterday in the San Francisco Chronicle.

The 60s movement brought about a revolution in civil, women's, gay, environmental and other rights. Without that movement, there would still be segregation in the South and back alley abortions, and no Miranda rights, no EPA, no Clean Air/Water Act.

Barack Obama is starting a new movement to take back the government for the people from corporations and lobbyists. An empowered people can achieve universal health care, they can end the war in Iraq, and they can make the government express the will of the people. Let's make tis happen by getting out the vote for Barack on Feb. 5 and beyond.

Editor - I have attempted throughout my life to give a voice to the voiceless, hope to the hopeless, encouragement to the discouraged, and options to the cynical and complacent. From Northern Ireland to Sarajevo to Latin America, I have sung and marched, engaged in civil disobedience, visited war zones, and broken bread with those who had little bread to break.

Through all those years, I chose not to engage in party politics. Though I was asked many times to endorse candidates at every level, I was never comfortable doing so. At this time, however, changing that posture feels like the responsible thing to do. If anyone can navigate the contaminated waters of Washington, lift up the poor, and appeal to the rich to share their wealth, it is Sen. Barack Obama. If anyone can bring light to the darkened corners of this nation and restore our positive influence in world affairs, it is Barack Obama. If anyone can begin the process of healing and bring unity to a country that has been divided for too long, it is Barack Obama. It is time to begin a new journey.

JOAN BAEZ

Menlo Park

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Tufts Daily Endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-04 07:21)

The Tufts Daily, the campus newspaper of Tufts University, endorsed Barack Obama today.

Obama would unify a divided country

As the presidential election of 2008 draws near, we are standing at an extraordinary moment in American history. In the Democratic primary, the party will make history no matter which candidate represents it in the fall.

As voters, we may choose a divisive but battle-tested senator who will continue the 50-percent-plus-one political strategy and make hard-won incrementalism the political norm. Or we can select a transformative leader who stands for bold political realignment - a man who is respected by people of all political stripes even if they do not agree with all of his views.

Given this fundamental choice, the Daily offers its endorsement of Senator Barack Obama for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Our decision reflects our own basic understanding of American governance and the vision that we have for the American presidency.

Senator Hillary Clinton has made much of her experience in public service. As First Lady, she crafted America's first universal healthcare proposal and, as she says, "I have the scars to prove it." She has served in the Senate for seven years and has been a hard worker and a conscientious legislator. Certainly, experience is important - but the type of experience is even more significant.

As the son of an absent black farmer from Kenya and a white mother from Kansas, Obama was forced to struggle with his own identity. He saw the affluent corridors of Harvard Law School (where he excelled as the first black editor of the prestigious Law Review) and the poverty-stricken South Side of Chicago, where he went to work in community organizing and made thousands of people believe that their voices would be heard again. He taught constitutional law at the University of Chicago and reached across the political aisle in the Illinois State Senate to craft meaningful legislation.

In October 2002, Senator Clinton, who had all the intelligence reports at her disposal, voted to give the president the authority to go to war. She, along with 28 other Democrats and 48 Republicans, either exercised her best judgment or fell victim to the call of political expediency.

In Illinois, however, then-State Senator Obama eloquently and intelligently made the case against war. Experience is important, but when the advisors and cabinet members have left the room and the president stands alone in the Oval Office, it will be his judgment that we must believe in most.

From the Law Review to the Illinois Senate to the streets of this nation, Obama has been unyielding in his belief that Americans can come together to create a better nation - that they should not feel powerless in the face of the federal government. He has been honest about his strengths and his weaknesses in a way that those of us who remember Bill Clinton's equivocations about marijuana and George W. Bush's obfuscations concerning cocaine never believed we would hear from an elected official.

We have great respect for the senator from New York - she has been a pragmatic and thoughtful voice in the U.S. Senate - but the real difficulty in politics is finding the right leader for the moment. Franklin Delano Roosevelt was a great president because he had the strength to face down the Great Depression and to unite the country in war and in peace. Abraham Lincoln, despite his lack of a national résumé, provided bold and courageous leadership during the most powerful schism in American history. John F. Kennedy was brought to the forefront as the world stood on the brink of nuclear war, and the young president pulled us back from the edge and strengthened our resolve to be the kind of nation for which our founding fathers fought.

A leader can only be truly great if he or she understands the exceptionality of the moment. We need a president who can heal this nation and bring us together after the backbiting and severe polarization of the last twenty years. The American people are tired of pessimism, tired of lies and equivocations, tired, as Obama said in 2004, of the pundits who like to slice and dice our country into red states and blue states - and tired of being angry.

Obama's presidency will not be perfect, and it would be foolish to expect the realization of a true Camelot on the Potomac. There will be difficult times in the years ahead.

But we believe that Barack Obama is the person most able to unite the country not just against a common enemy, but in the service of a common purpose. That is why we offer Obama our enthusiastic endorsement for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

LA Rally (Full video) (2008-02-04 23:12)

Check out the full video of the LA rally.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Our Moment is Now (2008-02-04 23:17)

Action Center
Obama Mobile

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Find Your Polling Place! (2008-02-05 06:24)

From barackobama.com:

Find Your Polling Place!

by Sam Graham-Felsen, Monday, February 04, 2008 at 09:00 PM

✖ Today, polling places are opening in 15 states across the country, while residents of 7 additional states will gather tomorrow evening to caucus.

In order to help, we've put together Caucus Look-Up tolls for all the caucus states, as well as information on polling places for all primary states.

Find your polling place – then invite your friends and family to look up their polling places and vote for Barack this Tuesday, February 5th!

Alabama (polls open from 7:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m.)

Alaska (arrive at 5:30 p.m. - doors close at 6:00 p.m.)

Arizona (polls open from 6:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m.)

Arkansas (polls open from 7:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m.)

California (polls open from 7:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m.)

Colorado (arrive at 6:30 p.m. - doors close at 7:00 p.m.)

Connecticut (polls open from 6:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m.)

Delaware (polls open from 7:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m.)

Georgia (polls open from 7:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m.)

Idaho (arrive at 6:00 p.m. - doors close at 7:00 p.m.)

Illinois (polls open from 6:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m.)

Kansas (arrive at 6:00 p.m. - doors close at 7:00 p.m.)

Massachusetts (polls open from 7:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m.)

Minnesota (cast your vote between 6:30 p.m. and 7:59 p.m.)

Missouri (polls open from 6:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m.)

New Jersey (polls open from 6:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m.)

New Mexico (caucus sites open from 12:00 p.m. until 7:00 p.m.)

New York (polls open from 6:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m.)

North Dakota (caucus sites are open from 2:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m.)

Oklahoma (polls open from 7:00 a.m. until 7:00 p.m.)

Tennessee (polls open from 8:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m.)

Utah (polls open from 7:00 a.m. until 8:00 p.m.)

Find Your Polling Place! (2008-02-05 06:24)

From barackobama.com:

Find Your Polling Place!

by Sam Graham-Felsen,

Monday, February 04, 2008 at 09:00 PM

✕ Today, polling places are opening in 15 states across the country, while residents of 7 additional states will gather tomorrow evening to caucus.

In order to help, we've put together Caucus Look-Up tolls for all the caucus states, as well as information on polling places for all primary states.

Find your polling place – then invite your friends and family to look up their polling places and vote for Barack this Tuesday, February 5th!

Alabama (polls open from 7:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m.)

Alaska (arrive at 5:30 p.m. - doors close at 6:00 p.m.)

Arizona (polls open from 6:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m.)

Arkansas (polls open from 7:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m.)

California (polls open from 7:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m.)

Colorado (arrive at 6:30 p.m. - doors close at 7:00 p.m.)

Connecticut (polls open from 6:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m.)

Delaware (polls open from 7:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m.)

Georgia (polls open from 7:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m.)

Idaho (arrive at 6:00 p.m. - doors close at 7:00 p.m.)

Illinois (polls open from 6:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m.)

Kansas (arrive at 6:00 p.m. - doors close at 7:00 p.m.)

Massachusetts (polls open from 7:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m.)

Minnesota (cast your vote between 6:30 p.m. and 7:59 p.m.)

Missouri (polls open from 6:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m.)

New Jersey (polls open from 6:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m.)

New Mexico (caucus sites open from 12:00 p.m. until 7:00 p.m.)

New York (polls open from 6:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m.)

North Dakota (caucus sites are open from 2:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m.)

Oklahoma (polls open from 7:00 a.m. until 7:00 p.m.)

Tennessee (polls open from 8:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m.)

Utah (polls open from 7:00 a.m. until 8:00 p.m.)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Gary (2008-02-05 14:05:00)

Before voting guys, I found this beautiful tribute to Barack and everything American. I believe the song was professionally written and recorded. Check it out. http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=pC8cAyOAr_Y

Anonymous (2008-02-05 16:36:00)

I am a UTSA students, and the main website is running an opinion poll that has been bombed by Clinton and McCain supporters, so I thought I would pass it on. The link ... <http://www.utsa.edu/today/index.cfm>

Plouffe: Obama wins by gaining more states and more delegates (2008-02-06 07:24)

Here is the note released by Obama campaign manager David Plouffe as posted by Sam Graham-Felsen on the official blog:

Plouffe: Obama wins Super Tuesday by winning more states and more delegates

by Sam Graham-Felsen

Wednesday, February 06, 2008 at 04:26 AM

Campaign Manager David Plouffe...

By winning a majority of delegates and a majority of the states, Barack Obama won an important Super Tuesday victory over Senator Clinton in the closest thing we have to a national primary. From Colorado and Utah in the west to Georgia and Alabama in the south to Senator Clinton's backyard in Connecticut, Obama showed that he can win the support of Americans of every race, gender, and political party in every region of the country. That's why he's on track to win Democratic nomination, and that's why he's the best candidate to defeat John McCain in November.

The next contests are right around the corner on Feb. 9, this Saturday, and I should say very cautiously that Barack Obama appears strong overall in the states and territory involved: Washington (97 delegates), Louisiana (67 delegates), Nebraska (31 delegates) and the Virgin Islands (9 delegates).

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-02-06 08:33:00)

obama is all hype i hope he doesnt win and people voting for him dont by into the hype of change because everyone wants change and i dont believe he can get things done and if any of you believe that being able to speak well translates into getting things done then all of you obama supporters now will regret it 4 year later when nothing gets done and we are in worse shape then we are now but have a great speaker that people like.

Anonymous (2008-02-07 18:22:00)

Obama may have won more states but he didn't win more delegates, not if you ask the DNC and Clinton has more superdelegates. If Obama thinks that the people that voted for him will not vote for Clinton he needs to think again because they will. I know atleast 100 people that will not vote for him if he is the nominee, and you can check the blogs the ones that voted for Clinton said that if Obama gets the nominee they will not vote or vote republican.

(2008-02-06 07:24)

Here is the note released by Obama campaign manager David Plouffe as posted by Sam Graham-Felsen on the official blog:

Plouffe: Obama wins Super Tuesday by winning more states and more delegates
by Sam Graham-Felsen Wednesday, February 06, 2008 at 04:26 AM Campaign Manager David Plouffe...

By winning a majority of delegates and a majority of the states, Barack Obama won an important Super Tuesday victory over Senator Clinton in the closest thing we have to a national primary. From Colorado and Utah in the west to Georgia and Alabama in the south to Senator Clinton's backyard in Connecticut, Obama showed that he can win the support of Americans of every race, gender, and political party in every region of the country. That's why he's on track to win Democratic nomination, and that's why he's the best candidate to defeat John McCain in November.

The next contests are right aroundn the corner on Feb. 9, this Saturday, and I should say very cautiously that Barack Obama appears strong in the states involved: Washington, Nebraska

More on upcoming contests (2008-02-06 07:32)

The month of February will be packed with election days leading up to a big showdown on March 4 that could potentially decide the nomination.

Here are the contests after Feb. 9, when four states will vote:

Feb 10 Maine (D) 34 delegates at stake

Feb 12 District of Columbia 37 delegates at stake

Feb 12 Maryland 99 delegates at stake

Feb 12 Virginia 103 delegates at stake

Feb 19 Hawaii (D) 29 delegates at stake

Feb 19 Wisconsin 92 delegates at stake

Mar 4 Ohio 161 delegates at stake

Mar 4 Rhode Island 32 delegates at stake

Mar 4 Texas 228 delegates at stake

Mar 4 Vermont 23 delegates at stake

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

jennifer (2008-02-09 23:20:00)

After the Chesapeake Democratic primaries, Obama's campaign should move to Texas and give away some of the $7 million dollars to buy off the Clinton supporters because he NEEDS Texas if he is going to move on to the general election.

More on upcoming contests (2008-02-06 07:32)

The month of February will be packed with primaries and caucuses leading up to a big showdown on March 4 that could really decide the nomination.

Here are the contests after Feb. 9, when four states will vote:

Feb 10 Maine (D) 34 delegates at stake

Feb 12 District of Columbia 37 delegates at stake

Feb 12 Maryland 99 delegates at stake

Feb 12 Virginia 103 delegates at stake

Feb 19 Hawaii (D) 29 delegates at stake

Feb 19 Wisconsin 92 delegates at stake

Mar 4 Ohio 161 delegates at stake

Mar 4 Rhode Island 32 delegates at stake

Mar 4 Texas 228 delegates at stake

Mar 4 Vermont

(2008-02-06 08:08)

President Democratic - District 1 100. % (790 of 790) precincts reporting as of Feb 6, 2008, at 6:54 a.m.

County Returns Other Contests

Districtwide Results

Previous District Select District Next District

Candidate Votes Percent

Joe Biden (Dem) 386 0.3 % ✕ ✕

Dennis Kucinich (Dem) 1,103 1.2 % ✕ ✕

Barack Obama (Dem) 45,599 46.1 % ✕ ✕

Bill Richardson (Dem) 478 0.4 % ✕ ✕
Hillary Clinton (Dem) 45,149 45.7 % ✕ ✕
Chris Dodd (Dem) 97 0.0 % ✕ ✕
John Edwards (Dem) 5,959 6.1 % ✕ ✕
Mike Gravel (Dem) 214 0.2 % ✕ ✕

Washington SEIU endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-06 15:58)

From the Seattle Times:

OLYMPIA — Sen. Barack Obama's campaign announced today it has been endorsed by the state's largest labor group — the Service Employee's International Union (SEIU).

The endorsement could be a big boost for Obama as he heads into the Democratic Party's precinct caucuses on Saturday.

Congressman Adam Smith of Tacoma, Obama's state chairman, announced the endorsement this afternoon in a conference call with reporters.

"Nobody makes a bigger difference in campaigns in this state than SEIU," Smith said.

The union, which has about 100,000 members statewide, had previously endorsed former Sen. John Edwards. But after a dismal showing in the early contests, Edwards dropped out of the race last week.

Leaders from the SEIU's five major locals in Washington met Tuesday to decide whether to throw its support to Obama or his Democratic rival, Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton.

"It ended up being a unanimous decision by all of our locals," said Adam Glickman, spokesman for SEIU Local 775. "Obviously, there are two very strong candidates, both of whom are vast improvements over the current office holder."

Glickman said the union would be making tens of thousands of calls to its members over the next three days to urge support for Obama. He said the calls also are intended to make sure members understand that — in order to have a say in choosing Democratic delegates — they have to participate in the caucuses.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

(2008-02-06 20:50)

"Almost two years ago, I endorsed John Edwards Business-Should-Not-Fear-Edwards Jan-08 , before any Democratic candidates declared their candidacy." said Congresswoman Johnson. "I remained loyal to that commitment until he left the race."

It seems the Texas Democrat was swayed by the enthusiasm Senator Obama has brought to the race. "Senator Obama's campaign has generated interest in young Americans who have never before been involved in politics," she said. "American needs these young people not only for their vote in this election, but for their continued participation in the future of our country."

Sacramento comes through for Barack Obama (2008-02-06 21:36)

I remember when Sacramento for Obama started in February of 2007 shortly after Barack Obama announced his candidacy.

They've been going strong ever since, and yesterday despite the loss in California, Sacramento came through for Sen. Obama.

In Sacramento County, with all precincts reporting, Barack Obama took 48 % of the vote compared to Hillary Clinton's 46.3 %.

The city of Sacramento, the state capital, falls with Doris Matsui's 5th Congressional District, and although the Congresswoman endorsed Hillary, Obama won the 5th with 50.1 % compared to Clinton's 44.9 %.

The 5th was one of only four congressional districts that gave extra delegates to Sen. Obama the other's being Rep. Barbara Lee's 9th CD in Oakland, the 33rd CD in Culver City (Metro LA) and the 35th CD in Inglewood.

Also, neighboring Yolo County where we cooperated especially with University of California, Davis students saw an Obama victory at 48.2 % to 45.9 %.

Good job, Sacramento!

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Anonymous (2008-02-08 20:52:00)

if Obama gets the nominee I and 100 More are either not going to vote or vote republican

Washington Governor Chris Gregoire endorses Obama (2008-02-08 10:24)

Breaking: Washington Governor Chris Gregoire endorses Obama

by Sam Graham-Felsen

Friday, February 08, 2008 at 08:16 AM

Breaking from the AP...

OLYMPIA, Wash. – Washington Gov. Chris Gregoire endorsed Barack Obama for president Friday, providing a last-minute lift to the Illinois senator on the eve of the state's hotly contested Democratic caucuses.

Gregoire, announcing her choice in an interview with The Associated Press, said that taking sides in the close contest for the Democratic nomination was tough, given her great admiration for Sen. Hillary Clinton.

But she said Obama is a charismatic and skilled leader who can bring the country together, help solve nagging problems, and restore the country's image abroad.

Gregoire planned to join Obama in a major campaign rally at Seattle's KeyArena on Friday....

Gregoire was the state's first female attorney general and is only the second woman governor in Washington since statehood. Washington is the only state with a female governor and both U.S. senators.

But Obama is quite popular in the Democratic strongholds of Seattle and other urban areas, and the Obama endorsement could help centrist Gregoire there.

"Lots of people said, 'Just stay out of it,'" said Gregoire, who faces a potentially tough re-election campaign of her own this fall.

"But all of my friends are going to caucus on Saturday and will be asked to make up their mind, so why shouldn't I? It was time for me to make up my mind."

Fellow Govs. Janet Napolitano of Arizona and Kathleen Sebelius of Kansas also have endorsed Obama.

...

"I gave it a lot of thought and it was a very difficult decision because I think Democrats and the nation are very blessed to have two outstanding candidates, both of whom would make a great president.

"Back when I was 18 years old, if anyone had told me in my lifetime we would have a choice between the first woman president and the first African American, I would have laughed out loud," she said. "They are both breaking the glass ceiling if you will."

Gregoire said Obama brings hope and inspiration to young and old alike.

"He is leading us toward a positive feeling of hope in our country and I love seeing that happen," she said. "I believe the nation faces significant challenges domestically and internationally and Obama is the person who has the ability to reach across artificial divides and move our national forward. Barack is that kind of leader."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-02-08 10:45:00)

I wouldn't vote for that

"Moon Cricket" if the BOMB were to be dropped on my home.....

Can you even fathom what damage that guy can do in 4 years.....

The guy in office did enough to screw us all now all you boneheads want to vote for the same religion that wants to wipe us out.

Time for a dictator.....

Anonymous (2008-02-08 17:53:00)

Why doesnt he vote on key issues?

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=ywhZFjb_Inq

Anonymous (2008-02-09 22:40:00)

I've voted democrat ever since I could vote, But if Obama wins the democratic nomination I will be voting republican be it McCain or Huckabee. Obama has his own private agenda I feel. Many of my neighbors feel the same as I do and have mentioned they will vote republican as well. Come election time many of us who voted for Hillary will be switching sides. Obama wins the democratic nomination our next president will be REPUBLICAN !

Barack Obama sweeps Saturday contests (2008-02-10 09:23)

Haven't updated in the last few days because both my computer and myself were hit by viruses at the wrong time. Of course, most of you already know that Barack Obama won handily in Saturday's election in Louisiana, Nebraska, Washington and the U.S. Virgin Islands.

Today, there is a contest in Maine, and then two days from Chesapeake Tuesday when Maryland, Virginia and Washington DC will choose their nominee.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

NBC projects an Obama victory in Maine (2008-02-10 17:43)

NBC has called the race in Maine for Barack Obama giving him five straight victories.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Feb 12: Maryland, Virginia, and D.C. Voting Info (2008-02-11 13:51)

From barackobama.com :

Feb 12: Maryland, Virginia, and D.C. Voting Info

by Christopher Hass

Monday, February 11, 2008 at 11:23 AM

On Tuesday, voters in Maryland, Virginia, and the District of Columbia will have their chance to go to the polls and vote for change. If you are a resident of any of these three states, you can use the links below to find out when, where and how to vote for Barack Obama:

District of Columbia

- Polls open from 7:00 AM to 8:00 PM
- Open to all registered Democrats
- Find your polling location
- Answers to Frequently Asked Questions about the D.C. Primary

Maryland

- Polls open from to 7:00 AM to 8:00 PM
- Open to all registered Democrats
- Find your polling location

- Answers to Frequently Asked Questions about the Maryland Primary

Virginia

- Polls open from 7:00 AM to 7:00 PM
- Open Primary - All registered Democrats, Republicans and Independents can participate
- Find your polling location
- Answers to Frequently Asked Questions about the Virginia Primary

Barack Obama during a rally in Virginia.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

San Antonio Rep. Charlie Gonzalez endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-11 16:56)

Texas Rep. Charlie Gonzalez has endorsed Barack Obama today.

Congressman Gonzalez endorses Sen. Obama by Gary Martin, S.A. Express-News

WASHINGTON – Illinois Sen. Barack Obama picked up a key endorsement Monday from Rep. Charlie Gonzalez, D-San Antonio, who said he backs the Illinois senator for the Democratic nomination for president. "Senator Obama brings all these new fresh faces," Gonzalez told the San Antonio Express-News. "He has a wider audience. He has the greater potential to engage a greater number of people."

The endorsement by Gonzalez comes one day after Sen. Hillary Clinton, D-N.Y., announced a presidential campaign swing through South Texas that will include San Antonio , Corpus Christi and McAllen. Both campaigns are ramping up their efforts in Texas in advance of the March 4 primary. There are 228 Democratic delegates at stake in Texas .

Hispanics are expected to make up roughly 25 percent of the Democratic primary vote in Texas , prompting Clinton and Obama to establish campaign offices in San Antonio, El Paso and the Rio Grande Valley. Clinton has received the endorsement of former San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros, who served as housing secretary under President Bill Clinton. Others endorsing Sen. Clinton include Rep. Solomon Ortiz, D-Corpus Christi, and Rep. Ruben Hinojosa, D-Mercedes.

Gonzalez, who is a Super Delegate to the Democratic convention – one of roughly 800 officeholders and party leaders with a vote in the nominating process – had endorsed John Edwards, the 2004 Democratic vice presidential nominee, until he dropped out of the presidential race.

Since then, Gonzalez said he has received a flurry of telephone calls from Clinton and Obama supporters. "I truly believe that Senator Hillary Clinton or Senator Barack Obama will prevail in November," Gonzalez said in a telephone interview. "I just want to insure that we have our strongest candidate, which is Obama."

Gonzalez said both Democratic candidates share similar positions on health care and regaining the moral high ground in the war on terror. He said Obama, though, has more appeal with independent voters, an important bloc in November.

"He's got a greater breadth of influence and appeal," Gonzalez said. "It gives us a tremendous advantage over the opposition."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-02-11 18:33:00)

This is a big deal, especially in Texas where the Latino vote will be so powerful. Go Obama!

<http://www.cafepress.com/obamanos>

Anonymous (2008-02-13 21:10:00)

Barack is threatening to shut down the space program.

He says he never supported the war. Well that is easy to do when you are not in the Senate. Yet he voted for every bill to support the war since he has been office.

His health care plan mimicks Hillary's. Did he cut and paste?

This guy is nothing but a smooth talker.

(2008-02-11 16:56)

by Gary Martin, S.A. Express-News

WASHINGTON – Illinois Sen. Barack Obama picked up a key endorsement Monday from Rep. Charlie Gonzalez, D-San Antonio, who said he backs the Illinois senator for the Democratic nomination for president. "Senator Obama brings all these new fresh faces," Gonzalez told the San Antonio Express-News. "He has a wider audience. He has the greater potential to engage a greater number of people."

The endorsement by Gonzalez comes one day after Sen. Hillary Clinton, D-N.Y., announced a presidential campaign swing through South Texas that will include San Antonio , Corpus Christi and McAllen.

Both campaigns are ramping up their efforts in Texas in advance of the March 4 primary. There are 228

Democratic delegates at stake in Texas .

Hispanics are expected to make up roughly 25 percent of the Democratic primary vote in Texas , prompting Clinton and Obama to establish campaign offices in San Antonio, El Paso and the Rio Grande Valley. Clinton has received the endorsement of former San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros, who served as housing secretary under President Bill Clinton. Others endorsing Sen. Clinton include Rep. Solomon Ortiz, D-Corpus Christi, and Rep. Ruben Hinojosa, D-Mercedes.

Gonzalez, who is a Super Delegate to the Democratic convention – one of roughly 800 officeholders and party leaders with a vote in the nominating process – had endorsed John Edwards, the 2004 Democratic vice presidential nominee, until he dropped out of the presidential race.

Since then, Gonzalez said he has received a flurry of telephone calls from Clinton and Obama supporters. "I truly believe that Senator Hillary Clinton or Senator Barack Obama will prevail in November," Gonzalez said in a telephone interview. "I just want to insure that we have our strongest candidate, which is Obama."

Gonzalez said both Democratic candidates share similar positions on health care and regaining the moral high ground in the war on terror. He said Obama, though, has more appeal with independent voters, an important bloc in November.

"He's got a greater breadth of influence and appeal," Gonzalez said. "It gives us a tremendous advantage over the opposition."

Barack with DC voters (2008-02-12 14:19)

Check out the YouTube video of Barack Obama talking with DC voters. Virginia, Maryland and DC are voting in primaries today.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Nate (2008-02-12 19:03:00)
Mayor Fenty is so awesome.

CNN: Barack Obama wins Virginia (2008-02-12 17:01)

CNN has just projected that Barack Obama will win the Virginia primary. The margins are important since none of the Democratic contests are winner-take-all.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Wisconsin rallies tomorrow (2008-02-14 12:47)

From barackobama.com :

Wisconsin rallies tomorrow

by Sam Graham-Felsen

Thursday, February 14, 2008 at 11:14 AM

Happy Valentines Day everyone... If you're in Wisconsin, there are three rallies tomorrow... Barack Obama in Green Bay, WI

Join Barack Obama for a special Stand for Change Rally in Green Bay, Wisconsin on Friday, February 15th.

Stand for Change Rally with Barack Obama

Kress Events Center

2420 Nicolet Drive

Green Bay, WI

Friday, February 15, 2008

Doors Open: 3:00 p.m.

Program Begins: 5:00 p.m.

The event is free and open to the public; however, space is limited, and tickets are required. Due to overwhelming demand tickets are no longer available online. Tickets are available at the locations listed below.

For security reasons, do not bring bags and please limit personal items. No signs or banners permitted.

Obama for America Green Bay Office

1148 East Main Street

Green Bay, WI

9 a.m. - 10 p.m.

319-541-9969

University of Wisconsin-Green Bay

Kress Center

2420 Nicolet Drive

Green Bay, WI 54311

9 a.m. - 12 p.m.

Barack Obama in Oshkosh, WI

Join Barack Obama for a special Stand for Change Rally in Oshkosh, Wisconsin on Friday, February 15th.

Stand for Change Rally with Barack Obama

Kolf Sports Center Fieldhouse

High Avenue on the UW-Oshkosh Campus

Oshkosh, WI

Friday, February 15, 2008

Doors Open: 12:00 p.m.

The event is free and open to the public. Tickets are not required, but an RSVP is strongly encouraged.

For security reasons, do not bring bags. No signs or banners permitted.

Barack Obama in Milwaukee, WI

Join Barack Obama for a special Stand for Change Rally in Milwaukee, Wisconsin on Friday, February 15th.

Stand for Change Rally with Barack Obama

Midwest Airlines Center
Exhibit Hall A
400 W. Wisconsin Avenue
Milwaukee, WI

Friday, February 15, 2008

Doors Open: 8:30 a.m.

Program Begins: 10:30 a.m.

The event is free and open to the public; however, space is limited, and tickets are required. Please bring a photo ID.

For security reasons, do not bring bags. Please limit personal items. No signs or banners are permitted.

Check out WI.BarackObama.com for more...

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

United Food and Commercial Workers endorse Barack Obama (2008-02-14 16:31)

MILWAUKEE, Wis. (AP) – Sen. Barack Obama has won the backing of the United Food and Commercial Workers, a politically active union with significant membership in the upcoming Democratic battlegrounds.

The 1.3-million member UFCW gives Obama an organizational boost in vital upcoming contests, with 69,000 members in the Buckeye state and another 26,000 in Texas. The two states have a large number of delegates and are where Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton hopes to stop Obama's winning streak on March 4.

The food workers also have 19,000 members in Wisconsin, which holds a primary Tuesday.

The union is made up of supermarket workers and meatpackers, with 40 percent of the membership under 30 years old. Obama has been doing especially well among young voters.

"Senator Obama's message of changing hope into reality has inspired our members, particularly our young members, across the country," Food Workers President Joe Hansen said in a statement in which he also lauded Clinton's tireless efforts on behalf of workers.

"While both Senators Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama have a vision to change America, we believe that Senator Obama is the best candidate to build a movement to unite our country that will deliver the type of change that is needed for good jobs, affordable health care, retirement security and worker safety," he said. He called Obama "the candidate of the American dream."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-02-15 13:40:00)

Obama - please remind voters that it was a Clinton who pushed for Free Trade & that is what started US jobs leaving this country.

Video: Barack Obama in Wisconsin (2008-02-15 18:16)

Barack Obama campaigns in Oshkosh and Milwaukee ahead of next Tuesday's contests in Hawai'i and Wisconsin.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

The Houston Chronicle endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-16 11:58)

The Houston Chronicle endorsed Barack Obama today for Democrats.

Feb. 16, 2008, 2:09AM

For Obama

The Chronicle endorses the senator from Illinois for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Copyright 2008 Houston Chronicle

The presidency of the United States is a powerful bully pulpit. The occupant of the White House must not only issue orders, but also inspire and advocate for all Americans.

Of the two finalists for the Democratic presidential nomination, the Chronicle believes Sen. Barack Obama of Illinois is best-qualified by life experience, skill and temperament to be the standard bearer for his party. In a conference call, Obama told the Chronicle editorial board that "more than any other candidate, I can bridge some of the partisan as well as racial and religious divides that have developed in this country that prevent us from getting things done."

Those who have viewed the numerous campaign debates know there's not much to separate Obama from his opponent, Sen. Hillary Clinton of New York. Either could ably represent the Democratic Party. Both candidates favor ending the war in Iraq by withdrawing combat troops and initiating regional negotiations to stabilize the country. Both would press for dramatic strides toward providing all Americans with health insurance.

Both support a cap and trade system to begin reducing America's carbon emissions that contribute to global warming. Each promises to initiate multibillion-dollar efforts to promote conversion of the economy to clean energy technologies. They favor securing our borders, initiating comprehensive immigration reform and creating a path to earned legal status for those already here who are working and contributing to their communities.

However, there is a decisive difference. Obama vows to reach out to independents and Republicans with a message of inclusion and cooperation. He offers a historic opportunity to elevate national political dialogue to a higher ground. Those who insist on vitriol and obstructionism would be marginalized.

On several issues vital to Houstonians, Obama's positions need elaboration. He recognizes the need to maintain U.S. pre-eminence in space but said he wanted to study the costs and benefits of human space exploration — an exercise that should convince him of the space program's long history of indispensable contributions.

Obama said he did not expect the leaders of the energy sector to vote for him. He needs to realize that the energy sector must be a large part of a cooperative effort to develop alternative fuels and avoid an energy crunch.

The 46-year-old Obama has expanded his base of support, winning new legions of supporters. The more people see and hear him, the more they like him. As the Hawaiian-born son of a Muslim Kenyan father and an Anglo Midwesterner, the devoutly Christian Obama transcends race and religion. His life has been one of involvement with disadvantaged Chicago residents, excellence at Harvard Law School and eight years as an Illinois state senator. He was elected to the U.S. Senate in 2004, only the third African-American to serve there since Reconstruction.

Obama is both the epitome of the American Dream and well-positioned to reach out to an international community alienated by recent U.S. go-it-alone policies.

The passion and excitement that Obama has brought to the race can only stimulate more citizens to participate in the electoral process. The Chronicle urges Texas Democrats to cast what could be decisive ballots for his presidential nomination.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-02-16 17:09:00)

I watched mrs obama give a very good speech online and i was blown away until i really got to thinking about it. she brings up that she wants to know what the candidates are doing when nobody was watching. well after careful study i see that the obamas attend a church that is 100 % committed to AFRICA. Not God or Country. Most have probably never been to Africa at his church.

Obama would tell us anything to win the nomination but he is not for all people and races or he would not have gone to a strictly african church for the last 20 years!

Travis Kiefer (2008-02-17 04:30:00)

Hello there! My name is Travis and I am a student at Stanford University. Because I believe Barack is the best candidate with the potential to revolutionize politics, I created a website - <http://www.digobama.com> - so people like you can submit your favorite articles, videos and podcasts about Barack and vote on them. This site is extremely new (created Monday, February 13th) and is already gaining momentum in spreading Barack's message. There are already 43 users, 99 articles, 329 votes, and over 500 unique visitors on Saturday! As the webmaster of a Barack Obama related website, I would like to invite you to become a member and then submit your stories. Thank you and Yes We Can make a difference!!!

The Honolulu Advertiser endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-17 09:33)

The Honolulu Advertiser endorsed Barack Obama today.

Democrats need Barack Obama's vision, leadership

Conventional wisdom suggests that once Democrats pick their nominee, it will be easy for the party to rally behind the winner against the presumptive GOP presidential candidate, John McCain. Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama, both strong candidates, aren't far apart on key national issues, and Democrats have eight years of deprivation uniting them in their zeal to reclaim the White House.

But while they might find the November decision easy, many of the party faithful are struggling over the more immediate choice: Which U.S. senator should become the Democratic standard-bearer?

For tomorrow's party caucus, when Hawai'i Democrats have a rare chance to influence the final outcome of the primary-election campaign, The Honolulu Advertiser endorses Barack Obama, recognizing his ideas and policies as being most closely aligned with the needs of the country.

Many others who've made that selection argue that the junior U.S. senator from Illinois stands a better chance of beating the more seasoned McCain. That's because Clinton, rightly or wrongly, accrued many detractors during her years as first lady — critics may feel comfortable enough with the socially moderate McCain to vote with the GOP.

But that's just a tactical analysis. It misses the more substantive points of Obama's very real credentials and, in particular, the power of his presidential platform.

- Foreign policy: Obama argues forcefully that the U.S. must move decisively "to lead the world by deed and by example." Specifically, Obama has grasped the reality that the Iraq war must be brought to a responsible end through a phased withdrawal of troops. Attention must be refocused on the Middle East more broadly, he said, with greater emphasis placed on countering terrorist cells in Pakistan and Afghanistan.

"Tough-minded diplomacy, backed by the whole range of instruments of American power — political, economic and military — could bring success even when dealing with long-standing adversaries such as Iran and Syria," Obama wrote in the journal Foreign Affairs.

On a more global scale, Obama believes the U.S. must lead an international effort to secure nuclear weapons and material at sites within four years. The clear objective is to reduce a potent threat from terrorist organizations.

Obama also takes a more nuanced approach toward relations with Asia. Regarding China, for example, he correctly focuses on building "a relationship that broadens cooperation while strengthening our ability to compete."

- Economy: Obama proposes a more balanced tax policy that directs relief back toward the middle class, and adjustment in U.S. trade policy that would bolster the stability of the American job market. His ideas on job creation in the renewable energy sector links two critical aims of a solid domestic program: greater energy self-sufficiency and workforce development.

- Healthcare: Obama has proposed a plan that enables choice for those currently covered by health insurance but extends affordable enrollment opportunities to those who have no coverage.

The bottom line: Everyone will have access to health insurance; income will no longer be the insurmountable barrier it is today.

After reviewing his ideas, the careful voter should consider Obama's experience. Born and raised in Hawai'i, Obama later settled in Chicago and became a community organizer with a church-based group, working to better living conditions in poor, high-crime neighborhoods. Later, with a Harvard law degree in hand, he practiced as a civil rights attorney and teacher.

During eight years in the Illinois state legislature he supported increased funding for healthcare and education; he also helped write bills to publicly finance judicial campaigns and create a state earned-income tax credit.

That work, and his undeniable personal charisma, helped propel him into the U.S. Senate, where he has managed to secure additional funding for veterans' medical care and energy development in his home state. He opposed the corporate-written Central American Free Trade Agreement, and he led the charge among those challenging the Bush administration's failure to protect New Orleans.

There is no single candidate who can possess all the attributes needed to guide a president through the impossibly complex challenges of that job. The central question, rather, is which candidate possesses the qualities that we need most?

The U.S. is a nation at war and in economic distress. The road back will be a long one, the journey likely to span more than one presidential tenure. The capacity for hope and the willingness to change, both rallying cries of the Obama campaign, are elements critical to that journey.

The Democrats should recognize that the ability to inspire and to persuade others to follow is no trivial thing, no superficiality.

It is, in fact, the critical aspect of leadership required at times like these, when only a more unified nation can find its way through the difficulties ahead.

The party needs to acknowledge the clarion call that's resonated through the past weeks of the presidential campaign. It needs Barack Obama.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-02-18 18:40:00)

Hey, it's off-topic, but I came upon this site at <http://obamawill.com> and it's wonderful and funny. And...my wife, a Clinton supporter, read it and said it's the first thing she's seen that inclines her towards Obama. Go figure.

Michelle Obama in Newsweek (2008-02-17 20:12)

From barackobama.com :

Michelle Obama in Newsweek

by Sarah Ramey Sunday, February 17, 2008 at 04:30 PM

Newsweek magazine is featuring Michelle Obama this week, in a great cover story entitled, "Barack's Rock."

Here's the opening, which sounds about right: "She's the one who keeps him real, the one who makes sure running for leader of the free world doesn't go to his head. Michelle's story."

Michelle Obama has been an absolute inspiration to women and men alike – drawing diverse crowds of over 1,000 people even when she campaigns on her own. This week's article in Newsweek is a must-read for everyone out there who loves Michelle (which is to say, everyone.) Here are some excerpts, and be sure to pick up a copy of your own:

Michelle Obama was never much interested in calling attention to herself. As an undergrad at Princeton in the 1980s, she was interested in social change, but didn't run for student government. Instead, she spent her free time running a literacy program for kids from the local neighborhoods. At Harvard Law, she took part in demonstrations demanding more minority students and professors. Yet unlike another more prominent Harvard Law student who would later take up the cause, she was not one to hold forth with high-flown oratory about the need for diversity. "When [Barack Obama] spoke, people got quiet and listened," recalls Prof. Randall Kennedy. "Michelle had a more modest, quieter, lower profile." Barack won election as president of the Law Review. Michelle put her energy into a less glamorous pursuit: recruiting black undergrads to Harvard Law from other schools. For her, politics wasn't so much about being inspirational as it was being practical—about getting something specific done, says Charles Ogletree, one of her professors. "She was not trying to get ahead."

She no longer has the luxury of keeping a low profile. Now a very public figure, Michelle has accepted the role of aspiring First Lady and the sometimes uncomfortable scrutiny that comes with it. On the campaign trail, she is sometimes slated as the opening act, introducing Barack to the audience. Direct and plain-spoken, with an edgy sense of humor uncommon in a political spouse, she complements her husband's more grandiose style...She wants to change the world, but she also wants to win this thing now that they're so deeply invested. If his loftiness can set him apart from the crowd, her bluntness draws them in...

From the beginning of the campaign, Michelle made it clear to her husband that she would give the effort her all ("We need to be in there now, while we're still fresh and open and fearless and bold," she told Vanity Fair last December), but not at the expense of family life.

...At the meetings, Axelrod and the other aides addressed each of Michelle's questions. "Suffusing these discussions was, if we did it, she and he both wanted to make sure it was consistent with who he is and what he thinks, and wouldn't distort that," says Axelrod. She has expressed fears that the nastiness of presidential politics could wind up sucking the idealism out of her husband, leaving him just another soulless, cynical Washington pol. "Michelle has always been in the camp of, 'Let's not forget what we're fighting for,'" Axelrod says. After the meetings, Michelle gave Barack her blessing.

...Part of Michelle Obama's appeal—she routinely draws audiences of 1,000-plus supporters even when she's campaigning on her own—is that she comes across as so normal despite the withering glare of a national campaign. As a political spouse, she is somewhat unusual. She isn't the traditional Stepford booster, smiling vacantly at her husband and sticking to a script of carefully vetted blandishments. Nor is she a surrogate campaign manager, ordering the staff around and micromanaging the candidate's every move. She travels the country giving speeches and attending events (her mother watches the kids when she's on the road), but resists staying away for more than one night at a stretch. When the couple catch up several times a day on the phone, the talk is more likely to be about their daughters than the latest poll projections. Michelle has made it her job to ensure that Barack, who now lives full time inside the surreal campaign bubble of adoring crowds and constant attention, doesn't himself lose sight of what's normal.

Onstage, Obama has introduced Michelle as "my rock"—the person who keeps him focused and grounded. In her words, she is just making sure he is "keeping it real."...She insists that Barack fly home from wherever he is to attend ballet recitals and parent-teacher conferences. When the couple host political gatherings at their home in Chicago's Hyde Park, Michelle asks everyone to bring along their children. To help bridge the physical distance between father and daughters, Michelle recently bought two MacBook laptops, one for Barack and one for the kids, so they could have video chats over the Internet. Last Thursday, she cleared his schedule so he could return home to Chicago and spend Valentine's Day with her and the girls.

Those who know her invariably describe Michelle as poised, relaxed and confident. "There is no difference between the public Michelle and the private Michelle," says University of Chicago law professor David Strauss, who sits with her on the board of the University of Chicago's Lab School. (The Obamas' daughters attend the school.) "There's no pretense."...

...In 1989, she was assigned to mentor a young, unconventional summer associate by the name of Barack Obama. Michelle was unimpressed by the office gossip about the hotshot Harvard Law student, a biracial intern from Hawaii whom she dismissed as "a black guy who can talk straight." But she was disarmed by his confidence. He walked up to her one day and said, "I think we should go out on a date." She resisted, thinking it was inappropriate. She dropped her guard after he asked her to go to one of his community-organizing sessions in a church basement, where he delivered a stemwinding speech about closing the gap between what he called "the world as it is, and the world as it should be."

She was smitten. "I was, like, 'This guy is different,'" she says. "He is really different, in addition to being nice and funny and cute and all that. He's got a seriousness and a commitment that you don't see every day." She recalls thinking, " 'Well, you know, I'd like to be married to somebody who felt that deeply about things.' " At this, she paused for a second. "Maybe I didn't say 'marry.' Scratch that part. It took him a little while." Each of them offered the other something they had lacked growing up—for her, a free-thinking outlook, for him, a sense of stability.

...After she worked for the city for a couple of years, Barack led Michelle closer to community activism. He was on the board of a start-up group called Public Allies, a nonprofit that encouraged young people to go into public service—just the kind of encouragement she felt she had never gotten. The organization needed a Chicago director. The job paid even less than her city post. "It sounded risky and just out there," she says. "But for some reason it just spoke to me. This was the first time I said, 'This is what I say I care about. Right here. And I will have to run it.'" (Michelle jokes that she took a pay cut with every new job. The couple finally got out of debt when Barack's book, "The Audacity of Hope," became a best seller.) More recently, she inspired a program to send doctors from the prestigious University of Chicago Medical Center into community hospitals and clinics in poor surrounding neighborhoods...

...In her stump speech, she uses her own life as a rebuke to those who have said that she and her husband aren't ready for the White House. She tells the story of a 10-year-old girl she met in a beauty parlor in South Carolina who told her that if Barack wins the White House, "it means I can imagine anything for myself."

That story, Michelle says, was just like her own: "She could have been me. Because the truth is, I'm not supposed to be here, standing here. I'm a statistical oddity. Black girl, brought up on the South Side of Chicago. Was I supposed to go to Princeton? No ... They said maybe Harvard Law was too much for me to reach for. But I went, I did fine. And I'm certainly not supposed to be standing here." Whatever lingering doubts Michelle Obama may still have, moving into the White House would go a long way toward putting them to rest.

Michelle Obama in Newsweek (2008-02-17 20:12)

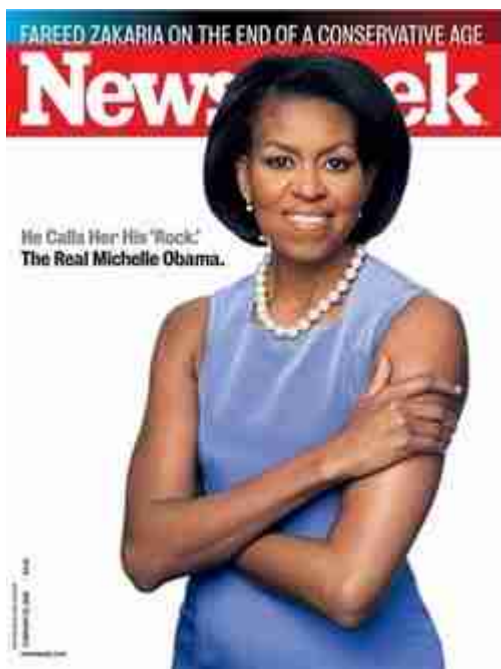

From barackobama.com :

Michelle Obama in Newsweek

by Sarah Ramey

Sunday, February 17, 2008 at 04:30 PM

Newsweek magazine is featuring Michelle Obama this week, in a great cover story entitled, "Barack's Rock."

Here's the opening, which sounds about right: "She's the one who keeps him real, the one who makes sure running for leader of the free world doesn't go to his head. Michelle's story."

Michelle Obama has been an absolute inspiration to women and men alike – drawing diverse crowds of over 1,000 people even when she campaigns on her own. This week's article in Newsweek is a must-read for everyone out there who loves Michelle (which is to say, everyone.) Here are some excerpts, and be sure to pick up a copy of your own:

Michelle Obama was never much interested in calling attention to herself. As an undergrad at Princeton in the 1980s, she was interested in social change, but didn't run for student government. Instead, she spent her free time running a literacy program for kids from the local neighborhoods. At Harvard Law, she took part in demonstrations demanding more minority students and professors. Yet unlike another more prominent Harvard Law student who would later take up the cause, she was not one to hold forth with high-flown oratory about the need for diversity. "When [Barack Obama] spoke, people got quiet and listened," recalls Prof. Randall Kennedy. "Michelle had a more modest, quieter, lower profile." Barack won election as president of the Law Review. Michelle put her energy into a less glamorous pursuit: recruiting black undergrads to Harvard Law from other schools. For her, politics wasn't so much about being inspirational as it was being practical—about getting something specific done, says Charles Ogletree, one of her professors. "She was not trying to get ahead."

She no longer has the luxury of keeping a low profile. Now a very public figure, Michelle has accepted the role of aspiring First Lady and the sometimes uncomfortable scrutiny that comes with it. On the campaign trail, she is sometimes slated as the opening act, introducing Barack to the audience. Direct and plain-spoken, with an edgy sense of humor uncommon in a political spouse, she complements her husband's more grandiose style...She wants to change the world, but she also wants to win this thing now that they're so deeply invested. If his loftiness can set him apart from the crowd, her bluntness draws them in...

From the beginning of the campaign, Michelle made it clear to her husband that she would give the effort her all ("We need to be in there now, while we're still fresh and open and fearless and bold," she told Vanity Fair last December), but not at the expense of family life.

...At the meetings, Axelrod and the other aides addressed each of Michelle's questions. "Suffusing these discussions was, if we did it, she and he both wanted to make sure it was consistent with who he is and what he thinks, and wouldn't distort that," says Axelrod. She has expressed fears that the nastiness of presidential politics could wind up sucking the idealism out of her husband, leaving him just another soulless, cynical Washington pol. "Michelle has always been in the camp of, 'Let's not forget what we're fighting for,'" Axelrod says. After the meetings, Michelle gave Barack her blessing.

...Part of Michelle Obama's appeal—she routinely draws audiences of 1,000-plus supporters even when she's campaigning on her own—is that she comes across as so normal despite the withering glare of a national campaign. As a political spouse, she is somewhat unusual. She isn't the traditional Stepford booster, smiling vacantly at her husband and sticking to a script of carefully vetted blandishments. Nor is she a surrogate campaign manager, ordering the staff around and micromanaging the candidate's every move. She travels the country giving speeches and attending events (her mother watches the kids when she's on the road), but resists staying away for more than one night at a stretch. When the couple catch up several times a day on the phone, the talk is more likely to be about their daughters than the latest poll projections. Michelle has made it her job to ensure that Barack, who now lives full time inside the surreal campaign bubble of adoring crowds and constant attention, doesn't himself lose sight of what's normal.

Onstage, Obama has introduced Michelle as "my rock"—the person who keeps him focused and grounded. In her words, she is just making sure he is "keeping it real."...She insists that Barack fly home from wherever he is to attend ballet recitals and parent-teacher conferences. When the couple host political gatherings at their home in Chicago's Hyde Park, Michelle asks everyone to bring along their children. To help bridge the physical distance between father and daughters, Michelle recently bought two MacBook laptops, one for Barack and one for the kids, so they could have video chats over the Internet. Last Thursday, she cleared his schedule so he could return home to Chicago and spend Valentine's Day with her and the girls.

Those who know her invariably describe Michelle as poised, relaxed and confident. "There is no difference between the public Michelle and the private Michelle," says University of Chicago law professor David Strauss, who sits with her on the board of the University of Chicago's Lab School. (The Obamas' daughters attend the school.) "There's no pretense."...

...In 1989, she was assigned to mentor a young, unconventional summer associate by the name of Barack Obama. Michelle was unimpressed by the office gossip about the hotshot Harvard Law student, a biracial intern from Hawaii whom she dismissed as "a black guy who can talk straight." But she was disarmed by his confidence. He walked up to her one day and said, "I think we should go out on a date." She resisted, thinking it was inappropriate. She dropped her guard after he asked her to go to one of his community-organizing sessions in a church basement, where he delivered a stemwinding speech about closing the gap between what he called "the world as it is, and the world as it should be."

She was smitten. "I was, like, 'This guy is different,'" she says. "'He is really different, in addition to being nice and funny and cute and all that. He's got a seriousness and a commitment that you don't see every day.'" She recalls thinking, " 'Well, you know, I'd like to be married to somebody who felt that deeply about things.'" At this, she paused for a second. "Maybe I didn't say 'marry.' Scratch that part. It took him a little while." Each of them offered the other something they had lacked growing up—for her, a free-thinking outlook, for him, a sense of stability.

...After she worked for the city for a couple of years, Barack led Michelle closer to community activism. He was on the board of a start-up group called Public Allies, a nonprofit that encouraged young people to go into public service—just the kind of encouragement she felt she had never gotten. The organization needed a Chicago director. The job paid even less than her city post. "It sounded risky and just out there," she says. "But for some reason it just spoke to me. This was the first time I said, 'This is what I say I care about. Right here. And I will have to run it.'" (Michelle jokes that she took a pay cut with every new job. The couple finally got out of debt when Barack's book, "The Audacity of Hope," became a best seller.) More recently, she inspired a program to send doctors from the prestigious University of Chicago Medical Center into community hospitals and clinics in poor surrounding neighborhoods...

...In her stump speech, she uses her own life as a rebuke to those who have said that she and her husband aren't ready for the White House. She tells the story of a 10-year-old girl she met in a beauty parlor in South Carolina who told her that if Barack wins the White House, "it means I can imagine anything for myself."

That story, Michelle says, was just like her own: "She could have been me. Because the truth is, I'm not supposed to be here, standing here. I'm a statistical oddity. Black girl, brought up on the South Side of Chicago. Was I supposed to go to Princeton? No ... They said maybe Harvard Law was too much for me to reach for. But I went, I did fine. And I'm certainly not supposed to be standing here." Whatever lingering doubts Michelle Obama may still have, moving into the White House would go a long way toward putting them to rest.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama at Founder's Day Gala (2008-02-18 12:53)

Check out Barack Obama speaking at the Founder's Day Gala in Wisconsin.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Wisconsin & Hawai'i: Your Moment is Now (2008-02-18 18:55)

Wisconsin and Hawai'i vote tomorrow. Barack Obama will try to maintain momentum going into Mar. 4 when four states including Texas and Ohio will vote.

Here is voting information for Tuesday.

Wisconsin & Hawai'i: Your Moment is Now

by Christopher Hass

, Monday, February 18, 2008 at 05:30 PM

Important Voting Info: On Tuesday voters throughout Wisconsin will head to the polls, while Hawaiians prepare to caucus Tuesday night. Both states allow same-day registration; in Wisconsin Democrats, Republicans, and Independents can all vote for Barack, and Hawaiians can change their registration to Democrat at their caucus sites. Use the links below to find out when, where and how to vote or caucus for Barack Obama:

Wisconsin

- Polls open from 7:00 AM to 8:00 PM
- Open to all Democrats, Republicans, and Independents
- New voters can register at the polls
- Find Your Polling Location
- Wisconsin Primary Frequently Asked Questions

Hawai'i

- Caucus doors open at 6:30 PM, caucuses begin at 7:00 PM
- New voters can register at their caucus location
- Republicans and Independents and change their registration at their caucus location
- Find Your Caucus Location
- Hawai'i Top 10 Caucus Facts

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: Hawai'i and Wisconsin (2008-02-19 18:08)

Check out these YouTube videos as we await tonight's results with polls in Wisconsin closing in less than an hour.

Orgazining in Kona, Hawai'i

[EMBED]

Barack on Education

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama wins Wisconsin (2008-02-19 19:37)

NBC News and CNN are projecting Barack Obama will win the Wisconsin primary. The caucuses in Hawai'i begin at 7 pm local time.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama heads to Mar. 4 with Big Mo (2008-02-20 09:49)

Sen. Barack Obama racked up 10 straight wins with convincing victories last night in Wisconsin and Hawai'i. The winning streak definitely gives Obama momentum going into the big state contest of Mar. 4 when Texas, Ohio, Rhode Island and Vermont go to the polls. Many undecided voters may tip toward Barack because of his wins in other states.

Still Hillary Clinton has strong establishment ties particularly in Texas, and the Obama campaign is mounting a full-blown ground operation to contest these states.

Videos of Barack's victory speech last night in Houston.

[EMBED]

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

-An Obama Junkie- (2008-02-20 12:42:00)

I am really pleased Obama won Wisconsin and Hawaii...great blog. Please check mine out: blogforobama.blogspot.com

Thanks!

Anonymous (2008-02-20 15:23:00)

Hillary along with Bill loves Latino's. Who else would send Elian Gonzalez back to Cuba after his mother gave up her life for his freedom?

Josh (2008-02-20 16:39:00)

This is a good blog. I am so happy Obama won Wisconsin and Hawaii. With a strong showing in Texas this thing could be over sooner than expected. I have a website I just created with my friends, and there's some good stuff about Obama and more to follow, check it out and comment, let us know how you feel, thank you.

www.inbetweenpolitics.com

Anonymous (2008-02-21 21:05:00)

Obama sounded more like a televangelist than a candidate during his 45-minute speech in Houston. He talks about 'change' as it relates to many different problems, yet he never says what he'll 'change' to solve them. Just sounds kind of empty to me. Good public speaking is one thing, but being the President of the United States is something totally different.

Obama Events in the Mar. 4 States (2008-02-20 16:32)

Feb 20 Stand for Change Rally with Barack Obama

in Dallas, TX

Feb 20 Rally with Michelle Obama

in Warwick, RI

Feb 21 Community Gathering with Michelle Obama

in Cleveland, OH

Feb 22 Community Event with Barack Obama

in Corpus Christi, TX

Early Vote Kickoff with Senator Ted Kennedy

Wednesday, February 20, 2008 @ 12:30pm

Corpus Christi, TX

Early Vote Kick-Off With Senator Edward Kennedy

Wednesday, February 20, 2008 @ 3:30pm

Edinburg, TX

Austin HQ - Poster Making Party

Wednesday, February 20, 2008 @ 6:00pm

Austin, TX

Early Vote Kickoff with Senator Ted Kennedy

Wednesday, February 20, 2008 @ 7:00pm

Laredo, TX

San Marcos- Rally for Change with Senator Ted Kennedy

Thursday, February 21, 2008 @ 10:30am

San Marcos, TX

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama wins Teamsters and Boilermakers' endorsements (2008-02-20 16:46)

Barack Obama received the endorsement of the Teamsters Union and the 65,000-member International Brotherhood of Boilermakers today.

The Teamsters have 80,000 members in Pennsylvania, 60,000 in Ohio and 17,000 in Texas.

Obama now has four endorsements from the Change to Win labor federation making him eligible for a national endorsement by the group. The federation plans to meet Thursday to talk about a possible endorsement.

Democratic presidential hopeful, Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., waves to reporters upon his arrival in Dallas, Wednesday, Feb. 20, 2008. (AP Photo/Rick Bowmer)

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama Wins the Democrats Abroad Primary (2008-02-21 11:19)

From barackobama.com:

Obama Wins the Democrats Abroad Primary

by Sam Graham-Felsen

, Thursday, February 21, 2008 at 08:23 AM

Barack just won his 11th straight victory, taking the Democrats Abroad primary...

X

WASHINGTON (AP) – Barack Obama won the Democrats Abroad global primary in results announced Thursday, giving him 11 straight victories in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

The Illinois senator won the primary in which Democrats living in other countries voted by Internet, mail and in person, according to results released by the Democrats Abroad, an organization sanctioned by the national party. Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton has not won a nominating contest since Super Tuesday, more than two weeks ago.

More than 20,000 U.S. citizens living abroad voted in the primary, which ran from Feb. 5 to Feb. 12. Obama won about 65 percent of the vote, according to the results released Thursday. Voters living in 164 countries cast votes online, while expatriates voted in person in more than 30 countries, at hotels in Australia and Costa Rica, at a pub in Ireland and at a Starbucks in Thailand. The results took about a week to tabulate as local committees around the globe gathered ballots.

Please help us continue to build off of these 11 straight wins. Donate today and become one of the million...

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Change to Win endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-21 12:05)

Sen. Barack Obama received a major endorsement today from the Change to Win labor federation.

Change to Win to Endorse Obama

By JESSE J. HOLLAND – 2 hours ago

WASHINGTON (AP) — The new Change to Win labor federation will give its first presidential endorsement to Democratic Sen. Barack Obama, a union official said Thursday.

The endorsement comes after a teleconference between Change to Win's leaders and the heads of the seven unions that make up the 6-million member federation, Greg Tarpinian, the federation's executive director, said in an interview.

Four of Change to Win's unions had already endorsed Obama, with the Teamsters endorsing Obama on Wednesday. UNITE HERE, the Service Employee International Union and the United Food and Commercial Workers also have endorsed Obama.

The Change to Win endorsement gives Obama a boost in the upcoming March 4 primaries in Texas and Ohio, as well as in Pennsylvania on April 22. There were 830,000 union workers in Pennsylvania and 730,000 in Ohio in 2007, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, some of the largest numbers of unionized workers in the nation.

Tarpinian the vote was unanimous although the United Farm Workers, the Laborers' Union and the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners had abstained. The farmworkers already had endorsed Clinton; the Carpenters originally endorsed John Edwards, who has dropped out, and the Laborers had yet to make an endorsement. Tarpinian said, however, the three unions released the federation to work for Obama in the upcoming primaries and caucuses.

The unions in the Change to Win federation broke from the AFL-CIO in 2005 over internal disagreements on how best to build organized labor's membership and political clout.

The AFL-CIO has not endorsed any candidate in the Democratic primary, although it has allowed its 56-member unions to make individual endorsements. The AFL-CIO's executive council will meet in San Diego March 3-5, and a decision could be announced.

Change to Win endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-21 12:05)

Sen. Barack Obama received a major endorsement today from the Change to Win labor federation.

Change to Win to Endorse Obama

By JESSE J. HOLLAND – 2 hours ago

WASHINGTON (AP) — The new Change to Win labor federation will give its first presidential endorsement to Democratic Sen. Barack Obama, a union official said Thursday.

The endorsement comes after a teleconference between Change to Win's leaders and the heads of the seven unions that make up the 6-million member federation, Greg Tarpinian, the federation's executive director, said in an interview.

Four of Change to Win's unions had already endorsed Obama, with the Teamsters endorsing Obama on Wednesday. UNITE HERE, the Service Employee International Union and the United Food and Commercial Workers also have endorsed Obama.

The Change to Win endorsement gives Obama a boost in the upcoming March 4 primaries in Texas and Ohio, as well as in Pennsylvania on April 22. There were 830,000 union workers in Pennsylvania and 730,000 in Ohio in 2007, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, some of the largest numbers of unionized workers in the nation.

Tarpinian the vote was unanimous although the United Farm Workers, the Laborers' Union and the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners had abstained. The farmworkers already had endorsed Clinton; the Carpenters originally endorsed John Edwards, who has dropped out, and the Laborers had yet to make an endorsement. Tarpinian said, however, the three unions released the federation to work for Obama in the upcoming primaries and caucuses.

The unions in the Change to Win federation broke from the AFL-CIO in 2005 over internal disagreements on how best to build organized labor's membership and political clout.

The AFL-CIO has not endorsed any candidate in the Democratic primary, although it has allowed its 56-member unions to make individual endorsements. The AFL-CIO's executive council will meet in San Diego March 3-5, and a decision could be announced.

Change to Win endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-21 12:05)

Sen. Barack Obama received a major endorsement today from the Change to Win labor federation.

Russ Feingold 'inclined' to endorse Barack Obama (2008-02-21 13:12)

Sen. Russ Feingold, darling of progressives in the Democratic Party, may be set to endorse Sen. Barack Obama according to news reports.

Feingold said he was "inclined" to endorse Obama because of the senator's impressive win in Wisconsin, the state Feingold represents.

Obama was endorsed today by Wisconsin Rep. Steve Kagen, who like Feingold is a superdelegate.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Brian (2008-02-21 19:59:00)

Dear Barack Obama supporters,

Clinton supporters became complacent when she was the frontrunner. Please understand that our most difficult tests to date are soon approaching. We need Obama to win Texas and Ohio to emerge early as a strongly supported candidate for the general election. Please join me in pledging to personally convert 4 individuals in Texas and Ohio to be Obama Supporters who cast a vote in the primary. How? I believe that each 100 $ donation nets a vote. Other methods include phone banking, canvassing, and educating family and friends. Please make this pledge so that we don't make the same mistake as the Clinton supporters - We won't be complacent.

Visit www.obamapledge.com to join this pledge and for information on how to generate new Obama supporters

Anonymous (2008-02-23 00:14:00)

I'm a democrat But I will be voting Republican this time or not voting at all. It's bad when you have to buy a vote shame on you.

¡Viva Obama! (2008-02-22 07:00)

The grassroots site amigosdeobama.com has produced this engaging video featuring Mariachi Aguilas de Mexico.

[EMBED]

The campaign is also running the following ad "Como Padre" in Texas.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-02-22 17:01:00)

Good video that exposes Hillary's hypocrisy:

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=1ZTSgGcfq74>

Pam Griffin (2008-02-24 13:44:00)

after visiting with Hillary's campaign headquarter people, one in particular, an elderly woman who has worked in Washington and been on many campaigns for the democrats..stated from seeing firsthand that the Clinton's supported Ted Kennedy a LOT with all his issues..alchol abuse being one over the years. Obama CALLED the Clintons for help in becoming a senator and they reached out to him and did indeed help him. It can be PROVEN Hillary thought of every single campaign issue FIRST and Obama has COPIED her all along the way, clinging onto the Clinton's experience, knowledge, wisdom, creative genius and even their being so well known. Without their help he would not have had foot in the door at all. Now this is how he and Ted say thank you. They have shown their faces as someone like the Bush People, sneaky and underhanded. This last thing about Obama saying lies about Hillary's healthcare agenda. I would say obviously either he is too ignorant to understand it (then he would know the truth) OR he is an out and out liar. The man knows he cannot win without such snake in the grass type lies. I do not want this kind of person to be our president. We have had enough of that already with Bush and we have had enough of inexperience in the white house. Obama is NOT Martin Luther King. He does not have the beauty, the passion, the love in his heart. I see his energy as a boring, accountant and he will hurt our country sooo much when we need a strong person like Hillary (and her husband!) to make this country strong again. do not listen to pretty words that mean nothing if they cannot be backed up by actions. Hillary knows how to do it all and she will. Obama would depend on thousands and they would use him and abuse him and delay him and it would set us back yet again. be very afraid of him.

Upcoming Obama Events (2008-02-22 20:23)

Feb 23 Keeping America's Promise Rally with Barack Obama

in Akron, OH

Feb 23 Keeping America's Promise Rally with Barack Obama

in Cleveland, OH

Feb 24 Keeping America's Promise Rally with Barack Obama

in Toledo, OH

Economy & Trade Town Hall Meeting with Federico Pena

Saturday, February 23, 2008 @ 09:30am

El Paso, TX

Brownsville- Town Hall with Sen. John Kerry

Saturday, February 23, 2008 @ 3:30pm

Brownsville, TX

Del Rio - Town Hall with Sen. John Kerry

Saturday, February 23, 2008 @ 6:30pm

Del Rio, TX

Obama rally in Edinburg, Texas

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama promises close ties with India (2008-02-23 14:03)

In an article for the upcoming issue of India Abroad newspaper, Barack Obama explains his vision for close ties between India and the United States.

WASHINGTON: Senator Barack Obama has vowed to build "a close strategic partnership" with India if he wins the Democratic nomination and goes on to win the presidential race in November.

Describing the United States and India as "natural partners", the Democratic front-runner avers that he is looking to strengthen and further the "critical relationship" between the two countries.

"That is why I voted for the US-India nuclear energy deal...And that is why I will move forward to build a close strategic partnership between the United States and India when I am President of the United States," he writes in an article for the upcoming issue of India Abroad, the ethnic Indian weekly published from New York.

As he puts it, "the world's oldest democracy and the world's largest democracy are natural partners, sharing important interests and fundamental democratic values". The two nations now need to "work together to combat the common threats of the 21st century".

"Both countries have been victims of catastrophic terrorist attacks, and we have a shared interest in succeeding in the fight against Al Qaeda and its operational and ideological affiliates," he says.

An ardent admirer of Mahatma Gandhi, whose portrait hangs in his Senate office, Obama writes: "In my life, I have always looked to Mahatma Gandhi as an inspiration, because he embodies the kind of transformational change that can be made when ordinary people come together to do extraordinary things."

Gandhi, he says, reminds him that "real results will not just come from Washington, they will come from the people". In the article, Obama lauds the thriving Indian-American community in glowing terms for "lifting up our economy and creating jobs".

"Leading entrepreneurs, innovators, lawyers, doctors, engineers, and hardworking professionals are adding to the richness and success of the American society,” he notes, adding: “As President, I will reach out to encourage the active engagement and partnership of the vibrant Indian-American community in making the change we seek.”

Although his rival Hillary Clinton has traditionally enjoyed far more support from Indian Americans, Obama has in recent months come into his own, attracting substantial numbers, including some prominent members of the community. Maryland House Majority Leader Kumar Barve and Kansas Representative Rajiv Goyle are among those who have endorsed Obama.

On the issue of hate crimes worrying sections of the Indian community, notably the Sikhs, since the 9/11 attacks, Obama lamented that “flawed strategies like racial profiling have had a disproportionate effect on Indian Americans”.

“Too often, restrictions at our borders have prevented entry for many students and family members who seek nothing more than opportunity and reunification with loved ones,” he notes.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama in Austin (2008-02-23 20:54)

Check out the YouTube video of Barack Obama 's rally yesterday in Austin, Texas.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Comedian George Lopez endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-24 08:30)

The Austin American Statesman reports that Hispanic comedian George Lopez supports Barack Obama 's candidacy.

George Lopez Plays the Spin Room

By Juan Castillo

Among the interview subjects drawing some of the biggest media crowds in the spin room following Thursday night's debate was comedian George Lopez.

Looking dapper in a dark pinstriped suit, Lopez was all business — mostly — as he mused on the race for the Democratic nomination and his support for Sen. Obama.

"I think there's a hopelessness in America and (Obama) seems to be speaking to that," Lopez said.

Latinos, said Lopez, must become political "because we're under assault. We're like rolled up in a ball and we shouldn't be that way."

Lopez said he had decided to support Obama after much consideration and that he believes he can be a great leader.

"You'd like to feel like the White House is your house. It belongs to the people," Lopez said. After pausing and grinning ever so slightly, he added "Brown people too."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Comedian George Lopez endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-24 08:30)

The Austin American Statesman reports that Hispanic comedian George Lopez supports Barack Obama's candidacy.

Barack Obama in Football Country (2008-02-24 12:46)

Sen. Barack Obama , campaigning actively in Texas may have wished he had played more football in high school rather than basketball, as the gridiron definitely reigns over the basketball court in the Lone Star State.

X

 Thu Feb 21, 1:46 PM ET

Democratic presidential hopeful Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill. poses with a football during a tour of the University of Texas, Thursday, Feb. 21, 2008, in Austin, Texas. (AP Photo/Rick Bowmer)

Jim Borgman

X

From: Cincinnati Enquirer

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-02-24 13:30:00)

February 3, 2008

Nuclear Leaks and Response Tested Obama in Senate

By MIKE McINTIRE

When residents in Illinois voiced outrage two years ago upon learning that the Exelon Corporation had not disclosed radioactive leaks at one of its nuclear plants, the state's freshman senator, Barack Obama, took up their cause.

Mr. Obama scolded Exelon and federal regulators for inaction and introduced a bill to require all plant owners to notify state and local authorities immediately of even small leaks. He has boasted of it on the campaign trail, telling a crowd in Iowa in December that it was "the only nuclear legislation that I've passed."

"I just did that last year," he said, to murmurs of approval.

A close look at the path his legislation took tells a very different story. While he initially fought to advance his bill, even holding up a presidential nomination to try to force a hearing on it, Mr. Obama eventually rewrote it to reflect changes sought by Senate Republicans, Exelon and nuclear regulators. The new bill removed language mandating prompt reporting and simply offered guidance to regulators, whom it charged with addressing the issue of unreported leaks.

Those revisions propelled the bill through a crucial committee. But, contrary to Mr. Obama's comments in Iowa, it ultimately died amid parliamentary wrangling in the full Senate.

"Senator Obama's staff was sending us copies of the bill to review, and we could see it weakening with each successive draft," said Joe Cosgrove, a park district director in Will County, Ill., where low-level radioactive runoff had turned up in groundwater. "The teeth were just taken out of it."

The history of the bill shows Mr. Obama navigating a home-state controversy that pitted two important constituencies against each other and tested his skills as a legislative infighter. On one side were neighbors of several nuclear plants upset that low-level radioactive leaks had gone unreported for years; on the other was Exelon, the country's largest nuclear plant operator and one of Mr. Obama's largest sources of campaign money.

Since 2003, executives and employees of Exelon, which is based in Illinois, have contributed at least $227,000 to Mr. Obama's campaigns for the United States Senate and for president. Two top Exelon officials, Frank M. Clark, executive vice president, and John W. Rogers Jr., a director, are among his largest fund-raisers.

Another Obama donor, John W. Rowe, chairman of Exelon, is also chairman of the Nuclear Energy Institute, the nuclear power industry's lobbying group, based in Washington. Exelon's support for Mr. Obama far exceeds its support for any other presidential candidate.

In addition, Mr. Obama's chief political strategist, David Axelrod, has worked as a consultant to Exelon. A spokeswoman for Exelon said Mr. Axelrod's company had helped an Exelon subsidiary, Commonwealth Edison, with communications strategy periodically since 2002, but had no involvement in the leak controversy or other nuclear issues.

The Obama campaign said in written responses to questions that Mr. Obama "never discussed this issue or this bill" with Mr. Axelrod. The campaign acknowledged that Exelon executives had met with Mr. Obama's staff about the bill, as had concerned residents, environmentalists and regulators.

The campaign did not directly address the question of why Mr. Obama had told Iowa voters that the legislation had passed.

Barack in Ohio (2008-02-24 23:29)

Here are some videos from Barack Obama's appearances in Ohio.

Blockbuster – long lines for Barack's speech at the John S. Knight Center in Akron.

[EMBED]

Barack Obama speaking and attending a townhall meeting in Lorain, Ohio.

[EMBED]

Barack at a rally of more than 6,000 people in Cleveland, Feb. 23.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Register in Vermont by Wednesday (2008-02-25 13:18)

From barackobama.com :

Vermont: Wednesday Deadline to Register

by Christopher Hass,

Monday, February 25, 2008 at 12:04 PM

Vermont Primary Voter Registration Deadline: Wednesday, February 27

On March 4th, voters in Vermont will join Texas, Ohio and Rhode Island in what could be a decisive day for the campaign. Only registered voters can participate, and Vermont residents have until Wednesday, February 27 to register to vote. Vermont is an open primary; there is no party registration and all registered voters can participate, but Wednesday is the last day to register.

How to Register: Voters must visit contact their local town clerk's office in order to register. You can find your town clerk's location and hours online or call the Vermont Secretary of State at 802-828-2464.

Early Voting: Registered Vermont voters don't have to wait until March 4th – you can vote early at your local town clerk's office from now until March 3rd. Find your town clerk's location and hours online or call the Vermont Secretary of State at 802-828-2464.

You can also visit the Vermont Secretary of State site for information on how to register.

Check out VT.BarackObama.com for more information on how to get involved in Vermont.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Upcoming Obama Events (2008-02-25 18:56)

Barack in Texas

Wednesday, February 27 Stand for Change Rally in San Marcos

Thursday, February 28 Stand for Change Rally
in Fort Worth

Friday, February 29 Stand for Change Rally
in San Antonio

Precinct Captain Training
Monday, February 25, 2008 @ 1:00pm
Houston, TX
Caroline Kennedy in Austin
Monday, February 25, 2008 @ 2:00pm
Austin, TX
Community Gathering with Caroline Kennedy
Monday, February 25, 2008 @ 5:45pm
San Antonio, TX
Learn How to Caucus for Obama!
Tuesday, February 26, 2008 @ 12:30pm
Houston, TX
Team Obama Training in Arlington
Tuesday, February 26, 2008 @ 6:30pm
Arlington, TX

MORE EVENTS »

Barack in Ohio Monday, February 25 Keeping America's Promise Rally in Dayton
Wednesday, February 27 Keeping America's Promise Rally in Columbus

X X
X X
X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2008-02-26 09:03)

The following abstract discusses a study that verifies a genetic connection between populations in Madagascar and Tonga far to the East.

Regards,

Paul Kekai Manansala

Sacramento

J Hum Genet. 2008;53(2):106-20. Epub 2007 Dec 14.

Links

Austronesian genetic signature in East African Madagascar and Polynesia.

Regueiro M, Mirabal S, Lacau H, Caeiro JL, Garcia-Bertrand RL, Herrera RJ.

Department of Biological Sciences, Florida International University, University Park, OE 304, Miami, FL, 33199, USA.

The dispersal of the Austronesian language family from Southeast Asia represents the last major diaspora leading to the peopling of Oceania to the East and the Indian Ocean to the West. Several theories have been proposed to explain the current locations, and the linguistic and cultural diversity of Austronesian populations. However, the existing data do not support unequivocally any given migrational scenario. In the current study, the genetic profile of 15 autosomal STR loci is reported for the first time for two populations from opposite poles of the Austronesian range, Madagascar at the West and Tonga to the East. These collections are also compared to geographically targeted reference populations of Austronesian descent in order to investigate their current relationships and potential source population(s) within Southeast Asia. Our results indicate that while Madagascar derives 66.3 % of its genetic makeup from Africa, a clear connection between the East African island and Southeast Asia can be discerned. The data suggest that although geographic location has influenced the phylogenetic relationships between Austronesian populations, a genetic connection that binds them beyond geographical divides is apparent.

Latest Obama Videos (2008-02-26 09:26)

Line of supporters outside of University of Cincinnati.

[EMBED]

Barack on the "Texas Two-Step."

[EMBED]

Barack Obama speaks to a crowd of 11,000 in Dayton, Ohio.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Latest Obama Videos (2008-02-26 09:26)

Line of supporters outside of University of Cincinnati.

[EMBED]

Sen. Christopher Dodd endorses Sen. Barack Obama (2008-02-26 12:02)

Forwarded from barackobama.com :

Senator Chris Dodd Endorses Barack Obama for President

by Sam Graham-Felsen

, Tuesday, February 26, 2008 at 08:58 AM

A major endorsement today: Senator Chris Dodd is throwing his support behind Barack Obama...

CLEVELAND (AP) – Sen. Christopher Dodd endorsed one-time presidential rival Barack Obama on Tuesday and said it is time for Democrats to join forces to defeat the Republicans in the fall campaign.

"I don't want a campaign that is divisive here, and there's a danger in that," Dodd said, although he denied he was nudging Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton to end her candidacy.

Dodd said Obama was "ready to be president and I am ready to support him in this campaign."

The two men appeared together at a news conference. Dodd is the first of the Democratic campaign dropouts to endorse another candidate.

He said Obama "has been poked and prodded, analyzed and criticized, called too green, too trusting and for all of that has already won" more than half the states and millions of votes.

"It's now the hour to come together. ... This is the moment for Democrats and independents and others to come together, to get behind this candidacy," he said.

Here are Senator Obama's remarks (as prepared for delivery) in response to Dodd's endorsement...

It has been my pleasure to serve alongside Chris Dodd in the United States Senate. It was a privilege to share the stage with him during his principled run for the presidency. And it is an honor to stand here with him today, and to accept his endorsement of my candidacy for President of the United States of America.

I say that because Chris Dodd loves his country – and believes in the ideal of public service – as much as anyone I know. From his years as a young Peace Corps worker in the 1960s to this very day, Senator Dodd has devoted his life to building a stronger, fairer, healthier America; and a more just and secure world.

Whether it was his work to protect voting rights; his long, determined battle for the Family and Medical Leave Act; his leadership on U.S. relations with Latin America; or his defense of our Constitution – Chris Dodd has been at the forefront of some of the most important issues of our time. He has worked hard to preserve the right of workers to organize despite an onslaught from a hostile administration. He has been an advocate for our children, and no one has fought harder to improve our schools. He has been a voice for unity amid the often bitter debate over immigration reform. And I have seen firsthand on the Foreign Relations Committee his commitment to restoring our standing in the world.

But as passionate as Chris Dodd is about the causes he champions, he also has that rare ability to disagree without being disagreeable. He is respected on both sides of the aisle for his authenticity, reason, and civility. And that is how, time and again, he's been able to bring Democrats and Republicans together to make a real difference in the lives of the American people.

He conducted his campaign for President with that same character. He resisted the cheap and easy shots, and elevated the debate with important ideas about how to address the great challenges we face. He and I share a deep commitment to take our country in a new direction.

We know it's time to end the war in Iraq. This war has not made us safer, it has overstretched our military, it has cost us precious American lives, and it is costing us billions and billions of dollars that could be better spent finishing the fight in Afghanistan and bringing relief to the middle class here at home.

We know it's time for an energy policy that ends our addiction to oil. We can't keep buying oil from dictators while our planet is in peril and Americans are paying more at the pump. It's time to embrace a clean energy policy that enhances our national security, while creating green jobs right here in states like Ohio.

We know it's time to reclaim the American Dream for the middle class. Instead of giving tax breaks to companies that ship our jobs overseas, it's time to put a tax cut in the pockets of working people and seniors. Instead of giving hundreds of millions to well-connected contractors in Iraq, it's time to put America back together again by investing in our infrastructure – an issue that Chris Dodd has shown real leadership on in the Senate. And instead of standing by while there's a squeeze on the middle class, it's time to expand the Family and Medical Leave Act so no American has to choose between a job and their family.

We know it's time to restore our Constitution and the rule of law. This is an issue that was at the heart of Senator Dodd's candidacy, and I share his passion for restoring the balance between the security we demand and the civil liberties that we cherish.

The American people must be able to trust that their president values principle over politics, and justice over unchecked power. I've been proud to stand with Senator Dodd in his fight against retroactive immunity for the telecommunications industry. Secrecy and special interests must not trump accountability. We must show our citizens – and set an example to the world – that laws cannot be ignored when it is inconvenient. Because in America – no one is above the law.

It's time to reject torture without equivocation. It's time to close Guantanamo and to restore habeas corpus. It's time to give our intelligence and law enforcement agencies the tools they need to track down and take out terrorists, while ensuring that their actions are subject to vigorous oversight that protects our freedom. So let me be perfectly clear: I have taught the Constitution, I understand the Constitution, and I will obey the Constitution when I am President of the United States.

Finally, it's time to once again inspire this nation to rally behind a common purpose – a higher purpose. Throughout his campaign, Senator Dodd spoke eloquently about the need to turn the page to a new era of public service. That is the legacy of his own family – the legacy of a father who stood up to the Nazis at Nuremberg, and a young man who enlisted in the Peace Corps after he heard President Kennedy's call to service on a cold Inauguration Day.

I am running for president because I believe deeply in the promise of America – without that promise, I would not be here today, because my story is not possible anywhere else on earth. I believe that each of us has an obligation to do our part to extend that promise – not just for ourselves, but for our country. That's why I share Senator Dodd's commitment to dramatically expand public service programs like AmeriCorps. That's why I will give all Americans more opportunities to serve their communities and their country. And that's why I will work to put an end to the division and distraction in our politics, so that we can finally come together to meet the great challenges we face. I know that it will not be easy to deliver the change that we seek, but I know that the road will be easier with the support of Senator Dodd and the millions of voices who have joined our call for change. With his help, I know that we can unite our Democratic Party, and build a coalition that brings together Democrats and Independents and Republicans behind a mandate for change. Together, we can keep America's promise in the 21st century.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Video: Debate and Dodd Endorsement (2008-02-26 21:18)

Check out the videos from tonight's debate, and also the Sen. Chris Dodd endorsement.

Ohio Debate: Bridging America

[EMBED]

Sen. Christopher Dodd endorses Sen. Barack Obama in Cleveland, Ohio

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Former Texas Gov. Mark White endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-27 09:47)

Mark White, former Texas governor, endorsed Barack Obama it was announced today.

"I am proud to support a candidate who has inspired a nation and unprecedented number of Texans to get involved and mobilize for a new direction in America. Barack's vision is exactly what our nation needs right now. He offers America the opportunity to move beyond the divisive politics and moneyed special interests and start addressing the many great challenges we face as a nation," Governor White said.

Governor White announced his endorsement at St. Joseph's Medical Center in Houston to emphasize Obama's plan to pass universal health care legislation during his first term as President.

"Right now, Texas has the highest rate of uninsured in nation," he said. "We are in desperate need of a comprehensive solution that will provide access to quality and affordable health care. I believe that Barack's health care plan is the answer we've been looking for."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Breaking: Rep. John Lewis Endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-27 15:43)

Forwarded from barackobama.com:

Breaking: Rep. John Lewis Endorses Obama
by Sam Graham-Felsen,
Wednesday, February 27, 2008 at 10:13 AM
Breaking from the Atlanta Journal-Constitution...

...Rep. John Lewis on Wednesday said he's switching his support from Sen. Hillary Clinton to Sen. Barack Obama in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Lewis cited the overwhelming preference for Obama in his district as a reason for his change of heart, but he also talked about Obama's campaign as transformational for the nation.

"Something's happening in America, something some of us did not see coming," Lewis said.

"Barack Obama has tapped into something that is extraordinary."

More on this soon...

Now it's your turn to step up for Obama – pick up the phone and help hit our mark of 1,000,000 calls by March 4th. Let's try to reach at least half a million by tomorrow – we can do this.

X

Barack responds to John McCain.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama Events for Mar. 4 (2008-02-27 19:28)

Barack In Texas Thursday, February 28 Stand for Change Townhall in Austin

Thursday, February 28 Stand for Change Townhall in Beaumont

Thursday, February 28 Stand for Change Rally
in Fort Worth

Friday, February 29 Stand for Change Rally
in San Antonio

Houston - Texas Precinct Captain Training
Wednesday, February 27, 2008 @ 11:00am
Houston, TX

Rally with George Lopez
Wednesday, February 27, 2008 @ 2:00pm
El Paso, TX

Women for Obama Phone Bank
Wednesday, February 27, 2008 @ 6:00pm
Houston, TX

Learn How to Caucus for Obama!
Wednesday, February 27, 2008 @ 7:00pm
Houston, TX

Town Hall with George Lopez in McAllen
Thursday, February 28, 2008 @ 10:30am
McAllen, TX

MORE EVENTS »

In Ohio:

✕

✕

In Rhode Island, actor Kal Penn will tour college campuses:

✕

University of Rhode Island- Kingston

Multicultural Center

Room: Hardge Room

74 Lower College Road

Kingston, RI

Doors open: 10:00 AM

Program beings: 10:15 AM

Rhode Island College

Student Union

Room: The café

600 Mount Pleasant Ave.

Providence, RI

Doors Open: 11:45 AM

Program beings: 11:55 AM

Brown University

Alumnae Hall

Room: The Crystal Room

194 Meeting Street

Providence, RI

Doors open: 1:15 PM

Program beings: 1:30 PM

Roger Williams University

New Academic Building

Room: Bayroom

One Old Ferry Road

Bristol, RI

Doors open: 2:45

Program begins: 3:00pm

Barack Obama will also visit Rhode Island on Saturday with details coming soon on barackobama.com .

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Toledo Blade (OH) endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-28 09:58)

Check out the Toledo Blade newspaper's (Ohio) endorsement of Barack Obama .

Obama, for change

THE Blade has a long-established principle of seldom endorsing a candidate in any primary election. It's easy to see, however, that this isn't a typical year. For the first time in history, the outcome of the Ohio primary may well determine the Democratic nominee for president of the United States.

We are not yet ready to say who we will endorse in November. But we wholeheartedly agree with something our editorial board heard on Sunday: 'We have to have a government that works for ordinary people.

We've got to be able to bring the country together so we have a working majority for change. We have to break down some of the ideologically driven polarization that prevents us from taking practical steps to make the country more competitive and to get opportunity to people.'

We urge Ohio Democrats to vote on Tuesday for the man who spoke those words, U.S. Sen. Barack Obama of Illinois. It has become clear during the year-long primary campaign that he eclipses Sen. Hillary Clinton as the strongest possible candidate to run in the general election against the presumptive Republican nominee, Sen. John McCain.

Moreover, we believe that Mr. Obama's inspiring life story, keen intellect, strong but quiet confidence, ready grasp of public policy issues, and his fresh and optimistic world view are what America needs after eight years of an administration that repeatedly has shown open contempt for the American people and for the Constitution.

Mr. Obama offers a breath of fresh air and new hope at a depressing time in the life of this nation. His selection would send an unmistakable signal to the world that America really may be living up to its promise of a just and truly pluralistic society.

The offspring of a father from Kenya and a mother from Kansas, young Obama grew up partly in Hawaii, partly in Indonesia. Were he to become president, we have no doubt that he would be seen — more than any previous occupant of the White House — as someone who is comfortably at home in the wider world. Yet his is the quintessential American story, that of the self-made man.

Those who object that he is too young overlook that he would, at 47, be a year older than Bill Clinton was when he was elected, and four years older than John F. Kennedy. Those who say that he is inexperienced in international affairs overlook that he sits on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The last two Democratic presidents, Mr. Clinton and Jimmy Carter, didn't have a day's service in Congress, much less foreign policy, before they took office, and it certainly hurt them.

Additionally, Mr. Obama, a younger and more physically vigorous man, will be in a far better position to push Americans into solving one of the biggest problems we face: that of an unhealthy, morbidly obese generation of young people, a health crisis that is costing the nation billions. We applaud the fact that, urged by his talented wife, Michelle, he has quit smoking. That alone should be an inspiration to millions. There are those who resent Mr. Obama's relatively rapid rise on the national scene and link his growing support to ingrained bias against putting a woman in the Oval Office. Certainly there may be some misguided prejudice against women. But that isn't what is going on this year. We agree the nation is more than ready for a female president. But Hillary Clinton is handicapped by her own baggage, and it has to do with her character, not her gender.

Voters during this primary process have come to know the real Hillary Clinton, and many have not liked what they've seen. Try as she might to project a warm personal image, she has come across mostly as a coldly calculating individual.

Moreover, her candidacy reminds voters of how the Clintons in effect looted the White House of expensive china, furniture, and other items when they left in January, 2001. And, if that weren't enough, they set up a gift registry to furnish their new home in New York. In contrast to such political royalism, Mr. Obama, his wife, and their two daughters live much closer to the reality of ordinary people.

America is badly in need of something new. We need this election to mark, at last, the end of the Vietnam period. Hillary Clinton is a product of that era and is, in a sense, still fighting its battles.

Barack Obama would be, figuratively if not literally, the first president of the 21st Century, much as John F. Kennedy was the first president born in the 20th century — each necessary to his time, and each able to see the world with a fresh, clear view.

Again, this endorsement does not mark our final verdict for November. John McCain, the all-but-certain GOP nominee, is a far more admirable figure than George W. Bush, although his policies on the war and the economy merely mimic those of the incumbent.

We will be scrutinizing the candidates very carefully as the general election campaign progresses. But at this point we feel free to break with tradition and enthusiastically recommend that on Tuesday, Ohio Democrats cast their primary ballots for Barack Obama.

Jim Borgman

X

From: Cincinnati Enquirer

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

San Marcos rally draws 12,000 Texans (2008-02-28 14:42)

Here's some video from Barack Obama's rally in San Marcos, Texas that attracted 12,000 Texans.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

New Obama TV Ads (2008-02-28 18:51)

Here are some new television ads running in Mar. 4 states.

"Plan," airing in Ohio. [EMBED]

"Oportunidad," running in Texas. [EMBED]

New ad running in Texas. [EMBED]

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

OSU Campus Newspaper endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-29 08:14)

OSU Campus Newspaper endorses Barack Obama (2008-02-29 08:55)

The Lantern, campus newspaper of Ohio State University, endorsed Barack Obama.

X

By endorsing Obama, The Lantern by no means doubts the leadership abilities of Sen. Hillary Clinton, who time and again, reminds us of her incredible resumé. Before this campaign season, most of us could not conceivably envision a black man or a woman occupying the Oval Office - at least not within the next several decades. However, as The New York Times editorial board aptly pointed out in its Jan. 25 endorsement of Clinton, "'Firstness' is not a reason to choose."

However, we have seen a side of Clinton throughout the last several weeks - many sides in fact - that leads us to question her tactics. In repeatedly accusing Obama of underhanded attacks, which she alleged to be right out of "Karl Rove's playbook," it is becoming clearer by the day that it is she who has become the Rove character in this novel. Her less-than-cataclysmic accusation of plagiarism last week coupled with her chief strategist's snide jabs at Obama's teenage drug use - which the Illinois senator had confessed to in his first book, "Dreams From My Father" - further illustrates the Clinton camp's evoking of the Rove-esque negativity that so intrinsically defined Bush's rise to power. And to remind us of the ever-present war, as she did during an interview Tuesday with David Brody of the Christian Broadcast Network, as a means of refuting Obama's so-called cult of personality, only serves to remind us how the war began in the first place and who voted to begin it.

Clinton's resumé is certainly impressive. Her undeniable and immense knowledge of the American political system and all its various cogs and inner workings provides her a great lure, particularly for those Americans so in shock from the complete ineptness and incompetence of the Bush administration. Brilliant as she might be, she is not the remedy for the political apathy that has effectively transfused itself throughout the last seven years. She simply has too many enemies and the Republicans have a boundless arsenal against her. The conservative electorate so put off by McCain would flock to the polls in droves should Clinton lock the nomination. Their hatred for her is far and beyond any grudges they might hold for the oftentimes centrist Arizona senator. As Bush's former deputy assistant Peter Wehner wrote for the Washington Post Feb. 3, the GOP would not have much ammunition should Obama seal the nomination. "A number of prominent Republicans I know, who would wage a pitched battle against Hillary Clinton, like Obama and would find it hard to generate much enthusiasm in opposing him," he said.

By refusing to accept campaign money from lobbyists - a practice many contend undermines the very foundation of democracy - Obama has proven politicians can feasibly run on grassroots support alone and prosper from it. It would be wonderful to have a president not beholden to the PACs as we are so used to. Unfortunately, in order for him to be a competent leader, Obama will need to learn that by ignoring special interests, he cannot hope to get much legislation passed in Congress. Although he might be through playing "the game" in Washington, his colleagues are not.

The Bush administration has left the country quaking - stuck in a horribly planned and executed war with no visible end, teetering on the edge of economic recession and reeling from fear (and future fear) of civil liberty reprisals stemming from the War on Terror. We have confidence in McCain's abilities to begin to bring the country out of this hole. It would be a great advantage to have a war veteran at the helm for once. We do, however, hold concerns for his complicity and continued support for Bush's Iraq War policies, which have only lengthened our unnecessary occupation.

In supporting Obama for president, we at The Lantern feel he is in the best possible position to follow through on his plans, to unite the country behind a single cause and begin to fix the fractured nation Bush will have left behind next January. As Caroline Kennedy wrote of Obama Jan. 27 for the Times, "I have never had a president who inspired me the way people tell me that my father inspired them," she wrote. "But for the first time, I believe I have found the man who could be that president - not just for me, but for a new generation of Americans."

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

A million calls by March 4th (2008-02-29 10:50)

The official Obama campaign has asked supporters to make 1,000,000 calls to voters by March 4th. To participate, click on the image below. If you don't have free long distance, you may be able to make calls from an office or other location near you.

Former Dallas Cowboy star Emmett Smith introduces Barack Obama at a Dallas rally on Feb. 20, 2008.

[EMBED]

Charles Gibson of ABC News visits Barack Obama's campaign headquarters in Chicago.

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Social Security Administration Union endorses Obama (2008-02-29 14:53)

Local Council 220 of the American Federation of Government Employees (AFGE), representing 25,000, Social Security Administration workers endorsed Sen. Barack Obama today for president.

The parent AFGE organizations that represents 600,000 federal workers in the District of Columbia has not endorsed a candidate. Here is Local 220's press release:

WASHINGTON, Feb. 29 /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ – The American Federation of Government Employees' Council 220, which represents 25,000 federal employees in the Social Security Administration (SSA) field offices, today announced that it will support Sen. Barack Obama for President of the United States. "It was a difficult choice between two highly qualified candidates, but in the end we feel Sen. Obama will offer the kind of new leadership necessary to restore the Social Security Administration to a first class agency," said Witold Skwierczynski president of AFGE Council 220. "Sen. Obama has been a friend of labor, displaying a firm understanding of the critical importance of both a healthy labor movement and strong government in America. We are confident that as President, Sen. Obama will look closely at SSA's needs and work to reestablish the necessary working relationship between the agency and its bargaining unit employees."

In recent years, public access to SSA services has been severely limited because of budget restrictions. Proposed budget cuts and updates to "modernize" the system have been misguided and poorly implemented, such as the push to force seniors to conduct the complicated SSA process entirely on the internet.

The Council said it retains the utmost respect for Sen. Clinton, but notes that the next administration must be prepared to make the changes necessary to meet SSA's critical challenges. Unfortunately, the previous Clinton Administration made cuts that severely limited the agency's ability to effectively pursue its mission, a trend accelerated by the Bush Administration's agenda to create privatized social security. "What SSA needs is leadership that respects the value of its employees and seeks their input as the agency moves through the 21st century. We believe the candidate most apt to bring about that change is Sen. Barack Obama," added Skwierczynski.

The Council of Social Security Field Office Locals, Council 220, is an affiliate of the American Federation of Government Employees. AFGE HAS NOT YET ENDORSED a candidate in the presidential race.

The American Federation of Government Employees (AFGE) is the largest federal employee union, representing 600,000 workers in the federal government and the government of the District of Columbia.

American Federation of Government Employees

Video from Texas and Ohio Alamobama

[EMBED]

Former Army captain talks about his support for Barack Obama

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2008-02-29 14:53)

Local Council 220 of the American Federation of Government Employees (AFGE), representing 25,000, Social Security Administration workers endorsed Sen. Barack Obama today for president.

The

WASHINGTON, Feb. 29 /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ – The American Federation of Government Employees' Council 220, which represents 25,000 federal employees in the Social Security Administration (SSA) field offices, today announced that it will support Sen. Barack Obama for President of the United States.

"It was a difficult choice between two highly qualified candidates, but in the end we feel Sen. Obama will offer the kind of new leadership necessary to restore the Social Security Administration to a first class agency," said Witold Skwierczynski president of AFGE Council 220. "Sen. Obama has been a friend of labor, displaying a firm understanding of the critical importance of both a healthy labor movement and strong government in America. We are confident that as President, Sen. Obama will look closely at SSA's needs and work to reestablish the necessary working relationship between the agency and its bargaining unit employees."

In recent years, public access to SSA services has been severely limited because of budget restrictions. Proposed budget cuts and updates to "modernize" the system have been misguided and poorly implemented, such as the push to force seniors to conduct the complicated SSA process entirely on the internet.

The Council said it retains the utmost respect for Sen. Clinton, but notes that the next administration must be prepared to make the changes necessary to meet SSA's critical challenges. Unfortunately, the previous Clinton Administration made cuts that severely limited the agency's ability to effectively pursue its mission, a trend accelerated by the Bush Administration's agenda to create privatized social security.

"What SSA needs is leadership that respects the value of its employees and seeks their input as the agency moves through the 21st century. We believe the candidate most apt to bring about that change is Sen. Barack Obama," added Skwierczynski.

The Council of Social Security Field Office Locals, Council 220, is an affiliate of the American Federation of Government Employees. AFGE HAS NOT YET ENDORSED a candidate in the presidential race.

The American Federation of Government Employees (AFGE) is the largest federal employee union, representing 600,000 workers in the federal government and the government of the District of Columbia.

American Federation of Government Employees

Upcoming Obama Events (2008-02-29 20:17)

"Keeping America's Promise" Town Hall Meeting with Barack Obama

Saturday, March 1, 2008

Valley Forge High School Auditorium

9999 Independence Boulevard

Parma Heights, OH

Doors Open 6:30 PM

Event Begins 8:00 PM

This event is free and open to the public, but tickets are required. Free tickets are available at the following locations:

Obama for America Parma Office

Parma Town Plaza

7719 W Ridgewood Dr.

Cleveland, OH 44129

Hours: 10 AM – 9 PM

Friday and Saturday

SEIU Local 1199

1771 E. 30th St.

Cleveland, OH 44114

Hours: 10 AM – 9 PM

Friday and Saturday

For security reasons, do not bring bags. Please limit personal belongings. No sign or banners allowed.

Houston- Town Hall with Gov. Tim Kaine

Saturday, March 01, 2008 @ 2:00pm

Houston, TX

Forest Whitaker in Texarkana

Saturday, March 01, 2008 @ 6:45pm

Texarkana, TX

Rally with Forest Whitaker
Sunday, March 02, 2008 @ 12:45pm
Marshall, TX

Kal Penn's College GOTV Tour Saturday, March 1, 2008
One Million for Change Rally—"March Forth Towards March 4"
Shiloh Baptist Church
720 Mount Vernon Avenue
Columbus, OH 43203
Event Begins 9:00 AM
Canvass Kickoff at OSU OFA Office
Ohio State University
2240 North High Street
Columbus, OH 43201
Event Begin: 10:45 AM
Event at Denison University
Denison University
Slayter Auditorium, Fourth Floor
100 West College Street
Granville, OH 43023
Event Begins: 12:15
Event at Ohio Wesleyan University
Ohio Wesleyan University
61 South Sandusky Street
Delaware, OH 43015
Event Begins: 3:00 PM
Kal Penn in Ohio.
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

2.3 March

Cincinnati Enquirer endorses Barack Obama (2008-03-01 09:02)

The Cincinnati Enquirer endorsed Barack Obama today for Democrats.

THE ENQUIRER

Enquirer endorses Obama on Democratic side Illinois senator offers energy, rich experiences, fresh ideas Despite all of the jokes and misplaced campaign rhetoric, it is the experiences of Sens. Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama that have set them apart - set them above - the crowded Democratic field that started the race for their party's nomination so many months ago.

Clinton's experience as first lady often is derided as "secondhand," or somehow invalid. Actually, it gave her a perspective on the possibilities and limitations of the presidency that no other candidate for the office ever has had.

Beyond that, she has been a senator for the past eight years, carving out her own political niche on the national scene. Her service on the Senate Armed Services Committee has involved her intimately in the details of the ongoing wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, subjects the next commander in chief will need to come to terms with immediately.

Obama was born to an American mother and Kenyan father, raised in a multicultural environment, graduated with an Ivy League education and worked as a community organizer on the streets of Chicago before becoming a civil rights lawyer. His life and experiences reflect the diversity of America in ways no other presidential candidate has experienced.

He points to the richness of these experiences as the reason he has earned a reputation of uniting people around what he describes on his Web site as the "politics of purpose" - getting people to work beyond their partisan differences to achieve common goals.

These are both extraordinarily talented candidates, but it is Obama's ability to reach beyond the partisan divide and gather in support that prompts The Enquirer to give him our endorsement for the Democratic nomination.

The true differences on policy between Obama and Clinton - on Iraq, on trade and a host of other issues, are narrow.

On health care, we prefer his approach of lowering costs rather than mandating participation.

Obama and Clinton both say ending the war in Iraq, while preserving U.S. security, would be their top priority upon taking office. Both say they would consult with the military experts and withdraw American forces and quickly as prudently possible. This will be a clear point of debate in the general election with John McCain, the presumptive Republican nominee.

Clinton has shown herself to be an able senator, with an impressive grasp of details. But she remains for many in this country a polarizing figure.

Much of that dislike undoubtedly is residual disapproval of her husband, former President Bill Clinton, and his policies and performance in office. That may be unfair to her, but it remains a fact of political life. But her own style has opened her to criticism as well. Her major public policy involvement during her husband's administration was the failed attempt to come up with a universal health care policy.

Critics remember her closed-door, high-handed and uncompromising approach, which drew opposition from many Democrats as well as Republicans and doomed the initiative.

She says she has learned from those mistakes, yet her style often seems abrasive and superior when criticized.

A president must be able to make hard decisions but must also be able to face - even welcome - dissenting views and understand that there can be validity in the opposition.

Obama has been on the national stage for a relatively short time, but in that time he has demonstrated an ability and a willingness to work with others. He does not waste time demonizing those with different views.

One obvious example is his work with Sen. Dick Lugar, R-Ind., on a new non-proliferation effort with Russia designed to keep nuclear weapons from falling into terrorist hands. He also lists the need for coming up with a workable, bipartisan national energy policy as one of the first things he would tackle in office. But perhaps Obama's most impressive achievement so far is the excitement he has engendered in the political process itself.

He is a gifted public speaker, and the energy he brings to his campaign seems to have brought many people, including many young people, into the political process for the first time.

Obama has an undeniable appeal that is attracting people of divergent backgrounds. He seems able to find ways to work even with people who don't share his views.

We believe that of the two, he has the better chance at quickly creating the working coalitions that would allow for the progress a new administration will need in dealing with the issues at hand.

Jim Borgman

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama's Statement for Women's History Month (2008-03-01 12:06)

Here is the statement released by Barack Obama for Women's History Month.

Women's History Month isn't just a chance to celebrate women's history; it's a chance to honor the extraordinary role women have played in shaping American history. From midnight journeys on the Underground Railroad to marches for women's suffrage and civil rights, from the bomber assembly lines of World War II to the boardrooms of today, women have always shown us what we can achieve when we refuse to settle for the world as it is and choose to remake the world as it should be.

But despite the achievements we honor this month, we know we still have challenges to overcome. We need to build an America where women earn the same pay as men for the same work, and have time off to care for a loved one who's sick; where women have control over the health care decisions that affect their lives, and don't have to choose between their kids and their careers. It's not enough to have a holiday that honors women if we don't also make sure our laws value women.

This holiday is particularly meaningful to me because I would not be the person I am without the women in my life. I was raised by a single mother across two continents, and by a grandmother who instilled in me her own Midwestern values. And my wife Michelle - a woman who's overcome a number of challenges as a lawyer and hospital executive - continues to make me a better man.

Every night I'm home, Michelle and I tuck two little girls into bed. And we want to make sure that they have the same opportunities as every little boy in this country. That's the dream that women have fought for throughout our nation's history, and that's the dream I'll fight to make real as President of the United States.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Barack Obama speaks on Education and Parenting in Beaumont, TX (2008-03-01 16:23)

[EMBED]

MAKE THE CALL

Barack speaks on the Home Mortgage Crisis
[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Gov. Deval Patrick and SEIU's Andy Stern in Youngstown, Ohio (2008-03-02 08:22)

Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick and SEIU President Andy Stern campaign for Sen. Barack Obama in Youngstown, Ohio in this YouTube video.

[EMBED]

1,500,000 CALLS
BY MARCH 4TH

SO FAR THIS WEEK
1 7 6 2 8 4 4

The new campaign goal is 1.5 million calls by the close of polls on Mar. 4.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-03-03 23:56:00)

So Obama is going to have a black phone in the white house instead of the red one LOL. I see a black one on this page not a red one.

A Call for 1.5 Million Calls (2008-03-02 16:11)

Obama campaign manager David Plouffe sent out this email appeal today.

Dear Paul,

Yesterday, supporters all across the country responded to Barack's request by making more than 300,000 calls into crucial March 4th primary states.

We reached our goal of one million calls much faster than expected, so we're setting a new goal: 1,500,000 calls to voters by Tuesday.

Use our online phonebanking tool and start making calls right now:

<http://my.barackobama.com/call>

There's no easier or more effective way to keep building momentum for this campaign than making calls to likely supporters.

And there's no more important time to get involved than right now.

The primaries in Ohio, Texas, Rhode Island, and Vermont this Tuesday, March 4th, could be decisive for this campaign. Reach out to voters in these states, listen to what's important to them, and share your reasons for supporting Barack.

The online phonebanking tool is easy and fun to use. Here's how it works:

1. Choose a state you'd like to call.
2. Log into My.BarackObama.com and get a list of 20 names that only you will receive. (If you don't have a My.BarackObama account, creating one is fast and easy.)
3. Click on a name and you'll be led through a simple script, question by question.
4. Start making calls.

It's as easy as that – a list of likely supporters and an opportunity to make personal connections right from your own home.

You are the voice of this campaign, and there are thousands of people out there, waiting to hear from you.

Make your voice heard. Start making calls today:

<http://my.barackobama.com/call>

Thank you for making this happen,

David

David Plouffe

Campaign Manager

Obama for America

P.S. – There are a number of specific calling campaigns that you can select if you have special skills or interests.

If you are fluent in Spanish, you can reach out to Spanish speakers:

<http://my.barackobama.com/spanishcalls>

If you are a woman, you can choose to speak with other women about why you support Barack:

<http://my.barackobama.com/wfocalls>

If you're a student, you can talk to other students:

<http://my.barackobama.com/studentcalls>

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Texas: Road to Change (2008-03-03 09:56)

Take a look at this YouTube video of Barack Obama's campaign in Texas.

Road to Change: Texas [EMBED]

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Eastwood (2008-03-03 22:58:00)

Is Obama really for change?

<http://www.eastwoodzhao.com/barack-obama-is-the-lesser-of-two-evils/>

Anonymous (2008-03-03 23:52:00)

Vote for Obama uhh not if he was the only one running. GO HILLARY GO!!!!

Ohio: Road to Change (2008-03-03 16:19)

Check out the Ohio Road to Change video profiling the campaign in Ohio, and also a YouTube video showing Ohio supporters in Parma explain why they are supporting Barack.

Ohio: Road to Change [EMBED]

Parma, Ohio: Why Barack?

[EMBED]

X

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

March 4th Voter Info for Ohio, Texas, Rhode Island, Vermont (2008-03-03 22:42)

From barackobama.com :

March 4th Voter Info: Ohio, Texas, Rhode Island, Vermont

by Christopher Hass

Monday, March 03, 2008 at 05:03 PM

Tomorrow voters in Ohio, Texas, Rhode Island and Vermont will have their chance to add their voices to the millions across the country calling for change.

If you live in one these four states, please take a moment to review the information below to make sure you know when, where and how to vote for Barack:

In Ohio

Polling Hours:

Polls are open from 6:30am to 7:30pm. Voters in line at 7:30pm must be permitted to vote.

- FIND YOUR POLLING LOCATION

All registered voters can vote in the Ohio Democratic Primary, even Republicans and Independents.

Identification Requirements:

At the polls, you must verify your identity and address with any of the following: valid photo ID, current bank statement, utility bill, paycheck, or any government-issued document.

If you have any problems or questions, call our Voter Hotline at 1-866-675-2008 and press 4.

- LEARN MORE

In Texas

Polling & Caucusing Times:

Polls for the Democratic presidential primary are open from 7:00am until 7:00pm. Any voter in line by 7:00pm must be permitted to vote.

Precinct conventions begin at 7:15pm, immediately after the polls close. The precinct conventions are open to anyone who voted in the Democratic presidential primary.

- FIND YOUR POLLING & CAUCUS LOCATION

Identification Requirements:

When you go to vote, you should bring your voter registration certificate. If you have lost your certificate or forget to bring it, you may still vote by signing an affidavit and providing some other form of identification, including a driver's license, photo ID, utility bill, bank statement, paycheck, government check or other government-issued document (such as a birth certificate, U.S. passport, and any official government mail addressed to you).

- LEARN MORE
- FAQ

In Rhode Island

Polling Hours:

Polling hours vary by city, but open as early as 7:00am and no later than 9:00am. All polls are open until 9:00pm. Voters in line by 9:00pm must be permitted to vote. See the "FAQ" link below for specific town polling hours.

- FIND YOUR POLLING LOCATION

If you believe you were left off the voter list or otherwise prevented from regular voting by error, you must be allowed to cast a provisional ballot.

Identification Requirements:

No identification is required at the polling place unless you are a first-time voter who registered by mail and did not provide identification at that time. If this is the case, you must bring one of the following: a valid Rhode Island driver's license, Rhode Island ID, current utility bill, bank statement, paycheck, government check or another government document.

- LEARN MORE
- FAQ

In Vermont

Polling Hours:

Polling hours vary by town. Polls will open no later than 10:00am, and will be open until 7:00pm. Any voter in line by 7:00pm must be permitted to vote. There is no party registration in Vermont, so any registered voter can vote in the Democratic primary.

- FIND YOUR POLLING LOCATION

Identification Requirements:

When you go to vote, you should bring your voter registration certificate. If you have lost your certificate or forget to bring it, you may still vote by signing an affidavit and providing some other form of identification, including a driver's license, photo ID, utility bill, bank statement, paycheck, government check or other government-issued document (such as a birth certificate, U.S. passport, and any official government mail addressed to you).

If you are a first-time voter in Vermont who registered by mail and did not provide identification at that time, you should bring a valid photo ID, current utility bill, bank statement, paycheck, government check, or other government document that shows your name and address.

- LEARN MORE
- POLLING LOCATIONS & TIMES

Barack Obama answers questions from an audience of veterans in San Antonio, Texas.

[EMBED]

Canadian Parliament speaks on Obama's NAFTA Position

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Fwd: Texans rally for Barack Obama (2008-03-04 08:24)

Texans Rally for Obama

Special to the NNPA from the Dallas Examiner Originally posted 3/4/2008

DALLAS (NNPA) - Sen. Barack Obama held his first Dallas rally at Reunion arena last week. His rock star popularity drew more than 15,000 would-be supporters of all ages who began lining up before the break of dawn to get a closer look at the man who could become America's first African- American President. The senator electrified the diverse audience during the rally that drew media attention from as far away as Japan. The event, which began at 11 a.m. on a work day, nearly filled the arena to capacity and if this is any indicator, Obama may prove to be a more worthy challenger for the Texas vote than Clinton anticipated.

As Obamamania hits the state, several prominent lawmakers have added their names to a number of Texas leaders who have endorsed Obama for president.

According to the Associated Press, Waco Rep. Jim Dunnam, leader of the House Democratic Caucus, said Obama would help state Democrats improve public schools and bring health insurance coverage to more people.

"In Texas and across the rest of the country, we want a president who will finally put doing what is right above corporate special interests and radical partisan agendas," Dunnam said. "We want change we can believe in, not the same old Washington-style promises made and promises broken."

Veteran state Sen. Royce West, a Dallas Democrat also praised his ability to reach a diverse population.

"Barack Obama has clearly demonstrated a unique ability to reach across political lines, energize independents, inspire youth and bridge varying ideologies to mobilize and reinvigorate the Democratic Party," West said.

Sen. Obama pulled in big endorsements in the superdelegate race with the recent announcement of support by Congresswoman Eddie Bernice Johnson, who was among the first of the superdelegates from Texas to announce her endorsement, and U.S. Rep. Chet Edwards of Waco.

"I believe Senator Obama can bring about real change in Washington - change that will make a positive difference for average working Americans struggling to keep up with the high costs of health care, gasoline and education," Edwards said.

Despite wide speculation that Mexicans would not vote for Obama due to their allegiance to Clinton and also because of his race, he has managed to garner major support from the Mexican American Democrats, the oldest Hispanic group among Texas Democrats.

"The Mexican-American community needs more than just Spanish-speaking candidates trying to get the Hispanic vote. We need candidates who are committed to improve the lives of Latino men, women and children whether citizens, legal residents or undocumented by writing policies that work for us," said John Lopez, chairman of the group's endorsing committee.

In a local publication, State Rep. Rafael Anchia (D-Dallas) chided media for comments suggesting race would be a barrier in Obama's ability to reach Hispanics.

"Our main focus should not be on who can appeal to which racial or ethnic group more than another, but which candidate can unite all races, ethnicities, age groups, faiths and economic classes as a nation to address our common challenges and to restore our historic position as a respected leader of the free world," Anchia continues.

"I am the Latino son of immigrants, but, rather than engaging in the contrived politics of division, I want Barack Obama, a Black man of mixed ethnicity, to be my president. How's that for the politics of hope?" State Rep. Roberto Alonzo (D-Dallas) also endorsed Obama, in a lengthy endorsement, the Representative states, "For all those who question Obama's lack of experience in Washington, all I have to say is, that in this case, this may indeed be a blessing in disguise in many ways. Yes, the man is young, but let's face it, he has had more varied, diverse and quality-filled, challenging experiences in this young life as a public servant and statesman who gets better by the month, rather than by the decade, as is usually the case with so many of our Capitol Hill politicians."

In his endorsement Alonzo quotes Aldous Huxley: "Experience is not what happens to a man; it is what a man does with what happens to him."

These endorsements come as an upset to Clinton who has been counting on the Hispanic vote in Texas, campaigning in predominantly Hispanic regions and playing up her work 36 years ago registering Hispanic voters in Texas.

However, early last week, Democratic Reps. Trey Martinez-Fischer of San Antonio, Eddie Lucio III of Brownsville and Ana Hernandez of Houston announced their support for Obama. Leticia Van de Putte of San Antonio endorsed Hillary Rodham Clinton.

Texas Democrat, former Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox also endorsed Clinton.

"In Texas we have a phrase, 'She's earned her spurs.' Hillary has spent more than 35 years earning her spurs and she is the best leader for our country," Mattox said in a prepared statement Feb. 19.

Also with Mattox that night in support of Clinton were former Texas Supreme Court Justice Bob Gammage, state Rep. Valinda Bolton of Austin and Cathy Bonner, a former aide to the late Gov. Ann Richards and a leader of a major cancer research proposition Texas voters approved in November.

But the real test comes March 4 when Texans across the state show up to make their own personal final endorsements. Although early voting began in Texas on Feb. 19 and ends on Feb 29, Texas Democrats will use both a primary election and precinct caucuses March 4 to allocate the largest single bloc of delegates left on the Democratic presidential nomination calendar.

A total of 193 delegates are at stake. The primary election will choose 126 of them, but it's really 31 separate elections - one in each state Senate district. Each district gets from two to eight delegates based on the Democratic turnout there in past elections.

The delegates in each state Senate district primary will be allocated proportionally among the candidates, with a minimum of 15 percent of the vote required to qualify for any delegates.

State Democratic Party spokesman Hector Nieto said Democrats in low-turnout districts have only themselves to blame for the number of delegates they get.

Another 67 delegates will be awarded based on attendance at precinct caucuses - Texas calls them conventions - held as soon as the primary polls close on March 4.

These operate like the better known Iowa caucuses. They elect delegates to county and state Senate district conventions March 29, which in turn elect delegates to the state Democratic convention June 6 through June 7.

The actual number of caucus delegates each candidate gets depends on the preferences of those who show up at the state convention, but theoretically that allocation is prefigured by the results of the March 4 evening caucuses. So news organizations will report the likely number for each candidate based on the caucus results the evening of March 4, just as they do in Iowa and other caucus states.

"Obviously it is a complex system, but the reason it's so complex is to ensure that everyone is properly represented," Nieto said.

Texas has another 35 so-called superdelegates who are not bound by any of this voting. These delegates are members of Congress, Democratic national committee members, and leading state party officials. "It's not new," Texas Democratic strategist Ed Martin said of the 20-year-old primary-caucus system. "It's a system that's been supported by Democrats" to reward those who turn out for Democrats in the general election.

Kelley Shannon, Associated Press, and Tuala Williams, The Dallas Examiner, contributed to this report.

X

MAKE THE CALL

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Paul Tewes on Voting in Ohio (2008-03-04 12:45)

Forwarded from barackboama.com :

Statement from Ohio State Director Paul Tewes

by Sam Graham-Felsen,

Tuesday, March 04, 2008 at 11:18 AM

Ohio State Director Paul Tewes:

Our campaign's goal today is to ensure that any registered voter in the state of Ohio can go to the polls and cast their ballot for their candidate of choice without interference. We understand that the Clinton campaign may want to depress turnout because Barack Obama has closed a 20-point gap over the course of this month as voters across the state got to know him. It has been the hallmark of the Democratic party to educate and protect the rights of voters. If the Clinton campaign disagrees with that principle, they should say so today.

We have received reports from around the state of independents and Republicans who chose to vote in the Democratic primary receiving issue only or Republican ballots instead of the Democratic ballot they were entitled to. We have also had reports that the voter ID requirements have been misstated at various locations, causing some voters to be turned away.

We will take action when necessary to ensure that all eligible voters are able to cast their votes and to have their votes counted.

We will continue to monitor the polls to ensure that all Ohioans who choose to participate in today's election are able to do so regardless of who they choose to vote for.

If you've experienced any problems at the polls, visit our National Voter Protection Center and report them...

X

X

Barack supporters getting out the vote in Ohio:

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

CNN projects Barack Obama winning Vermont (2008-03-04 17:03)

Barack Obama has won the first state to close its polls today, Vermont, according to CNN.

Questions about the Texas Caucus? Call 1-866-675-2008

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Ruby (2008-03-04 22:11:00)

Urgent: Ohio Irregularity Strategy.

I am a political amateur, not a strategist, but I feel it is my duty to post this in case that the author of this blog is connected to Senator Obama's campaign.

If the campaign is planning to make any irregularities in poll closing times an issue, please advise it to do so in an intelligent way. Express sadness that voters were disenfranchised, but be conciliatory. Proclaim that you will not divide the Democratic Party with lawsuit after lawsuit. The voting rules are confusing to many, and a suit in Ohio leading to a suit in Florida, Texas, or Michigan could lead to bitterness about both candidates.

Instead make it an issue that the American people cannot possibly see to Obama's detriment. Have it be his rallying call to make sure that early poll closings and lack of voting machines in urban districts do not make the difference against John McCain.

Senator Obama can say something like, "every eligible voter who lines up to exercise their voice, whether in East St. Louis or in West Hollywood, should have that vote counted."

Thinking about Campaign Strategy (2008-03-05 10:24)

After last night's results, I know strongly agree with those pundits who say that Obama will have a hard time winning in state's with strong Democratic establishments, especially those with deep ties to Bill Clinton's administration. After all, the former president helped a lot of people get elected and appointed in those states.

Barack Obama does well in red states and states with strong independent and swing votes. He can also do well in very "liberal" areas that buck the Democratic establishment like the state of Vermont or Barbara Lee's district in Oakland. Now, Barack still leads in both pledged delegates and overall delegates. He leads by about 132 in pledged delegates depending on which estimate you read and he could increase that if he maintains his lead in the Texas Caucus. A win in that caucus would also put his overall lead in delegates to about 100. Barack also still leads the national popular vote although the Texas Caucus sort of muddles up how to tally that count.

However, the results last night bring to question what strategy should be employed in the upcoming states. Pennsylvania is the biggest prize among those states but it also has a very old school system among the Democratic establishment that is hard to break through. So far they seem to be more supportive to Hillary who has been leading also in the local polls.

Of course, you have to fight in Pennsylvania because you don't want Hillary to run away with such a big state. But how much in terms of resources and time do you commit to that state as opposed to the others?

A lot will depend on an analysis of each of the upcoming states. For example, how many people are still undecided in each state? Are there a lot weak supporters that could be persuaded?

The Obama campaign will have to figure how whether independent and swing voters will be a factor in each state, and how easy it will be to get out the vote. Big states require big resources to turn out voters.

Also, it's all about the pledged delegate count followed in importance of the national popular vote. Winning these pledged delegates and votes means going beyond state strategy to focus on specific districts or counties.

Overall, Obama's team will have to decide on which strategy will reap the most benefits, or return on investment as they say in the corporate world.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Randy (2008-03-05 22:47:00)

I am hoping that this 'Dream Team' never becomes reality regardless of who is on top. Barack's entire campaign for "Change" will go the way of the pony express in a hurry with her involved with an administration.

Cris (2008-03-06 11:25:00)

The way the media is covering Senator Clinton's "victory" in Texas is expected, but still biased. It certainly creates an interesting narrative, but at the same time inserts the media's influence over the public perception of the race. Thankfully, it works in the other direction as well, so I'm awaiting the next pro-Obama storyline that will shift the focus back.

Also, feel free to let me know what you think of my blog: Cuban for Obama

David Plouffe: Doing the Math (2008-03-05 14:30)

Obama campaign manager David Plouffe sent out this email today.

Paul –

Our projections show the most likely outcome of yesterday's elections will be that Hillary Clinton gained 187 delegates, and we gained 183.

That's a net gain of 4 delegates out of more than 370 delegates available from all the states that voted.

For comparison, that's less than half our net gain of 9 delegates from the District of Columbia alone. It's also less than our net gain of 8 from Nebraska , or 12 from Washington State . And it's considerably less than our net gain of 33 delegates from Georgia .

The task for the Clinton campaign yesterday was clear. In order to have a plausible path to the nomination, they needed to score huge delegate victories and cut into our lead.

They failed.

It's clear, though, that Senator Clinton wants to continue an increasingly desperate, increasingly negative – and increasingly expensive – campaign to tear us down.

That's her decision. But it's not stopping John McCain , who clinched the Republican nomination last night, from going on the offensive. He's already made news attacking Barack, and that will only become more frequent in the coming days.

Right now, it's essential for every single supporter of Barack Obama to step up and help fight this two-front battle. In the face of attacks from Hillary Clinton and John McCain , we need to be ready to take them on.

Will you make an online donation of $25 right now?

<https://donate.barackobama.com/math>

The chatter among pundits may have gotten better for the Clinton campaign after last night, but by failing to cut into our lead, the math – and their chances of winning – got considerably worse.

Today, we still have a lead of more than 150 delegates, and there are only 611 pledged delegates left to win in the upcoming contests.

By a week from today, we will have competed in Wyoming and Mississippi . Two more states and 45 more delegates will be off the table.

But if Senator Clinton wants to continue this, let's show that we're ready.

Make an online donation of $25 now to show you're willing to fight for this:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/math>

This nomination process is an opportunity to decide what our party needs to stand for in this election.

We can either take on John McCain with a candidate who's already united Republicans and Independents against us, or we can do it with a campaign that's united Americans from all parties around a common purpose.

We can debate John McCain about who can clean up Washington by nominating a candidate who's taken more money from lobbyists than he has, or we can do it with a campaign that hasn't taken a dime of their money because we've been funded by you.

We can present the American people with a candidate who stood shoulder-to-shoulder with McCain on the worst foreign policy disaster of our generation, and agrees with him that George Bush deserves the benefit of the doubt on Iran , or we can nominate someone who opposed the war in Iraq from the beginning and will not support a march to war with Iran .

John McCain may have a long history of straight talk and independent thinking, but he has made the decision in this campaign to offer four more years of the very same policies that have failed us for the last eight.

We need a Democratic candidate who will present the starkest contrast to those failed policies of the past.

And that candidate is Barack Obama .

Please make a donation of $25 now:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/math>

Thank you,

David

David Plouffe

Campaign Manager

Obama for America

✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Obama Gains more Delegates in Texas (2008-03-05 22:51)

From barackobama.com:

Obama Wins Delegate Fight in Texas

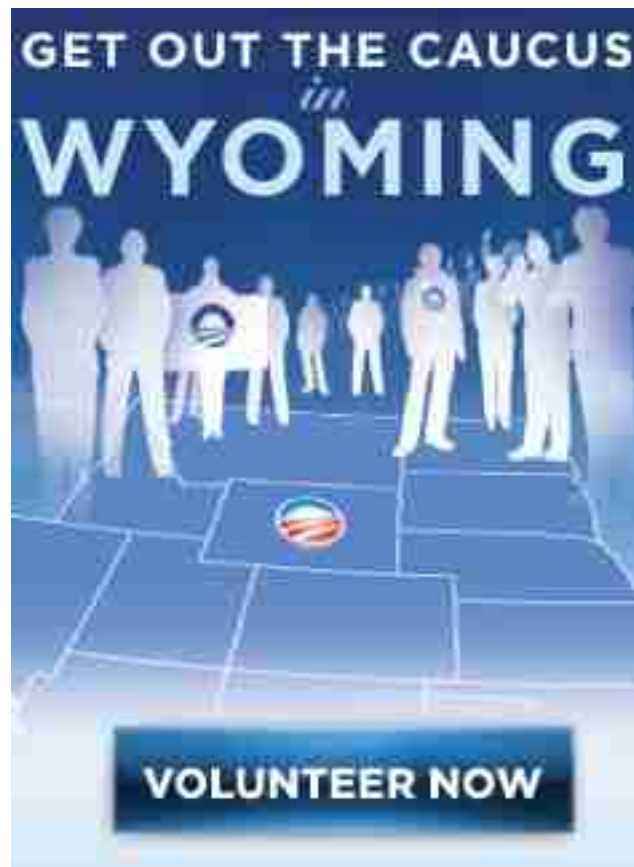

by Sam Graham-Felsen

, Wednesday, March 05, 2008 at 01:29 PM

AUSTIN – Obama Texas State Director Adrian Saenz issued a statement on the projected primary and caucus results that show Senator Obama won more Texas delegates than Senator Clinton.

“By fighting the primary to a near-draw and earning a resounding victory in the caucus, the people of Texas have moved Barack Obama one step closer to claiming the Democratic nomination for president,” said Adrian Saenz. “Texans in both parties and of all ages sent a clear message that the American people are ready for the kind of change that Barack Obama will bring to Washington, DC as our 44th President.”

Because of the close finish, Senator Clinton will likely net only two delegates up-for-grabs in the Texas Primary. Based on a large sample of caucus results in all 31 state senate districts, Senator Obama is projected to post a substantial victory in the Texas caucus and, thereby, net at least seven delegates. This means that Senator Obama will win at least five more pledged delegates from Texas than Senator Clinton.

X X
X X
X X
X X

X X
X X
X X
X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

ConsortiumNews: Guess What? Obama Is Winning Texas (2008-03-06 08:21)

Here is an interesting article on the Texas race where the counting still has not been completed.

Independent Investigative Journalism Since 1995

Guess What? Obama Is Winning Texas

By Lisa Pease

March 6, 2008 Editor's Note: Hillary Clinton prevailed in the Texas primary, beating Barack Obama by a 51-to-48 margin and claiming 65 delegates to his 61. However, Texas has a two-step process for apportioning its delegates, meaning that Obama had a chance to reverse Clinton's four-delegate net gain in the caucus phase. Historian Lisa Pease examines how this curious twist in the march to the Democratic presidential nomination is turning out:

Tuesday night, as the polls closed, the media proclaimed Barack Obama the winner of Vermont and gave all the other state contests of the day – Ohio, Rhode Island, and Texas – to Hillary Clinton.

But there was one big problem. A Texas-sized problem.

The election results from the Lone Star State's caucuses had only just started coming in.

Texas is the only state in the union that allows people to legally vote twice: once in the primary, and once in their local caucus, or, as they are called in Texas, "precinct conventions."

Roughly two-thirds of the pledged delegates (126) are determined by the outcome of the primary, and the remaining delegates (67) are determined by the results of the caucuses.

Only those who have already voted in the primary are allowed to vote in a caucus.

When the media proclaimed Clinton the victor in Texas, the caucus results were simply not part of the equation. But now that more than 24 hours have passed, something fascinating is happening.

Obama appears to be winning Texas.

Delegates, Not Votes

In the Democratic primary, as in the general election, the popular vote does not determine the winner. In the nominating process, the contest is for delegates, not votes. (In the general election, the winner of a state gets its "electors" who then vote for the president in the Electoral College.)

If the media were consistent regarding the popular-vote winner as the actual winner, they would have given the 2000 presidential election to Al Gore, who defeated George W. Bush by more than a half million votes nationwide.

In Texas, Hillary won 65 delegates in the primary. Obama earned 61 delegates.

But in the caucuses, with 48 percent of the caucus results reported as of early Thursday morning, per the Texas Democratic Party's Web site, Obama has won approximately 56 percent of the caucus votes, leaving Clinton with just under 44 percent.

When you apply these percentages to the 67 delegates, Obama gets 37 delegates from the caucuses, and Clinton gets 30.

If you add the primary and caucus delegates together, Clinton gets 95 delegates, but Obama gets 98, a net gain of three.

If current trends hold, Obama will win Texas by earning the overall delegate victory.

This would hardly be a surprise, given that Obama has won 11 out of the 13 caucuses held so far and 11 states in a row going into last Tuesday.

Clinton had a big win in Ohio, and a substantial victory in Rhode Island. But imagine the narrative had the press noted that she appeared to be losing Texas.

Bill Clinton's words would have echoed throughout the media. He had told an audience in Texas in February, "If she wins Texas and Ohio I think she will be the nominee. If you don't deliver for her, I don't think she can be."

Democratic Party leaders would likely have called upon Clinton to gracefully accept defeat for the good of the party.

Instead, Clinton stood in a shower of confetti and claimed a resounding victory over all three states.

Challenging the Caucuses

Offstage, both the Obama and Clinton campaigns accused each other of trying to game the caucuses.

Tuesday night, Obama's campaign attorney Bob Bauer jumped in on a conference call between the Clinton campaign and reporters to note that the Clinton campaign had a pattern of challenging caucuses. Bauer noted that a lawsuit had been threatened in advance of the Nevada caucuses (although the lawsuit never materialized).

Clinton has made several comments denigrating caucuses in general, noting that people who work during the caucus time can't participate. Different states have different procedures, however, that try to make participation easy.

In Texas, for example, once voters signed in and noted the candidate they were supporting, they were not required to stay for the entire caucus to have their votes counted.

This also isn't the first time the press has denied Obama a delegate victory.

In Nevada, the press crowned Clinton the winner, despite the fact that Obama won the delegate count.

In New Hampshire, Obama was handed a loss, even though the delegates were equally split between Obama and Clinton.

The media's rush to judgment predates this election, of course. In 2004, despite early reports of widespread voter disenfranchisement, Ohio was called for Bush before even a cursory investigation could be started, let alone completed.

In 2000, the media first announced that Al Gore had won Florida. Then they changed their boards and said Florida was too close to call.

Then the election was given to George W. Bush, even though, as Robert Parry reported in 2001, a recount the following year by the New York Times, the Washington Post and other news organizations, demonstrated that, had all the legally cast votes in Florida been counted, Gore would have carried Florida and won the presidential election. [For details, see Neck Deep: The Disastrous Presidency of George W. Bush.]

Why is the media in such a rush to declare a winner?

If we can wait 24 hours to find out who is going home on "American Idol," certainly we can wait much longer to get accurate election data.

And if reporters cannot properly calculate the delegate assignments, shouldn't they wait until the party officials provide the correct count?

Our form of government depends on three principles: adherence to the Constitution as the highest authority in the land; the informed consent of the governed; and an accurate count of the votes cast by the governed. Rushing to judgment in an election is not just careless, it threatens the very foundations of our Democracy.

More immediately, the media's haste is threatening the Democrats' chances of winning in November by prolonging an increasingly bitter contest, even though one candidate (Obama) maintains a nearly unsurpassable lead in delegates.

Lisa Pease is a historian who has studied the JFK assassination and other enduring political mysteries.

To comment at Consortiumblog, click here. (To make a blog comment about this or other stories, you can use your normal e-mail address and password. Ignore the prompt for a Google account.) To comment to us by e-mail, click here. To donate so we can continue reporting and publishing stories like the one you just read, click here.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama raises $55 million in February (2008-03-06 12:54)

Barack Obama sent an email out today stating that the campaign raised $55 million in the month of February, with a huge chunk, $45 million, raised online.

Paul –

I want to add some more news to David's note about the state of the race.

As you know, we've won 27 of 41 contests and have maintained our commanding lead among pledged delegates.

But today I want to share another staggering number: supporters like you donated more than $55 million to this campaign in the month of February.

That's a humbling achievement, and I am very grateful for your support.

No campaign has ever raised this much in a single month in the history of presidential primaries. But more important than the total is how we did it – more than 90 % of donations were $100 or less, and more than 385,000 new donors in February pushed us past our goal of more than 1,000,000 people owning a piece of this campaign.

From the beginning, this campaign has always been funded by a movement of grassroots supporters giving whatever they can afford. And unlike Senator Clinton and Senator McCain, we have never taken money from lobbyists or PACs.

Senator Clinton has decided to use her resources to wage a negative, throw-everything-including-the-kitchen-sink campaign. John McCain has clinched the Republican nomination and is attacking us daily. But I will continue to vigorously defend my record and make the case for change that will improve the lives of all Americans.

I need your help to continue this battle on two separate fronts. Now is the time to step up and own a piece of this campaign.

Please make a donation of $25 today:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/math>

Thank you for your support,

Barack

Obama raises $55 million in Feb. (2008-03-06 12:59)

Barack Obama sent an email out today stating that the campaign raised $55 million in the month of February, with a huge chunk, $45 million, raised online.

Paul –

I want to add some more news to David's note about the state of the race.

As you know, we've won 27 of 41 contests and have maintained our commanding lead among pledged delegates.

But today I want to share another staggering number: supporters like you donated more than $55 million to this campaign in the month of February.

That's a humbling achievement, and I am very grateful for your support.

No campaign has ever raised this much in a single month in the history of presidential primaries. But more important than the total is how we did it – more than 90 % of donations were $100 or less, and more than 385,000 new donors in February pushed us past our goal of more than 1,000,000 people owning a piece of this campaign.

From the beginning, this campaign has always been funded by a movement of grassroots supporters giving whatever they can afford. And unlike Senator Clinton and Senator McCain, we have never taken money from lobbyists or PACs.

Senator Clinton has decided to use her resources to wage a negative, throw-everything-including-the-kitchen-sink campaign. John McCain has clinched the Republican nomination and is attacking us daily. But I will continue to vigorously defend my record and make the case for change that will improve the lives of all Americans.

I need your help to continue this battle on two separate fronts. Now is the time to step up and own a piece of this campaign.

Please make a donation of $25 today:
<https://donate.barackobama.com/math>
Thank you for your support,
Barack

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✕

Calls to Wyoming (2008-03-06 22:06)

From barackobama.com:

2,049,133 Calls

by Christopher Hass,

Thursday, March 06, 2008 at 06:30 PM

In the run-up to March 4th, grassroots supporters from all across the country made over two million calls to potential voters in just ten days – 2,049,133 calls, to be exact. Your efforts helped us close the gap in Ohio, win a commanding victory in Vermont and a delegate win in Texas.

Today one of our online organizers, Nikki Sutton, asked us to pass along a message to all of our supporters who helped take part in this tremendous effort:

We always knew this journey would be long and filled with obstacles, but together we have been able to do what no one ever imagined was possible.

In less than two weeks you helped make over 2 million calls to voters across America.

Thank you for being a part of this movement and making your voice heard.

Now, we need to look to Wyoming in the West and Mississippi in the South and send a clear message that the time for change in our country has come.

Thank you so much for all you do.

- Nikki

Tonight and tomorrow, we're focusing on calls to Wyoming in order to identify supporters and encourage them to get out and caucus on Saturday. For many people in Wyoming this will be their first time caucusing, and your phone calls will be key in helping to educate voters and build support for Barack. What you do makes a difference, and we thank you for it.

Help make calls to Wyoming now.

✕ ✕
✕ ✕
✕ ✕
✕ ✕
✕ ✕

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Nevada: Road to Change (2008-03-07 11:06)

Check out this video of the efforts in Nevada including Barack Obama addressing crowds before the caucuses.
[EMBED]

Obama Appearances in Wyoming

Mar 7 Stand for Change Town Hall with Barack Obama

in Casper, WY

Mar 7 Stand for Change Rally with Barack Obama

in Laramie, WY

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Wyoming Caucus Info (2008-03-07 15:22)

Here's information on voting in the Wyoming Caucus tomorrow from barackobama.com :

Wyoming Caucus Info: Your Moment Is Now

by Christopher Hass,

Friday, March 07, 2008 at 08:17 AM

The eyes of the country will be on Wyoming tomorrow, as the Wyoming Caucuses become the next stage for this historic presidential race. If you live in Wyoming, this is your chance to stand for change and make your voice heard. Each county has one caucus location, and start times vary by county. Some caucuses start early tomorrow morning, so please take a moment to double check your caucus location and start time now.

Wyoming Democratic party spokesman Bill Luckett described tomorrow's caucuses as "a once-in-a-generation opportunity." If you live in Wyoming, this is your chance to be part of history.

Take a moment to find your caucus location and time now and make plans to caucus for Barack on Saturday.

Caucusing is easy, and you can learn everything you need to know to caucus below. And be sure to bring as many friends and family with you as you can – just a few extra people could make a difference.

Frequently Asked Questions about the Wyoming Caucus:

Who can caucus?

Any Wyoming Democrat who registered by February 22nd is eligible to participate in the caucus and help change Washington by supporting Barack.

Where and when do I caucus?

Each county has one caucus location. The caucuses are this Saturday, March 8th, but start times vary by county. Some caucuses begin as early as 7:30 AM, so be sure to find your caucus location and time in advance.

When should I arrive at the caucus?

Please arrive at your caucus location at least 30 minutes prior to your caucus start time. Only voters in line when the caucus convention is called to order are allowed to participate.

Do I need to bring anything?

You are not required to have a ID in order to participate, and the caucus is free and open to the public. But you may need to wait outside briefly, so dress appropriately!

Will I be required to speak?

No. You are not required to speak at the event – simply cast your vote for Barack!

Can I leave after casting my vote for Barack?

Yes. After the presidential preference poll is completed, you may leave the caucus if you do not wish to be a delegate.

If you live in or near Laramie, you can see Barack in person tonight at the Stand For Change Rally at the University of Wyoming.

And no matter where you are, you can help out by making calls to Wyoming to identify supporters and encourage them to get out and caucus on Saturday!

Visit WY.BarackObama.com for more news and information from Wyoming.

Help us grow this movement in Wyoming and across the country:

X

X

X

X

X

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

North Carolina also a big state (2008-03-08 07:57)

A lot of media attention has been focused on Pennsylvania with its 158 pledged delegates. However, North Carolina with 115 delegates also looms large on the horizon.

If the delegate count mirrors the popular vote, then a candidate winning North Carolina by 10 percentage points with the opponent taking Pennsylvania by five points will still likely net more pledged delegates.

Obama already has three NC superdelegates –

Rep. G.K. Butterfield, DNC Everett Ward and DNC Dannie Montgomery – compared to Hillary Clinton's single nod (DNC Susan Burgess).

The Illinois senator also has the support of State Treasurer Richard H. Moore, State Sen. Malcolm Graham (D-Charlotte) and Durham Mayor Bill Bell.

North Carolina holds its contest on the same day as Indiana, another important state with the third most pledged delegates of the remaining states. Obama has strong support among Indiana's state legislators, while Hoosier Sen. Evan Bayh supports Clinton.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-03-08 08:59:00)

I hope Barack Obama has plans for a huge rally in the City of Philadelphia. I have worked in Philly 33 years and we hate NEW YORK especially a NEW YORK Senator telling us why we should vote for her. What better place for Barack to make a MAJOR SPEECH on his campaign promise of putting our government back in the hands of the people for the people than in the City of Independence itself. The home of the under dog Rocky Balboa, the home of new American Experience, and the home of the Declaration of Independence. We hate the NY Giants, Mets, and Yankees. Have Obama wear an Eagles hat with someone raising an Eagles flag with the chant of E-A-G-L-E-S Eagles to start the rally and watch the crowd go wild.

Barack Obama wins Wyoming Caucus (2008-03-08 16:53)

Barack Obama has won the Wyoming Caucus with 59 % of the vote compared to 40 % for Hillary Clinton with 96 % of the precincts reporting. Barack should win two more pledged delegates than Hillary in the state.

Also, check out the cover story featuring Michelle Obama in the latest issue of Newsweek.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Sleeping child in Clinton ad was Obama Precinct Captain (2008-03-09 13:00)

Talk about coincidence. The sleeping girl featured in Hillary Clinton's "3 a.m." ad in which she touts herself as tougher than Barack Obama comes from old stock footage used by the production company.

That young girl is now 17 years old and will be eligible to vote in November. She is also an avid Barack supporter and even worked as a precinct captain for the Obama campaign! Check out the YouTube video below:

[EMBED]

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Obama Events in Mississippi (2008-03-09 17:55)

Barack in Mississippi

Mar 10 Town Hall Meeting with Barack Obama

in Columbus, MS

Mar 10 Stand for Change Rally with Barack Obama

in Jackson, MS

Canvass Kickoff With Gov. Kathleen Sebelius!!!

Sunday, March 9 at 2:00 PM

Home of Leslie and Jim Clauson (Biloxi, MS)

Please join us for a Canvass and Kick Off Rally with Kansas Governor Kathleen Sebelius!!! The will be meeting at 2pm at the home...

- View Event Details
- Signup To Attend This Event

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Polling Locations for Mississippi (2008-03-09 21:17)

From barackobama.com :

Mississippi: Find Your Polling Location

by Christopher Hass

, Sunday, March 09, 2008 at 07:06 PM

For the first time in 20 years, Mississippi will have a major role in selecting the Democratic nominee for president. And in such a competitive race, it's crucial that all of our supporters know where to go on Primary Day.

If you live in Mississippi, you can find your polling location now and make sure you're ready to vote for Barack this Tuesday, March 11th.

Polls open at 7:00 a.m., and any registered voter can cast their vote for Barack by requesting a Democratic ballot at their polling location.

For more than a year, we've worked together and built a grassroots movement for change that's sweeping across the country. On Tuesday, the eyes of the nation will turn to Mississippi. This is your moment, your chance to be part of history.

Mississippi Voter Rights:

- Polls are open from 7:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m. on Tuesday, March 11th. If you are in line by 7:00 p.m., you must be allowed to vote.
- In Mississippi, any registered voter can vote for Barack on Tuesday by requesting a Democratic ballot at the polls.
- If you believe you were left off the voter list or otherwise prevented from regular voting by error, you must be allowed to cast a provisional ballot.
- No identification is required at the polling place unless you are a first-time voter. If you are a first-time voter in Mississippi who registered by mail and did not provide identification at that time, you should bring a valid photo ID, current utility bill, bank statement, paycheck, government check, or other government document that shows your name and address.
- If you have problems or questions, call our voter hotline at 1-866-675-2008 and press 4.

Obama volunteers prepare for Tuesday's primary.

Pick up the phone!

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Rolling Stone covers Barack Obama (2008-03-09 21:28)

The March 20 issue of Rolling Stone will feature a Barack Obama cover story. The magazine has three stories on the Illinois senator:

- Cover Story: Barack Obama's Machinery of Hope
- Photo Gallery: Barack Obama, a History in Pictures
- An Endorsement: Barack Obama for President

There's also a photo gallery on the website:

PHOTO GALLERY

Barack Obama: The Presidential Hopeful's History in Photos

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-03-11 11:49:00)

I just wanted to comment that the Spitzer situation has warnings for Barack Obama in that the latter is someone who has very rapidly assumed the status of a political rock star and is at great risk of the same kinds of hazards that has happened to his predecessors. Be warned, Mr. Obama.

Getting out the vote in Mississippi (2008-03-10 15:47)

[EMBED]

Barack Obama at a townhall meeting in Columbus, Mississippi on Mar. 10, 2008.

[EMBED]

Barack is running for president not vice president, and he happens to be in the lead for the Democratic nominee spot.

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

rearden215 (2008-03-10 17:10:00)

The race for the White House by the Clintons- and yes, there are two of them running for the same post- appears to be underpinned by one general fallacy: that boomers live forever.

I think that the Clintons still see themselves as wearing an REI backback, Vibram-soled Danners and trudging steadfastly through the perfect and gentle snow of youth to the next poli-sci class at college.

Gotta revolution. Almost cut my hair. Four and twenty. Two cats in the yard. Wave my freak flag high. Paul is dead. Butterflies across our nation. The government. The man.

The impending revolution never amounted to much. Everybody cut their hair in '73, got jobs- temporary, of course- at the branch bank and made fun of every working person besides themselves while smoked up at some cool friend/dude's cabin in the woods on the weekends. When the revolution comes!

Hey, when no one is looking I admire my white patent leather loafers in the full length mirror at Gimbel's and feel the 'tightness' between those reflectors of purity on my feet and the baby blue edwardian suit on my bod. I look pretty good. Hey, disco is stupid but I'll just goof on it and have a good time. Until the revolution comes.

Yeah, it's an Apple II. Oh, that's VisiCalc on there. It does numbers and stuff, kinda like a calculator only more. I use it at the bank- I'm only there temporarily- and we do, like, numbers for idiots with more money than sense... investments? Well, yeah, kinda. But, I'm really not into that financial thing, you know.

Some dude was offering stock in a software company, like the the stuff I use at the bank, only it's for the common man and not 'The Man'. I'm in for 20k shares, top at 23, take me out if it hits 15. Uh, yeah, about the revolution.....just a sec.....'No, all wheel drive is not the same as four wheel drive.'..... you were saying? Right. It's time for The Man to get what's coming.... uh, hold on..... 'Could you honestly see me wearing cross trainers to ANYTHING in Westchester county?. Didn't think so.'

I am all about winning, you know. The guys above me are such dolts, always whining about their retirement plans- I'm here to make things happen. Stir shit up. Get rid of the fat middle management layer. Did you notice that I work out during lunchtime?

While listening to Tom Peters tapes on my Walkman? Revolution?

Either get with this PC thing, or get out.

I bought Redhat at two dollars and sold it at five hundred. Revolution. Thank you for not smoking in the Grand Wagoneer.

Vente.

Grande.

Baby Einsteins.

Knitted brow. Every thing is an outrage.

I just moved the assembly offshore to China. Those morons on the assembly floor wanted a raise, I said, 'I will give this whole thing to someone in the Orient who cares more about the product than themselves, if you make me. Don't make me do it.'

They made me do it. To retaliate I bought a Cayenne. Built a seven thousand square foot house complete with an outdoor kitchen and a fire feature. Irish setter. Oliver Peoples glasses frames. Indifferent khakis. Turnbull & Asser. Carrying a hundred people on my back- those dolts who just aren't winners and risk takers like me.

Then, the revolution came.

Change. It is not a bad thing, to hear the Clintons talk, but, the Clintons are now 'The Man'; they are now the 'Government'. They are old but just won't admit it-Danners notwithstanding. The Clintons just don't get it.

Comes a black man with no experience and no credentials, to hear the Clintons talk, and this black man is coming forward like Kennedy. Not Jack, but Robert.

Boomers don't live forever. Just until the revolution comes.

The revolution has come.

The end of Boomervision is near. Temporary, of course.

Mississippi: Our Moment is Now (2008-03-11 07:17)

From barackobama.com:

Mississippi: Your Moment is Now

by Christopher Hass

, Tuesday, March 11, 2008 at 04:48 AM

Today, for the first time in 20 years, Mississippi will play a major role in selecting the Democratic nominee for president. All across the state voters are heading to the polls to add their voices to the millions calling for change.

Polls are open today from 7:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m. and any registered voter can cast their vote for Barack by requesting a Democratic ballot at their polling location.

Find your polling location now, and check the information below to make sure that you know how and where to vote for Barack today.

For more than a year, we've worked together and built a grassroots movement for change that's sweeping across the country. Today, the eyes of the nation turn to Mississippi. This is your moment, your chance to be part of history.

Mississippi Voter Rights:

- Polls are open from 7:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m. on Tuesday, March 11th. If you are in line by 7:00 p.m., you must be allowed to vote.
- In Mississippi, any registered voter can vote for Barack on Tuesday by requesting a Democratic ballot at the polls.
- If you believe you were left off the voter list or otherwise prevented from regular voting by error, you must be allowed to cast a provisional ballot.
- No identification is required at the polling place unless you are a first-time voter. If you are a first-time voter in Mississippi who registered by mail and did not provide identification at that time, you should bring a valid photo ID, current utility bill, bank statement, paycheck, government check, or other government document that shows your name and address.
- If you have problems or questions, call our voter hotline at 1-866-675-2008 and press 4.

Barack Obama in Jackson, Mississippi on March 11, 2008.

[EMBED]

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Fox calls Mississippi for Obama (2008-03-11 17:12)

Still waiting for MSNBC and CNN, but just heard that Fox News has called the race in Mississippi for Barack Obama.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama: Victories and Attacks (2008-03-11 19:53)

Barack Obama sent out this email today following the results in Mississippi.

Paul –

It's tough to think of two states more different than Wyoming and Mississippi.

But we won Wyoming on Saturday, and we just learned that we won Mississippi by a large margin tonight.

Between those two states, we picked up enough delegates to erase the gains by Senator Clinton last Tuesday and add to our substantial lead in earned delegates. And in doing so we showed the strength and breadth of this movement.

But just turn on the news and you'll see that Senator Clinton continues to run an expensive, negative campaign against us. Each day her campaign launches a new set of desperate attacks.

They're not just attacking me; they're attacking you.

Over the weekend, an aide to Senator Clinton attempted to diminish the overwhelming number of contests we've won by referring to places we've prevailed as "boutique" states and our supporters as the "latte-sipping crowd."

I'm not sure how those terms apply to Mississippi and Wyoming – or Virginia, Iowa, Louisiana, or Idaho for that matter.

I know that our victories in all of these states demonstrate a rejection of this kind of petty, divisive campaigning.

But the fact remains that Senator Clinton's campaign will continue to attack us using the same old Washington playbook. And now that John McCain is the Republican nominee, we are forced to campaign on two fronts.

It's up to you to fight back. Please make a donation of $25 today:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/math>

Thank you,

Barack

[EMBED]

Barack wins in Mississippi!

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Hillary should concede and unite the party (2008-03-12 10:06)

Jake Tapper on the ABC News blog has an interesting post suggesting that House Speaker Nancy Pelosi is covertly endorsing Sen. Barack Obama with her recent statements.

Pelosi speaking in a interview with New England Cable News said that a "dream ticket" of any kind is "impossible." "I think that the Clinton administration has fairly ruled that out by proclaiming that Senator McCain would be a better Commander in Chief than Obama," Pelosi said.

According to Tapper, Pelosi's views diverge from the triangulation tactics of the Clintons, and she likely seems Hillary as driving down the Democratic ticket, particularly in Red States. This could threaten her own position as leader of the House.

Californians have sensed the same thing based on Obama's endorsements from key Pelosi allies.

[EMBED]

Barack Obama talks with Gamesa employees in Fairless, Pennsylvania.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Countering the Spin (2008-03-12 14:53)

Obama campaign manager David Plouffe sent out this email appeal today.

Dear Paul,

When we won Iowa , the Clinton campaign said it's not the number of states you win, it's "a contest for delegates."

When we won a significant lead in delegates, they said it's really about which states you win.

When we won South Carolina , they discounted the votes of African-Americans.

When we won predominantly white, rural states like Idaho , Utah , and Nebraska , they said those didn't count because they won't be competitive in the general election.

When we won in Washington State, Wisconsin, and Missouri – general election battlegrounds where polls show Barack is a stronger candidate against John McCain – the Clinton campaign attacked those voters as "latte-sipping" elitists.

And now that we've won more than twice as many states, the Clinton spin is that only certain states really count.

But the facts are clear.

For all their attempts to discount, distract, and distort, we have won more delegates, more states, and more votes.

Meanwhile, more than half of the votes that Senator Clinton has won so far have come from just five states. And in four of these five states, polls show that Barack would be a stronger general election candidate against McCain than Clinton.

We're ready to take on John McCain . But we also need to build operations in places like Pennsylvania , Indiana , North Carolina , and Oregon that will hold their primaries in April and May.

Barack Obama needs your support to fight this two-front battle. Please make a donation of $25 right now:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/math>

With our overwhelming victory in the Mississippi primary yesterday, our lead in earned delegates is now wider than it was on March 3rd, before the contests in Ohio and Texas .

And thanks to your help, we have dramatically increased our support among so-called "superdelegates" – Governors, Members of Congress, and party officials who have a vote at the Democratic National Convention in August.

As the number of remaining delegates dwindles, Hillary Clinton 's path to the nomination seems less and less plausible.

Now that Mississippi is behind us, we move on to the next ten contests. The Clinton campaign would like to focus your attention only on Pennsylvania – a state in which they have already declared that they are "unbeatable."

But Pennsylvania is only one of those 10 remaining contests, each important in terms of allocating delegates and ultimately deciding who our nominee will be.

We have activated our volunteer networks in each of these upcoming battlegrounds. We're putting staff on the ground and building our organization everywhere.

The key to victory is not who wins the states that the Clinton campaign thinks are important. The key to victory is realizing that every vote and every voter matters.

Throughout this entire process, the Clinton campaign has cherry-picked states, diminished caucuses, and moved the goal posts to create a shifting, twisted rationale for why they should win the nomination despite winning fewer primaries, fewer states, fewer delegates, and fewer votes.

We must stand up to the same-old Washington politics. Barack has won twice as many states, large and small, in every region of the country – many by landslide margins. And this movement is expanding the base of the Democratic Party by attracting new voters in record numbers and bringing those who had lost hope back into the political process.

Push back against the spin and help build the operation to win more delegates in these upcoming contests:

<https://donate.barackobama.com/math>

Thank you for your support and for everything you've done to build a movement that is engaging voters and winning contests in every part of this country.

David

David Plouffe
Campaign Manager
Obama for America

[EMBED]

Barack Obama receives endorsements of Flag Officers from U.S. Armed Forces.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

President's Most Important Duty (2008-03-12 21:23)

Hillary Clinton often says that the president's most important duty is to protect the people of the United States citing the presidential oath of office.

I'm not going to argue that she is wrong on the most important presidential duty, but the oath of office does not even mention protecting the American people.

The oath of office is found in Article II, Section I of the U.S. Constitution:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States ."

Notice that the oath mentions preserving, protecting and defending the "Constitution of the United States." Yes, that includes things like habeus corpus and the Bill of Rights.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Philadelphia Black Clergy endorse Barack Obama (2008-03-13 09:18)

The Seattle Times reports that the Black Clergy of Philadelphia and Vicinity has endorsed Barack Obama for president.

Philly Black Clergy Endorse Obama
Related

- Presidential delegate tracker
- Presidential candidate tracker
- Presidential campaign spending

The members of a black clergy group in Philadelphia have endorsed Sen. Barack Obama in the Democratic primary for president.

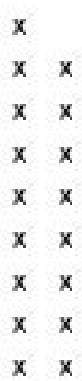

The president of the Black Clergy of Philadelphia and Vicinity, the Rev. Ellis Washington, says his group voted overwhelmingly in support of Obama. The organization represents about 200 churches in the Philadelphia area.

Washington says the black clergy’s support of Obama over Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton was much more than a racial issue. He says the Illinois senator’s ability to inspire young people and his status as a man of faith played a big role in the endorsement.

Washington says Obama’s far-reaching appeal outweighed the popularity of the Clintons in the black community.

The group announced the endorsement Thursday. The state primary is April 22.

Copyright © 2008 The Seattle Times Company

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Philadephia Black Clergy endorse Barack Obama (2008-03-13 09:18)

The Seattle Times reports that the Black Clergy of Philadephia and Vicinity

Philly Black Clergy Endorse Obama
Related

- Presidential delegate tracker
- Presidential candidate tracker
- Presidential campaign spending

The members of a black clergy group in Philadelphia have endorsed Sen. Barack Obama in the Democratic primary for president.

The president of the Black Clergy of Philadelphia and Vicinity, the Rev. Ellis Washington, says his group voted overwhelmingly in support of Obama. The organization represents about 200 churches in the Philadelphia area.

Washington says the black clergy's support of Obama over Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton was much more than a racial issue. He says the Illinois senator's ability to inspire young people and his status as a man of faith played a big role in the endorsement.

Washington says Obama's far-reaching appeal outweighed the popularity of the Clintons in the black community.

The group announced the endorsement Thursday. The state primary is April 22.

Copyright © 2008 The Seattle Times Company

NC Lt. Gov. Beverly Perdue endorses Barack Obama (2008-03-13 09:24)

North Carolina Lieutenant Governor and gubernatorial candidate Beverly Perdue endorsed Barack Obama on Wednesday.

"She thinks both candidates are exceptionally well-qualified, but will be voting for Obama," campaign adviser Mac McCorkle said.

Michelle Obama in Pennsylvania

Mar 13 Rally with Michelle Obama

in Abington, PA

Mar 13 Rally with Michelle Obama

in Villanova, PA

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

(2008-03-13 09:24)

North Carolina Lieutenant Governor and gubernatorial candidate Beverly Perdue endorsed Barack Obama today.

Barack Obama unveils New Housing Crisis Plan (2008-03-13 18:06)

From from barackobama.com :

Obama Announces Support for Plan to Address Housing Crisis

by Sam Graham-Felsen

, Thursday, March 13, 2008 at 02:07 PM

Chicago, IL – Senator Obama released the following statement on joining with Senator Chris Dodd to introduce legislation for a new FHA Housing Security Program.

"The subprime lending crisis continues to threaten the American Dream for millions of working families. Over two million households are at risk of foreclosure. The impact on our economy as a whole has been devastating, with a substantial and disturbing deterioration in our job market, housing market, and credit market in recent days. The decline in the housing market has left millions of people with mortgages that are larger than their homes are worth. Many Americans are choosing to walk away from their mortgages, which worsens the foreclosure problem, hurts property values for entire neighborhoods, and also substantially aggravates the credit crisis among lenders. That is why we urgently need a new strategy that allows homeowners to obtain mortgages with reasonable and fair terms, prevents foreclosures, and eases the credit crunch.

"It is past time for the federal government to take direct and decisive action. To provide immediate relief, I am proud to join with Chris Dodd – the Chairman of the Senate Banking Committee – to introduce legislation creating a new FHA Housing Security Program, which will provide meaningful incentives for lenders to buy or refinance existing mortgages, and to convert them into stable 30-year fixed mortgages so that homeowners facing foreclosure can keep their homes. This will provide a federal backstop for lenders to reduce the principal of loans that are priced higher than the value of a home so that they are affordable for homeowners. It is not a bailout for lenders or investors who gambled recklessly. It is not a windfall for borrowers. Instead, the Dodd-Obama bill is a responsible and fair way to help bring an end to the foreclosure crisis facing the country.

"This is part of my comprehensive mortgage agenda, which includes resources for pre-foreclosure counseling, a tax break to working families on their mortgage interest payments, and tough penalties on fraudulent lenders. We must provide immediate relief to American families and to the American economy, while also taking the necessary steps to prevent this crisis from happening again."

[EMBED]

Barack Obama explains how to register for the Pennsylvania primary.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Registering voters in Pennsylvania today (2008-03-14 10:59)

From barackobama.com :

Find the Voter Registration Drive Near You

by Caitlin Harvey,

Friday, March 14, 2008 at 07:43 AM

✖ If we've learned one thing from this race, it's that every vote – and every voice – matters. Here in Pennsylvania, there are hundreds of thousands of people who need your help to make their voices heard – people who want to support Barack in the Democratic primary on April 22nd, but aren't registered as Democrats.

Anyone who wants to vote in the Democratic primary must be registered as a Democrat by March 24th. This weekend, we're holding voter registration drives all across Pennsylvania to help every eligible Obama supporter in Pennsylvania get ready to vote for Barack in the April 22nd primary.

Find the Voter Registration Drive near you and join us this weekend. No prior political experience is required. Sign up to talk to people in your community and register new Democrats before the March 24th deadline.

If you live in Western Pennsylvania, join us at the Pittsburgh St. Patrick's Day Parade to show your support for Barack, and help register new voters before the deadline after the parade.

Here are the details:

O'Bama St. Patrick's Day

Courtyard next to USX Building

600 Grant St.

Pittsburgh, PA

8:30 a.m.

Sign up now:

<http://pa.barackobama.com/StPatricks>

Together, we can help the momentum continue in Pennsylvania!

✖

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

✖

MoveOn Video Contest: Obama in 30 Seconds (2008-03-14 19:00)

MoveOn.org is holding an Obama ad contest called "Obama in 30 Seconds."

The contest, which is not linked with the official Barack Obama campaign, asks Obama supporters to create a 30 second ad in support of Barack's candidacy.

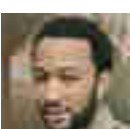

Submissions are accepted from Mar. 27 to Apr. 1, and the winners are announced on Apr. 17. The top prize winner will have their ad aired nationally and get a $20,000 gift certificate for video equipment.

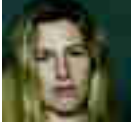

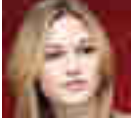

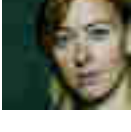

You can find more info here. Check out the judges for the contest:

The Judges

- Ben Affleck

-  Steve Buscemi
-  Matt Damon
-  Donna Edwards
-  Michael Franti
-  Adrian Grenier
-  Ted Hope
-  Jesse Jackson
-  Rory Kennedy
-  John Legend
-  Lawrence Lessig
-  Moby
-  Markos Moulitsas

-  Tom Ortenberg
-  Heather Rae
-  James Schamus
-  Russell Simmons
-  DJ Spooky
-  Ricki Stern
-  Julia Stiles
-  Oliver Stone
-  Annie Sundberg
-  Eddie Vedder
-  Naomi Wolf

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Obama opening office in Terre Haute, Indiana (2008-03-15 07:59)

WTHI-TV reports that Barack Obama is opening up an office in Terre Haute, Indiana. Obama's efforts in red states strengthens the Democratic Party for the future. You can only make progress in red states when you fight for those states.

Barack Obama will be setting up a campaign office right here in Terre Haute. Proving even more how important the Hoosier state as well as the Wabash Valley is in the 2008 Presidential Election.

"I think it's going to be an exciting time between now and May 6th in Terre Haute," said Andrew Conner. In about one week, one of these downtown buildings will be the new home for Barack Obama's campaign office. Indiana's primary is not known for casting crucial votes, but Obama's decision to head to Valley shows Terre Haute's got something to offer.

"I think that the candidates feel like this area has something of value to them," James Mann, Terre Haute South Teacher.

"The candidates are taking notice of Terre Haute."

With several local colleges and universities, Terre Haute is a great place to target voters especially young ones.

"We've been doing tons and tons of voter registrations we've had over 200 kids register to vote."

Right now Obama campaign officials are looking at a few downtown Terre Haute properties. The office is slated to open on March 24th.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

10 Iowa Delegates choose Barack Obama (2008-03-15 20:02)

From barackobama.com :

Big News: Obama Gains 7 More Delegates in Iowa

by Sam Graham-Felsen

, Saturday, March 15, 2008 at 04:35 PM

Big news, everybody – Obama gained 7 more delegates today in Iowa!

Campaign Manager David Plouffe just sent this note to our hard-working Iowa staffers. We thought we'd share it with you...

Dear Team Iowa,

Another contest in Iowa just showed the hard work and dedication you put into the state. For those of you that worked the caucuses, you gave momentum to put us in the great position we are in. For those of you that came back for the county conventions, you worked your magic again, along with the precinct captains and supporters to squeeze 7 more delegates out of Iowa for Barack (there may still be one up for grabs).

Thanks for all of your hard work. I know you are all tired, but dig deep, remember the way you felt after the Iowa Caucuses, and the way staff there feels again tonight. -David

Let's keep the momentum going. Who's ready to spend a chunk of your Sunday making calls? Your voices have proven to be a critical difference in tight races across the country. This movement needs to step up – visit My.BarackObama.com/call and let us know how it goes in the comments.

In case you ever doubted... Yes, we can.

UPDATE: Obama for America campaign manager David Plouffe today released the following statement on the results of the Iowa county conventions:

Iowans went to the county conventions today to make clear that they want a Democratic nominee who will bring real change to this country and who will be the strongest candidate against John McCain. With all of the results in, Senator Obama earned 25 delegates, while Senator Clinton earned 14. Senator Obama netted ten delegates tonight. For comparison purposes, Senator Clinton netted nine delegates in Ohio.

Obama supporters volunteer while celebrating St. Patrick's Day.

[EMBED]

Barack speaks in Plainfield, Indiana on unifying America.

[EMBED]

Barack reflects on Bobby Kennedy's famous speech in Indianapolis.

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Anonymous (2008-03-17 08:25:00)

Go obama Go. My view of why obama should win.

<http://kasunh.wordpress.com/2008/03/16/why-obama-should-win/>

Obama nets 3 more delegates in California (2008-03-15 21:22)

In addition to the net gain of 10 delegates from the Iowa Caucus, the Associated Press reported late Saturday that final counts show Barack Obama netting an additional three delegates in California.

Hillary Clinton picked up two additional California delegates compared to five for Obama. Thus, Obama netted an additional 13 delegates on Saturday.

Barack should have an overall lead in pledged delegates of 164.

MAKE THE CALL

HELP CALL PENNSYLVANIA NOW.

X X
X X
X X
X X
X X
X X
X X
X X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Ann Dunham Soetoro: Free-Spirited Wanderer Who Set Obama's Path (2008-03-16 14:13)

The New York Times has an excellent article on the life of Barack Obama's mother, Ann Dunham Soetoro.

A Free-Spirited Wanderer Who Set Obama's Path

By JANNY SCOTT

Published: March 14, 2008

Courtesy of the Obama Family

Ms. Soetoro on her Indonesian trip.

The Long Run

A Mother's Influence

This is part of a series of articles about the life and careers of contenders for the 2008 Republican and Democratic presidential nominations.

Enlarge This Image

Courtesy of the Obama family

In the capsule version of the Barack Obama story, his mother is simply the white woman from Kansas. The phrase comes coupled alliteratively to its counterpart, the black father from Kenya. On the campaign trail, he has called her his “single mom.” But neither description begins to capture the unconventional life of Stanley Ann Dunham Soetoro, the parent who most shaped Mr. Obama.

Kansas was merely a way station in her childhood, wheeling westward in the slipstream of her furniture-salesman father. In Hawaii, she married an African student at age 18. Then she married an Indonesian, moved to Jakarta, became an anthropologist, wrote an 800-page dissertation on peasant blacksmithing in Java, worked for the Ford Foundation, championed women’s work and helped bring microcredit to the world’s poor.

She had high expectations for her children. In Indonesia, she would wake her son at 4 a.m. for correspondence courses in English before school; she brought home recordings of Mahalia Jackson, speeches by the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. And when Mr. Obama asked to stay in Hawaii for high school rather than return to Asia, she accepted living apart — a decision her daughter says was one of the hardest in Ms. Soetoro’s life.

“She felt that somehow, wandering through uncharted territory, we might stumble upon something that will, in an instant, seem to represent who we are at the core,” said Maya Soetoro-Ng, Mr. Obama’s half-sister. “That was very much her philosophy of life — to not be limited by fear or narrow definitions, to not build walls around ourselves and to do our best to find kinship and beauty in unexpected places.”

Ms. Soetoro, who died of ovarian cancer in 1995, was the parent who raised Mr. Obama, the Illinois senator running for the Democratic presidential nomination. He barely saw his father after the age of 2. Though it is impossible to pinpoint the imprint of a parent on the life of a grown child, people who knew Ms. Soetoro well say they see her influence unmistakably in Mr. Obama.

They were close, her friends and his half-sister say, though they spent much of their lives with oceans or continents between them. He would not be where he is today, he has said, had it not been for her. Yet he has also made some different choices — marrying into a tightly knit African-American family rooted in the South Side of Chicago, becoming a churchgoing Christian, publicly recounting his search for his identity as a black man.

Some of what he has said about his mother seems tinged with a mix of love and regret. He has said his biggest mistake was not being at her bedside when she died. And when The Associated Press asked the candidates about “prized keepsakes” — others mentioned signed baseballs, a pocket watch, a “trophy wife” — Mr. Obama said his was a photograph of the cliffs of the South Shore of Oahu in Hawaii where his mother’s ashes were scattered.

“I think sometimes that had I known she would not survive her illness, I might have written a different book — less a meditation on the absent parent, more a celebration of the one who was the single constant in my life,” he wrote in the preface to his memoir, “Dreams From My Father.” He added, “I know that she was the kindest, most generous spirit I have ever known, and that what is best in me I owe to her.”

In a campaign in which Senator John McCain, the presumptive Republican nominee, has made liberal use of his globe-trotting 96-year-old mother to answer suspicions that he might be an antique at 71, Mr. Obama, who declined to be interviewed for this article, invokes his mother’s memory sparingly. In one television advertisement, she appears fleetingly — porcelain-skinned, raven-haired and holding her toddler son. “My mother died of cancer at 53,” he says in the ad, which focuses on health care. “In those last painful months, she was more worried about paying her medical bills than getting well.”

‘A Very, Very Big Thinker’

He has described her as a teenage mother, a single mother, a mother who worked, went to school and raised children at the same time. He has credited her with giving him a great education and confidence in his ability to do the right thing. But, in interviews, friends and colleagues of Ms. Soetoro shed light on a side of her that is less well known.

“She was a very, very big thinker,” said Nancy Barry, a former president of Women’s World Banking, an international network of microfinance providers, where Ms. Soetoro worked in New York City in the early 1990s. “I think she was not at all personally ambitious, I think she cared about the core issues, and I think she was not afraid to speak truth to power.”

Next Page »

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

Anonymous (2008-03-16 17:09:00)

Hillary’s constituents in New York state are beginning to ask her to step aside:

<http://start-a-petition.com/showPetition.asp?p=DearHillary>

Barack Obama releases statement on Economy (2008-03-17 10:36)

Barack Obama released this statement today on the state of the economy:

The news coming from Wall Street today has confirmed our fears that the financial fallout from the mortgage crisis would spillover into the wider economy. Months ago, I went to Wall Street and said that our capital markets could not function without the confidence and trust of the public. I said that Wall Street could not succeed while the rest of America struggled. Now, as the Federal Reserve does its best to bring stability to the market, we must focus on what we can do to restore the public's confidence in the market and help the millions of Americans who are worried about their jobs, their homes, and their financial future.

History will not judge President Bush kindly for his failure to act in a way that could've prevented or alleviated this economic crisis. There have been few Administrations so out of touch with the concerns and the struggles of working Americans and so beholden to the lobbyists and special interests who blocked any kind of regulatory oversight of the financial sector. Whether it was subprime lending, credit cards, or bankruptcy laws, Washington has allowed these special interests to prevent sensible policy that could have prevented the most serious effects of the current predicament.

Nowhere has the failure been more pronounced than the President's refusal to address the plight of homeowners and Main Street businesses that lie at the heart of the turmoil right now. After months of inaction and half-measures, the President traveled to New York last week to say that there is a danger in doing too much and implied that doing nothing would be preferable. His principle policy to address the financial crunch that now threatens millions of Americans with foreclosure and thousands of business with bankruptcy is to extend his tax cuts for the wealthiest few. It's a policy so divorced from the reality facing the American people and the American economy that it would be laughable if it weren't so frightening.

At this moment, we must come together and act to address the housing crisis that set this downturn in motion and continues to eat away at the public's confidence in the market. We should pass the legislation I put forward with my colleague, Chris Dodd, to create meaningful incentives for lenders to buy or refinance existing mortgages so that Americans facing foreclosure can keep their homes. This is not a bailout for lenders or investors who gambled recklessly, and it is not a windfall for borrowers. It is a fair and responsible way to help stem the foreclosure crisis.

Many other steps will be required to reverse this downturn in the weeks to come. It will require the efforts of those in the financial community; of the Federal Reserve; of Congress, and the White House. And it will also require a renewed confidence that we can meet this challenge. We are the United States of America, and each time we have faced moments of adversity in the past – some much greater than this – we have summoned a spirit of cooperation and innovation to emerge stronger and more prosperous than we were before. But it will take work, it will take time, and it will take leadership that recognizes that we are all part of the same economy, and that economy must work for every American in order for America to prosper in the 21st century.

X

X

Paul Kekai Manansala is a freelance author and blogger from Sacramento, California.

X

Barack Obama: More Voices (2008-03-17 17:38)

Barack Obama sent out this email message today encouraging supporters to help add more people to the voter rolls.

Dear Paul,

✕ When Michelle and I decided to enter this race more than a year ago, one of our hopes was to bring people back into the political process.

Like so many Americans, we'd been exhausted and frustrated by the slash-and-burn politics that had come to dominate our elections. Smallness and pettiness were the rule, not the exception. And it seemed like every day, more and more Americans were tuning out their democracy.

This election, we're seeing something different.

Nearly as many people have participated in the Democratic primary this year than in 2000 and 2004 combined. And there are still ten contests left to go.

As we enter the final stretch of elections, we have a unique opportunity to shape the outcome – and the outcome of elections up and down the ballot this November.

The last day to register new voters in Pennsylvania is March 24th. In North Carolina and Indiana , it's in early April. And in West Virginia and Kentucky , the voter registration deadline is a little more than a month from today.

So today we're launching a national initiative to register an unprecedented number of voters in each of the upcoming states.

No matter where you live, you can help get people registered in the upcoming states. You can make phone calls from home, reach out to people you know in these states, or even sign up to travel to one of these states to be on the ground for this massive voter registration effort.

Learn more about what you can do to bring as many voters as possible into the political process:

<http://my.barackobama.com/morevoices>

Young voters have shaped this presidential primary like no other.

In Iowa , South Carolina , Georgia, Missouri, Oklahoma, Texas, and Mississippi , the youth vote has tripled since 2004. And in all other states it has reached record levels. And these young voters are breaking 2-to-1 Democratic.

Statistics show that if we can get young people to vote Democratic now, they are far more likely to vote regularly – and vote for Democrats – throughout their lives.

So by getting involved and helping to register voters, you're not just increasing the number of voters in this election. You're increasing the number of people who will be engaged Democratic voters for the rest of their lives.

Sign up to help bring More Voices into the Democratic primary today:

<http://my.barackobama.com/morevoices>

More than fifteen years ago, after I finished law school, I came back to Chicago and led a voter registration drive on the South Side.

For months, our passionate and hardworking volunteers pounded the pavement – registering folks everywhere they could, from barber shops to grocery stores to apartment building lobbies to local fairs. One particularly enthusiastic woman – who until then had never been involved in politics – made it her personal goal to register 100 voters a day, and ultimately registered 3,000 new voters.

In the end, we made a real difference in Illinois . Our team registered more than 150,000 new voters, not only impacting local elections, but helping to shift the balance in state and national races as well. Illinois went from voting Republican in 1988 to Democratic in 1992.

That lesson has informed how we've run this campaign. And now we have an unbelievable opportunity to apply it on a massive scale.

When new or returning voters participate in the Democratic primary, they are far more likely to come back and participate in the general election.

